Further the Biſhop exhorted him to recant his errors. To the which the ſaid John Tewkesbury anſwered as is above written; to wit, I pray you reform your ſelf, and if there be any error in the Book, let it be reformed, I think it is good enough. Which thing being done, the Biſhop appointed him to determine better with himſelf againſt the morrow, in the preſence of Maſter John Cox, Vicar general to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Maſter Galfride Warton, Rowland Phillippes, William Philow, and Robert Ridley, profeſſors of Divinity.

Another appearance of John Tewkesbury.

The thirteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord aboveſaid, in the Chappel within the Palace of London, before Cuthbert Biſhop of London, with his aſſiſtants, Nicholas Biſhop of Ely, &c. Tewkesbury again appeared, and was examined upon the Articles drawn out of the Book called the wicked Mammon, as followeth.

Firſt, Chriſt is thine, and all his deeds be thy deeds; Chriſt is in thee, and thou ſo knit to him inſeparably, neither canſt thou be Damned, except Chriſt be Damned with thee; neither canſt thou be ſaved except Chriſt be ſaved with thee. To this he anſwered, that he found no fault in it.

We are not ſaved by other mans prayers.

Item, We deſire one another to pray for us. That done, we muſt put our Neighbour in remembrance of his duty, and that we truſt not in his Holineſs. To this he anſwered, Take ye it as ye will, I will take it well enough.

Alms what and how far it profiteth.

Item, Now ſeeſt thou what Alms meaneth, and wherefore it ſerveth. He that ſeeketh with his Alms more than to be merciful, to be a Neighbour to ſuccor his Brothers need, to do his duty to his Brother, to give his Brother that he ought him, the ſame is blind and ſeeth not Chriſts blood. Here he anſwereth, that he findeth no fault throughout all the Book, but that all the Book is good, and it hath given him great comfort and light to his Conſcience.

God to be ſerved and worſhipped only as he commandeth, otherwiſe not.

Item, That ye do nothing to pleaſe God but that he commanded. To that he anſwereth, and thinketh it good, by his truth.

Item, So God is honoured on all ſides, in that we count him righteous in all his Laws and Ordinances. And to worſhip him otherwiſe than ſo, it is Idolatry. To that he anſwered, that it pleaſeth him well.

The examination of theſe Articles being done, the Biſhop of London did exhort the ſaid John Tewkesbury to recant his errors aboveſaid: And after ſome other communication had by the Biſhop with him, the ſaid Biſhop did exhort him again to recant his errors, and appointed him to determine with himſelf againſt the next Seſſion what he would do.

Joh. Tewkesbury ſubmitteth himſelf.

IN the next Seſſion he ſubmitted himſelf, and abjured his opinions, and was enjoyned Penance, as followeth; which was the eighth of May.

Imprimis, That he ſhould keep well his Abjuration, under pain of relapſe.

Secondly, That the next Sunday following, in Pauls Church in the open Proceſſion, he ſhould carry a Fagot, and ſtand at Pauls Croſs with the ſame,

That the Wedneſday following he ſhould carry the ſame Fagot about Newgate-Market and Cheapſide.

That on Friday after he ſhould take the ſame Fagot again at S. Peters Church in Cornhill, and carry it about the Market of Leden-hall.

That he ſhould have two ſigns of Fagots embroidered, one on his left ſleeve, and the other on his right ſleeve, which he ſhould wear all his life time unleſs he were otherwiſe diſpenſed withal.

That on Whitſunday Eve he ſhould enter into the Monaſtry of S. Bartholomew in Smithfield, and there abide, and not come out unleſs he were releaſed by the Biſhop of London.

That he ſhould not depart out of the City or Dioceſs of London, without the ſpecial Licence of the Biſhop or his ſucceſſors. Which Penance he entred into the eighth day of May, An. 1529.

Tewkesbury returned again to the truth.

And thus much concerning his firſt examination, which was in the year 1529, at what time he was enforced through infirmity, as is before expreſſed, to retract and abjure his Doctrine. Notwithſtanding, the ſame John Tewkesbury, afterward confirmed by the grace of God, and moved by the example of Bayfield aforeſaid, that was burned in Smithfield, did return and conſtantly abide in the teſtimony of the truth, and ſuffered for the ſame. Who recovering more grace and better ſtrength at the hand of the Lord, two years after being apprehended again, was brought before Sir Tho. More, and the Biſhop of London; where certain Articles were objected of him: The chief whereof we intend briefly to recite, for the matter is prolix.

Articles again objected to Tewkesbury.

Imprimis, That he confeſſed that he was baptiſed, and intended to keep the Catholick Faith.

Secondly, That he affirmeth, that the abjuration, Oath, and ſubſcription that he made before Cuthbert, late Biſhop of London, was done by compulſion.

Thirdly, That he had the Books of the obedience of a Chriſtian man, and of the wicked Mammon, in his cuſtody, and hath read them ſince his abjuration.

Fourthly, That he affirmeth that he ſuffered the two Fagots that were embroydered on his ſleeve, to be taken from him, for that he deſerved not to wear them.

Fifthly, He ſaith, that Faith only juſtifieth, which lacketh not charity.

Sixthly, He ſaith, that Chriſt is a ſufficient Mediator for us, and therefore no prayer is to be made unto Saints. Whereupon they laid unto him this verſe of the Antheme; Salve Regina advocata noſtra, &c. To the which he anſwered, That he knew none other Advocate but Chriſt alone.

Christ is our Purgatory.

Seventhly, He affirmeth that there is no Purgatory after this life, but that Christ our Saviour is a sufficient purgation for us.

Eighthly, He affirmeth, That the souls of the faithful, departing this life, rest with Christ.

Ninthly, He affirmeth, That a Priest, by receiving of Orders, receiveth more grace, if his Faith be increased, or else not.

Tenthly, And last of all, he believeth, that the Sacrament of the Flesh and Blood of Christ, is not the very body of Christ, in Flesh and Blood, as it was born of the Virgin Mary. Whereupon the Bishops Chancellor asked the said Tewkesbury, if he could shew any cause why he should not be taken for an Heretick, falling into his Heresie again, and receive the punishment of an Heretick. Whereunto he answered that he had wrong before, and if he be condemned now, he reckoneth that he hath wrong again.

Then the Chancellor caused the Articles to be read openly, with the answers unto the same; the which the said Tewkesbury confessed, and thereupon the Bishop pronounced sentence against him and delivered him unto the Sheriffs of London for the time being, which were Richard Gresham and Edward Altam; who burned him in Smithfield upon Saint Thomas Eve, being the twentieth of December, in the year aforesaid, the tenor of whose sentence, pronounced against him by the Bishop, doth hereensue, word for word.

IN the Name of God, Amen. The deservings and circumstances of a certain cause of heretical pravity, and falling again thereunto by thee John Tewkesbury, of the Parish of Saint Michaels in the Quern, of the City of London, and of our Jurisdiction, appearing before us sitting in judgment, being heard, seen, and understood, and fully discussed by us John, by the sufferance of God, Bishop of London; because we do find by Inquisitions manifestly enough, that thou didst abjure freely and voluntarily before Cuthbert, late Bishop of London, thy Ordinary, divers and sundry Heresies, errors, and damnable opinions, contrary to the determination of our Mother Holy-Church, as well special as general, and that since and beside the foresaid abjuration thou art again fallen into the same damnable Heresies, opinions, and errors, (which is greatly to be lamented) and the same dost hold, affirm, and believe: we therefore John the Bishop aforesaid, the Name of God first being called upon, and the same only God set before our eyes, and with the Counsel of learned men assisting us in this behalf (with whom in this cause we have communicated of our definitive sentence and final Decree, in this behalf to be done) do intend to proceed and do proceed in this manner. Because, as it is aforesaid, we do find thee, the foresaid John Tewkesbury of our jurisdiction, to be a contemner of the first abjuration, and moreover, before and after the foresaid first errors and other damnable opinions, to have fallen, and to be an Heretick fallen, and to have incurred the pain of such fallen Hereticks: we do pronounce, determine, declare and condemn thee of the premises, to have incurred the danger of the great Excommunication, and also do pronounce thee to be excommunicated, and also do declare thee the said Tewkesbury, so damnably fallen again into Heresie, to be in the secular power and in their judgment (as the holy Canons have decreed) and here we do leave thee to the foresaid secular power, and to their judgment; beseeching them earnestly in the bowels of Jesus Christ, that such severe punishment and execution, as in this behalf is to be done against thee, may be so moderated, that no rigorous rigor be used but to the health and salvation of thy soul, and to the terror fear, and rooting out of Hereticks, and their conversion to the Catholick Faith and Unity, by this our final Decree which we declare by these our writings.

In words they pretend moderation, but their doings be clean contrary.

The death and Martyrdom of J. Tewkesbury.

This foresaid sentence definitive against John Tewkesbury was read and pronounced by the Bishop of London, the sixteenth day of the month of December, the year aforesaid, in the house of Sir Thomas More high Chancellor of England in the Parish of Chelsey. After the which sentence, the Sheriffs received the foresaid Tewkesbury into their custody, and carried him away with them, and afterward buried him in Smithfield, as is aforesaid, having no Writ of the King for their Warrant.

The apprehension of one Edward Freese a Painter.

The story of Ed. Freese.

EDward Freese was born in York, and was Apprentise to a Painter in the same City, and by the reason of working for his Master in Bearsie Abbey, or by some such occasion, was known unto the Abbot of the same House, for he was a Boy of a pregnant wit, and the Abbot favoured him so much, that he bought his years of his Master, and would have made him a Monk. And the lad not liking of that kind of living, and not knowing how to get out because he was a novice, ran away after a long space, and came to Colchester in Essex, and remaining there according to his former vocation, was married and lived like an honest man. After he had been there a good time, he was hired to paint certain cloths for the new Inn in Colchester, which is in the middle of the Market place, and in the upper border of the cloths he wrote certain sentences of Scripture, and by that he was plainly known to be one of them which they call Hereticks.

The cause of the taking Ed. Freese.

And on a time he being at his work in the same Inn, they of the Town, when they had seen his work, went about to take him; and he having some inkling thereof, thought to shift for himself, but yet was taken forcibly in the Yard of the same Inn, and after this he was brought to London, and so to Fulham, to the Bishops house, where he was cruelly imprisoned, with certain others of Essex, that is to wit, one Johnson and his Wife, Wylie and his Wife, and his Son, and Father Bate of Rowshedge. They were fed with fine Manchet made of saw-dust, or at the least a great part thereof, and were so straitly kept, that there wives and their friends could not come to them. After the Painter had been there a long space, by much sute he was removed to Lollards Tower. His Wife, in the time of the sute, whiles he was yet at Fulham, being desirous to see her Husband, and pressing to come in at the Gate, being then bigg with Child, the Porter lift up his foot and stroke her on the belly, that at length she died of the same, but the Child was destroyed immediately.

Johnson and his Wife. Wylie, his Wife, and his Son. Father Bate.

A cruel fact of Bishops Porter.

After that, they were all flocked for a long time, and then they were let loose in their Prisons again. Some had Horselocks on their legs, and some had other Irons. This Painter would ever be writing on the Walls with chalk or a coal, and in one place he wrote, Doctor Dodipoll would make make me believe the Moon were made of Greencheese. And because he would be writing many things, he was manicled by the Wrists, so long till the flesh of his Arms was grown higher than his Irons. By the means of his manicles he could not Comb his head, and he remained so long manicled, that his Hair was folded together.

Cruelty shewed to the Painter.

After the death of his Wife, his Brother sued to the King for him, and after long sute he was brought out in the Consistory at Pauls, and (as his Brother did report) they kept him three days without meat before he came to his answer. Then, what by the long imprisoment and much evil handling, and for lack of sustenance, the man was in that case, that he could say nothing, but look and gaze upon the people like a wild man, and if they asked him a question, he could say nothing, but my Lord is a good man. And thus, when they had spoilt his body, and destroyed his wits, they sent him back again to Bearsie Abby; but he came away again from thence, and would not tarry amongst them: Albeit he never came to his perfect mind, to his dying day.

Valentine and his Wife burned in York.

His Brother, of whom I before spake, whose name was Valentine Freese and his Wife, gave their lives at one stake in York, for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

Also the Wife of the said Father Bate, while he was at Fulham, made many supplications to the King without redress, and at the last she delivered one to his own hands, and he read it himself, whereupon she was appointed to go into Chancery Lane, to one, whose name (as is thought) was master Selyard, and at last she got a Letter of the said Selyard to the Bishop, and when she had it, she thought all her sute well bestowed, hoping that some good should come to her husband thereby. And because the wicked Officers in those days were crafty, and desirous of his blood, as ſome others had proved their practice, ſome of her friends would needs ſee the contents of her Letter, and not ſuffer her to deliver it to the Biſhop: and as they thought, ſo they found indeed: for it was after this manner.

A crafty Letter of a wicked Officer.

After commendations had, &c. Look what you can gather againſt Father Bane, ſend me word by your truſty friend, Sir William Saxie, that I may certifie the Kings Majeſty, &c. Thus the poor woman, when ſhe thought her ſute had been done, was in leſs hope of her Husbands life than before. But within ſhort ſpace it pleaſed God to deliver him: for he got out in a dark night, and ſo he was caught no more, but died within a ſhort time after.

Roy burned in Portugal.

In this year alſo, as we do underſtand by divers notes of old Regiſters and otherwiſe, Frier Roy was burned in Portugal, but what his examination, or Articles, or order of his death was, we can have no underſtanding: but what his Doctrine was, it may be eaſily judged by the teſtimonies, which he here left in England.

The Biſhops commanded by the King to ſet forth a new Tranſlation of the new Teſtament.

In the beginning of this year which we are now about, through the complaint of the Clergy made to the King, the Tranſlation of the the New Teſtament, with a great number of other Books, were forbidden. For the Biſhops coming into the Star-Chamber the five and twentieth day of May, and coming with the Kings Counſel, after many pretenſes and long debating, alledged that the Tranſlation of Tindal and Ioye were not truly Tranſlated, and moreover, that in them were Prologues and Prefaces, that ſmelled of Hereſie, and railed againſt the Biſhops; wherefore all ſuch Books were prohibited, and commandment given by the King to the Biſhops, that they, calling to them the beſt learned mean of the Univerſities, ſhould cauſe a new Tranſlation to be made, ſo that the people might not be ignorant in the Law of God. Notwithſtanding this commandment, the Biſhops did nothing at all, to the ſetting forth of any new Tranſlation, which cauſed the people much to ſtudy Tindals Tranſlation, by reaſon whereof many things came to light, as ye ſhall hereafter hear.

The Tranſlation of the New Teſtament inhibited by the Biſhops.

This year alſo, in the month of May, the Biſhop of London cauſed all the new Teſtaments of Tindals Tranſlation, and many other Books which he had bought, to be brought unto Pauls Church-yard, and there openly to be burned.

James Bainham, Lawyer and Martyr.

James Bainham Martyr.

James Bainham Gentleman, ſon to one Maſter Bainham a Knight of Glouceſter-ſhire, being vertuouſly brought up by his Parents, in the ſtudies of good Letters, had knowlege both of the Latin and the Greek tongue. After that he gave himſelf to the ſtudy of the Law, being a man of vertuous diſpoſition, and godly converſation, mightily addicted to Prayer, an earneſt reader of Scriptures, a great maintainer of the godly, a viſiter of the Priſoners, liberal to Scholars, very merciful to his Clients, uſing equity and juſtice to the poor, very diligent in giving Counſel to all the needy, Widows, Fatherleſs and afflicted, without money or reward, briefly a ſingular exam- to all Lawyers.

This Maſter Bainham, as is above noted, married the Wife of Simon Fiſh aforeſaid, for the which he was the more ſuſpected, and at laſt was accuſed to Sir Thomas More Chancellor of England, and arreſted with a Sergeant at Arms, and carried out of the middle Temple to the Chancellors houſe at Chelſey, where he contined in free Priſon a while, till the time that Sir Thomas More ſaw he could not prevail in perverting of him to his Sect. Then he caſt him into priſon in his own houſe, and whipping him at the Tree in his Garden, called the Tree of Troth, and after ſent him to the Tower to be wracked, and ſo he was, Sir Thomas More being preſent himſelf, till in a manner he had lamed him, becauſe he would not accuſe the Gentlemen of the Temple of his acquaintance, nor would ſhew where his Books lay; and becauſe his Wife denyed them to be at his Houſe, ſhe was ſent to the Fleet, and their goods confiſcate.

After they had thus practiſed againſt him what they could by tortures and torments, then was he brought before John Stokeſley, Biſhop of London, the fifteenth day of December Anno 1531, in the ſaid Town of Chelſey, and there examined upon theſe Articles and Interrogatories inſuing.

Interrogamin inſtred to Bainhams Anſwer.

FIrſt, whether he believed there were any Purgatory of ſouls hence departed.

Whereunto he made anſwer as followeth: If we walk in light, even as he is in light, we have Society together with him, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son hath cleanſed us from all ſin. If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us. If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt, and will forgive us our ſins, and will purge us from all our iniquities.

2. Secondly, Whether that the Saints hence departed are to be honoured and prayed unto, to pray for us.

Anſwer.

To the which he anſwered on this wiſe: My little children, I write this unto you, that you ſin not. If any man do ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the Juſt, and he is the propitiation for our ſins alſo for the ſins of the whole World. And further upon occaſion of theſe words, Omnes ſancti Dei orate pro nobis. Being demanded what he meant by theſe words, Omnes ſancti, he anſwered, That he meant them by thoſe that were alive, as Saint Paul did by the Corinthians, and not by thoſe that be dead: for he prayed not to them, he ſaid, becauſe he thought that they which be dead cannot pray for him. Item, when the whole Church is gathered together, they uſe to pray one for another, or deſire one to pray for another, with one heart; and that the Will of the Lord may be fulfilled, and not ours: and I pray, ſaid he, as our Saviour Chriſt prayed at his laſt hour; Father, take this Cup from me if it be poſſible, yet thy Will be fulfilled.

Omnes ſancti Dei.

Anſwer. Souls departed.

3. Thirdly, He was demanded whether he thought that any ſouls departed were yet in Heaven or no.

To this he anſwered and ſaid, That he believed that they be there as it pleaſed God to have them, that is to ſay, in the Faith of Abraham, and that herein he would commit himſelf to the Church.

4. Fourthly, It was demanded of him, whether he thought it neceſſary to Salvation, for a man to confeſs his ſins to a Prieſt.

Anſwer. Confeſſion and Remiſſion of ſins.

Whereunto his anſwer was this, That it was lawful for one to confeſs and acknowledge his ſins to another. As for any other confeſſion he knew none. And further he ſaid, that if he came to the Sermon, or any other where, whereas the Word of God is preached, and there take repentance for his ſin, he believed his ſins forthwith to be forgiven of God, and that he needed not to go to any confeſſion.

5. Fifthly, That he ſhould ſay and affirm, that the truth of the holy Scripture hath been hid, and appeared not theſe 800 years, neither was known before now.

Anſwer.

To this he ſaid, That he meant no otherwiſe, but that the truth of holy Scripture was never, theſe eight hundred years paſt, ſo plainly and expreſly declared unto the people, as it hath been within theſe ſix years.

6. He was demanded further, for what cauſe holy Scripture hath been better declared within theſe ſix years, than it hath been theſe 800 years before.

The truth of the Scripture long hid.

Whereunto he anſwered, To ſay plainly, he knew no man to have preached the Word of God ſincerly and purely, and after the vain of Scripture, except Maſter Crome and Maſter Latimer, and ſaid moreover, that the New Teſtament now Tranſlated into Engliſh, doth preach and teach the word of God, and that before that time men did preach but only that folks ſhould believe as the Church did believe, and then if the Church erred, men ſhould err too. Howbeit the Church, ſaid he, of Chriſt cannot err: and that there were two Churches, that is, the Church of Chriſt militant, and the Church of Antichriſt, and that this Church of Antichriſt may and doth err, but the Church of Chriſt doth not.

Two Churches.

7. Seventhly, Whether he knew any perſon that dyed in the true Faith of Chriſt, ſince the Apoſtles time.

Anſwer. He ſaid, He knew Bayfield, and thought that he dyed in the true Faith of Chriſt.

Anſwer. Purgatory. 8. Eighthly, He was asked what he thought of Purgatory.

He anſwered, If any ſuch thing had been moved to Saint Paul of Purgatory after this life, he thought Saint Paul would have condemned it for an Hereſie. And when he heard Maſter Crome preach and ſay, that he thought there was a Purgatory after this Life, he thought in his mind that the ſaid Maſter Crome lied, and ſpake againſt his Conſcience; and that there were an hundred more, which thought the ſame as he did: ſaying moreover, that he had ſeen the confeſſion of Maſter Crome in Print, God wot, a very fooliſh thing, as he judged.

Crome belike was now ſlipt from that he had before taught

And as concerning Vows, he granted that there were lawful Vows, as Ananias vowed, Acts 5. for it was in his own power, whether he would have ſold his poſſeſſion or not, and therefore he did offend. But Vows of Chaſtity, and all godlineſs is given of God by his abundant grace, the which no man of himſelf can keep, but it muſt be given him of God. And therefore a Monk, Frier, or Nun, that have vowed the vows of Religion, if they think after their vows made, that they cannot keep their promiſes that they made at Baptiſm, they may go forth and Marry, ſo that they keep, after their Marriage, the promiſe that they made at Baptiſm. And finally, he concluded, that he thought there were no other vows, but only the vow of Baptiſm.

9. Ninthly, He was demanded, whether Luther being a Frier, and taking a Nun out of Religion, and afterward marrying her, did well or no, and what he thought therein.

Anſwer. He anſwered, That he thought nothing. And when they asked him, whether it was lechery or no. He made anſwer, he could not ſay ſo.

As concerning the Sacrament of Anneling, being willed to ſay his mind.

Anſwer. Extream unction. He Anſwered and ſaid. It was but a ceremony, neither did he wot what a man ſhould be the better for ſuch annoyling and annointing. The beſt was, that ſome good prayers he ſaw to be ſaid thereat.

Likewiſe, touching the Sacrament of Baptiſm, his words were theſe.

Anſwer. The Sacrament of Baptiſm. That as many as repent, and do on them Chriſt, ſhall be ſaved: that is, as many as dye concerning ſin, ſhall live by Faith with Chriſt. Therefore it is not we that live after that, but Chriſt in us. And ſo whether we live or dye, we are Gods by adoption, and not by the water only, but by water and faith: That is, by keeping the promiſe made. For ye are kept by Grace and Faith, ſaith Saint Paul, and that not of your ſelves, for it is the gift of God.

He was asked moreover of Matrimony, whether it was a Sacrament or not, and whether it conferreth Grace, being commanded in the old Law, and not yet taken away.

Anſwer. Matrimony. His anſwer was, That Matrimony is an order or Law, that the Church of Chriſt hath made and ordained, by the which men may take to them women and not ſin.

Anſwer. Laſtly, For his Books of Scripture, and for his judgment of Tindal, becauſe he was urged to confeſs the truth, he ſaid, That he had the New Teſtament tranſlated into the Engliſh tongue by Tindal within this month, and thought he offended not God in uſing and keeping the ſame, notwithſtanding that he knew the Kings Proclamation to the contrary, and that it was prohibited in the name of the Church at Pauls Croſs. But for all that he thought the Word of God had not forbid it: confeſſing moreover, that he had in his keeping within this month theſe Books; The wicked Mammon, The Obedience of a Chriſtian man, The Practice of Prelates, The Anſwer of Tindal to Thomas More's Dialogues, The Book of Frith againſt Purgatory, The Epiſtle of George Gee, alias George Clerk: adding furthermore, that in all theſe Books he never ſaw any errors. And if there were any ſuch in them, then if they were corrected, it were good that the people had the ſaid Books. And as concerning the new Teſtament in Engliſh, he thought it utterly good, and that the people ſhould have it as it is. Neither did he ever know (ſaid he) that Tindal was a naughty fellow. And to theſe anſwers he ſubſcribed his name. This examination (as is ſaid) was the fifteenth day of December.

Books forbidden.

The next day following, which was the ſixteenth day of December, the ſaid James Bainham appeared again before the Biſhop of London, in the foreſaid place of Sir Thomas More at Chelſey, where, after the guiſe and form of their proceedings, firſt his former Articles with his Anſwers were again repeated, and his hand brought forth. Which done, they asked him whether he would perſiſt in that which he had ſaid, or elſe would return to the Catholick Church, from whence he was fallen, and to the which he might be yet received, as they ſaid: adding moreover many fair inticing and alluring words, that he would reconcile himſelf; ſaying, the time was yet that he might be received; the boſom of his Mother was open for him. Otherwiſe, if he would continue ſtubborn, there was no remedy.

Now was the time either to ſave, or elſe utterly to caſt himſelf away. Which of theſe ways he would take, the caſe preſent now required a preſent anſwer, for elſe the ſentence definitive was ready there to be read, &c.

M. Bainham ſubmitteth himſelf. To conclude long matter in few words: Bainham wavering in a doubtful perplexity, between life on the one hand, and death on the other, at length giving over to the Adverſaries, gave anſwer unto them that he was contented to ſubmit himſelf in thoſe things wherein he had offended, excuſing that he was deceived by ignorance. Ex Regiſt. Lon. Then the Biſhop requiring him to ſay his mind plainly of his anſwers above declared, demanded what he thought thereof, whether they were true or no.

To this Bainham ſaid, that it was too high for him to judge. And then being asked of the Biſhop, whether there was any Purgatory; He anſwered and ſaid, he could not believe that there was any Purgatory after this life.

Upon other Articles being examined and demanded, he granted as followeth; that he could not judge whether Bayfield dyed in the true Faith of Chriſt or no. That a man making a vow, cannot break it without deadly ſin. That a Prieſt promiſing to live chaſte, may not marry a Wife. That he thinketh the Apoſtles to be in Heaven. That Luther did naught in marrying a Nun. That a child is the better for confirmation. That it is an offence to God, if any man keep Books prohibited by the Church, the Pope, the Biſhop, or the King: and ſaid, That he pondered thoſe points more now than he did before, &c.

Upon theſe anſwers, the Biſhop thinging to keep him in ſafe cuſtody, to further Tryal, committed him to one of the Counters.

{Anno 1532.} Bainham again brought before the Biſhops Chancellor. The time thus paſſing on, which bringeth all things to their end, in the month of February next following, in the year of our Lord, 1532, the foreſaid James Bainham called for again to the Biſhops Conſiſtory, before his Vicar General and other his aſſiſtants: To whom Foxford the Biſhops Chancellor recited again his Articles and Anſwers above mentioned; proteſting, That he intended not to receive him to the unity of the holy Mother Church, unleſs he knew the ſaid Bainham to be returned again purely and unfeignedly to the Catholick Faith, and to ſubmit himſelf penitently to the judgment of the Church. To whom Bainham ſpake to this effect, ſaying, That he hath, and doth believe the holy Church, and holdeth the Faith of the Holy Mother the Catholick Church.

Wherefore the Chancellor offering to him a Bill of his abjuration, after the form of the Popes Church conceived, required him to read it. Who was contented; and read to the clauſe of the abjuration, containing theſe words; I voluntarily, as a true penitent perſon returned from my Heriſies, utterly abjure, &c. And there he ſtayed and would read no further, ſaying, that KING Hen.8. that he knew no the Articles contained in his Abjuration to be Hereſie, therefore he could not ſee why he ſhould refuſe them. Which done, the Chancellor proceeded to the reading of the ſentence definitive, coming to this place of the ſentence; The Doctrine and determination of the Church, &c. and there pauſed, ſaying, He would reſerve the reſt till he ſaw his time. Whom then Bainham deſired to be good unto him, affirming that he did acknowledge that there was a Purgatory; that the Souls of the Apoſtles were in Heaven, &c. Then Began he again to read the ſentence: but Bainham again deſired him to be good to him. Whereupon he ceaſed the ſentence, and ſaid that he would accept this his confeſſion for that time as ſufficient.

So Bainham for that preſent was returned to his Priſon again. Who then the fifth day after, which was the eighth day of February, appeared, as before, in the Conſiſtory. Whom the foreſaid Chancellor repeating again his Articles and Anſwers, asked if he would abjure and ſubmit himſelf. Who anſwered, That he would ſubmit himſelf as a good Chriſtian Man ſhould. Again, the Chancellor the ſecond time asked if he would Abjure. I will (ſaid he) forſake all my Articles, and will meddle no more with them; and ſo being commanded to lay his hand upon the Book, read his Abjuration openly. After the reading whereof, he burſt out into theſe words, ſaying, That becauſe there were many words in the ſaid Abjuration, which he thought obſcure and difficile, he proteſted that by his Oath he intended not to go from ſuch defence, which he might have had before his Oath. Which done, the Chancellor asked him why he made that proteſtation. Bainham ſaid, For fear, leſt any Man of ill will do accuſe me hereafter. Then the Chancellor taking the definitive ſentence in his hand, diſpoſing himſelf (as appeared) to read the ſame; Well Maſter Bainham, ſaid he, take your Oath, and kiſs the Book, or elſe I will do mine office againſt you: and ſo immediately he took the Book in his hand and kiſſed it, and ſubſcribed the ſame with his hand.

Bainham again brought to the Conſiſtory.

Bainham loth to abjure.

Which done, the Chancellor receiving the Abjuration at his hand put him to his Fine, firſt to pay twenty pounds to the King. After that, he injoyned him Penance, to go before the Croſs in Proceſſion at Pauls, and to ſtand before the Preacher during the Sermon at Paul's-Croſs, with a Fagot upon his Shoulder, the next Sunday, and ſo to return with the Sumner to the Priſon again, there to abide the Biſhops determination: and ſo the ſeventeenth day of February he was releaſed and diſmiſſed home. he had ſcarce a month continued, but he bewailed his Fact and Abjuration, and was never quiet in his Mind and Conſcience until the time he had uttered his fall to all his acquaintance, and asked God and all the World forgiveneſs before the Congregation in thoſe days, in a Warehouſe in Bow-lane: and immediately the next Sunday after he came to St. Auſtins, with the New Teſtament in his hand in Engliſh, and the Obedience of a Chriſtian man in his boſom, and ſtood up there before the people in his Pew, there declaring openly with weeping tears, that he had denied God, and prayed all the people to forgive him, and to beware of his weakneſs, and not to do as he did: for (ſaid he) if I ſhould not return again unto the Truth (having the New Teſtament in his hand) this Word of God would damn me both Body and Soul at the Day of Judgment. And there he prayed every body rather to die by and by, than to do as he did: for he would not feel ſuch an Hell again as he did feel, for all the Worlds good. Beſides this, he wrote alſo certain Letters to the Biſhop, to his Brother, and to others; ſo that ſhortly after he was apprehended, and ſo committed to the Tower of London.

The Proceſs againſt James Bainham in caſe of relapſe.

THE nineteenth day of April, 1532, Maſter Richard Foxford, Vicar General to the Biſhop of London, accompanied with certain Divines, and Matthew Grefton the Regiſter, ſitting judicially, James Bainham was brought before him by the Lieutenant of the Tower; before whom the Vicar-General rehearſed the Articles contained in his Abjuration before made, and ſhewed him a bound Book, which the ſaid Bainham acknowledged to be his own writing, ſaying, That it was good. Then he ſhewed him more of a certain Letter ſent unto the Biſhop of London, the which alſo he acknowledged to be his: objecting alſo to the ſaid Bainham, that he had made and read the Abjuration which he had before recited: ſhewing him moreover certain Letters which he had written unto his Brother, the which he confeſſed to be his own writing; ſaying moreover, That though he wrote it, yet there is one thing in the ſame that is naught, if it be as my Lord Chancellor ſaith. Then he asked of Bainham, how

How he underſtood this which followeth, which was in his Letters: Yet could they not ſee nor know him for God, when indeed he was both God and Man, yea, he was Three Perſons in one, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt; and Bainham ſaid it was naught. Which things thus done, there was further objected unto him theſe words: That he had as leve pray to Joan his Wife, as to our Lady. The which Article Bainham denied. The ſaid Bainham amongſt other talk, as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaid, Chriſts Body is not chewed with Teeth but received by Faith. Further it was objected againſt him, That notwithſtanding his Abjuration, he had ſaid, that the Sacrament of the Altar was but a myſtical or memorial Body: the which Article Bainham denied. It was further laid unto him, that he ſhould ſay, That St. Thomas of Canterbury was a Thief and a Murtherer, and a Devil in Hell. Whereunto he anſwered thus: That St. Thomas of Canterbury was a Murtherer, and if he did not repent him of his Murther, he was rather a Devil in Hell, than a Saint in Heaven.

Another appearance.

The twentieth day of April, in the year aforeſaid, the ſaid James Bainham was brought before the Vicar-General, in the Church of All Saints, of Barking, whereas he miniſtred theſe Interrogatories unto him.

Firſt, That ſince the Feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt, he had ſaid, affirmed, and believed, That the Sacrament of the Altar was but a myſtical Body of Chriſt; and afterward he ſaid, It was but a memorial. The which Article Bainham denied. Then the Vicar-General declared unto him, that our holy Mother the Catholick Church determineth and teacheth in this manner: That in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, there remaineth no Bread. The Official asked Bainham, whether he did believe or not? Whereunto Bainham anſwered, ſaying, That St. Paul calleth it Bread, rehearſing theſe words; Quotieſcunque comederitis panem hunc, & de poculo biberitis, mortem Domini annunciabitis. And in that point he ſaith as St. Paul ſaith, and believeth as the Church believeth. And being demanded twice afterward what he thought therein, he would give no other anſwer.

St. Paul calleth the Sacrament Bread.

Item, That ſince the Feaſt of Eaſter aforeſaid, he had affirmed and believed, that every Man whatſoever that would take upon him to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt clearly, had as much power as the Pope. To the which Article he anſwered thus: He that preacheth the Word of God purely, whatſoever he be, and liveth thereafter, he hath the Key that bindeth and looſeth both in Heaven and Earth. The which Key is the ſame Scripture that is preached, and the Pope hath no other power to bind and to looſe, but by the Key of the Scripture.

True preachers have as much power of the Keys as the Pope.

Item, That he affirmed, That St. Thomas of Canterbury was a Thief and a Murtherer, and in Hell. Whereunto he anſwered as before.

Articles falſly deprayed.

Item, That he ſaid, That he had as leve pray to Joan his Wife, as to our Lady. The which he denied as before.

Item, That he affirmed and believed, that Chriſt himſelf was but a Man: The which Article he alſo denied.

The Premiſſes thus paſſed, the Vicar-General received Francis Realms, John Edwards, Ralph Hilton, John Ridley, Francis Driland, and Ralph Noble, as Witneſſes to be Sworn upon the Articles aforeſaid, and to ſpeak the truth before the face of the ſaid James Bainham, in the preſence of Maſter John Nayler, Vicar of Barking, Maſter John Rode Bachelor of Divinity, William Smith, Richard Grivel, Thomas Wimple, and Richard Gill.

Witneſs againſt Maſter Bainham.

The laſt appearance of James Bainham.

The ſix and twentieth day of April, in the year aforeſaid, before Maſter John Foxford, Vicar-General of the Biſhop of London, in the preſence of Matthew Grefton, Regiſter, and Nicholas Wilſon and William Philley, profeſſors of Divinity, John Oliver, William Middleton, and Hugh Appriſe, Doctors of the Law, M. Richard Greſham Sheriff of London, and a great company of others, James Bainham was brought forth by the Lieutenant of the Tower, in whoſe preſence the Vicar-General rehearſed the merits of the cauſe of Inquiſition of Hereſie againſt him, and proceeded to the reading of the Abjuration. And when the Judge read this Article following contained in the Abjuration: Item, That I have ſaid, That I will not determine whether any Souls departed be yet in Heaven or no, but I believe that they be there as it pleaſeth God to have them; that is to ſay, in the Faith of Abraham: and I wote not whether the Souls of the Apoſtles or any other be in Heaven or no. To this James anſwered, That I did Abjure, and if that had not been I would not have Abjured at all.

Souls departed.

After all the Articles were read contained in the Abjuration, and certain talk had as touching the Sacrament of Baptiſm, the ſaid James Bainham ſpake theſe words: If a Turk, a Jew, or a Saracen do truſt in God, and keep his Law, he is a good Chriſtian Man. Then the Official ſhewed unto him the Letters which he ſent unto his Brother, written with his own hand, and asked him what he thought as touching this Clauſe following: Yet could they not ſee and know him from God, when indeed he was both God and Man, yea, he was three Perſons in one, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. Whereunto Bainham ſaid, That it was naught, and that he did it by ignorance, and did not over-ſee his Letters. Then Maſter Nicholas Wilſon among other talk, as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, declared unto him, That the Church did believe the very Body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the Altar. Bainham anſwered, The Bread is not Jeſus Chriſt, for Chriſts Body is not chewed with Teeth, therefore it is but Bread. Being further demanded whether in the Sacrament of the Altar is the very Body of Chriſt, God and Man in Fleſh and Blood; after divers doubtful anſwers, Bainham anſwered, thus: He is there very God and Man in form of Bread.

The Sacrament of Baptiſm.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

This done, the Official declared unto him the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes which were come in againſt him, and objected unto him, that a little before Eaſter, he had Abjured all Hereſies, as well particularly as generally. Then the ſaid Vicar-General, after he had taken deliberation and advice with the learned his Aſſiſtants, did proceed to the reading of the definitive ſentence againſt him, and alſo publiſhed the ſame in writing: whereby amongſt other things, beſides his Abjuration, he pronounced and condemned him as a relapſed Heretick, damnably fallen into ſundry Hereſies, and ſo to be left unto the Secular Power; that is to ſay, to one of the Sheriffs being there preſent. After the pronouncing of which ſentence, Maſter Nicholas Wilſon counſelled and admoniſhed the ſaid James, That he would conform himſelf unto the Church. To whom he anſwered, That he truſted that he is the very Child of God; which ye blind Aſſes, ſaid he, do not perceive. And laſt of all, departing from his Judgment, he ſpake theſe words: Maſter Wilſon, nor you my Lord Chancellor ſhall not prove by Scripture, that there is any Purgatory. Then the ſentence of condemnation was given againſt him, the which here to repeat word for word is not neceſſary, forſomuch as the tenor thereof is all one with that which paſſed before in the ſtory of Bayfield, alias Somerſam. Here alſo ſhould enſue the Letter of the Biſhop of London, directed unto the Mayor and Sheriffs of the ſame City, for the receiving of him into their power, and the putting of him to death, the tenor whereof is alſo of like effect to that before-written in the ſtory of Bayfield. After this ſentence given, James Bainham was delivered into the hands of Sir Richard Greſham Sheriff, then being preſent, who cauſed him by his Officers to be carried unto Newgate, and the ſaid James Bainham was burned in Smithfield the laſt day of April, in the year aforeſaid, at three of the Clock at afternoon.

The words of James Bainham to Maſter Wilſon.

This Maſter Bainham, during his Impriſonment, was very cruelly handled. For almoſt the ſpace of a fortnight he lay in the Biſhops Cole-houſe in the Stocks, with Irons upon his Legs. Then he was carried to the Lord Chancellors, and there chained to a Poſt two nights. Then he was carried to Fulham, where he was cruelly handled by the ſpace of a fortnight. Then to the Tower, where he lay a fortnight, ſcourged with Whips, to make him revoke his Opinions. From thence he was carried to Barking, then to Chelſey, and there condemned, and ſo to Newgate to be burned.

Anno 1532

A miracle, and a wondrous work of God to behold.

At whoſe burning, here is notoriouſly to be obſerved, that as he was at the Stake in the midſt of the flaming fire, which fire had half conſumed his Arms and Legs, he ſpake theſe words: O ye Papiſts, behold, ye look for miracles, and here now you may ſee a miracle; for in this Fire I feel no more pain, than if I were in a Bed of Down: but it is to me as a Bed of Roſes. Theſe words ſpake he in the midſt of the flaming fire, when his Legs and Arms, as I ſaid, were half conſumed.

The Hiſtory of three Men hanged for the burning of the Rood of Dover-Court, collected out of a Letter of Robert Gardiner, which was one of the doers of the ſame.

Out of a Letter of Robert Gardiner, written to Chapman a Londoner, and yet alive.

IN the ſame year of our Lord 1532, there was an Idol named the Rood of Dover-Court, whereunto was much and great reſort of People.. For at that time there was a great rumour blown abroad amongſt the ignorant ſort, That the power of the Idol of Dover-Court was ſo great, that no Man had power to ſhut the Church-door where he ſtood, and therefore they let the Church-door, both Night and Day, continually ſtand open, for the more credit unto their blind rumor. Which once being conceived in the heads of the vulgar ſort, ſeemed a great marvel unto many Men; but to many again, whom God had bleſſed with his Spirit, was greatly ſuſpected, eſpecially unto theſe, whoſe names here follow; as Robert King of Dedham, Robert Debnam of Eaſtbergholt, Nicholas Marſh of Dedham, and Robert Gardiner of Dedham, whoſe Conſciences were ſore burthened to ſee the Honour and Power of the Almighty Living God ſo to be blaſphemed by ſuch an Idol. Wherefore they were moved by the Spirit of God, to travel out of Dedham in a wondrous goodly Night, both hard Froſt and fair Moonſhine, although the Night before and the Night after were exceeding foul and rainy. It was from the Town of Dedham, to the place where the filthy Rood ſtood, Ten Miles. Notwithſtanding, they were ſo willing in that their enterprize, that they went theſe Ten Miles without pain, and found the Church-door open according to the blind talk of the ignorant People: for there durſt no unfaithful body ſhut it. Which happened well for their purpoſe; for they found the Idol: which had as much power to keep the Door ſhut as to keep it open. And for proof thereof, they took the Idol from his Shrine, and carried him a quarter of a Mile from the place where he ſtood, without any reſiſtance of the ſaid Idol. Whereupon they ſtrook Fire with a Flint-ſtone, and ſuddainly ſet him on Fire, who burned out ſo brim, that he lighted them homeward one good Mile of the Ten.

This done, there went a great talk abroad that they ſhould have great Riches in that place: but it was very untrue; for it was not their thought or enterpriſe, as they themſelves afterward confeſſed, for there was nothing taken away but his Coat, his Shooes, and Tapers. The Tapers did help to burn him, the Shooes they had again, and the Coat one Sir Thomas Roſe did burn, but they had neither Peny, half-Peny, Gold, Groat, nor Jewel.

The Story, Examination, Death and Martyrdom of John Frith.

AMongſt all other chances lamentable, there hath been none a long time which ſeemed unto me more grievous, than the lamentable death and cruel handling of John Frith, ſo learned and excellent a young Man, which had ſo profited in all kind of learning and knowledge, that ſcarcely there was his equal amongſt all his companions: and beſides, withal had ſuch a godlineſs of life joyned with his Doctrine, that it was hard to judge in whether of them he was more commendable, being greatly praiſeworthy in them both. But as touching his Doctrine by the Grace of Chriſt we will ſpeak hereafter. Of the great godlineſs which was in him this may ſerve for experiment ſufficient, for that notwithſtanding his other manifold and ſingular Gifts and Ornaments of the mind in him moſt pregnant, wherewithal he might have opened an eaſie way unto Honour and Dignity, notwithſtanding he choſe rather wholly to conſecrate himſelf unto the Church of Chriſt, excellently ſhewing forth and practiſing in himſelf the Precept ſo highly commended of the Philoſophers, touching the life of Man; which life they ſay is given unto us in ſuch ſort, that how much the better the Man is, ſo much the leſs he ſhould live unto himſelf, but unto other, ſerving for the common utility, and that we ſhould think a great part of our birth to be due unto our Parents, a greater part unto our Country, and the greateſt part of all to be beſtowed upon the Church, if we will be counted good Men. Firſt of all he began his ſtudy at Cambridge. In whom Nature had planted, being but a Child, marvellous inſtinctions and love unto learning, whereunto he was addict. He had alſo a wonderful promptneſs of wit, and a ready capacity to receive and underſtand any thing, inſomuch that he ſeemed not to be ſent unto learning, but alſo born for the ſame purpoſe. Neither was there any diligence wanting in him, equal unto that towardneſs, or worthy of his diſpoſition. Whereby it came to paſs, that he was not only a lover of Learning, but alſo became an exquiſite learned Man. In the which exerciſe when he had diligently laboured certain years, not without great profit both of Latin and Greek, at the laſt he fell into knowledge and acquaintance with William Tindal, through whoſe inſtructions he firſt received into his heart the Seed of the Goſpel and ſincere godlineſs.

John Frith, Martyr.

John Frith, firſt Student in Cambridge.

Commendation of Frith's learning.

At that time Thomas Wolſey, Cardinal of York prepared to build a Colledge in Oxford, marvellous ſumptuous, which had the name and title of Frideſwide, but now named Chriſts Church, not ſo much (as it is thought) for the love and zeal that he bare unto learning, as for an ambitious deſire of glory and renown, and to leave a perpetual name unto the poſterity. But that building, he being cut off by the ſtroke of death (for he was ſent for unto the King, accuſed of certain crimes, and in the way by immoderate purgations killed himſelf) left partly begun, partly half ended, and unperfect, and nothing elſe ſave only the Kitchen was fully finiſhed. Whereupon Rodulphus Gualterus, a learned Man, being then in Oxford, and beholding the College, ſaid theſe words in Latin: Egregium opus, Cardinalis iſte inſtituit collegium, & abſolvit popinam. How large and ample thoſe Buildings ſhould have been, what ſumptuous coſt ſhould have been beſtowed upon the ſame, may eaſily be perceived by that which is already builded, as the Kitchen, the Hall, and certain Chambers, whereas there is ſuch curious Graving and Workmanſhip of Stone-cutters, that all things on every ſide did glitter for the excellency of the Workmanſhip, for the fineneſs of the matter, with the gilt Anticks and Emboſſings, inſomuch that if all the reſt had been finiſhed to that determinate end as it was begun, it might well have excelled not only all Colleges of Students, but alſo Palaces of Princes. This ambitious Cardinal gathered together into that College whatſoever excellent thing there was in the whole Realm, either Veſtments, Veſſels, or other Ornaments, beſide proviſion of all kind of precious things. Beſides that, he alſo appointed unto that company all ſuch Men as were found to excel in any kind of learning and knowledge. Whoſe names to recite all in in order would be too long. The chief of them which were called from Cambridge were these:

Master Clerk, Master of Art, of thirty four years of Age.
M. Frier, afterward Doctor of Phisick, after that a strong Papist.
M. Sumner, Master of Art.
M. Harman, Master of Art, and after fellow of Eaton College, after that a Papist.
M. Bettes, Master of Art, a good Man and zealous, and so remained.
Master Cox, Master of Art, who conveyed himself away toward the North, and after was School-master of Eaton, and then Chaplain to Doctor Goodrich, Bishop of Ely, and by him preferred to King Henry, and late Bishop of Ely.
Goodman, who being sick in the Prison with the other, was had out, and died in the Town.
Drumme, who afterwards fell away and forsook the Truth.
Thomas Lawney, Chaplain of the House, Prisoner with John Frith.

This Taverner repented him very much that he had made Songs to Popish Dittles in the time of his blindness.

To these joyn also Taverner of Boston, the good Musician, besides many other called also out of other places, most picked young Men, of grave judgment and sharp wits; who conferring together upon the abuses of Religion, being at that time crept into the Church, were therefore accused of Heresie unto the Cardinal, and cast into a Prison, within a deep Cave under the Ground of the same College where their Salt Fish was laid; so that through the filthy stinch thereof they were all infected, and certain of them taking their death in the same Prison, shortly upon the same being taken out of the Prison into their Chambers, there deceased.

Persecuters.

The troublers and examiners of these good Men, were these: Doctor London, Doctor Higdon, Dean of the said College, and Doctor Cottesford, Commissary.

M. Clark, M. Sumner, Sir Baily, killed through Imprisonment.

Master Clerk, Master Sumner, and Sir Baily, eating nothing but Salt Fish from February to the midst of August, died all three together within the compass of one week.

Master Bettes a witty Man, having no Books found in his Chamber, through intreaty and surety got out of Prison, and so remaining a space in the College, at last slipt away to Cambridge, and after was Chaplain to Queen Ann, and in great favour with her.

Taverner, although he was accused and suspected for hiding of Clarks Books under the Boards in his School; yet the Cardinal for his Musick excused him; saying, That he was but a Musician: and so he escaped.

After the death of these Men, John Frith with other, by the Cardinals Letter, which sent word that he would not have them so straitly handled, were dismissed out of Prison, upon condition not to pass above Ten Miles out of Oxford. Which Frith, after hearing of the Examination of Dalaber and Garret, which bear then Fagots, went over the Sea, and after two years he came over for Exhibition of the Prior of Reading (as was thought) and had the Prior over with him.

Of this Dalaber read more in the Story of Tho. Garret.

Being at Reading, it happened that he was there taken for a Vagabond, and brought to Examination: where the simple Man, which could not craftily enough colour himself, was set in the Stocks. Where after he had sitten a long time, and was almost pined with hunger, and would not for all that declare what he was, at the last he desired that the School-master of the Town might be brought to him, which at that time was one Leonard Cox, a Man very well learned. As soon as he came unto him, Frith, by and by began in the Latin Tongue to bewail his Captivity.

John Frith set in the Stocks at Reading.

Leonard Cox, School-master of Reading.

The School-master by and by, being overcome with his Eloquence, did not only take pity and compassion upon him, but also began to love and embrace such an excellent wit and disposition unlooked for, especially in such an estate and misery. Afterward, they conferring more together upon many things, as touching the Universities, Schools, and Tongues, fell from the Latin into the Greek: Wherein Frith did so inflame the love of the School-master towards him, that he brought him into a marvellous admiration, especially when the School-master heard him so promptly by heart rehearse Homers Verses out of his first Book of Iliads. Whereupon the School-master went with all speed unto the Magistrates, grievously complaining of the injury which they did shew unto so excellent and innocent a young Man.

John Frith, through the help of the School-master, was delivered out of the Stocks.

Thus Frith, through the help of the School-master, was freely dimitted out of the Stocks, and set at liberty without punishment. Albeit this his safety continued not long, through the great hatred and deadly pursute of Sir Thomas More, who at that time being Chancellor of England, persecuted him both by Land and Sea, besetting all the Ways and Havens, yea and promising great rewards, if any Man could bring him any news or tydings of him.

Sir Thomas More a deadly persecutor of John Frith.

Thus Frith being on every part beset with troubles, not knowing which way to turn him, seeketh for some place to hide him in. Thus fleeting from one place to another, and often changing both his Garments and Place, yet could he be in safety in no place; no not long amongst his Friends: so that at the last, being traiterously taken (as ye shall after hear) he was sent unto the Tower of London, whereas he had many conflicts with the Bishops, but specially in writing with Sir Thomas More. The first occasion of his writing was this: Upon a time he had communication with a certain old familiar Friend of his, touching the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. The whole effect of which disputation consisted specially in these four points:

The occasion of Friths writing against More.

1. First, That the matter of the Sacrament is no necessary Article of Faith under pain of damnation.

2. Secondly, That forsomuch as Christs natural Body in like condition hath all properties of our body, sin only except, it cannot be, neither is it agreeable unto reason, that he should be in two places or more at once, contrary to the nature of our body.

3. Moreover, it shall not seem meet or necessary, that we should in this place understand Christs words according to the literal sence, but rather according to the order and Phrase of speech, comparing Phrase with Phrase, according to the Analogy of the Scripture.

4. Last of all, how that it ought to be received according to the true and right Institution of Christ, albeit that the order which at this time is crept into the Church, and is used now adays by the Priests, do never so much differ from it.

The occasion on Frith writing upon the Sacrament.

And forasmuch as the Treatise of this disputation seemed somewhat long, his Friend desired him that such things as he had reasoned upon he would briefly commit unto writing, and give unto him for the help of his memory. Frith, albeit he was unwilling, and not ignorant how dangerous a thing it was to enter into such a contentious matter, at the last notwithstanding, he being overcome by the intreaty of his Friend, rather followed his will than looked to his own safeguard.

William Holt a spy.

There was at that time in London a Taylor named William Holt, which feigning great friendship toward this party, instantly required of him to give him license to read over that same Writing of Friths. Which when he unadvisedly did, the other by and by carried it unto More, being then Chancellor. Which thing afterward was occasion of great trouble, and also of death unto the said Frith. For More having gotten a Copy of his Book, not only of this Sycophant, but also two other Copies, which at the same time in a manner were sent him by other promoters, he whetted his wits, and called his spirits together as much as he might, meaning to refute his opinion by a contrary Book.

Sir Thomas More Chancellor.

This in a manner was the whole sum of the reasons of Frith's Book; First, to declare the Popes belief of the Sacrament to be no necessary Article of our Faith; that is to say, that it is no Article of our Faith necessary to be believed under pain of damnation, that the Sacrament should be the natural Body of Christ. Which he thus proproveth. For many ſo believe, and yet in ſo believing the Sacrament to be the natural body are not thereby ſaved, but receive it to their own damnation.

The ſum of Frith's Book of the Sacrament.

Again, in believing the Sacrament to be the natural body, yet that natural preſence of his Body in the Bread is not that which ſaveth us, but his preſence in our hearts by Faith. And likewiſe, the not believing of his bodily preſence in the Sacrament, is not the thing that ſhall damn us, but the abſence of him out of our heart, through unbelief. And if it be objected, that it is neceſſary to believe Gods Word under pain of damnation: to that he Anſwereth, That the Word taken in the right ſenſe, as Chriſt meant, maintaineth no ſuch bodily preſence as the Popes Church doth teach, but rather a Sacramental preſence. And that, ſaith he, may be further confirmed thus:

This not believing the corporal preſence of Chriſt in the Sacraments is no damnation.

Argument.

Ce- None of the old Fathers before Chriſts Incarnation were bound under pain of damnation to believe this point.

la- All we be ſaved by the ſame Faith that the old Fathers were.

rent. Ergo, None of us are bound to believe this point under pain of damnation.

The firſt part, ſaith he, is evident of it ſelf. For how could they believe that which they never heard nor ſaw?

Auguſt. ad Dardanum. The ſecond part, ſaith he, appeareth plainly by Saint Auguſtine, writing ad Dardanum, and alſo by an hundred places more. Neither is there any thing that he doth more often inculcate than this, that the ſame Faith that ſaved our Fathers, ſaveth us alſo, And therefore upon the truth of theſe two parts thus proved, muſt the concluſion, ſaith he, needs follow,

Another Argument.

None of the old Fathers before Chriſts Incarnation did eat Chriſt corporally in their ſigns, but only myſtically, and ſpiritually, and were ſaved.

All we do eat Chriſt even as they did, and are ſaved as they were.

Ergo, None of us do eat Chriſt Corporally, but myſtically, and ſpiritually in our ſigns as they did.

For the probation of the firſt part, Frith proceeding in his Diſcourſe declareth how the ancient Fathers before Chriſts Incarnation did never believe any ſuch point of this groſs and carnal eating of Chriſts body; and yet notwithſtanding they did eat him ſpiritually and were ſaved: As Adam, Abraham, Moſes, Aaron, Phinees, and other godly Iſraelites beſides. All which, ſaith he, did eat the Body of Chriſt, and did drink his Blood as we do. But this eating and drinking of theirs was Spiritual, pertaining only to Faith, and not to the Teeth:

1 Cor. 10 For they were all under the cloud, and drank of the rock which followed them; this rock was Chriſt, which was promiſed them to come into the World. And this promiſe was firſt made unto Adam, when as it was ſaid unto

Gen. 3. the Serpent; I will put hatred between thee and the woman, between her ſeed and thy ſeed, &c. And afterward

Gen. 26. again unto Abraham: In thy ſeed ſhall all people be bleſſed, &c. Adding alſo the Sacrament of Circumciſion, which was called the Covenant; not becauſe it was ſo indeed, but becauſe it was a ſign and a token of the Covenant made between God and Abraham, admoniſhing us thereby, how we ſhould judge and think touching the Sacrament of body and blood; to wit, that albeit it be called the body of Chriſt, yet we ſhould properly underſtand thereby the fruit of our juſtification, which plentifully floweth unto all the faithful, by his moſt healthful body and blood. Likewiſe the ſame promiſe was made unto Moſes the moſt meek and gentle Captain of the Iſraelites, which did not only himſelf believe upon Chriſt, which was ſo often promiſed, but alſo did prefigurate him by divers means, both by the Manna which came down from Heaven, and alſo by the Water which iſſued out of the Rock, for the refreſhing of the bodies of his people.

Bread is called the Body, as the Sacrament of Circumciſion is called the Covenant.

Manna a figure of Chriſts Body.

Neither is it to be doubted, but that both Manna and this water had a prophetical miſtery in them, declaring the very ſelf-ſame thing then, which the Bread and the Wine do now declare unto us in the Sacrament. For thus ſaith Saint Auguſtin, Whoſoever did underſtand Chriſt in the Manna, did eat the ſame ſpiritual food that we do. But they, which by that Manna ſought only to fill their Bellies, did eat thereof, and are dead. So likewiſe ſaith he of the Drink; For the Rock was Chriſt. And by and by after he inferreth thus: Moſes did eat Manna, and Phinees alſo, and many other alſo did eat thereof, which pleaſed God, and are not dead. Why? Becauſe they did underſtand the viſible meat ſpiritually. They did ſpiritual y hunger, and did ſpiritually taſte of it, that they might be ſpiritually ſatisfied. They all did eat the ſame ſpiritual meat, and all did drink the ſame ſpiritual drink: all one ſpiritual thing, but not all one Corporal matter (for they did eat Manna, and we another thing) but the ſelf-ſame ſpiritual thing that we do, and although they drank the ſame ſpiritual drink that we do, yet they drank one thing, and we another: Which nevertheleſs ſignified all one thing in ſpiritual effect. How did they drink all one thing? The Apoſtle anſwereth, Of the ſpiritual Rock which followed them, for the Rock was Chriſt. And Beda alſo adding theſe words ſaith, Behold the ſigns are altered, and yet the Faith remaineth one. Thereby a man may perceive that the Manna which came down form Heaven, was the ſame unto them that our Sacrament is unto us, and that by either of them is ſignified, that the body of Chriſt came down from Heaven; and yet notwithſtanding never any of them ſaid, that Manna was the very body of Meſſias, as our Sacramental Bread is not indeed the Body of Chriſt, but a myſtical repreſentation of the ſame. For like as the Manna which came down from Heaven, and the bread which is received in the ſupper, doth nouriſh the body, even ſo the body of Chriſt coming down from Heaven, and being given for us, doth quicken up the ſpirits of the Believers unto life everlaſting. Then if the Salvation of both people be like, and their faith alſo one, there is no cauſe why we ſhould add Tranſubſtantiation unto our Sacrament, more than they believed their Manna to be altred and changed. Moreover becauſe they are named Sacraments, even by the ſignification of the name they muſt needs be ſigns of things, or elſe of neceſſity they can be no Sacraments.

1 King. 8. The Water of the Rock a Figure of Chriſts Body. Bread and Wine a Figure likewiſe of Chriſts Body.

1 Cor. 10

The old Fathers did eat the ſame Spiritual Food that we do, but not the ſame Corporal Food, for they did eat Chriſt in Manna, we do eat him in Bread. Beda.

A ſimilitude betwen Manna and the Body of Chriſt.

Objection.

But ſome may here object and ſay; If only Faith, both unto them and alſo unto us, be ſufficient for Salvation, what need then any Sacraments to be inſtituted? He anſwered, that there are three cauſes why Sacraments are inſtituted. The firſt Saint Auſtin declareth in theſe words, Writing againſt Fauſtus, Men, ſaith he, cannot be knit together into one name of Religion, be it true or be it falſe, except they be knit by the ſociety of ſigns and viſible Sacraments, the power whereof doth wonderfully prevail, in ſo much that ſuch as contemn them are wicked: for that is wickedly contemned without the which godlineſs cannot be made perfect, &c. Another cauſe is, that they ſhould be helps to graft and plant Faith in our Hearts, and for the confirmation of Gods promiſes. But this uſe of Sacraments many are yet ignorant of, and more there be which do prepoſterouſly judge of the ſame, taking the ſigns for the thing it ſelf, and worſhiping the ſame: even by like reaſon in a manner, as if a man would take the buſh that hangeth at the Tavern door, and ſuck it to ſlack his Thirſt, and will not go into the Tavern where the Wine is. Thirdly, they do ſerve unto this uſe, to ſtir up the minds and hearts of the faithful to give thanks unto God for his benefits. And theſe in a manner are the principal points of his Book.

Anſwer. Three cauſes why Sacraments are Ordained. Auguſt. contra Fauſtum.

The ſecond cauſe. Sacraments not to be worſhipped for the things.

The third cauſe.

When More (as is aforeſaid) had gotten a Copy of this Treatiſe, he ſharpened his Pen all that he might, to make anſwer unto this young man (for ſo he calleth him throughout his whole Book) but in ſuch ſort, that when the Book was once ſet forth, and ſhewed unto the World, then he endeavoured himſelf all that he might to keep it from printing, peradventure leſt that any Copy thereof ſhould come unto Friths hand. But notwithſtanding, when at the laſt Frith had gotten a Copy thereof, by means of his friends, He anſwered him out of the Priſon, omitting nothing that any man could deſire to the perfect and and absolute handling of the matter. And as it were a great labour, so do I think it not much necessary to repeat all his Reasons and Arguments, or the Testimonies which he had gathered out of the Doctors: specially forsomuch as the Archbishop of Canterbury Cranmer, in his Apology against the Bishop of Winchester, seemed to have collected them abundantly, gathering the principal and chiefest helps from thence that he leaned unto against the other: and I doubt much whether the Archbishop ever gave any more credit unto any Author of that Doctrine, than unto this aforesaid Frith.

What dexterity of Wit was in him, and excellency of Doctrine, it may appear not only by his Books which he wrote of the Sacrament, but also in them which he intituled of Purgatory. In the which quarrel he withstood the violence of three most obstinate enemies: that is to say, of Rochester, More, and Rastal, whereof the one by the help of the Doctors, the other by wresting of the Scripture, and the third by the help of natural Philosophy had conspired against him. But he, as a Hercules fighting not against two only, but even with them all three at once, did so overthrow and confound them, that he converted Rastal to his part.

Rochester, More, and Rastal, against Frith.

John Frith converted Rastal.

Besides all these Commendations of this young Man, there was also in him a friendly and prudent moderation in uttering of the truth, joyned with a learned godliness. Which vertue hath always so much prevailed in the Church of Christ, that without it, all other good gifts of knowledge, be they never so great, cannot greatly profit, but oftentimes do very much hurt. And would God that all things in all places were so free from all kind of dissention, that there were no mention made amongst Christians of Zuinglians and Lutherians, when as neither Zuinglius, neither Luther died for us, but that we might be all one in Christ. Neither do I think that any thing could happen more grievous unto those worthy Men, than their names so to be abused to Sects and Factions, which so greatly withstood and strove against all Factions. Neither do I here discourse which part came neareſt unto the truth: Neither so rashly intermeddle in this matter, that I will detract any thing from either part, but rather wish of God I might joyn either part unto other.

The prudent temperance and moderation of John Frith.

But now, forsomuch as we intreat of the Story of John Frith, I cannot choose, but must needs earnestly and heartily embrace the prudent and godly moderation which was in that Man, who maintaining his quarrel of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, no less godly than learnedly, (and so as no Man in a manner had done it more learnedly and pithily) yet he did it so moderately, without any contention, that he would never seem to strive against the Papists, except he had been driven to it even of necessity. In all other matters where necessity did not move him to contend, he was ready to grant all things for quietness sake, as his most modest Reason and answers did declare.

John Frith speaking according to that time, shewed the opinion of Luther might be received.

For when as More, disputing in a certain place upon the Sacrament, layed against him the authority of Doctor Barns, for the presence of the Body and Blood in the Sacrament, he answered unto More and his Companions, that he would promise under this condition, That the sentence of Luther and Barns might be holden as ratified, he would never speak more words of it: for in that point they did both agree with him, that the Sacrament was not to be worshipped, and that Idolatry being taken away, he was content to permit every Man to judge of the Sacrament, as God should put into their hearts: for then there remained no more poison, that any Man ought or might be afraid of. Wherefore if they did agree in that which was the chiefest point of the Sacrament, they should easily accord and agree in the remnant.

Moderation commended in matters of disputation.

Thus much he wrote in the Treatise, entituled, The exile of Barns against More. Which words of this most meek Martyr of Christ, if they would take place in the seditious divisions and factions of these our days, with great ease and little labour, Men might be brought to an unity in this controversie, and much more concord and love should be in the Church, and much less offence given abroad than there is.

But to our Story again of John Frith, who after he had now sufficiently contended in his writings with More, Rochester, and Rastal, Mores Son in Law, he was at the last carried to Lambeth, first before the Bishop of Canterbury, and afterward unto Croidon, before the Bishop of Winchester, to Plead his Cause. Last of all, he was called before the Bishops in a common Assembly at London, where he constantly defended himself, if he might have been heard.

John Frith convented before the Bishop.

The Order of his judgment, with the manner of his Examination and Articles which were objected against him, are compriſed and set forth by himself in a Letter written and sent unto his Friends, whilst he was prisoner in the Tower.

A Letter of John Frith to his Friends, concerning his troubles: Wherein after he had first with a brief Preface saluted them, entring then into the matter, Thus he writeth.

This Letter is to be seen in the end of that excellent and worthy work which he made in the Tower concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Pugatory.

I Doubt not dear Brethren, but that it doth some deal vex you, to see the one part to have all the words, and freely to speak what they list, and the other to be put to silence, and not be heard indifferently. But refer your matters unto God, which shortly shall judge after another fashion. In the mean time I have written unto you, as briefly as I may, what Articles were objected against me, and what were the principal points of my condemnation, that you might understand the matter certainly.

The whole matter of this my examination was comprehended in two special Articles, that is to say, of Purgatory, and of the substance of the Sacrament.

And first of all, as touching Pugatory, they enquired of me whether I did believe there was any place to purge the spots and filth of the Soul after this life. But I said, that I thought there was no such place: For Man (said I) doth consist and is made only of two parts, that is to say, of the body and the soul, whereof the one is purged here in this World, by the Cross of Christ, which he layeth upon every Child that he receiveth; as affliction, Worldly oppression, persecution, imprisonment, &c. And last of all the reward of sin, which is death, is laid upon us: but the soul is purged with the Word of God, which we receive through Faith, to the salvation both of Body and soul. Now if ye can shew me a third part of Man beside the Body and the Soul, I will also grant unto you the third place, which ye do call Purgatory. But because ye cannot do this, I must also of necessity deny unto you the Bishop of Romes Purgatory. Nevertheless I count neither part a necessary Article of our Faith, to be believed under pain of damnation, whether there be such a Purgatory or no.

Secondly, They examined me touching the Sacrament of the Altar, whether it was the very Body of Christ, or no.

The Sacrament of Christs Body.

I answered, that I thought it was both Christs Body and also our Body, as Saint Paul teacheth us in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and tenth Chapter. For in that it is made one bread of many cornes, it is called our body, which being divers and many members, are associate and gathered together into one fellowship or body. Likewise of the wine, which is gathered of many clusters of Grapes, and is made into one Liquor. But the same bread again, in that it is broken, is the Body of Christ, declaring his Body to be broken and delivered unto death, to redeem us from our iniquities.

Furthermore, in that the Sacrament is distributed, it is Christs Body, signifying that as verily as the Sacrament is distributed unto us, so verily is Christs Body and the fruit of his passion distributed unto all faithful people.

In that it is received it is Christs Body, signifying that as verily as the outward Man received the Sacrament with his Teeth and Mouth, so verily doth the inward Man through Faith receive Christs Body and fruit of his passion, and is as sure of it as of the Bread which he eateth.

Transubstantiation.

Well (said they) dost thou not think that his very natural Body, Flesh, Blood, and Bone, is really contained under the Sacrament, and there present without all figure or similitude? No, said I, I do not so think: notwithstanding I would not that any should count, that I make my saying (which is the negative) any Article of Faith. For even as I ſay, that you ought not to make any neceſſary Article of the Faith of your part (which is an affirmative) ſo I ſay again, that we make no neceſſary Article of the Faith of our part, but leave it indifferent for all Men to judge therein, as God ſhall open their hearts, and no ſide to condemn or deſpiſe the other, but to nouriſh in all thnigs brotherly love, and one to bear anothers infirmity.

Ferebatur manibus propriis.

After this they alledged the place of Saint Auguſtine, where he ſaith; Ferebatur in manibus propriis, That is to ſay, He was carried in his own hands.

The place of St. Auguſtine expounded.

Whereunto I anſwered, That Saint Auguſtine was a plain interpreter of himſelf; for he hath in another place, Ferebatur tanquam in manibus ſuis: That is to ſay, He was carried as it were in his own hands: which is a phraſe of ſpeech not of one that doth ſimply affirm, but only of one expreſſing a thing by a ſimilitude. And albeit that Saint Auguſtine had not thus expounded himſelf, yet he writing unto Boniface doth plainly admoniſh all Men, that the Sacraments do repreſent and ſignifie thoſe things whereof they are Sacraments, and many times even of the ſimilitudes of the things themſelves they do take their names. And therfore according to this rule it may be ſaid, he was born in his own hands, when as he bare in his hands the Sacrament of his Body and Blood.

Auguſtinus ad Bonifacium.

Then they alledged a place of Chryſoſtome, which at the firſt bluſh may ſeem to make much for them, who in a certain Homily upon the Supper writeth thus; Doſt thou ſee Bread and Wine? Do they depart from thee into the draught, as other meats do? No, God forbid; for as in Wax, when it cometh to the fire, nothing of the ſubſtance remaineth nor abideth: ſo likewiſe think that the miſteries are conſumed by the ſubſtance of the body, &c.

The place of Chryſoſtome anſwered.

Theſe words I expounded by the words of the ſame Doctor, which in another Homily ſaith on this manner; The inward eies (ſaith he) as ſoon as they ſee the Bread, they flee over all Creatures, and do not think of the Bread that is baked of the Baker, but of the Bread of everlaſting life, which is ſignified by the myſtical Bread. Now confer theſe places together, and you ſhall perceive that the laſt expoundeth the firſt plainly. For he ſaith, Doſt thou ſee the Bread and Wine? I anſwer by the ſecond, Nay. For the inward eies, as ſoon as they ſee the Bread, do paſs over all Creatures, and do not any longer think upon the Bread, but upon him which is ſignified by the Bread. And after this manner he ſeeth it, and again he ſeeth it not: For as he ſeeth it with his outward and carnal eies, ſo with his inward eies he ſeeth it not, that is to ſay, regardeth not the Bread, or thinketh not upon it, but is otherwiſe occupied. Even as when we play or do any thing elſe negligently, we commonly are wont to ſay, we ſee not what we do; not that indeed we do not ſee that which we go about, but becauſe our mind is fixed on ſome other thing, and doth not attend unto that which the Eies do ſee.

Chryſoſtome expoundeth himſelf.

In like manner may it be anſwered unto that which followeth; Do they avoid from thee (ſaith he) in the draught as other meats do? I will not ſo ſay, for other meats paſſing thorow the Bowels, after they have of themſelves given nouriſhment unto the Body, be voided into the draught: but this is a ſpiritual meat, which is received by Faith, and nouriſheth both Body and Soul unto everlaſting life, neither is it at any time avoided as other meats are.

Argumentum ex Chriſoſt. The Belly of man cannot avoid any part of Chriſts Body: The belly of man avoideth ſome part of every thing that the mouth receiveth: Ergo, the mouth of man receiveth not the Body of Chriſt.

'And as before I ſaid that the external Eyes do behold 'the Bread, which the inward Eyes, being otherwiſe occupied, do not behold or think upon, even ſo our outward Man doth digeſt the Bread, and void it into the 'draught; but the inward Man doth neither regard nor 'think upon it, but thinketh upon the thing it ſelf that is 'ſignified by that Bread. And therefore Chryſoſtome, a 'little before the words which they alledged, ſaith; Lift 'up your minds and hearts. Whereby he admoniſheth us 'to look upon and conſider thoſe Heavenly things which 'are repreſented and ſignified by the Bread and Wine, 'and not to mark the Bread and Wine it ſelf.

'Here they ſaid, that was not Chryſoſtomes mind; 'but that by this example he declared that there remained no Bread nor Wine. I anſwered; That 'was falſe: for the example that he taketh tendeth to 'no other purpoſe, but to call away our ſpiritual Eyes from the beholding of viſible things, and to tranſport 'them another way, as if the things which are ſeen 'were of no force. Therefore he draweth away our 'mind from the conſideration of theſe things, and fixeth it upon him which is ſignified unto us by the 'ſame. The very words which follow ſufficiently declare this to be the true meaning of the Author, 'whereas he commandeth us to conſider all things 'with our inward eyes; that is to ſay, ſpiritually.

All myſteries to be ſeen with inward eies.

'But whether Chryſoſtomes words do tend either to 'this or that ſenſe, yet do they indifferently make on 'our part againſt our adverſaries, which way ſoever 'we do underſtand them. For if he thought that the 'Bread and Wine do remain, we have no further to 'travel: but if he meant contrariwiſe, that they do 'not remain, but that the natures of the Bread and 'Wine are altred, then are the Bread and Wine falſly named Sacraments and myſteries, which can be 'ſaid in no place to be in the nature of things: for 'that which is in no place, how can it be a Sacrament, or ſupply the room of a myſtery? Finally, if 'he ſpeak only of the outward forms and ſhapes (as 'we call them) it is moſt certain that they do continually remain, and that they by the ſubſtance of the 'body are not conſumed in any place; wherfore it muſt 'neceſſarily follow the words of Chryſoſtom to be underſtood in ſuch ſenſe as I have declared.

Chryſoſtome againſt the popiſh doctrine of the Sacrament.

The objection of Chryſoſtome avoided by a Dilemma.

'Here peradventure many would marvel, that forſo- 'much as the matter touching the ſubſtance of the Sa- 'crament, being ſeparate from the Articles of Faith, and 'binding no Man of neceſſity either unto ſalvation or 'damnation, whether he believe it or not, but rather may 'be left indifferently unto all Men, freely to judge either 'on the one part or on the other, according to his own 'mind, ſo that neither part do contemn or deſpiſe the 'other; but that all love and charity be ſtill holden and 'kept in this diſſenſion of opinions: what then is the cauſe, 'why I would therefore ſo willingly ſuffer death? The 'cauſe why I die is this; For that I cannot agree with 'the Divines and other head Prelates, that it ſhould be 'neceſſarily determined to be an Article of Faith, and 'that we ſhould believe under pain of Damnation, the 'ſubſtance of the Bread and Wine to be changed into 'the Body and Blood of our Saviour JESUS 'CHRIST, the form and ſhape only not being changed. Which thing if it were moſt true (as they ſhall 'never be able to prove it by any authority of the Scripture 'or Doctors) yet ſhall they not ſo bring to paſs, that that 'Doctrine, were it never ſo true, ſhould be holden for 'a neceſſary Article of Faith. For there are many things 'both in the Scriptures and other places, which we 'are not bound of neceſſity to believe as an Article of 'Faith.

A queſtion asked, with the cauſe declared, why that, ſeeing the matter of the Sacrament it ſelf importeth neither ſalvation nor damnation, why then Frith offereth himſelf to death for the ſame.

'So it is true, that I was a priſoner and in bonds 'when I wrote theſe things, and yet for all that I will 'not hold it as an Article of Faith, (a) but that you may 'without danger of Damnation, either believe it, or 'think the contrary.

(a) This is to be vveighed vvith the time vvhen Frith wrote

'But as touching the cauſe why I cannot affirm the 'doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, divers reaſons do lead me 'thereunto.

Three cauſes vvhy Tranſubſtantiation is not to be believed.

'Firſt, For that I do plainly ſee it to be falſe and vain, 'and not to be grounded upon any reaſon, either of the 'Scriptures or of approved Doctors.

The ſecond cauſe.

'Secondly, For that by my example I would not be 'an Author unto Chriſtians to admit any thing as a matter 'of Faith, more than the neceſſary points of their Creed, 'wherein the whole ſum of our ſalvation doth conſiſt, 'ſpecially ſuch things, the Belief whereof have no certain 'argument of authority or reaſon.

'I added moreover, that their Church (as they call it) 'hath no ſuch power and authority, that it either ought 'or may bind us under the peril of our ſouls, to the believing of any ſuch Articles.

The third cauſe.

'Thirdly, Becauſe I will not, for the favour of our 'Divines or Prieſts, be prejudicial in this point unto 'ſo many Nations, of Germans, Helvetians, and other, 'which altogether rejecting the Tranſubſtantiation of the 'Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Chriſt, are 'all of the ſame opinion that I am, as well thoſe that 'take Luthers part, as thoſe that hold with Oecolampadius. Which things ſtanding in this caſe, I ſuppoſe

there

KING Hen. 8. ‘there is no Man of any upright conſcience, which will ‘not allow the reaſon of my death, which I am put unto ‘for this only cauſe, that I do not think Tranſubſtantiation, ‘although it were true indeed, to be eſtabliſhed for an Ar‘cle of Faith.

And thus much hitherto as touching the Articles and whole diſputation of John Frith, which was done with all moderation and uprightneſs. But when as no reaſon would prevail againſt the force and cruelty of theſe furious foes, the Twentieth day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1533. he was brought before the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, and Lincoln, who ſitting in Saint Pauls upon Friday, the Twentieth day of June, miniſtred certain interrogatories upon the Sacrament of the Supper, and Purgatory, unto the ſaid Frith, as is above declared. To the which when he had anſwered and ſhewed his mind in form and effect, as by his own words above doth appear, he afterward ſubſcribed to his anſwers with his own hand, in theſe words.

That is to ſay:

I Frith thus do think, and as I think, ſo have I ſaid, written, taught, and affirmed, and in my Books have publiſhed.

But when as by no means he could be perſwaded to recant theſe Articles aforeſaid, neither be brought to believe that the Sacrament is an Article of Faith, but ſaid, Fiat judicium & juſticia: he was condemned by the Biſhop of London to be burned, and ſentence given againſt him; the Tenor whereof here enſueth.

John Frith condemned

The ſentence given againſt John Frith.

Sentence againſt John Frith. IN the Name of God, Amen. We John by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop of London, lawfully and rightly proceeding with all godly favour, by the authority and vertue of our Office, againſt thee John Frith of our juriſdiction, before us perſonally here preſent, having accuſed and detected, and notoriouſly ſlandered of Hereſie, having heard, ſeen, and underſtood, and with diligent deliberation weighed, diſcuſſed, and conſidered the merits of the cauſe, all things being obſerved which by us in this behalf by Order of Law ought to be obſerved, ſitting in our Judgment Seat, the Name of Chriſt being firſt called upon, and having (b) God only before our eies, becauſe by the Acts enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this manner, and by thine own confeſſion judicially made before us, we do find, that thou haſt taught, holden, and affirmed, and obſtinately defended divers Errors and Hereſies, and damnable opinions, contrary to the doctrine and determination of the Holy Church, and ſpecially againſt the Reverend Sacrament; and albeit that we following the example of Chriſt, which would not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould convert and live, have oftentimes gone about to correct thee, and by all lawful means that we could, and moſt wholſome admonitions that we did know, to reduce thee again to the true Faith, and the Unity of the Univerſal Catholick Church, notwithſtanding we have found thee obſtinate and ſtiff-necked, willingly continuing in thy damnable opinions and Hereſies, and refuſing to return again unto the true Faith and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and as the Child of wickedneſs and darkneſs, ſo to have hardned thy heart, that thou wilt not underſtand the voice of thy Sheepherd, which with a fatherly affection doth ſeek after thee, nor wilt be allured with his godly and fatherly admonitions: We therefore, John the Biſhop aforeſaid, not willing that thou which art wicked, ſhouldeſt become more wicked, and infect the Lords Flock with thy Hereſie, which we are greatly afraid of, do judge thee, and definitively condemn thee the ſaid John Frith, thy demerits and faults being aggravate through thy damnable obſtinacy, as guilty of moſt deteſtable Hereſies, and as an obſtinate unpenitent ſinner, refuſing penitently to return to the lap and (b) As they had which crucified Chriſt.

Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and that thou haſt been, and art by Law excommunicate, and pronounce and declare thee to be an excommunicate perſon: Alſo we pronounce and declare thee to be an Heretick, to be caſt out from the Church, and left unto the judgment of the Secular Power, and now preſently ſo do leave thee unto the Secular Power, and their judgment: moſt earneſtly requiring them, in the bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that this execution and puniſhment, worthily to be done upon thee, may be ſo moderate, that the rigour thereof be not too extrem, nor yet the gentleneſs too much mitigated, but that it may be to the ſalvation of thy ſoul, to the extripation, terror and converſion of Hereticks, to the Unity of the Catholick Faith, by this our ſentence definitive, or finall Decree, which we here promulgate in this form aforeſaid.

Moderation pretended, but none ſhewed.

This ſentence thus read, the Biſhop of London directed his Letter to Sir Stephen Peacock, Maior of London, and the Sheriffs of the ſame City, for the receiving of the foreſaid John Frith into their charge. Who being ſo delivered over unto them the fourth day of July, in the year aforeſaid, was by them carried into Smithfield to be burned, and when he was tied unto the Stake, there it ſufficiently appeared with what conſtancy and courage he ſuffered death. For when the Fagots and Fire were put unto him, he willingly imbraced the ſame; thereby declaring with what uprightneſs of mind he ſuffered his death for Chriſts ſake, and the true Doctrine, whereof that day he gave with his blood a perfect and firm Teſtimony. The wind made his death ſomewhat the longer, which bare away the flame from him unto his fellow that was tied to his back: but he had eſtabliſhed his mind with ſuch patience, God giving him ſtrength, that even as though he had felt no pain in that long torment, he ſeemed rather to rejoyce for his Fellow, than to be careful for himſelf.

John Frith delivered to the ſecular hands.

The conſtant death of John Frith.

The truly is the power and ſtrength of Chriſt, ſtriving and vanquiſhing in his Saints: Who ſanctifie us together with them, and direct us in all things to the glory of his moſt holy Name, Amen.

This day before the burning of theſe worthy Men of God, the Biſhop of London certified King Henry the Eighth, of his worthy, yea, rather Woolviſh proceeding againſt theſe Men: the Tenor whereof, forſomuch as it proceedeth as the other do before, we therefore omit it, referring the Reader to the ſame.

¶ Andrew Hewet burned with Maſter Frith.

Andrew Hewet's Matyrs. Ann. 1533

Andrew Hewet apprehended.

ANdrew Hewet, born in Feverſham, in the County of Kent, a young Man of the age of four and twenty years, was Apprentiſe with one Maſter Warren a Tailor, in Watlingſtreet. And as it happened that he went upon a Holy-day into Fleetſtreet, towards Saint Dunſtans, he met with one William Holt, which was fore-man with the Kings Tailor, at that preſent called Maſter Malte, and being ſuſpected by the ſame Holt (which was a diſſembling wretch), to be one that favoured the Goſpel, after a little talk had with him, he went into an honeſt houſe about Fleet-Bridge, which was a Bookſellers houſe. Then Holt, thinking he had found good occaſion to ſhew forth ſome fruit of his wickedneſs, ſent for certain Officers, and ſearched the houſe, and finding the ſame Andrew, apprehended him, and carried him, to the Biſhops houſe, where he was caſt into Irons; and being there a good ſpace, by the means of a certain honeſt Man, he had a File conveyed unto him, wherewith he filed off his Irons, and when he ſpied his time he got out of the gate. But being a Man unskilful to hide himſelf, for lack of good acquaintance, he went into Smithfield, and there met with one Withers, which was an Hypocrite, as Holt was. Which Withers underſtanding how he had eſcaped, and that he knew not whither to go, pretending a fair countenance unto him, willed him to go with him, promiſing that he ſhould be provided for; and ſo kept him in the Country where he had to do, from Low-Sunday till Whitſuntide, and then brought him to London to the houſe of one John Chapman in Hoſier-Lane beſide Smithfield, and there left him by the ſpace of two days.

The man that gave him this file Valentine Freeſe the Painters Brother, who was afterward with his Wife burned in York.

John Chapman. Then he came to the ſaid Chapmans Houſe again, and brought Holt with him. And when they met with the ſaid Andrew, they ſeemed as though they meant to do him very much good. And Holt for his part, ſaid, That if he ſhould bring any Man in trouble (as the voice was that he had done the ſaid Andrew) it were pity but that the earth ſhould open and ſwallow him up. Inſomuch that they would needs Sup there that night, and prepared meat of their own charges. At night they came, and brought certain Gueſts with them, becauſe they would have the matter to ſeem as though it had come out by others. When they had ſupped, they went their way, and Holt took out of his purſe two Groats, and gave them to the ſaid Andrew, and imbraced him in his arms. As they were gone out, there came in one John Tibauld, which was baniſhed from his own houſe by an Injunction, for he had been four times in priſon for Chriſts ſake. And within an hour after that Holt and Withers were gone, the Biſhops Chancellor and one called Sergeant Weaver came, and brought with them the Watch, and ſearched the houſe, where they found the ſaid John Chapman and the forenamed Andrew, and John Tibauld, whom they bound with Ropes, which Sergeant Weaver had brought with him, and ſo carried them to the Biſhops houſe: but Andrew Hewet they ſent unto the Lollards Tower, and kept Chapman and Tibauld aſunder, watched with two Prieſts ſervants. The next day Biſhop Stokeſley came from Fulham, and after they were examined with a few threatning words, Chapman was committed to the Stocks, with this threat, That he ſhould tell another Tale, or elſe he ſhould ſit there till his heels did drop from his Arſe: and Tibauld was ſhut up in a cloſe Chamber; but by Gods proviſion, he was well delivered out of priſon, albeit he could not enjoy his Houſe and Land, becauſe of the Biſhops Injunction, but was fain to ſell all that he had in Eſſex; for the Tenor of his Injunction was, That he ſhould not come within ſeven miles of his own houſe: and the foreſaid Chapman, after five weeks impriſonment (whereof three weeks he ſate in the Stocks) by much ſuit made unto the Lord Chancellor, which at that time was Lord Audley, after many threatnings was delivered: But the ſaid Andrew Hewet, after long and cruel impriſonment, was condemned to death, and burned with John Frith: Whoſe examination here followeth.

Williams, Holt playeth the Judas.

John Tibauld five times in bands for Chriſt.

Andrew and Hewet again taken.

Chapman in the Stocks.

Tibald enjoyned, not to come within ſeven miles of his houſe.

THe Twentieth day of the Month of April, Andrew Hewet was brought before the Chancellor of the Biſhop of London, where was objected againſt him, that he believed the Sacrament of the Altar, after the conſecration, to be but a ſignification of the Body of Chriſt, and that the Hoſt conſecrated was not the very Body of Chriſt. Now for ſo much as this Article ſeemed hainous unto them, they would do nothing in it without the conſent of learned Counſel: whereupon the Biſhop of London, aſſociated with the Biſhops of Lincoln and Wincheſter, called him again before them. Where he being demanded what he thought as touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; anſwered; Even as John Frith doth. Then ſaid one of the Biſhops unto him; Doſt thou not believe that it is really the Body of Chriſt, born of the Virgin Mary? So (ſaith he) do not I believe. Why not, ſaid the Biſhop? becauſe (ſaid he) Chriſt commanded me not to give credit raſhly unto all men which ſay; Behold here is Chriſt, and there is Chriſt; for many falſe Prophets, ſhall riſe up, ſaith the Lord.

Chriſt not to be believed to be really in the Sacrament.

Then certain of the Biſhops ſmiled at him; and Stokeſley the Biſhop of London ſaid; Why, Frith is an Heretick and already judged to be burned, and except thou revoke thine opinion, thou ſhalt be burned alſo with him? Truly (ſaith he) I am content therewithal. Then the Biſhop asked him if he would forſake his opinions. Whereunto he anſwered, That he would do as Frith did. Whereupon he was ſent unto the priſon to Frith, and afterward they were carried togethere to the fire. The Biſhops uſed many perſwaſions to allure this good Man from the truth, to follow them: but he, manfully perſiſting in the truth, would not recant. Wherefore, the fourth day of July, at afternoon, he was carried into Smithfield with Frith, and there burned.

Hewet holdeth with John Frith.

Hewet conſtant in the Faith.

Hewet burned with John Frith.

When they were at the Stake, one Doctor Cook, a Parſon in London, openly admoniſhed all the people, that they ſhould in no wiſe pray for them, no more than they would do for a Dog. At which words Frith ſmiling, deſired the Lord to forgive them. Theſe words did not a little move the people unto anger, and not without good cauſe. Thus theſe two bleſſed Martyrs committed their Souls into the hands of God.

The Burning of John Frith, & Andrew Hewet.

The Burning of Thomas Benet.

KING Hen. 8.

The Hiſtory of the Perſecution and death of Thomas Benet, burned in Exceter: Collected and teſtified by John Vowel, alias Hoker.

Tho. Benet of Exceter, Martyr.

THis Thomas Benet was born in Cambridge, and by order of degree of the Univerſity there made M. of Art, and (as ſome think) was alſo a Prieſt, a Man doubtleſs very well learned, and of a godly diſpoſition, being of the acquaintance and familiarity of Thomas Bilney, the famous and glorious Matryr of Chriſt. This Man, the more he did grow and increaſe in the knowledge of God and his holy Word, the more he did miſlike and abhor the corrupt ſtate of Religion then uſed; and therefore thinking his own Country to be no ſafe place for him to remain in, and being deſirous to live in more freedom of conſcience, he did forſake the Univerſity, and went into Devonſhire, in the year of our Lord, 1524, and firſt dwelled in a Market town, named Torrinton, both Town and Country being to him altogether unknown, as he was alſo unknown to all Men there. Where, for the better maintenance of himſelf and his Wife, he did practiſe to teach young Children, and kept a School for the ſame purpoſe. But that Town not ſerving his expectation; after his abode one year there, he came to the City of Exceter, and there hiring a Houſe in a Street called the Butcher-row, did exerciſe the teaching of Children, and by that means ſuſtained his Wife and Family. He was of a quiet behaviour, of a godly converſation, and of a very courteous nature, humble to all Men, and offenſive to no body. His greateſt delight was to be at all Sermons and Preachings, whereof he was a diligent and attentive hearer. The time which he had to ſpare from teaching, he gave wholly to his private Study in the Scriptures, having no dealings nor conferences with any body, ſaving with ſuch as he could learn and underſtand to be favourers of the Goſpel, and zealous of Gods true Religion: of ſuch he would be inquiſitive, and moſt deſirous to joyn himſelf unto them. And therefore underſtanding that one William Strowd of Newnham, in the County of Devonſhire Eſquire, was committed to the Biſhops priſon in Exceter upon ſuſpition of Hereſie, although he were never before acquainted with him, yet did he ſend his Letters of comfort and conſolation unto him. Wherein, to avoid all ſuſpition which might be conceived of him, he did diſcloſe himſelf, and utter what he was, and the cauſes of his being in the Country: writing among other things theſe words; Ut ne ſcortator aut immundus eſſem, uxorem duxi, cum qua hiſce ſex annis ab iſtorum Antichriſtianorum manibus in Devonia latitavi. That is to ſay, Becauſe I would not be a Whoremonger, or an unclean perſon, therfore I married a Wife, with whom I have hidden my ſelf in Devonſhire, from the Tyranny of the Antichriſtians theſe ſix years.

Tho. Benet coming from Cambridge to Devonſhire.

Benet came to Exceter.

Wil. Strowde priſoned in Exceter for Gods Word.

Benet, why he married.

But as every Tree and Herb hath his due time to bring forth his Fruit, ſo did it appear by this Man. For he daily ſeeing the glory of God to be ſo blaſphemed, Idolatrous Religion ſo imbraced and maintained, and that moſt falſe uſurped power of the Biſhop of Rome ſo extolled, was ſo grieved in Conſcience, and troubled in Spirit, that he could not be quiet till he did utter his mind therein. Wherefore dealing privately with certain of his Friends, he did plainly open and diſcloſe how blaſphemouſly and abominably God was diſhonoured, his Word contemned, and his people, whom he ſo dearly bought, were by blind Guids carried headlong to everlaſting Damnation: and therefore he could no longer endure, but muſt needs, and would utter their abominations, and for his own part, for the Teſtimony of his conſcience, and for the defence of Gods true Religion, would yield himſelf moſt patiently (as near as God would give him grace) to die and to ſhed his Blood therein; alledging that his death ſhould be more profitable to the Church of God, and for the edifying of his people, than his life ſhould be. To whoſe perſwaſions when his Friends had yielded, they promiſed to pray to God for him, that he might be ſtrong in the Cauſe, and continue a faithful Souldiers to the end. Which done, he gave order for the beſtowing of ſuch Books as he had, and very ſhortly after, in the Month of October, he wrote his mind in certain Scroles of Paper, which in ſecret manner he ſet upon the Doors of the Cathedral Church of the City: in which was written; The Pope is Antichriſt, and we ought to worſhip God only, and no Saints.

Antichriſtians are thoſe which are againſt Chriſt.

The godly zeal of Tho. Benet.

The Pope is Antichriſt.

Theſe Bills being found, there was no ſmall ado, and no little ſearch made for the enquiry of the Heretick that ſhould ſet up theſe Bills: and the Maior and his Officers were not ſo buſie to make ſearches to find out this Heretick, but the Biſhop and all his Doctors were as hot as Coals, and inkindled as though they had been ſtung with a ſort of Waſps. Wherefore to keep the people in their former blindneſs, Order was taken that the Doctors ſhould in haſte up to the Pulpit every day, and confute this Hereſie. Nevertheleſs this Thomas Benet, keeping his own doings in ſecret, went the Sunday following to the Cathedral Church to the Sermon, and by chance ſate down by two Men, which were the buſieſt in all the City in ſeeking and ſearching for Hereticks; and they beholding this Benet, ſaid the one to the other; Surely this Fellow by all likelihood is the Heretick that hath ſet up the Bills, and it were good to examine him. Nevertheleſs when they had well beheld him, and ſaw the quiet and ſober behaviour of the Man, his attentiveneſs to the Preacher, his godlineſs in the Church, being always occupied in his Book, which was a Teſtament in the Latin Tongue, were aſtonied, and had no power to ſpeak unto him, but departed and left him Reading in his Book. As touching this point of Benets behaviour in the Church, I find the reports of ſome other a little to vary, and yet not much contrary one to the other. For in receiving the Letters and Writings of a certain Miniſter, which at the ſame time was preſent at the doing hereof in Exceter; thus I find moreover added concerning the behaviour of this Thomas Benet in the Church.

Benet ſetteth up Bills againſt the Pope.

Benet almoſt taken in the Church.

The Stories a little vary touching the taking of Benet.

At that time (ſaith he) as I remember, Doctor Moreman, Criſpin, Caleſey, with ſuch other, bare the ſwing there. Beſides theſe, were alſo Preachers there, one Doctor Baſcavild, an unlearned Doctor, God knoweth, and one Doctor David, as well learned as he, both Gray-Friers, and Doctor I know not who, a Black-Frier, not much inferior unto them. Moreover, there was one Bachelor of Divinity, a Gray-Frier named Gregory Baſſet, indeed learned more than they all, but as blind and ſuperſtitious as he which was moſt. Which Gregory not long before was revolted from the way of Righteouſnes, to the way of Belial: For in Briſtow (ſaith the Author) he lay in priſon long, and was almoſt famiſhed, for having a Book of Martin Luther, called his Queſtions, which he a long time privily had ſtudied, and for the teaching of Youth a certain Catechiſm. To be ſhort, the Brains of the Canons and Prieſts, the Officers and Commons of that City were very earneſtly buſied, how, or by what means ſuch an enormous Heretick, which had pricked up thoſe Bills, might be eſpied and known; but it was long firſt. At laſt, the Prieſts found out a toy, to Curſe him, whatſoever he were, with Book, Bell, and Candle; Which Curſe at that day, ſeemed moſt fearful and terrible. The manner of the Curſe was after this ſort.

Doctors and Friers in Exceter.

Gregory Baſſet, Frier of Exceter.

One of the Prieſts apparelled all in White, aſcended up into the Pulpit. The other Rabblement, with certain of the two Orders of Friers, and certain ſuperſtitious Monks of Saint Nicholas Houſe ſtanding round about, and the Croſs (as the cuſtom was) being holden up with holy Candles of Wax fixed to the ſame, he began his Sermon with this Theme of Joſua; Eſt Blaſphemia in caſtris; There is blaſphemy in the Army: and ſo made a long proteſtation, but not ſo long as tedious and ſuperſtitious: and ſo concluded, That that foul and abominable Heretick which had put up ſuch blaſphemous Bills, was for that his blaſphemy damnably Curſed, and beſought God, our Lady, Saint Peter, Patron of that Church, with all the holy Company of Martyrs, Confeſſors, and Virgins, that it might be known what Heretick had put up ſuch blaſphemous Bills, that Gods people might avoid the vengeance.

The Prieſts Curſe cannot tell whom.

The manner of the Curſing of the ſaid Benet was marvelous to behold, foraſmuch as at that time there were few or none, unleſs a Sheereman or two, whoſe Houſes I well remember were ſearched for Bills at that time, and for Books, that knew any thing of Gods matters, or how God doth bleſs their Curſes in ſuch caſes. Then ſaid the Prelate, By the Authority of God the Father Almighty, and of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, of Saint Peter and Paul, and of the holy Saints, we Excommunicate, we utterly Curſe and Ban, commit and deliver to the Devil of Hell, him or her, whatſoever he or ſhe be, that have in ſpite of God and of Saint Peter, whoſe Church this is, in ſpite of all holy Saints, and in ſpite of our moſt holy Father the Pope, Gods Vicar here on Earth, and in ſpite of the reverend Father in God, John our Dioceſan, and the Worſhipful Canons, Maſters, and Prieſts, and Clerks, which ſerve God daily in this Cathedral Church, fixed up with Wax ſuch curſed and heretical Bills full of Blaſphemy, upon the doors of this and other holy Churches within this City. Excommunicate plainly be he or ſhe plenally, or they, and delivered over to the Devil, as perpetual Malefactors and Schiſmaticks. Accurſed might they be, and given Body and Soul to the Devil. Curſed be they, he or ſhe, in Cities and Towns, in Fields, in Ways, in Paths, in Houſes, out of Houſes, and in all other places, ſtanding, lying, or riſing, walking, running, waking, ſleeping, eating, drinking, and whatſoever thing they do beſides. We ſeparate them, him or her, from the Threſhold, and from all the good Prayers of the Church, from the participation of the holy Maſs, from all Sacraments, Chappels and Altars, from holy Bread, and holy Water, from all the Merits of Gods Prieſts, and religious men, and from all their Cloyſters, from all their Pardons, Priviledges, Grants, and Immunities, which all the holy Fathers, Popes of Rome have granted to them: and we give them over utterly to the power of the Fiend, and let us quench their Souls, if they be dead, this night in the pains of Hell fire, as this Candle is now quenched and put out (and with that he put out one of the Candles:) and let us pray to God (if they be alive) that their Eyes may be put out, as this Candle light is (ſo he put out the other Candle:) and let us pray to God and to our Lady, and to Saint Peter and Paul, and all holy Saints, that all the ſenſes of their Bodies my fail them, and that they may have no feeling, as now the light of this Candle is gone (and ſo he put out the third Candle) except they, he or ſhe, come openly now and confeſs their Blaſphemy, and by Repentance (as in them ſhall lie) make ſatisfaction unto God, our Lady, St. Peter, and the Worſhipful Company of this Cathedral Church; and as this holy Croſs ſtaff now falleth down, ſo might they, except they repent, and ſhew themſelves; and, one firſt taking away the Croſs, the ſtaff fell down. But Lord, what a ſhout and noiſe was there, what terrible fear, what holding up of hands to heaven, that Curſe was ſo terrible?

Here is gold charity

Bleſs and curſe not, ſaith the Lord: Curſe and bleſs not, ſaith the Pope.

Mark the apiſh Pageants of theſe Popelings.

Now this fond fooliſh fantaſie and mockery being done and played, which was to a Chriſtian heart a thing ridiculous, Benet could no longer forbear, but fell to great laughter, but within himſelf, and for a great ſpace could not ceaſe, by the which thing the poor man was eſpied. For thoſe that were next to him, wondring at that great Curſe, and believing that it could not but light on one or other, asked good Benet, For what cauſe he ſhould ſo laugh. My Friends, ſaid he, who can forbear, ſeeing ſuch merry conceits and interludes plaid of the Prieſts? Straight way a noiſe was made, Here is the Heretick, here is the Heretick, hold him faſt, hold him faſt, hold him faſt. With that, there was a great confuſion of Voices, and much clapping of hands, and yet they were uncertain whether he were the Heretick or no. Some ſay, that upon the ſame he was taken and apprehended. Other report, that his enemies, being uncertain of him, departed, and ſo he went home to his houſe. Where he, being not able to digeſt the lyes there preached, renewed his former Bills, and cauſed his Boy early in the morning following, to ſet the ſaid Bills upon the Gates of the Church-yard. As the Boy was ſetting one of the ſaid Bills upon a Gate, called The little Style, it chanced that one W. S. going to the Cathedral Church to hear a Maſs, called Bartons Maſs, which was then daily ſaid about five of the Clock in the morning, found the Boy at the Gate, and asking him Whoſe Boy he was, did charge him to be the Heretick which had ſet up the Bills upon the Gates; wherefore pulling down the Bill, he brought the ſame together with the Boy before the Major of the City, and thereupon Benet, being known and taken, was violently committed to Ward.

Tho. Benet laughed at their curſing.

Tho. Benet ſetteth up new Bills.

Tho. Benet taken by means of his Boy ſetting up his Bills.

On the morrow began both the Canons and Heads of the City joyned with them, to fall to examination. With whom for that day he had not much communication, but confeſſed and ſaid to them. It was even I that put up thoſe Bills, and if it were to do, I would do it again; for in them I have written nothing but that is very truth. Couldſt not thou, ſaid they, as well have declared thy mind by mouth, as by putting up Bills of Blaſphemy? No, ſaid he, I put up the Bills, that many ſhould read and hear what abominable Blaſphemers ye are, and that they might the better know your Antichriſt, the Pope to be that Boar out of the Wood, which deſtroyeth and throweth down the Hedges of Gods Church; for if I had been heard to ſpeak but one word, I ſhould have been clapped faſt in priſon, and the matter of God hidden. But now I truſt more of your blaſphemous doings will thereby be opened and come to light; for God will ſo have it, and no longer will ſuffer you.

He declareth with whom he communicated, and confeſſeth the cauſe why he ſet up his Bills.

The next day after he was ſent unto the Biſhop, who firſt committed him to priſon, called The Biſhops Priſon, where he was kept in ſtocks and ſtrong Irons, with as much favour as a Dog ſhould find. Then the Biſhop aſſociating unto him one Doctor Brewer his Chancellor, and other of his lewd Clergy and Friers, began to examine him and burthen him, that contrary to the Catholick Faith he denied praying to Saints, and alſo denied the Supremacy of the Pope. Whereunto he anſwered in ſuch ſober manner, and ſo learnedly proved and defended his Aſſertions, that he did not only confound and put to ſilence his Adverſaries, but alſo brought them in great admiration of him, the moſt part having pity and compaſſion on him. The Friers took great pains with him to perſwade him from his erroneous Opinions, to recant and acknowledge his Fault, touching the Bills; but they did but dig after day; for God had appointed him to be a bleſſed Witneſs of his holy Name, and to be at defiance with all their Perſwaſions.

Tho. Benet ſent to the Biſhops priſon.

Articles laid againſt Benet.

To declare here with what cruelty the Officers ſearched his houſe for Bills and Books, how cruelly and ſhamefully they handled his Wife, charging her with divers Enormities, it were too long to write. But ſhe, like a good Woman took all things patiently that they did unto her: like as in other things ſhe was contented to bear the Croſs with him, as to fare hardly with him at home, and to live with courſe meat and drink, that they might be the more able ſomewhat to help the Poor, as they did to the uttermoſt of their power. Amongſt all other Prieſts and Friers, Gregory Baſſet was moſt buſie with him. This Gregory Baſſet, as is partly touched before, was learned, and had a pleaſant Tongue, and not long before was fallen from the Truth, for the which he was priſoned in Briſtow long time, at whoſe examination was ordained a great Pan of fire, where his holy Brethren (as the report went abroad) menaced him to burn his hands off: whereupon he there before them recanted, and became afterward a mortal Enemy to the Truth all his life. This Gregory, as it is ſaid, was fervent with the poor man, to pleaſe the Canons of that Church, and marvelouſly tormented his brains, how to turn him from his Opinions, yea, and he was ſo diligent and fervent with him, that he would not depart the priſon, but lay there night and day, who notwithſtanding loſt his labour: for good Benet was at a point not to deny Chriſt before men. So Gregory, as well as the other holy Fathers, loſt his Spurs, inſomuch that he ſaid in open audience, That there was never ſo obſtinate an Heretick.

Gregory Baſſet priſoned at Briſtow.

Gregory Baſſet compelled by the Friers to recant.

Gregory Baſſet buſie againſt Tho. Benet.

The principal Point between Baſſet and him was touching the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, whom in his Bills he named Antichriſt, the Thief, the Mercenary, and Murtherer of Chriſts Flock: and theſe Diſputations laſted about eight days, where at ſundry times repaired to him both the Black and Gray-Friers, with Prieſts and Monks of that City. They that had ſome Learning perſwaded him to believe the Church, and ſhewed by what tokens ſhe is known. The other unlearned railed, and ſaid, That the Devil tempted him, and ſpit upon him, calling him Heretick: who prayed God to give them a better mind, and to forgive them: For, ſaid he, I will rather die, than Worſhip ſuch a Beaſt, the very Whore of Babylon, and a falſe Uſurper, as manifeſtly doth appear by his doings. They asked, What he he did, that he had not Power and Authority to do, being Gods Vicar? He doth, quoth he, ſell the Sacraments of the Church for money, he ſelleth remiſſion of Sins daily for money, and ſo do you likewiſe: for there is no day but ye ſay divers Maſſes for Souls in fained Purgatory: yea, and ye ſpare not to make lying Sermons to the people, to maintain your falſe Traditions, and foul Gains. The whole World doth begin now to note your doings, to your utter confuſion and ſhame. The ſhame, ſay they, ſhall be to thee, and ſuch as thou art, thou foul Heretick. Wilt thou allow nothing done in holy Church? What a perverſe Heretick art thou? I am, ſaid he, no Heretick, but a Chriſtian man, I thank Chriſt, and with all my heart will allow all things done and uſed in the Church to the Glory of God, and edifying of my Soul: but I ſee nothing in your Church, but that maintaineth the Devil. What is our Church, ſaid they? It is not my Church (quoth Benet) God give me Grace to be of a better Church, for verily your Church is the plain Church of Antichriſt, the Malignant Church, the ſecond Church, a Den of Thieves, and Awmry of Poiſon, and as far wide from the true Univerſal and Apoſtolick Church, as Heaven is diſtant from the Earth.

The abuſes of the Pope to be noted. Selling of Souls.

The Popes Church painted in her colours.

Doſt not thou think, ſaid they, that we pertain to the Univerſal Church? Yes, quoth he, but as dead Members, unto whom the Church is not beneficial: for your works are the Devices of man, and your Church a weak foundation; for ye ſay and preach, That the Popes word is equal with Gods Word in every degree. Why, ſaid they, did not Chriſt ſay to Peter, To thee I will give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven? He ſaid that, quoth he, to all as well as to Peter, and Peter had no more Authority given him than they, or elſe the Churches planted in every Kingdom by their preaching are no Churches. Doth not Saint Paul ſay, Upon the Foundations of the Apoſtles and Prophets? Therefore I ſay plainly, That the Church that is built upon a man, is the Devils Church or Congregation, and not Gods. And as every Church this day is appointed to be ruled by a Biſhop or Paſtor, ordained by the Word of God in preaching and adminiſtration of the Sacraments under the Prince the ſupream Governor under God: So to ſay, That all the Churches with their Princes and Governors be ſubject unto one Biſhop is deteſtable Hereſie, and the Pope your God, challenging this Power to himſelf, is the greateſt Schiſmatick that ever was in the Church, and moſt foul Whore; of whom John in the Revelation ſpeaketh.

The keys not only given to Peter, but to all the Apoſtles.

The Church builded upon man, is the Divels Church.

The whore of Babylon.

O thou blind and unlearned Fool (ſaid they) is not the confeſſion and conſent of all the World as we confeſs and conſent; That the Popes Holineſs is the ſupream Head and Vicar of Chriſt? That is (ſaid Benet) becauſe they are blinded and know not the Scriptures: but if God would of his mercy open the eyes of Princes to know their Office, his falſe Supremacy would ſoon decay. We think (ſaid they) thou art ſo malicious, that thou wilt confeſs no Church. Look (ſaid he) where they are that confeſs the true Name of Jeſus Chriſt, and where only Chriſt is the Head, and under him the Prince of the Realm, to order all Biſhops, Miniſters and Preachers, and to ſee them do their duties in ſetting forth the only Glory of God by preaching the Word of God; and where it is preached, that Chriſt is our only Advocate, Mediator, and Patron before God his Father, making Interceſſion for us, and where the true faith and confidence in Chriſts Death and Paſſion, and his only Merits and Deſervings are extolled, and our own depreſſed; where the Sacrament is duly without Superſtition or Idolatry adminiſtred in remembrance of his bleſſed Paſſion, and only Sacrifice upon the Croſs once for all, and where no Superſtition reigneth, of that Church will I be.

Consent of the world.

Where the true Church is.

Doth not the Pope (ſaid they) confeſs the true Goſpel? do not we all the ſame? Yes (ſaid he) but ye deny the fruits thereof in every point. Ye build upon the Sands, not upon the Rock. And wilt thou not believe indeed (ſaid they) that the Pope is Gods Vicar? No (ſaid he) indeed. And why, ſaid they? Becauſe (quoth he) he uſurpeth a Power not given him of Chriſt, no more than to other Apoſtles; and alſo becauſe he doth by force of that uſurped Supremacy blind the whole world, and doth contrary to all that ever Chriſt ordained or commanded.

The Pope not Gods Vicar, and why.

What (ſaid they) if he do all things after Gods Ordinance and Commandment, ſhould he then be his Vicar? Then (ſaid he) would I believe him to be a good Biſhop at Rome over his his own Dioceſs, and to have no further Power. And if it pleaſed God, I would every Biſhop did this in their Dioceſs: then ſhould we live a peaceable life in the Church of Chriſt, and there ſhould be no ſuch Seditions therein. If every Biſhop would ſeek no further power than over his own Dioceſs, it were a goodly thing. Now becauſe all are ſubject to One, all muſt do and conſent to all wickedneſs as he doth, or be none of his. This is the cauſe of great Superſtition in every Kingdom. And what Biſhop ſoever he be that preacheth the Goſpel, and maintaineth the Truth, is a true Biſhop of the Church. And doth not (ſaid they) our holy Father the Pope maintain the Goſpel? Yea (ſaid he) I think he doth read it, and peradventure believe it, and ſo do you alſo; but neither he nor you do fix the anchor of your Salvation therein. Beſides that, ye bear ſuch a good will to it, that ye keep it cloſe, that no man may read it but your ſelves. And when you preach, God knows how you handle it: inſomuch, that the people of Chriſt knoweth no Goſpel welnear, but the Popes Goſpel; and ſo the blind lead the blind, and both fall into the pit. In the true Goſpel of Chriſt confidence is none, but only in your Popiſh Traditions, and phantaſtical inventions.

What inconvenience followeth, that all Biſhops ſhould be ruled by man.

The Popes Goſpel.

Then ſaid a Black-Frier unto him (God knoweth a blockhead) Do we not preach the Goſpel daily? Yes (ſaid he) but what preaching of the Goſpel is that when therewith ye extol ſuperſtitious things, and make us believe that we have Redemption through Pardons and Bulls from Rome, a poena & culpa, as ye term it: and by the merits of your Orders ye make many Brethren and Siſters, ye take yearly money of them, ye bury them in your Coats, and in ſhrift ye beguile them: yea, and do a thouſand ſuperſtitious things more; a man may be weary to ſpeak of them. I ſee, ſaid the Frier, thou art a damned wretch, I will have no more talk with thee.

Then ſtept to him a Gray-Frier, a Doctor (God knoweth) of ſmall Intelligence, and laid before him great and many dangers. I take God to record, ſaid Benet, my life is not dear to me, I am content to depart from it, for I am weary of it, ſeeing your deteſtable doings, to the utter deſtruction of Gods Flock, and for my part, I can no longer forbear: I had rather by death (which I know is not far off) depart this life, that I may no longer be partaker of your deteſtable Idolatries and Superſtitions, or be ſubject unto Antichriſt your Pope. Our Pope (ſaid the Frier) is the Vicar of God, and our ways are the ways of God. I pray you, ſaid Benet, depart from me, and tell not me of your ways. He is only my way, which ſaith, I am the way, the truth, and the life. In this way will I walk, his doings ſhall be my Example, not yours, nor your falſe Popes. His Truth will I embrace, not the lyes and falſhood of you and your Pope. His everlaſting life will I ſeek, the true Reward of all faithful people. Away from me I pray you. Vex my Soul no longer, ye ſhall not prevail. There is no good example in you, no truth in you, no life to be hoped for at your hands. Ye are all more vain than vanity it ſelf. If I ſhould hear and follow you this, everlaſting death ſhould hang over me, a juſt Reward for all them that love the life of this world. Away from me, your company liketh me not.

Benet weary of the Friers talk.

Thus a whole week, night and day, was Benet applied of theſe and ſuch other Hypocrites. It were an infinite matter to declare all things done and ſaid to him in the time of his Impriſonment, and the hate of the people that time, by means of ignorance, was hot againſt him: notwithſtanding they could never move his patience, he anſwered to every matter ſoberly, and that more by the aid of Gods Spirit, than by any worldly ſtudy. I think he was at the leaſt fifty years old. Being in priſon, his Wife provided ſuſtenance for him, and when ſhe lamented, he comforted her, and gave her many good and godly Exhortations, and prayed her to move him nothing to apply unto his Adverſaries.

Thom. Benet patient and conſtant.

Thus when theſe godly Canons and Prieſts with the Monks and Friers had done what they could, and perceived that he would by no means relent, then they proceeding unto Judgment drew out their bloody Sentence againſt against him, condemning him, (as the manner is) to be burned. Which being done, and the Writ which they had procured De Comburendo, being brought from London, they delivered him the fifteenth of January, 1531. unto Sir Thomas Denis Knight, then Sheriff of Devonshire to be burned. The mild Martyr rejoycing his end to approach ſo near, as the ſheep before the Shearer, yielded himſelf with all humbleneſs to abide and ſuffer the Croſs of Perſecution. And being brought to his Execution, in a place called Livery-dole without Exceter, he made his moſt humble confeſſion and prayer unto Almighty God, and requeſted all the people to do the like for him, whom he exhorted with ſuch gravity and ſobriety, and with ſuch a pithy Oration to ſeek the true honouring of God, and the true knowledge of him; as alſo to leave the deviſes, fantaſies, and imaginations of mans inventions, that all the hearers and beholders of him were aſtonied and in great admiration: Inſomuch that the moſt part of the people, as alſo the Scribe who wrote the ſentence of condemnation againſt him, did pronounce and confeſs that he was Gods Servant, and a good man.

Tho. Benet delivered to the ſecular Power.

Tho. Benet brought to the place of Execution.

Nevertheleſs two Eſquires, namely, Thomas Carew and Barnehouſe, ſtanding at the ſtake by him, firſt with fair promiſes and goodly words, but at length, through threatnings, willed him to revoke his Errors, and to call to our Lady and the Saints, and to ſay, Precor Sanctam Mariam, & omnes Sanctos Dei, &c. To whom he with all meekneſs anſwered, ſaying, No, no, it is God only upon whoſe Name we muſt call, and we have no other Advocate unto him, but only Jeſus Chriſt, Who died for us, and now ſitteth at the right hand of the Father to be an Advocate for us; and by him muſt we offer and make our prayers to God, if we will have them to take place and be heard. With which anſwer the foreſaid Barnehouſe was ſo enkindled, that he took a Furze-buſh upon a Pike, and being ſet on fire, thruſt it unto his face, ſaying, Ah Whoreſon Heretick, pray to our Lady, and ſay, Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis, or by Gods wounds I will make thee do it.

Tho. refuſeth to pray to our Lady.

One Advocate Chriſt.

A furze-buſh thruſt in his face, becauſe he would not pray to our Lady.

To whom the ſaid Thomas Benet, with an humble and a meek ſpirit, moſt patiently anſwered, Alas Sir, trouble me not. And holding up his hands, he ſaid, Pater ignoſce illis. Whereupon the Gentlemen cauſed the wood and furzes to be ſet on fire, and therewith this godly man lifted up his eyes and hands to Heaven, ſaying, O Domine, recipe ſpiritum meum. And ſo continuing in his prayers, did never ſtir nor ſtrive, but moſt patiently abode the cruelty of the fire, until his life was ended. For the which the Lord God be praiſed, and ſend us his Grace and Bleſſing, that at the later day we may with him enjoy the bliſs and joy provided and prepared for the Elect Children of God.

The conſtant end and martyrdom of Th. Benet.

This Benet was burned in a Jerkin of Neats-Leather; at whoſe burning (ſuch was the deviliſh rage of the blind people) that well was he or ſhe that could catch a ſtick or furze to caſt into the fire.

HItherto we have run over (good Reader) the names, the acts and doings of them which have ſuſtained death and the torment of burning for Chriſts Cauſe, through the rigorous Proclamation above ſpecified, ſet out (as is ſaid) in the Name of King Henry, but indeed procured by the Biſhops. Which Proclamation was ſo ſtraitly looked upon, and executed ſo to the uttermoſt, in every point, by the ſaid Popiſh Prelates, that no good man, habens ſpiramentum (whereof Eſdras ſpeaketh) could peep out with his head never ſo little, but he was caught by the back, and brought either to the fire, as were theſe above mentioned, or elſe compelled to abjure. Whereof there was a great multitude, as well men as women; whoſe names if they were ſought out through all Regiſters in England, no doubt it would make too long a diſcourſe. Nevertheleſs, omitting the reſt, it ſhall content us at this preſent, briefly as in a ſhort Table to inſinuate the names, with the ſpecial Articles, of ſuch as in the Dioceſs of London, under Biſhop Stokeſley, were moleſted and vexed, and at laſt compelled to abjure, as here may appear.

Geffrey Lome, 1528.

HIs Articles were theſe, For having and diſperſing certain Books of Luther.

Item, For tranſlating certain Chapters of his Book De Bonis Operibus. For holding, That Faith without Works is ſufficient to bring us to Heaven. That Chriſtian men ought to worſhip God only, and no Saints. That Chriſtian men ſhould not offer to Images in Churches, nor ſet any light before them. That Pardons granted by Pope or Biſhop do not profit a man.

Sigar Nicolſon, Stationer of Cambridge, 1528.

His Articles were like; and moreover, for having in his houſe certain Books of Luther, and other prohibited, and not preſenting them to the Ordinary. The handling of this man was too too cruel, if the report be true, that he ſhould be hanged up by thoſe parts which nature well ſuffereth not to be named.

John Raimund a Dutchman, 1528.

For cauſing fifteen hundred of Tindals new Teſtaments to be printed at Antwerpe, and for bringing five hundred into England.

Paul Luther, Gray-Frier, and Warden of the Houſe at Ware, 1529.

His Articles, For preaching and ſaying, That it is pity that there be ſo many Images ſuffered in ſo many places, whereas undiſcreet and unlearned people be; for they make their Prayers and Oblations ſo entirely and heartily before the Image, that they believe it to be the very ſelf Saint in Heaven.

Item, That if he knew his Father and Mother were in Heaven, he would count them as good as St. Peter and Paul, but for the pain they ſuffered for Chriſts ſake.

Item, That there is no need to go on Pligrimage.

Item, That if a man were at the point of drowning, or any other danger, he ſhould call only upon God, and no Saint; for Saints in Heaven cannot help us, neither know any more what men do here in this World, than a man in the North Country knoweth what is done in the South Country.

Roger Whaplod, Merchant-Taylor, 1529.

Roger Whaplod, ſent by one Tho. Norfolk unto Doctor Goderidge this Bill following to be read at his Sermon in the Spittel.

A Bill read by the Preacher at the Spittle.

For the which Bill, both Whaplod and Norfolk were brought and troubled before the Biſhop; and alſo Doctor Goderidge, which took a groat for reading the ſaid Bill, was ſuſpended for a time from ſaying Maſs, and alſo was forced to revoke the ſame at Pauls Croſs; reading this Bill as followeth.

MAſters, ſo it is, that where in my late Sermon at Saint Mary Spittle, the Tueſday in Eaſter-week laſt paſt, I did pray ſpecially for the Soul of Richard Hunne, late of London Merchant-Taylor, an Heretick by the Laws of holy Church juſtly condemned; by reaſon whereof I greatly offended God and his Church, and the Laws of the ſame, for the which I have ſubmitted me to my Ordinary, and done Penance therefore: foraſmuch as peradventure the audience, that was there offended by my ſaid words, might take any occaſion thereby to think that I did favour the ſaid Heretick, or any other, I deſire you at the inſtance of Almighty God to forgive me, and not ſo to think of me, for I did it unadviſedly. Therefore here before God and you I declare my ſelf that I have not favoured him or any other Heretick, nor hereafter intend to do, but at all times ſhall defend the Catholick Faith of holy Church, according to my profeſſion to the beſt of my power.

Thomas Philip, 1530.

Thomas Philip was delivered by Sir Thomas More, to Biſhop Stokeſly by Indenture. Beſides other Articles of Purgatory, Images, the Sacrament of the Altar, Holy-days, keeping of Books, and ſuch like, it was objected unto him, that he, being ſearched in the Tower, had found about him Tracies Teſtament, and in his Chamber in the Tower was found Cheeſe and Butter in Lent-time. Alſo, that he had a Letter delivered unto him going unto the Tower. Which Letter, with the Teſtament alſo of Tracy, becauſe they are both worthy to be ſeen, we mind (God willing) to annex alſo unto the ſtory of this Thomas Philip. As he was oftentimes examined before Maſter More and the Biſhop, he always ſtood to his denial, neither could there any thing be proved clearly againſt him, but only Tracies Teſtament, and his Butter in Lent. One Stacy firſt bare witneſs againſt him, but after in the Court openly he proteſted that he did it for fear. The Biſhop then willing him to ſumbit himſelf, and to ſwear never to hold any opinion contrary to the determination of holy Church; he ſaid, He would: and when the form of his Abjuration was given him to read, he read it: but the Biſhop, not content with that, would have him to read it openly. But that he would not; and ſaid, He would Appeal to the King as ſupream Head of the Church, and ſo did. Still the Biſhop called upon him to abjure. He anſwered, That he would be obedient as a Chriſtian man ſhould, and that he would ſwear never to hold any Hereſie during his life, nor favour any Hereticks.

But the Biſhop not yet content, would have him to read the Abjuration after the form of the Church conceived, as it was given him. He anſwered again, That he would forſwear all Hereſies, and that he would maintain no Hereſies, nor favour any Hereticks. The Biſhop with this would not be anſwered, but needs would drive him to the Abjuration formed after the Popes Church. To whom he ſaid, If it were the ſame Abjuratiou that he read, he would not read it, but ſtand to his Appeal made to the King, the Supream Head of the Church under God. Again the Biſhop asked him, If he would abjure or not. Except, ſaid he, you will ſhew me the cauſe why I ſhould abjure, I will not ſay yea nor nay to it, but will ſtand to my Appeal, and required the Biſhop to obey the ſame. Then the Biſhop reading openly the Bill of Excommunication againſt him, denounced him for Contumax, and an excommunicate perſon, charging all men to have no company, or any thing to do with him. After this Excommunication, what became of him, whether he was holpen by his Appeal, or whether he was burned, or whether he died in the Tower, or whether he abjured, I find no mention made in the Regiſters.

A Letter directed to Thomas Philip in the name of the Brethren, and given him by the way going to the Tower.

A Letter ſent by the Congregation to Thomas Philip.

THe favour of him that is able to keep you that you fall not, and to confeſs your name in the Kingdom of Glory, and to give you ſtrength by his Spirit to confeſs him before all his Adverſaries, be with you ever. Amen.

Sir, the Brethren think that there be divers falſe Brethren craftily crept in among them, to ſeek out their freedom in the Lord, that they may accuſe them to the Lords Adverſaries, as they ſuppoſe they have done you. Wherefore if ſo it be, that the Spirit of God move you thereunto, they as Counſellers deſire you above all things to be ſtedfaſt in the Lords verity without fear; for he ſhall and will be your help, according to his Promiſe, ſo that they ſhall not 1 Pet. 2. miniſh the leaſt hair of your head without his will; unto the which will ſubmit your ſelf and rejoyce: For the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and 1 Pet. 4. how to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of Judgment to be punished: and therefore caſt all your care on him, for he careth for you. And in that you ſuffer as a Chriſtian man, be not aſhamed, but rather glorifie God on that behalf, Looking upon Chriſt the Author and Finiſher of our Faith, which for the joy that was ſet before him abode the Croſs and deſpiſed the ſhame. Notwithſtanding though we ſuffer the wrong, after the example of our Maſter Chriſt, yet we be not bound to ſuffer the wrong cauſe, for Chriſt himſelf ſuffered it not, but reproved him that ſmote him wrongfully. And ſo likewiſe ſaith Saint Paul alſo. So that we muſt not ſuffer the wrong, but boldly reprove them that ſit as righteous Judges, and do contrary to righteouſneſs. Therefore according both to Gods Law and mans, ye be not bound to make anſwer in any cauſe, till your Accuſers come before you. Which if you require, and thereon do ſtick; the falſe Brethren ſhall be known, to the great comfort of thoſe that now ſtand in doubt whom they may truſt; and alſo it ſhall be a mean that they ſhall not craftily by queſtions take you in ſnares. And that you may this do lawfully, in the twentieth Chapter of the Acts it is written, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man that he ſhould periſh, before that he which is accuſed have his Accuſers before him, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf, as pertaining to the Crime whereof he is accuſed. And alſo Chriſt will that in the mouth of two or three Witneſſes all things ſhall ſtand. And in the fifth Chapter to Timothy the firſt Epiſtle it is written, Againſt a Senior receive none Accuſation, but under two or three Witneſſes. A Senior in this place is any man that hath an Houſe to govern. And alſo their own Law is agreeable to this. Wherefore ſeeing it is agreeable to the Word of God, that in Accuſations ſuch Witneſſes ſhould be, you may with good conſcience require it. And thus the God of Grace, which hath called you unto his eternal Glory by Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall his own ſelf after a little affliction make you perfect, ſhall ſettle, ſtrengthen and eſtabliſh you, that to him may be Glory and Praiſe for ever. Amen.

What is a Senior by St. Paul.

Thus ye have heard the Letter delivered to Thomas Philip. Now followeth the Teſtament of William Tracy.

Tracy his Teſtament.

A Little before this time, William Tracy, a worſhipful Eſquire in Gloceſterſhire, and then dwelling at Todington, made in his Will, that he would have no funeral Pomp at his burying, neither paſſed he upon Maſs; and he farther ſaid, That he truſted in God only, and hoped by him to be ſaved, and not by any Saint. This Gentleman died, and his Son as Executor brought the Will to the Biſhop of Canterbury to prove: which he ſhewed to the Convocation, and there moſt cruelly they judged that he ſhould be taken out of the ground, and be burnt as an Heretick, Anno 1532. This Commiſſion was ſent to Doctor Parker, Chancellor of the Dioceſs of Worceſter, to execute their wicked Sentence; which accompliſhed the ſame. The King hearing his Subject to be taken out of the ground and burnt, without his knowledge or order of his Law, ſent for the Chancellor, and laid high Offence to his Charge, who excuſed himſelf by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury which was late dead; but in concluſion it coſt him 300 pound to have his Pardon. The Will and Teſtament of this Gentleman, thus condemned by the Clergy, was as hereunder followeth:

The Teſtament of William Tracy.

IN the Name of God, Amen. I William Tracy of Todington in the County of Gloceſter, Eſquire, make my Teſtament and laſt Will as hereafter followeth: Firſt and before all other things, I commit my ſelf to God and to his Mercy, believing without any doubt or miſtruſt, that by his Grace and the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, and by the Vertue of his Paſſion and of his Reſurrection, I have and ſhall have remiſſion of all my ſins, and reſurrection of Body and Soul, according as it is written, I believe that Job 19. my Redeemer liveth, and that in the laſt day I ſhall riſe out of the Earth, and in my fleſh ſhall ſee my Saviour: this my hope is laid up in my boſom.

And touching the wealth of my Soul, the Faith that I have taken and rehearſed is ſufficient (as I ſuppoſe) without any other mans Works or Merits. My ground and {KING Hen. 8.} and belief is, That there is but one God and one Mediator between God and man, which is Jeſus Chriſt; ſo that I accept none in Heaven nor in Earth to be Mediator between me and God, but only Jeſus Chriſt: all other to be but as Petitioners in receiving of Grace: but none able to give influence of Grace; and therefore will I beſtow no part of my goods for that intent that any man ſhould ſay or do to help my Soul; for therein I truſt only to the Promiſes of Chriſt; He that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved, and he that believeth not ſhall be damned. Mark 16.

Funeral pomp ſerve only for the living, and give no help for the dead

As touching the burying of my body, it availeth me not whatſoever be done thereto; For Saint Auguſtine ſaith, De cura agenda pro mortuis, that the funeral pomps are rather the ſolace of them that live, than the wealth and comfort of them that are dead, and therefore I remit it only to the diſcretion of mine Executors.

And touching the diſtribution of my Temporal Goods, my purpoſe is by the Grace of God to beſtow them to be accepted as the fruits of Faith; ſo that I do not ſuppoſe that my merit ſhall be by the good beſtowing of them, but my merit is the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt only, by whom ſuch works are good, according to the words of our Lord, I was hungry, and thou gaveſt me to eat, &c. And it followeth, That ye have done to the leaſt of my Brethren, ye have done it to me. &c. And ever we ſhould conſider that true ſaying, That a good work maketh not a good man, but a good man maketh a good work; for Faith maketh a man both good and righteous: For a righteous man liveth by Faith, and whatſoever ſpringeth not of Faith is ſin, &c. Rom. 14.

Our merits be only our Faith in Chriſt.

And all my Temporal Goods that I have not given or delivered, or not given by writing of mine own hand, bearing the date of this preſent writing, I do leave and give to Margaret my Wife, and Richard my Son, whom I make mine Executors. Witneſs hereof mine own hand the tenth of October, in the 22*th* year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth.

This is the true Copy of his Will, for the which (as you heard before) after he was almoſt two years dead, they took him up and burned him.

John Periman, Skinner, 1531.

His Articles, That men ſhould pray to God only, and to no Saints; That Pilgrimage is not profitable; That men ſhould give no worſhip to Images. Item, For ſaying, That if he had as much power as any Cardinal had, he would deſtroy all the Images that were in all the Churches in England.

His Articles, For having the Teſtament in Engliſh, the five Books of Moſes, the practiſe of Prelates, the ſum of Scripture, the A. B. C.

Item, About the burning of Bainham, for ſaying, I would I were with Bainham, ſeeing that every man hath forſaken him, that I might drink with him, and he might pray for me.

Item, That he moved Henry Tomſon to learn to read the New Teſtament, calling it The Blood of Chriſt.

Item, In Lent paſt, when he had no Fiſh, he did eat Eggs, Butter and Cheeſe. Alſo about ſix weeks before Maſter Bilney was attached, the ſaid Bilney delivered to him at Greenwich four New Teſtaments of Tindals Tranſlation, which he had in his Sleeve, and a Budget beſides of Books, which Budget he,

Item, On Fridays he uſed to eat Eggs, and thought that it was no great offence before God, &c.

Eating of Eggs made Hereſie.

Henry Tomſon, Taylor, 1531.

His Articles, That which the Prieſt liſteth over his head at the ſacring-time is not the very Body of Chriſt, nor is it God, but a thing that God hath ordained to be done.

This poor Tomſon, although at the firſt he ſubmitted himſelf to the Biſhop, yet they with Sentence condemned him to perpetual priſon.

Jaſper Wetzell of Coleine, 1531.

His Articles, That he cared not for going to the Church to hear Maſs, for he could ſay Maſs as well as the Prieſt; That he would not pray to our Lady, for ſhe could do us no good.

Item, Being asked if he would go hear Maſs, he ſaid, He had as leve go to the Gallows where the Thieves were hanged.

Item, Being at St. Mary Patens, and there holding his Arms across, he ſaid unto the people, That he could make as good a Knave as he is, for he is made but of wood, &c.

Robert Man, Servingman, 1531.

His Articles, There is no Purgatory; The Pope hath no more power to grant Pardon than another ſimple Prieſt; That God gave no more authority to St. Peter than to another Prieſt; That the Pope was a Knave, and his Prieſts Knaves all, for ſuffering his Pardons to go abroad to deceive the people; That St. Thomas of Canterbury is no Saint; That St. Peter was never Pope of Rome.

Prieſts ſet more ſtore by a pair of Gloves, than they do by a Lay-mans hand.

Item, He uſed commonly to ask of Prieſts where he came, Whether a man were accurſed if he handled a Chalice, or no? If the Prieſt would ſay, Yea: then would he reply again thus, If a man have a Sheep-skin on his hands (meaning a pair of Gloves) he may handle it. The Prieſts ſaying, Yea. Well then (quoth he) ye will make me believe, that God put more vertue in a Sheep-skin, than he did in a Chriſtian mans hand, for whom he died.

Henry Feldon, 1531.

His trouble was for having theſe Books in Engliſh; A proper Dialogue between a Gentleman and a Huſbandman, The Sum of Scripture, The Prologue of Mark. A written Book containing the Pater noſter, Ave Maria, and Credo in Engliſh. The Ten Commandments, and the ſixteen Conditions of Charity.

Robert Cooper, Prieſt, 1531.

His Article only was this, For ſaying that the bleſſing with a Shooe-ſoul is as good as the Biſhops bleſſing, &c.

Thomas Roe, 1531.

His Articles were, For ſpeaking againſt Auricular Confeſſion and Prieſtly Penance, and againſt the preaching of the Doctors.

Will. Wallam, 1531.

Grace

Grace Palmer, 1531.

Againſt bearing of Palms.

Witneſs was brought againſt her by her Neighbours, John Rouſe, Agnes his Wife, John Pole, of St. Oſithes, for ſaying, Ye uſe to bear Palms on Palm-Sunday, it skilleth not whether you bear any or not, it is but a thing uſed, and need not.

Alſo ye uſe to go on Pilgrimage to our Lady of Grace, of Walſingham, and other places, ye were better tarry at home, and give money to ſuccour me and my Children, and other of my poor Neighbours, than to go thither; for there you ſhall find but a piece of Timber painted, there is neither God nor our Lady.

Item, For repenting that ſhe did ever light Candles before Images.

Item, That the Sacrament of the Altar is not the Body of Chriſt; it is but Bread, which the Prieſt there ſheweth for a token or remembrance of Chriſts Body.

Philip Braſier of Bockſteed, 1531.

His Articles, That the Sacrament holden up between the Prieſts hands is not the Body of Chriſt, but bread, and is done for ſignification; That confeſſion to a Prieſt needeth not; That Images be but ſtocks and ſtones; That Pilgrimage is vain; alſo for ſaying, That when there is any Miracle done, the Prieſts do anoint the Images, and make men believe that the Images do ſweat in labouring for them; and with the Offerings the Prieſts find their Harlots.

John Faireſtede of Colcheſter, 1531.

Prophecie.

His Articles, For words ſpoken againſt Pilgrimage and Images. Alſo for ſaying theſe words, That the day ſhould come that men ſhould ſay, Curſed be they that make theſe falſe Gods (meaning Images.)

George Bull of Much-Hadham, Draper, 1531.

Three Confeſſions.

His Articles, That there be three Confeſſions; one Principal to God, another to his Neighbour whom he had offended, and the third to a Prieſt; and that without the two firſt Confeſſions, to God and to his Neighbour, a man could not be ſaved. The third confeſſion to a Prieſt, is neceſſary for counſel to ſuch as be ignorant and unlarned, to learn how to make their confeſſion with a contrite heart unto God, and how to hope for Forgiveneſs; and alſo in what manner they ſhould ask forgiveneſs of their Neighbour whom they have offended, &c. Item, For ſaying that Luther was a good man. Item, That he reported, through the credence and report of Mr. Patmore, Parſon of Hadham, that where Wickliffs bones were burnt ſprang up a Well or Well-Spring.

A Well-ſpring where Wickliffs bones were burned.

John Haymond, Millwright, 1531.

His Articles, For ſpeaking and holding againſt Pilgrimage and Images, and againſt preſcribed Faſting-days.

That Prieſts and religious men, notwithſtanding their Vows made, may lawfully forſake their Vows and marry.

Item, For having Books of Luther and Tindall.

Rob. Lambe, a Harper, 1531.

His Article, For that he ſtanding accurſed two years together, and not fearing the Cenſures of the Popes Church, went about with a Song in the Commendation of M. Luther.

An Anth kneeling to the Croſs.

Edward Frenſham kneeling in the ſtreet to a Croſs carried before a Corſe; asked, To whom he kneeled? He ſaid, To his Maker. Thou art a Fool (ſaid he) it is not thy Maker, it is but a piece of Copper or Wood, &c.

Item, For theſe words, Maſters ye uſe to go on Pilgrimage; it were better firſt that ye look upon your poor Neighbours which lack ſuccour, &c.

Much baudry in Pilgrimage.

Alſo for ſaying, That he heard the Vicar of Croidon thus preach openly, That there is as much baudry kept by going on Pilgrimage to Wilſedon or Mouſwell, as in the Stews beſide, &c.

Tho. Patmore, Draper, 1531.

This Patmore was Brother to Maſter Patmore, Parſon of Hadham, who was priſoned in the Bollards Tower for marrying a Prieſt, and in the ſame priſon continued three years.

This Patmore was accuſed by divers Witneſſes, upon theſe Articles:

That he had as leve pray to yonder Hunter, pointing to a man painted there in a ſtained-cloth, for a piece of fleſh, as to pray to Stocks that ſtand in Walls, meaning Images.

Item, That men ſhould not pray to Saints, but to God only; For why ſhould we pray to Saints (ſaid he) they are but blocks and ſtocks.

The truth of Scripture a long time kept from us.

Item, That the truth of Scripture hath been kept from us a long time, and hath not appeared till now.

Item, Coming by a Tree wherein ſtood an Image, he took away the Wax which hanged there offered.

Item, That he regarded not the place whether it was hallowed or no, where he ſhould be buried after he was dead.

Alſo in talk with the Curate of St. Peters, he defended that Prieſts might marry.

This Patmore had long held with the Biſhop of London. Firſt, he would not ſwear, infamia non præcedente. Then he would Appeal to the King; but all would not ſerve. He was ſo wrapt in the Biſhops Nets, that he could not get out: but at laſt he was forced to abjure, and was fined to the King an hundred pounds.

A note.

Note in the Communication between this Patmore and the Prieſt of Saint Peters, That whereas the Prieſt objected againſt him (as is in the Regiſter) that Prieſts have lived unmarried, and without Wives theſe 1500 years in the Church: he and all other ſuch Prieſts therein ſay falſely, and deceive the people, as by ſtory is proved in this Volume, that Prieſts here in England had Wives by the Law within theſe five hundred years and leſs.

The Papiſts falſly ſay, that Prieſts have been unmarried theſe 1500 years.

Simon Smith Maſter of Arts of Gunwell-Hall in Cambridge, and Benor his Wife, 1531.

This Simon Smith, and Benor his Wife were the Parties whom Maſter Patmore Parſon of Hadham above mentioned did marry, and was condemned for the ſame to perpetual Priſon. For the which Marriage both the ſaid Simon and Benor his Wife were called to Examination before the Biſhop, and he cauſed to make the whole Diſcourſe of all his doings, how and where he married. Then after his marriage, how long he tarried, whether he went beyond Sea, where he was, and with whom. After his return, whither he reſorted, how he lived, what Mercery-Ware he occupied, what Fairs he frequented, where he left his Wife, how he carried her over, and brought her home again, and how ſhe was found, &c. All this they made him confeſs, and put it in their Regiſter. And though they could faſten no other Crime of Hereſie upon him, but only his marriage; yet calling both him and her, being great with child, to Examination, they cauſed them both to abjure and ſuffer Penance.

KING Hen. 8.

Thomas Patmore, Parſon of Hadham, 1530.

This Thomas Patmore, being learned and godly, was preferred to the Parſonage of Hadham in Hertfordſhire, by Richard Fitz-James Biſhop of London, and there continued inſtructing and teaching his flock, during the time of the ſaid Fitz-James, and alſo of Tonſtal his ſucceſſor, by the ſpace of ſixteen years or more, behaving himſelf in life and converſation, without any publick blame or reproach, until that John Stokeſley was preferred unto the ſaid Biſhoprick; Who not very long after his inſtalling, either for malice, not greatly liking of the ſaid Patmore, or elſe deſirous to prefer ſome other unto the Benefice (as it is ſuppoſed and alledged by his brethren in ſundry ſupplications exhibited unto the King, as alſo unto Ann, then Marchioneſs of Pembroke) cauſed him to be attached and brought before him, and then keeping him Priſoner in his own Palace, a certain time afterwad committed him to Lollards Tower, where he kept him moſt extreamly above two years without fire or Candle, or any other relief, but ſuch as his friends ſent him, not ſuffering any of them notwithſtanding to come unto him, no not in his ſickneſs. Howbeit, ſundry times in the mean while he called him judicially, either before himſelf or elſe his Vicar General Foxford, that great Perſecuter, charging him with theſe ſundry Articles, viz. as firſt, whether he had been at Wittenberg; ſecondly, and had ſeen or talked with Luther; thirdly, or with any Engliſhman, abiding there; fourthly, who went with him, or attended upon him thither; fifthly, alſo what Books he bought there, either Latine or Engliſh; ſixthly, and whether he had read or ſtudied any works of Luther, Oecolampadius, Pomerane or Melanchthon. Beſides theſe, he miniſtred alſo other Articles unto him, touching the Marriage of Maſter Simon Smith (before mentioned) with one Joan Bennor, charging him that he both knew of, and alſo conſented unto their Marriage, the one being a Prieſt and his Curate, and the other his Maidſervant, and that he had perſwaded his ſaid Maidſervant to marry with his ſaid Curate, alledging unto her, that though it were not lawful in England for Prieſts to marry, yet it was in other Countries beyond Seas. And that after their ſaid Marriage, he (knowing the ſame) did yet ſuffer the ſaid Smith to miniſter in his Cure all Eaſter time, and fifteen days after; and that at their departure out of England, he ſupped with them at the Bell in New-Fiſhſtreet, and again, at their return into England, did meet them at the ſaid Bell, and there lent unto the ſaid Smith a Prieſts Gown.

Prieſts marriage.

He objected moreover againſt him in the ſaid Articles; that he had affirmed at Cambridge, firſt, that he did not ſet a Bottle of Hay by the Popes or Biſhops Curſe; ſecondly, and that God bindeth us to impoſſible things, that he may ſave us only by his mercy; thirdly alſo, that though young Children be baptiſed, yet they cannot be ſaved except they had faith; fourthly and laſtly, that it was againſt Gods law to burn Hereticks.

Unto theſe Articles, after long impriſonment and great threats of the Biſhop and his Vicar, he at the laſt anſwered, making firſt his Appeal unto the King. Wherein he ſhewed, that forſomuch as the Biſhop had moſt unjuſtly and contrary to all due order of Law, and the equity thereof, proceeded againſt him, as well in falſly defaming him with the crime of Hereſie, without having any juſt proof or publick defamation thereof, as alſo contrary to all juſtice, keeping him in moſt ſtrait Priſon ſo long time (both to the great danger of his life by grievous ſickneſs taken thereby, as eſpecially to his no ſmall grief, that through his abſence, his flock, whereof he had charge, were not fed with the Word of God and his Sacraments as he would) and then to miniſter unto him ſuch Articles, mingled with Interrogatories, as neither touched any Hereſie nor tranſgreſſion of any Law, but rather ſhewing a mind to pick quarrels againſt him and other innocent people; he therefore, for the cauſes alledged, was compelled and did appeal from him and all his Officers unto the Kings Majeſty, whom under God he had for his moſt juſt and lawful refuge, and defender againſt all injuries. From which Appeal although he minded not at any time to depart, yet becauſe he would not ſhew himſelf obſtinate againſt the Biſhop being his Ordinary (although he had moſt juſt cauſe to ſuſpect his unjuſt proceedings againſt him) he was nevertheleſs content to exhibite unto him this his anſwer. Firſt, that howſoever the Biſhop was privately informed, yet becauſe he was not Publice diffamatus apud bonos & graves, according to law, he was not by the law bound to anſwer to any of thoſe Articles.

And as touching the firſt ſix Articles (as whether he was at Wittenberg, and ſpake with Luther or any other, or bought or read any of their Books, &c.) becauſe none of thoſe things were forbidden him by any law, neither was he publickly accuſed of them (for that it was permitted to many good men to have them) he was not bound to anſwer; neither was he to be examined of them. But as touching the Marriage of Maſter Simon Smith with Jane Bennor, he granted that he knew thereof by the declaration of Maſter Smith; but that he gave his Maid counſel thereunto he utterly denied. And as concerning the contracting of the Marriage between them, he thought it not at all againſt Gods Law, who at the firſt Creation made Marriage lawful for all men. Neither thought he it unlawful for him, after their Marriage, either to keep him as his Curate, or elſe to lend or give him any thing needful (wherein he ſaid he had ſhewed more charity than the Biſhop, who had taken all things from them) and therefore he deſired to have it proved by the Scriptures, that Prieſts Marriages were not lawful. Againſt whom, Foxford the Biſhops Vicar often alledged General Councils, and Determinations of the Church, but no Scriptures, ſtill urging him to abjure his Articles; which Patmore long time refuſed, and ſticking a great while to his former anſwers, at laſt was threatned by Foxford, to have definitive ſentence read againſt him. Whereupon he anſwered, That he believed the holy Church as a Chriſtian man ought to do, and becauſe it paſſed his capacity, he deſired to be inſtructed, and if the Scriptures did teach it, he would believe it; for he knew not the contrary by the Scriptures, but that a Prieſt might marry a Wife, howbeit by the laws of the Church he thought that a Prieſt might not marry. But the Chancellor ſtill ſo urged him to ſhew whether a Prieſt might marry without offence to God, that at length he granted that Prieſts might not marry without offence to God, becauſe the Church had forbidden it, and therefore a Prieſt could not marry without deadly ſin. Now as touching the four laſt Articles, he denied that he ſpake them as they were put againſt him; but he granted that he might, perhaps, jeſtingly ſay, That a bottle of Hay were more profitable to him than the Popes curſe, which he thought true. Alſo to the ſecond he affirmed, That God had ſet before us by his Precepts and Commandments the way to juſtice; which way was not in mans power to go and keep; therefore Paul ſaith, ad Galatas 3. Quod lex erat ordinata per Angelos; but yet to fulfil it, it was in manu (id eſt, in poteſtate) interceſſoris: That none that ſhall be ſaved ſhall account their ſalvation unto their own deeds, or thank their own juſtice in obſerving the Law; for it was in no mans power to obſerve it; but ſhall give all thanks to the mercies and goodneſs of God; according to the Pſalm, Laudate Dominum omnes gentes; and according to the ſaying of Paul, Ut qui gloriatur, in Domino glorietur; Which hath ſent his Son to do for us that which was not in our own power to do. For if it had been in our power to fulfil the Law, Chriſt had been ſent to us without cauſe, to do for us that thing, which we our ſelves could could have done, that is to ſay, fulfil the Law. As for the third he ſpake not, for he did never know that any may be baptiſed without Faith; which Faith, inaſmuch as it is the gift of God, why may it not be given parvulis? To the laſt he ſaid, That if he ſpake it, he meant it not of thoſe that Saint Bernard called Hereticks, with more Adulterers, Thieves, Murtherers and other open ſinners, which blaſpheme God by their mouths, calling good evil, and evil good, making light darkneſs, and darkneſs light. But he meant it of ſuch as men call Hereticks according to the teſtimony of St. Paul, Acts 24. I live after the way (ſaith he) that men call Hereſie, whom Chriſt doth foretell that ye ſhall burn and perſecute to death.

After theſe anſwers thus made, the Biſhop, with his perſecuting Foxford, dealt ſo hardly with this good man, partly by ſtrait impriſonment, and partly by threats to proceed againſt him, that in the end he was fain through humane infirmity to ſubmit himſelf, and was abjured and condemned to perpetual priſon; with loſs, both of his Benefice, as alſo of all his goods. Howbeit one of his Brethren afterwards made ſuch ſuit unto the King (by means of the Queen) that after three years impriſonment, he was both releaſed out of Priſon, and alſo obtained of the King a Commiſſion to the Lord Awdley, then being L. Chancellor, and to Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to Cromwel, then Secretary, with others, to inquire of the injurious and unjuſt dealings of the Biſhop and his Chancellor againſt the ſaid Patmore, notwithſtanding his appeal unto the King, and to determine thereof according to true equity and juſtice, and to reſtore the ſaid Patmore again unto his ſaid Benefice. But what was the end and iſſue of this Commiſſion, we find not as yet.

John Row, Book-binder, a Frenchman, 1531.

His Articles: That the Sacrament of the Altar is but a memory of Chriſts Paſſion. That men were fools to go on Pilgrimage, or to ſet any Candle before Images. Item, It is as good to ſet up ſtaves before the Sepulchre, as to ſet up Tapers of Wax. That Prieſts might have Wives.

Robert Hudſon of S. Sepulchres. 1531.

His Article: On Childermas day (ſaith the Regiſter) he offered in Pauls Church at offering time, to the Child Biſhop (called S. Nicholas) a Dog for devotion (as he ſaid) and meant no hurt, for he thought to have offered a half-peny, or elſe the Dog, and thought the Dog to be better than a half-peny, and the Dog ſhould raiſe ſome profit to the Child; and ſaid moreover, that it was the tenth Dog, &c. Ex Regiſt.

Edward Hewet, Servingman, 1531.

This Medwel lay in Priſon twenty four Weeks, till he was almoſt lame. His Hereſies were theſe; That he doubted whether there was any Purgatory. He would not truſt in Pardons, but rather in the Promiſes of Chriſt; he doubted, whether the merits of any but only of Chriſt did help him; He doubted whether Pilgrimages and ſetting up of Candles to Images, were meritorious or not. He thought he ſhould not put his truſt in any Saint. Item, he had in his cuſtody, the New Teſtament in Engliſh, the Examination of Thorp; the wicked Mammon, a Book of Matrimony, Ex ipſius ſchedula ad Epiſc. Script.

Chriſtopher

KING Hen. 8.

¶ Perſons abjured, with their Articles.

Chriſtopher Fulman, Servant to a Goldſmith, 1532.

This young man was attached, for receiving certain Books at Antwerp of George Conſtantine, and tranſporting them over into England, and ſelling them to ſundry perſons, being Books prohibited by the Proclamation. Item, He thought then theſe Books to have been good, and that he had been in error in times paſt.

Margaret Bowgas, 1532.

Her Hereſies were theſe, being asked if ſhe would go on Pilgrimage, ſhe ſaid, I believe in God, and he can do me more good than our Lady, or any other Saint; and as for them, they ſhall come to me, if they will, &c. Then Richard Sharples, Parſon of Millend by Colcheſter, asked her, if ſhe ſaid her Ave Maria. I ſay, ſaid ſhe, Hail Mary, but I will ſay no further. Then ſaid he, if ſhe left not thoſe opinions, ſhe would bear a Fagot. If I do, ſaid ſhe, better than I ſhall: adding moreover, that ſhe would not go from that to die therefore; to whom the Prieſt anſwered and ſaid, ſhe would be burned. Hereunto Margaret again replying, asked the Prieſt, Who made Martyrs? Tyrants (quoth the Prieſt) make Martyrs, for they put Martyrs to death. So they ſhall, or may me, quoth Margaret. At length with much ado, and great perſwaſions, ſhe gave over to Foxford the Chancellor, and ſubmitted her ſelf.

Tyrants make Martyrs.

John Tiler, an Iriſhman of Billerika, Taylor.

His Articles were theſe, That the Sacrament of the Altar was not the body of Chriſt, but only a Cake of Bread. Furthermore, the occaſion being asked, how he fell into that Hereſie, he anſwered and ſaid, that about three Weeks before Midſummer laſt paſt, he heard Mr. Hugh Latimer preach at Saint Mary Abchurch, that men ſhould leave going on Pilgrimage abroad, and do their Pilgrimage to their poor neighbours. Alſo the ſaid Mr. Latimer in his Sermon did ſet the Sacrament of the Altar at little.

Mr. Latimer preached againſt Pilgrimage.

William Lancaſter, Taylor, 1532.

The cauſe laid to this man, was, that he had in his keeping the book of Wickliff's Wicket. Item, That he believed the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, not to be the body of Chriſt really, &c. Item, Upon the day of Aſſumption, he ſaid, That if it were not for the ſpeech of the people, he would not receive the Sacrament of the Altar.

Robert Topley, Frier, 1532.

His Articles: He being a Frier Auguſtine of Clare, forſook his Habit, and going in a ſecular mans weed ten years, married a Wife, called Margaret Nixon, having by her a child; and afterward, being brought before the Biſhop, he was by him abjured and condemned to be impriſoned in his former Monaſtery; but at laſt he eſcaped out, and returned to his Wife again.

A Frier married.

Thomas Topley, Auguſtine Frier, at Stokeclare.

By the occaſion of this Robert Topley aforeſaid, place is offered to ſpeak ſomething likewiſe of Thomas Topley, his Brother belike, and alſo a Frier of the ſame Order and Houſe of Stokeclare. This Thomas Topley had been before converted by one Richard Fox, Prieſt of Bumſteed, and Miles Coverdale, inſomuch, that he being induced partly by them, partly by reading certain Books, caſt off both his Order and Habit, and went like a ſecular Prieſt. Whereupon he was eſpied, and brought to Cuthbert, Biſhop of London, Anno 1528. before whom this Confeſſion he made as followeth.

The Recantation of Thomas Topley.

ALL Chriſtian men beware of conſenting to Eraſmus Fables, for by conſenting to them they have cauſed me to ſhrink in my Faith, that I promiſed to God at my Chriſtening by my Witneſſes. Firſt, as touching theſe Fables, I read in Colloquium, by the inſtruction of Sir Richard Fox, of certain Pilgrims, which (as the Book doth ſay) made a Vow to go to Saint James, and as they went, one of them died, and he deſired his fellows to ſalute Saint James in his name; and another died homeward, and he deſired that they would ſalute his Wife and Children; and the third died at Florence, and his fellow ſaid, he ſuppoſed he was in Heaven, and yet he ſaid that he was a great lyer. Thus I muſed of theſe Opinions ſo greatly, that my mind was almoſt withdrawn from Devotion to Saints. Notwithſtanding, I conſented that the divine Service of them was very good, and is, though I have not had ſuch ſweetneſs in it as I ſhould have had, becauſe of ſuch Fables, and alſo becauſe of other fooliſh Paſtimes; as dauncing, Tennis, and ſuch other, which I think have been great occaſions that the goodneſs of God hath been void in me, and vice in ſtrength.

The Recantation of Tho. Topley Frier. Colloquia Eraſm.

Ex Reg. Lond.

Moreover, it fortuned thus, about half a year ago, that the ſaid Sir Richard went forth, and deſired me to ſerve his Cure for him; and as I was in his Chamber, I found a certain Book called Wickliff's Wicket, whereby I felt in my Conſcience a great wavering for the time that I did read upon it, and afterward alſo when I remembred it, it wounded my Conſcience very ſore. Nevertheleſs I conſented not to it, until I had heard him preach, and that was upon Saint Anthonies day. Yet my mind was ſtill much troubled with the ſaid Book (which did make the Sacrament of Chriſts body, in form of bread, but a remembrance of Chriſts Paſſion) till I heard Sir Myles Coverdale preach, and then my mind was ſore withdrawn from that bleſſed Sacrament, inſomuch that I took it then but for the remembrance of Chriſt his body. Thus I have wretchedly wrapped my ſoul with ſin, becauſe I have not been ſtedfaſt in that holy Order that God hath called me unto by Baptiſm, neither in the holy Order that God and St. Auguſtine hath called me to by my Religion, &c.

Wickliff's Wicket.

Miles Coverdale.

Furthermore, he ſaid and confeſſed, That in the Lent laſt paſt, as he was walking in the field at Bumſteed, with Sir Myles Coverdale, late Frier of the ſame Order, going in the Habit of a ſecular Prieſt, which had preached the fourth Sunday in Lent at Bumſteed, they did commune together of Eraſmus Works, and alſo upon Confeſſion. The which Sir Myles ſaid and did hold, that it was ſufficient for a man to be contrite for his ſins betwixt God and his Conſcience, without Confeſſion made to a Prieſt; which Opinion this Reſpondent thought to be true, and did affirm and hold the ſame at that time. Alſo he ſaith, that at the ſaid Sermon made by the ſaid Sir Myles Coverdale at Bumſteed, he heard him preach againſt worſhipping of Images in the Church, ſaying and preaching, That men in no wiſe ſhould honour or worſhip them; which likewiſe he thought to be true, becauſe he had no learning to defend it.

Miles Coverdale.

William Gardiner, Auguſtine Frier of Clare.

With this Topley I may alſo joyn William Gardiner, one of the ſame Order and Houſe of Clare, who likewiſe by the motion of the ſaid Richard Fox, Curate of Bumſteed, and by ſhewing him certain Books to read, was brought likewiſe to the like learning and judgment, and was by the ſame abjured by Cuthbert, Biſhop, the ſame year, 1528.

Richard Johnſon of Bockſteed, and Alice his Wife.

This Richard and his Wife were favourers of Gods Word, and had been troubled for the ſame of long time. They came from Salisbury to Boxſteed, by reaſon of Perſecution, where they continued a good ſpace. At length by reſort of good men, they began to be ſuſpected; and ſpecially for a Book of Wickliff's Wicket which was in their houſe, they were conventeed before Stokeſley Biſhop of London, and there abjured.

¶ So great was the trouble of thoſe times, that it would overcharge any ſtory to recite the names of all them which during thoſe bitter days, before the coming of Queen Ann, either were driven out of the Realm, or were caſt out from their Goods and Houſes, or brought to open ſhame by Abjuration. Such Decrees and Injunctions then were ſet forth by the Biſhops, ſuch Laws and Proclamations were provided, ſuch watch and narrow ſearch was uſed, ſuch ways were taken by force of the Oath, to make one detect another ſo ſubtilly, that unneth any good man could, or did eſcape their hands, but either his name was known, or elſe his perſon was taken. Yet nevertheleſs ſo mightily the power of Gods Goſpel did work in the hearts of good men, that the number of them did nothing leſſen for all this violence or policy of the adverſaries, but rather increaſed in ſuch ſort, as our ſtory almoſt ſuffereth not to recite the particular names of all and ſingular ſuch as then groaned under the ſame croſs of affliction and perſecution of theſe days; of which number were theſe.

Perilous days.

¶ Touching this Richard Chapman, this by the way is to be noted, that as he was in his Coat and Shirt enjoyned, bare-head, bare-foot, and bare-legged, to go before the Proceſſion, and to kneel upon the cold ſteps in the Church all the Sermon time, a little Lad ſeeing him kneel upon the cold ſtone with his bare knees, and having pity on him, came to him, and having nothing elſe to give him, brought him his Cap to kneel upon. For the which the Boy was immediately taken into the Veſtry, and there unmercifully beaten for his mercy ſhewed to the poor penitent.

John Wily his ſon.
Chriſtian Wily his wife.
William Wily his ſon.
Margaret Wily his wife.
Lucy Wily, Agnes Wily two young Girls.

Theſe eight perſons were accuſed Anno 1532. for eating Potage and fleſh-meat, five years before, upon St. James Even.

Alſo another time, upon S. Peters Even, as Katharine Wily did ly in Child-bed, the other Wives, with the two Girls, were found eating all together of a Broth made with the fore-part of a rack of Mutton.

Item, The foreſaid John Wily the elder, had a Primer in Engliſh in his houſe, and other Books.

Alſo he had a young Daughter of ten years old, which could render by heart the moſt part of the 24*th* Chapter of Saint Matthew. Alſo could rehearſe without Book, The diſputation between the Clerk and the Frier.

Item, The ſaid John Wily had in his houſe a Treatiſe of William Thorp, and Sir John Oldcaſtle.

MENTION was made before of Richard Bayfield Monk of Bury, who in theſe perilous days, amongſt other good Saints of God, ſuffered death, as ye have heard, but how, and by whom he was detected, hath not been ſhewed; which now in ſearching out of Regiſters, as we have found, ſo we thought good here to adjoyn the ſame with the words and confeſſion of the ſame Edmund Peerſon, which detected him in manner as followeth.

The Accuſation of Edmund Peerſon againſt Bayfield.

The accuſation of Edmund Peerſon againſt R. Bayfield.

THE thirteenth day of September, at four of the clock at afternoon, the year of our Lord 1527. Sir Richard Bayfield ſaid, That my Lord of London's Commiſſary was a plain Phariſee, wherefore he would ſpeak with him, and by his wholeſome Doctrine, he truſted in God, he ſhould make him a perfect Chriſtian man, and me alſo, for I was a Phariſee as yet, he ſaid.

Alſo he ſaid, That he cared not if the Commiſſary and the Chancellor heard him both; for the Chancellor, he ſaid, was alſo a Phariſee, and he truſted to make him a Chriſtian man.

Alſo he ſaid, He was intreated by his friends, and in manner conſtrained to abide in the City againſt his will, to make the Chancellor, and many more, perfect Chriſtian men, for as yet many were Phariſees, and knew not the perfect declaration of the Scripture.

Alſo he ſaid, That Maſter Arthur and Bilney were, and be more pure and more perfect in their living to God, than was, or is, the Commiſſary, the Chancellor, my Lord of London, or my Lord Cardinal.

Alſo he ſaid, That if Arthur and Bilney ſuffer death in the quarrels and opinions that they be in, or hold, they ſhall be Martyrs before God in Heaven.

Alſo he ſaid, After Arthur and Bilney were put cruelly to death, yet ſhould there be hundreds of men that ſhould preach the ſame that they have preached.

Commendation of Bilney and Arthur.

Alſo he ſaid, That he would favour Arthur and Bilney, he knew their living to be ſo good, for they did wear no Shirts of linnen cloth, but Shirts of hair, and ever were faſting, praying, or doing ſome other good deeds. And as for one of them, whatſoever he have of mony in his Purſe, he will diſtribute it, for the love of God, to poor people.

Alſo he ſaid, That no man ſhould give laud or praiſe in any manner of wiſe, to any creature, or to any Saint in Heaven, but only to God. Soli Deo honor & gloria, that is To God alone be all honour and glory.

Tim. 1.

Alſo he ſaid, Ah, good Sir Edmund, ye be far from the knowledge and underſtanding of the Scripture, for as yet ye be a Phariſee, with many other of your company; but I truſt in God, I ſhall make you, and many other more, good and perfect Chriſtian men, ere I depart from the City; for I purpoſe to read a common Lecture every day at St. Foſters Church, which Lecture ſhall be to the edifying of your ſouls that be falſe Phariſees.

The godly courage of R. Bayfield.

Alſo he ſaid, That Bilney preached nothing at Wileſdon, but what was true.

Alſo he ſaid, That Bilney preached true at Wileſdon, if he ſaid that our Ladys Crown of Wileſdon, her Rings and Beads that were offered to her, were beſtowed amongſt Harlots, by the Miniſters of Chriſts Church; for that I have ſeen my ſelf, he ſaid, here in London, and that I will abide by.

The peoples offerings beſtowed upon Harlots.

Alſo he ſaid, He did not fear to commune and argue in Arthur's and Bilney's Opinions and Articles, and if it were with my Lord Cardinal.

Alſo he ſaid, That he would hold Arthur's and Bilney's Opinions and Articles, and abide by them, that they were true Opinions, to ſuffer death therefore; I know them (ſaid he) for ſo noble and excellent men in learning.

Alſo he ſaid, If he were before my Lord Cardinal, he would not let to ſpeak to him, and to tell him, that he hath done naught in priſoning Arthur and Bilney, which were better diſpoſed in their livings to God, than my Lord Cardinal, or my Lord of London, as holy as they make themſelves.

Alſo he ſaid, My Lord Cardinal is no perfect nor good man to God, for he keepeth not the commandments of God, for Chriſt (he ſaid) never taught him to follow riches, nor to ſeek for promotions nor dignities of this world, nor did Chriſt ever teach him to wear ſhoes of ſilver and gilt, ſet with pearl and precious ſtones; nor had Chriſt ever two Croſſes of ſilver, two Axes, nor pillar of ſilver and gilt.

The Cardinals ſhoes.

Alſo he ſaid, That every Prieſt might preach the Goſpel without licence of the Pope, my Lord Cardinal, my Lord of London, or any other man; and that he would abide by, and thus he verified it, as it is written, Mark 16. Euntes in mundum univerſum, prædicate Evangelium omni creaturæ. Chriſt commanded every Prieſt to go forth throughout all the world, and preach the Word of God by the authority of this Goſpel, and not to run to the Pope, nor to any other man for licence: And that he would abide by, he ſaid.

Alſo he ſaid, Well, Sir Edmund, ſay you what you will, and every man, and my Lord Cardinal alſo, and yet will I ſay, and abide by it, my Lord Cardinal doth puniſh Arthur and Bilney unjuſtly, for there be no truer Chriſtian men in all the world living than they two be, and that puniſhment that my Lord Cardinal doth to them, he doth it by might and power, as who would ſay, This may I do, and this will I do, who ſhall ſay nay? but he doth it of no juſtice.

Alſo about the fourteenth day of October laſt paſt, at three of the clock at afternoon, Sir Richard Bayfield came to St. Edmunds in Lumbardſtreet, where he found me Sir Edmund Peerſon, Sir James Smith, and Sir Miles Garnet, ſtanding at the uttermoſt Gate of the Parſonage, and Sir Edmund ſaid to Sir Richard Bayfield, How many Chriſtian men have ye made ſince ye came to the City? Quoth Sir Richard Barfield, I came even now to make thee a Chriſtian man, and theſe two other Gentlemen with thee; for well I know ye be all three Phariſees as yet.

Alſo he ſaid to Sir Edmund, That Arthur and Bilney were better Chriſtian men than he was, or any of them that did puniſh Arthur and Bilney.

Per me Edmundum Peerſon.

AND thus we have, as in a groſs ſumm compiled together the names and cauſes, though not of all, yet of a great, and too great a number of good men and good women, which in thoſe ſorrowful days (from the year of our Lord 1527, to this preſent year 1533, that is, till the coming in of Queen Ann) were manifold ways vexed and perſecuted under the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome. Where again we have to note, That from this preſent year of our Lord 1533, during the time of the ſaid Queen Ann, we read of no great perſecution, nor any Abjuration to have been in the Church of England, ſave only that the Regiſters of London make mention of certain Dutchmen counted for Anabaptiſts, of whom ten were put to death in ſundry places of the Realm, Anno 1535, other ten repented and were ſaved. Where note again, that two alſo of the ſaid company, albeit the definitive ſentence was read, yet notwithſtanding were pardoned by the King; which was contrary to the Popes law.

{Ann. 1533} Now to proceed forth in our matter; After that the Biſhops and Heads of the Clergy had thus a long time taken their pleaſure, exerciſing their cruel authority againſt the poor waſted flock of the Lord, and began furthermore to ſtretch forth their rigour and auſterity, to attach and moleſt alſo other great perſons of the Temporalty; ſo it fell, that in the beginning of the next or ſecond year following, which was Anno 1534. a Parliament was called by the King about the fifteenth day of January. In the which Parliament the Commons renewing their old griefs, complained of the cruelty of the Prelates and Ordinaries, for calling men before them Ex Officio. For ſuch was then the uſage of the Ordinaries and their Officials, that they would ſend for men, and lay accuſations to them of Hereſie, only declaring to them that they were accuſed; and would miniſter Articles to them, but no accuſer ſhould be brought forth. Whereby the Commons were grievouſly annoyed and oppreſſed; for the party ſo aſcited muſt either abjure or do worſe; for purgation he might none make.

Complaint of the Commons againſt the Clergy. Ex Ed. Hall. A Parliament. Anno 1534.

Cruelty of the Clergy againſt the temporalty.

As theſe matters were long debating in the Common-Houſe, at laſt it was agreed, That the temporal men ſhould put their griefs in writing, and deliver them to the King. Whereupon the eighteenth day of March, the Common Speaker, accompanied with certain Knights and Burgeſſes of the Common-Houſe, came to the Kings preſence, and there declared how the temporal men of his Realm were ſore agrieved with the cruel demeanor of the Prelates and Ordinaries, which touched their bodies and goods ſo near, that they of neceſſity were enforced to make their humble ſuit by their Speaker, unto his Grace, to take ſuch order and redreſs in the caſe, as to his high wiſdom might ſeem moſt convenient, &c.

Unto this requeſt of the Commons, although the King at that time gave no preſent grant, but ſuſpended them with a delay; yet notwithſtanding, this ſufficiently declared the grudging minds of the Temporal men againſt the Spiritualty, lacking nothing but Gods helping hand to work in the Kings heart for Reformation of ſuch things which all they did ſee to be out of frame. Neither did the Lords Divine Providence fail in time of need, but eftſoons miniſtred a ready remedy in time expedient. He ſaw the pride and cruelty of the ſpiritual Clergy grown to ſuch an heighth as was intolerable. He ſaw again and heard the groaning hearts, the bitter afflictions of his oppreſſed flock, his truth decayed, his Religion prophaned, the glory of his Son defaced, his Church lamentably waſted. Wherefore it was high time for his high Majeſty to look upon the matter (as he did indeed) by a ſtrange and wondrous means, which was through the Kings Divorcement from Lady Katharine Dowager, and marrying with Lady Ann Bullen, in this preſent year: Which was the firſt occaſion and beginning of all this publick Reformation, which hath followed ſince in this Church of England to this preſent day, according as ye ſhall hear.

Gods helping hand in time of need.

Queen Ann married, and Lady Katharine divorced.

The Marriage between King Henry and Queen Ann Bullen; and Queen Katharine Divorced.

IN the firſt entry of the Kings Reign, ye heard before, how after the death of Prince Arthur, the Lady Katharine, Princeſs Dowager, and Wife to Prince Arthur, by the conſent both of her Father and his, and alſo by the advice of the Nobles of this Realm, to the end her Dowry might remain ſtill within the Realm, was eſpouſed after the deceaſe of her Husband, to his next Brother, which was this King Henry.

K. Henry married his Brothers Wife.

This Marriage ſeemed very ſtrange and hard, for one Brother to marry the Wife of another. But what can be in this earth ſo hard or difficult, wherewith the Pope, the omnipotent Vicar of Chriſt, cannot by favour diſpence, if it pleaſe him? The Pope which then ruled at Rome, was Pope Julius the ſecond, by whoſe diſpenſation this Marriage, which neither ſenſe of nature would admit, nor Gods Law would bear, was concluded, approved and ratified, and ſo continued as lawful, without any doubt or ſcruple, the ſpace near of twenty years, till about the time that a certain doubt began firſt to be moved by the Spaniards themſelves of the Emperors Council, Anno 1523. At what time Charles the Emperor being here in England, promiſed to marry the Lady Mary, Daughter to the King of England. With the which promiſe, the Spaniards themſelves were not well contented, objecting this among many other cauſes, that the ſaid Lady Mary was begotten of the King of England by his Brothers Wife.

{KING H 8 The P. diſpenſed for the Brother to marry his Brothers Wife.

The Spaniards firſt doubted of the Kings Marriage.

Whereupon the Emperor, forſaking that Marriage, did couple himſelf with Lady Iſabel, Daughter to King Emanuel of Portugal. Which Marriage was done in the year of our Lord 1526. After this Marriage of the Emperor, the next year following, King Henry, being diſappointed thus of the Emperor, entred talk, or rather was laboured to by the French Embaſſadors, for the ſaid Lady Mary to be married to the French Kings Son, Duke of Orleance. Upon the talk whereof, after long debating, at length the matter was put off by a certain doubt of the Preſident of Paris, caſting the like objection as the Spaniards had done before, that was, whether the Marriage between the King and the Mother of this Lady Mary, which had been his Brothers Wife before, were good or no. And ſo the Marriage, twice unluckily attempted, in like ſort brake off again, and was rejected; which happened in the year of our Lord 1527.

The ſecond doubt, whether the Lady Mary was rightly born.

The King, upon the occaſion hereof caſting many things in his mind, began to conſider the cauſe more deeply, firſt, with himſelf, after, with certain of his neareſt Council; wherein two things there were which chiefly pricked his mind, whereof the one touched his Conſcience, the other concerned the ſtate of his Realm. For if that Marriage with his Brothers Wife ſtood unlawful by the law of God, then neither was his Conſcience clear in retaining the Mother, nor yet the ſtate of the Realm firm by ſucceſſion of the Daughter. It happened the ſame time that the Cardinal, which was then neareſt about the King, had fallen out with the Emperor, for not helping him to the Papacy, as ye before heard; for the which cauſe he helped to ſet the matter forward by all practice he might. Thus the King perplexed in his Conſcience, and careful for the Commonwealth, and partly alſo incited by the Cardinal, could not ſo reſt, but enquired further to feel what the Word of God and learning would ſay unto it. Neither was the caſe ſo hard, after it began once to come in publick queſtion, but that by the Word of God, and the judgments of the beſt learned Clerks, and alſo by the cenſure of the chief Univerſities of all Chriſtendom, to the number of ten and more, it was ſoon diſcuſſed to be unlawful.

Two perplexities in the Kings mind.

Cardinal Wolſey a helper of the Kings Divorce.

The judgments of 10 or 12 Univerſities againſt the Kings Marriage, Orleance, Paris, Tolouſe, Angiou, Bonony, Padua. The faculty of Paris. Bytures. Oxford. Cambridge.

All theſe Cenſures, Books and Writings of ſo many Doctors, Clerks and Univerſities, ſent from all Quarters of Chriſtendom to the King, albeit they might ſuffice to have full reſolved, and did indeed reſolve the Kings Conſcience touching this ſcruple of his Marriage; yet would he not ſtraightway uſe that advantage which learning did give him, unleſs he had withal the aſſent as well of the Pope, as alſo the Emperor; wherein he perceived no little difficulty. For the Pope, he thought, ſeeing the Marriage was authorized before by the Diſpenſation of his Predeceſſor, would hardly turn his Keys about to undo that which the Pope before him had locked; and much leſs would he ſuffer thoſe Keys to be foyled, or to come in any doubt, which was like to come, if that Marriage were proved undiſpenſable by Gods Word, which his predeceſſor through his plenary power had licenſed before. Again, the Emperor he thought would be no leſs hard for his part, on the other ſide, foraſmuch as the ſaid Lady Katharine was the Emperors near Aunt, and a Spaniard born. Yet nevertheleſs, his purpoſe was to prove and feel what they both would ſay unto it, and therefore ſent Stephen Gardiner to Rome to weigh with Pope Clement. To the Emperor was ſent Sir Nicholas Harvey Knight, Embaſſador in the Court of Gaunt. Firſt, Pope Clement, not weighing belike the full importance and ſequel of the matter, ſent Cardinal Campeius (as is ſaid) into England, joyned with the Cardinal of York.

At the coming of which Legates, the King, firſt opening unto them the grief of his Conſcience, ſeemed with great reaſons and perſwaſions ſufficiently to have drawn the good will of thoſe two Legates to his ſide. Who alſo of their own accord pretended no leſs but to ſhew a willing inclination to further the Kings cauſe. But yet the mouths of the common people, and in eſpecial of women, and ſuch other as favoured the Queen, and talked their pleaſures, were not ſtopped. Wherefore to ſatisfie the blind ſurmiſes, and fooliſh communication of theſe alſo, who, ſeeing the coming of the Cardinals, caſt out ſuch lewd words, That the King would for his own pleaſure have another Wife, with like unbeſeeming talk; he therefore, willing that all men ſhould know the truth of his proceedings, cauſed all his Nobility, Judges and Counſellors, with divers other perſons, to reſort to his Palace of Bridewel, the 8th day of November, Anno 1529, where he openly ſpeaking in his great Chamber, had theſe words in effect, as followeth.

The Kings Oration to his Subjects.

OUR truſty and welbeloved Subjects, both you of the Nobility, and you of the meaner ſort, it is not unknown unto you, how that We both by Gods proviſion, and true and lawful inheritance, have reigned over this Realm of England almoſt the term of twenty years. During which time, We have ſo ordered Us (thanked be God) that no outward enemy hath oppreſſed you, nor taken any thing from us, nor have We invaded any Realm, but We have had victory and honour, ſo that We think that you nor none of your predeceſſors ever lived more quietly, more wealthily, nor in more eſtimation under any of Our noble Progenitors. But when We remember Our mortality, and that We muſt die, then We think that all Our doings in Our life time are clearly defaced, and worthy of no memory, if We leave you in trouble at the time of Our death; for if Our true Heir be not known at the time of Our death, ſee what miſchief and trouble ſhall ſucceed to you and to your Children. The experience thereof ſome of you have ſeen after the death of Our noble Grandfather, King Edward the fourth, and ſome have heard what miſchief and manſlaughter continued in this Realm between the houſes of York and Lancaſter, by the which diſſention this Realm was like to have been clearly deſtroyed.

And although it hath pleaſed Almighty God to ſend Us a fair Daughter of a noble Woman, and of Me begotten, to Our great comfort and joy, yet it hath been told Us by divers great Clerks, that neither ſhe is Our lawful Daughter, nor her Mother Our lawful Wife, but that we live together abominably and deteſtably in open adultery; inſomuch that when our Emſſador was laſt in France and motion was made that the Duke of Orleance ſhould marry Our ſaid Daughter, one of the chief Counſellers to the French King, ſaid, It were well done, to know whether ſhe be the King of England's lawful Daughter or not; for well known it is, that he begot her on his Brothers Wife, which is directly againſt Gods Law and his Precepts. Think you, my Lords, that theſe words touch not My Body and Soul? Think you that theſe things do not daily and hourly trouble my Conſcience, and vex my Spirits? Yes, We doubt not but if it were your cauſe, every man would ſeek remedy, when the peril of your ſoul, and the loſs of your inheritance is openly laid unto you. For this only cauſe I proteſt before God, and in the word of a Prince, I have asked counſel of the greateſt Clerks in Chriſtendom, and for this cauſe I have ſent for this Legate, as a man indifferent, only to know the truth, and ſo to ſettle my Conſcience, and for none other cauſe, as God can judge. And as touching the Queen, if it be adjudged by the Law of God that ſhe is my lawful Wife, there was never thing more pleaſant nor more acceptable to me in My life, both for the diſcharge and clearing of my Conſcience, and alſo for the good qualities and conditions the which I know to be in her. For I aſſure you all, that beſide her noble Parentage of the which ſhe is deſcended (as you well know) ſhe is a Woman of moſt gentleneſs, of moſt humility and buxomneſs, yea, and of all good qualities appertaining to Nobility, ſhe is without compariſon, as I theſe twenty years almoſt have had the true experiment; ſo that if I were to marry again, if the Marriage might be good, I would ſurely chuſe her above all other Women. But if it be determined by judgment, that Our Marriage was againſt Gods Law, and clearly void, then ſhall I not only ſorrow the departing from ſo good a Lady and loving companion, but much more lament and bewail my infortunate chance, that I have ſo long lived in Adultery to Gods great diſpleaſure, and have no true Heir of My body to inherit this Realm. Theſe be the ſores that vex my mind, theſe be the pangs that trouble my Conſcience, and for theſe griefs I ſeek remedy. Therefore I require you all, as our truſt and confidence is in you, to declare to Our Subjects Our mind and intent, according to Our true meaning, and deſire them to pray with Us, that the very truth may be known, for the diſcharge of Our Conſcience, and ſaving of Our Soul, and for the declaration hereof I have aſſembled you together, and now you may depart.

The Legate talk with the Queen.

Shortly after this Oration of the King, wherewith he ſtirred the hearts of a number, then the two Legates, being requeſted of the King, for diſcharge of his Conſcience, to judge and determine upon the cauſe, went to the Queen lying then in the place of Bridewel, and declared to her, how they were deputed Judges indifferent, between the King and her, to hear and determine, whether the Marriage between them ſtood with Gods Law or not. When ſhe underſtood the cauſe of their coming, being thereat ſomething aſtonied at the firſt, after a little pauſing with her ſelf, thus ſhe began, anſwering for her ſelf.

Ex E. Halle.

Q. Katharines anſwer to the Cardinals.

'Alas, my Lords, ſaid ſhe, is it now a queſtion whether I be the Kings lawful Wife or no, when I have been married to him almoſt twenty years, and in the mean ſeaſon never queſtion was made before? Divers Prelates yet being alive, and Lords alſo, and Privy Counſellors with the King at that time, then adjudged our Marriage lawful and honeſt, and now to ſay it is deteſtable and abominable, I think it great marvel; and in eſpecial when I conſider what a wiſe Prince the Kings Father was, and alſo the love and natural affection that King Ferdinando my Father bare unto me, I think in my ſelf, that neither of Our Fathers were ſo uncircumſpect, ſo unwiſe, and of ſo ſmall imagination, but they foreſaw what might follow of Our Marriage; and in eſpecial the King my Father ſent to the Court of Rome, and there after long ſuit, with great coſt and charge, obtained a Licence and Diſpenſation, that I being the one Brothers Wife, and peradventure carnally known, might without ſcruple of Conſcience, marry with the other Brother lawfully, which Licence under Lead I have yet to ſhew; which things make me to ſay, and ſurely believe, that our Marriage was both lawful, good and godly. But of this trouble I may only thank you my Lord Cardinal of York. For becauſe I have wondred at your high pride and vain glory, and abhorred your voluptuous life and abominable Lechery, and little reguarded your preſumptuous power and tyranny, therefore of malice you have kindled this fire, and ſet this matter abroach, and in eſpecial for the great malice that you bear to my Nephew the Emperor, whom I perfectly know you hate worſe than a Scorpion, becauſe he would not ſatisfie your ambition, and make you Pope by force; and therefore you have ſaid more than once, that you would trouble him and his friends, and you have kept him true promiſe; for all his wars and vexations he may thank you only. And as for me his poor Aunt and Kinſwoman, what trouble you have put me to by this new found doubt, God knoweth, to whom I commit my cauſe according to the truth.

The Cardinal cauſe of this Divorce and why?

The Cardinal of York excuſed himſelf, ſaying, that he was not the beginner nor the mover of the doubt, and and that it was ſore againſt his will that ever the Marriage ſhould come in queſtion, but he ſaid that by his ſuperior the Biſhop of Rome he was deputed as a Judge to hear the cauſe: which he ſware on his profeſſion to hear indifferently. But whatſoever was ſaid, ſhe believed him not; and ſo the Legates took their leave of her and departed.

Theſe words were ſpoken in French, and written by Cardinal Campeius Secretary, which was preſent; and afterward by Edward Hall tranſlated into Engliſh.

The vain pomp of the Romiſh Legates.

In the next year enſuing 1530, at the Black-Friers of London was prepared a ſolemn place for the two Legates: who coming with their Croſſes, Pillars, Axes, and all other Romiſh Ceremonies accordingly, were ſet in two Chairs covered with cloth of Gold, and Cuſhions of the ſame. When all things were ready, then the King and the Queen were aſcited by Dr. Sampſon to appear before the ſaid Legates the twenty eighth day of May; where (the Commiſſion of the Cardinals firſt being read, wherein it was appointed by the Court of Rome, That they ſhould be the hearers and judges in the cauſe between them both) the King was called by name; who appeared by two Proctors: Then the Queen was called, who being accompanied with four Biſhops, and other of her Council, and a great company of Ladies, came perſonally her ſelf before the Legates: who there after her obeiſance, with a ſad gravity of countenance, having not many words with them, appealed from the Legates, as Judges not competent, to the Court of Rome, and ſo departed. Notwithſtanding this Appeal, the Cardinals ſat weekly, and every day arguments on both ſides were brought, but nothing definitively was determined.

The King and Queen aſcited before the Legates.

Theſe four Biſhops were [illegible] of Canterbury, Weſt of Elie, Fiſher of Rocheſter, Standiſh of St. Aſaph.

The Queen appealeth from the Cardinals to the Pope

As the time paſſed on, in the month of June, the King being deſirous to ſee an end, came to the Court, and the Queen alſo, where he ſtanding under his cloth of eſtate, uttered theſe or like words in effect as followeth.

The Kings Oration to the Legates.

MY Lords, Legates of the See Apoſtolick, which be deputed Judges in this great and weighty matter, I moſt heartily beſeech you to ponder my mind and intent, which only is to have a final end for the diſcharge of my conſcience. For every good Chriſtian man knoweth, what pain and what unquietneſs he ſuffereth which hath his conſcience grieved. For I aſſure you on my honour, that this matter hath ſo vexed my mind, and troubled my ſpirits, that I can ſcantly ſtudy any thing which ſhould be profitable for my Realm and people: and to have a quietneß in body and ſoul is my deſire and requeſt, and not for any grudg that I bear to her that I have married; for I dare ſay, That for her womanhood, wiſdom, Nobility, and gentleneß, never Prince had ſuch another: and therefore if I would willingly change I were not wiſe. Wherefore my ſuit is to you my Lords at this time, to have a ſpeedy end, according to right, for the quietneſs of my mind and conſcience only, and for no other cauſe, as God knoweth.

The Queen abideth by her Appeal.

When the King had ſaid, the Queen departed without any thing ſaying. Then ſhe was called to know whether ſhe would abide by her Appeal, or anſwer there before the Legates. Her Proctor anſwered, That ſhe would abide by her Appeal. That notwithſtanding, the Counſellors on both ſides, every day almoſt met, and debated this matter ſubſtantially, ſo that at the laſt the Divines were all of opinion, that the Marriage was againſt the Law of God, if ſhe were carnally known by the firſt Brother. Which thing ſhe clearly denied. But to that was anſwered, That Prince Arthur her Husband confeſſed the act done, by certain words ſpoken; which being recorded in other Chronicles, I had rather ſhould there be read, than by me here uttered. Furthermore, at the time of the death of Prince Arthur, ſhe thought and judged that ſhe was with child, and for that cauſe the King was deferred from the Title and Creation of the Prince of Wales almoſt half a year: which thing could not have been judged, if ſhe had not been carnally known.

Alſo ſhe her ſelf cauſed a Bull to be purchaſed, in the which were theſe words: Vel forſan cognitam, which is as much to ſay as, peradventure carnally known. Which words were not in the firſt Bull granted by July at her ſecond Marriage to the King. Which ſecond Bull with that clauſe was only purchaſed, to diſpenſe with the ſecond Matrimony, although there were carnal copulation before: which Bull needed not to have been purchaſed, if there had been no carnal copulation, for then the firſt Bull had been ſufficient. { KING Hen. 8.

Moreover, for the more clear evidence of this matter, that Prince Arthur had carnal knowledg of the ſaid Lady Katharine his wife, it appeareth in a certain Book of Records which we have to ſhew touching this Marriage: That the ſame time when Prince Arthur was firſt married with this Lady Katharine, Daughter to King Ferdinando, certain Embaſſadors of Ferdinando his Council were then ſent hither into England for the ſaid purpoſe, to ſee and teſtifie concerning the full conſummation of the ſaid Matrimonial conjunction. Which Counſellors here reſident, being ſolemnly ſworn, not only did affirm to both their Parents, that the Matrimony was conſummate by that act, but alſo did ſend over into Spain to her Father ſuch demonſtrations of their mutual conjunction, as here I will not name, ſparing the reverence of chaſt ears. Which demonſtrations otherwiſe, in thoſe Records being named and teſtified; do ſufficiently put the matter out of all doubt and queſtion.

Q. Katharine carnally known by the Kings Brother.

Beſides that, in the ſame Records appeareth that both he and ſhe not only were of ſuch years as were meet and able to explete the conſummation hereof, but alſo they were and did lye together both here and in Wales by the ſpace of three quarters of a year.

Out of a written Book of Records, containing certain Conferences between the Cardinal and Queen Katharines Anſwer about this matter, remaining in our cuſtody to be ſeen.

Thus when the Divines on her ſide were beaten from the ground, then they fell to perſwaſions of natural reaſons, how this ſhould not be undone for three cauſes. One was, becauſe if it ſhould be broken, the only child of the King ſhould be a Baſtard, which were a great miſchief to the Realm. Secondly, the ſeparation ſhould be cauſe of great unkindneſs between her kindred and this Realm. And the third cauſe was, That the continuance of ſo long ſpace had made the Marriage honeſt. Theſe perſwaſions, with many other, were ſet forth by the Queens Council, and in eſpecial by the Biſhop of Rocheſter, which ſtood ſtiff in her cauſe. But yet Gods precept was not anſwered; wherefore they left that ground, and fell to pleading, That the Court of Rome had diſpenſed with this Marriage. To this ſome Lawyers ſaid, That no earthly perſon is able to diſpenſe with the poſitive Law of God.

Three reaſons for Q. Katharine.

Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter a great doer for Queen Katharine.

When the Legates heard the opinions of the Divines, and ſaw whereunto the end of this queſtion would tend, foraſmuch as men began ſo to diſpute of the authority of the Court of Rome, and eſpecially becauſe the Cardinal of York perceived the King to caſt favour to the Lady Anne, whom he knew to be a Lutheran, they thought beſt to wind themſelves out of that brake betime; and ſo Cardinal Campeius, diſſembling the matter, conveyed himſelf home to Rome again, as is partly above touched. The King ſeeing himſelf thus to be deferred and deluded by the Cardinals, took it to no little grief; whereupon the fall of the Cardinal of York followed not long after.

The ſearching of the Kings Matriage brought more thing to light.

Cardinal Campeius ſlippeth from the King.

This was in the year of our Lord 1530. Shortly after it happened the ſame year, that the King by his Embaſſadors was advertiſed, that the Emperor and the Pope were both together at Bonony. Wherefore he directed Sir Thomas Bullein late created Earl of Wiltſhire, and Doctor Stokeſley (afterward Biſhop of London) and Doctor Lee (afterward Biſhop of York) with his meſſage to the Popes Court, where alſo the Emperor was. Pope Clement underſtanding the Kings caſe and requeſt, and fearing what might follow after, if Learning and Scripture here ſhould take place againſt the authority of their Diſpenſations, and moreover doubting the Emperors diſpleaſure, bare himſelf ſtrange off from the matter, anſwering the Embaſſadors with this delay, that he preſently would not define in the caſe, but would hear the full matter diſputed, when he came to Rome, and according to right he would do juſtice.

The King ſendeth to the Empero and the Pope.

The Popes anſwer to the King.

KING Hen.8.

Although the King owed no such service to the Pope, to stand to his arbitrement either in this case, or in any other, having both the Scripture to lead him, and his Law in his own hands to warrant him, yet for quietness sake, and for that he would not rashly break order (which rather was a disorder indeed) he bare so long as conveniently he might. At length after long delays and much dissembling, when he saw no hope of redress, he began somewhat to quicken and to look about him, what was best both for his own conscience, and the establishment of his Realm to do.

The King gave more to the Pope than he needed.

Gods Providence working marvellously in this matter.

No man here doubteth, but that all this was wrought not by mans device, but by the secret purpose of the Lord himself, to bring to pass further things, as afterward followed, which his Divine Providence was disposed to work. For else as touching the Kings intent and purpose, he never meant nor minded any such thing as to seek the ruin of the Pope, but rather sought all means contrary, how both to establish the See of Rome, and also to obtain the good will of the same See and Court of Rome, if it might have been gotten. And therefore intending to sue his divorce from Rome, at the first beginning: his device was by Stephen Gardiner his Embassador at Rome to exalt the Cardinal of York, as is before shewed, to be made Pope and Universal Bishop, to the end that he ruling that Apostolick See, the matter of his unlawful Marriage, which so troubled his conscience, might come to a quiet conclusion, without any further rumor of the world. Which purpose of his, if it had taken effect as he had devised it, and the English Cardinal had once been made Pope, no doubt but the authority of that See had never been exterminate out of England. But God being more merciful unto us, took a better way than so. For both without, and contrary to the Kings expectation, he so brought to pass, that neither the Cardinal of York was Pope (which should have been an infinite cost to the King) and yet nevertheless the King sped of his purpose too, and that much better than he looked for. For he was rid by lawful divorcement, not only from that unlawful Marriage which clogged his conscience, but also from the miserable yoke of the Popes usurped dominion which clogged the whole realm, & all at one time.

Man purposeth, but God disposeth.

Thus Gods holy Providence ruling the matter, as I said, when the King could get no favourable grant of the Pope touching his cause, being so good and honest, he was enforced to take the redress of his right into his own hands, and seeing this Gordian knot would not be loosed at Rome, he was driven against his will, as God would, to play the Noble Alexander himself, and with the sword of his Princely authority knapt the knot at one stroke clean asunder, loosing as it were with one solution, infinite questions. For where the Doctors and Canonists had long disputed, and yet could never thoroughly discuss the largeness and fulness of the Popes two Swords both Temporal and Spiritual, the King with one sword did so cut off both his Swords, that he dispatched them both clean out of England, as ye shall see more anon. But first the King like a prudent Prince, before he would come to the head of the sore, thought best to pare away such rank flesh and putrified places as were about it, and therefore following his own Proverb, like as one, going about to cast down an old rotten wall, will not begin with the foundation first, but with the stones that lye in the top, so he, to prepare his way better unto the Pope, first began with the Cardinal, casting him by the Law of Premunire, out of his Goods and Possessions, and so at length by poysoning himself he procured his own death; which was in the year 1530. This done, shortly after about the year 1532, the King to provide betimes against mischiefs that might come from Rome, gave forth eftsoons this Proclamation, as followeth.

Gordium was a City in Asia where there was a knot so fast tied, and folded so many ways, that (as the saying was) whosoever could loose it, should have all Asia. So Alexander coming to it, when he could not loose it with his hands, he cut it asunder with his sword.

The Kings Proverb. Look before

A restraint of the King that nothing should be purchased from Rome.

THE Kings Highness straitly chargeth and commandeth, that no manner of person, what estate, degree, or condition soever he or they be of, do purchase or attempt to purchase from the Court of Rome, or elsewhere, nor use and put in execution, divulge or publish any thing heretofore, within this year passed, purchased, or to be purchased hereafter, containing matter prejudicial to the high authority, jurisdiction, and Prerogative Royal of this his said Realm, or to the let, hinderance, or impeachment of his Graces noble and vertuous, intended purposes in the Premises, upon pain of incurring his Highness indignation, and imprisonment and further punishment of their bodies for their so doing, at his Graces pleasure, to the dreadful example of all other.

Ex Ed. Hall. The whole Clergy of England in the Premunire.

After this was done, the King then proceeding further, caused the rest of the Spiritual Lords to be called by process into the Kings-Bench to make their appearance, forsomuch as the whole Clergy of England, in supporting and maintaining the power Legantine of the Cardinal, by the reason thereof were all intangled likewise in the Premunire, and therefore were called into the Kings-Bench to answer. But before the day of their appearance, the Prelates together in their Convocation concluded among themselves an humble submission in writing, and offered the King for a Subsidy or contribution, that he would be their good Lord, and release them of the Premunire by Act of Parliament, first to be gathered in the Province of Canterbury an hundred thousand pounds. And in the Province of York, eighteen thousand eight hundred forty pound and ten pence. The which offer with much labour was accepted, and their pardon promised. In this submission the Clergy called the King suprem Head of the Church of England, which thing they never confessed before: Whereupon many things followed, as after (God willing) ye shall hear.

But first, forsomuch as we are in hand now with the matter, we will borrow by the way, a few words of the Reader, to speak of this Clergy-money, of 118840 pounds, and ten pence, to be levied to the King, as is above touched. For the levying of which sum an order was taken among the Prelates, that every Bishop in his Dioces should call before him all the Priests, Parsons and Vicars, among whom Dr. Stokesley Bishop of London, a man then counted to be of some wit and learning, but of little discretion and humanity (which caused him to be out of the favour of the common people) called before him all the Priests within the City of London, whether they were Curates or Stipendaries, the first day of September being Friday, in the Chapter-house of Saint Paul. At which day the Priests appeared, and the Bishops policy was to have only six or eight Priests together, and by perswasions to have caused them to grant some portion toward the payment of the foresaid hundred thousand pound. But the number of the Priests was so great (for they were six hundred at the least, and with them came many temporal men to hear the matter) that the Bishop was disappointed of his purpose. For when the Bishops Officers called in certain Priests by name into the Chapter-house; with that a great number entred, for they put the Bishops Officers that kept the door aside.

The Bishops policy with the Priests, for payment of the Kings money.

After this, the Officers got the door shut again. Then the Priests without said, We will not be kept without, and our fellows be within: we know not what the Bishop will do with them. The temporal men being present comforted and encouraged the Priests to enter, so that by force they opened the door, and one struck the Bishops Officer over the face, and entred the Chapter-house, and many temporal men with them, and long it was ere any silence could be made. At last when they were appeased, the Bishop stood up and said, Brethren I marvel not a little why you be so heady, and know not what shall be said to you, therefore I pray you to keep silence, and to hear me patiently.

The Bishops perswasion to the Priests to help them to pay their forfeit.

My friends all, you know well that we be men frail of condition, and no Angels, and by frailty and lack of wisdom we have misdemeaned our selves toward the King our Soveraign Lord and his Laws, so that all we of the Clergy were in the Premunire; by reason whereof, all our promotions, lands, goods, and cattels, were to him forfeit, and our bodies ready to be imprisoned; yet his Grace, moved with pity and compassion, demanded of us what we could say, why he should not extend his Laws upon us. Then the Fathers of the Clergy humbly besought his Grace of mercy. To whom he answered, That he was ever inclined to mercy. Then for all our great offences we had little penance: for where he might by the rigor of his Law have taken all our livelode, goods, and cattels, he was contented with one hundred thousand pounds, to be paid in five years. And although that this sum be more than we may easily bear, yet by the rigor of his Laws we should have born the whole burden. Wherefore my Brethren, I charitably exhort you to bear your parts of your livelode and salary, toward the payment of this sum granted.

The Prieſts anſwer to the Biſhop.

Then it was ſhortly ſaid to the Biſhop, My Lord, twenty Nobles a year is but bare living for a Prieſt; for now victual and every thing is ſo dear, that poverty in a manner enforceth us to ſay nay. Beſide that, my Lord we never offended in the Premunire: for we medled never with the Cardinals faculties: let the Biſhops and Abbots which have offended pay.

Then the Biſhops Officers gave to the Prieſts high words, which cauſed them to be the more obſtinate. Alſo divers temporal men which were preſent comforted the Prieſts, and bad them agree to no payment. In this rumor divers of the Biſhops ſervants were buffeted and ſtricken, ſo that the Biſhop began to be afraid, and with fair words appeaſed the noiſe, and for all things which were done or ſaid there he pardoned them, and gave to them his Bleſſing, and pray'd them to depart in charity. Then they departed, thinking to hear no more of the matter, but they were deceived: for the Biſhop went to Sir Th. More, then being Lord Chancellor (which greatly favoured the Biſhop and the Clergy) and to him made a grievous complaint, and declared the fact very grievouſly. Whereupon commandment was ſent to Sir Thomas Pargitor; Mayor of the City, to attach certain Prieſts and temporal men: and ſo fifteen Prieſts, and five temporal men were arreſted; of the which ſome were ſent to the Tower, ſome to the Fleet, and other Priſons, where they remained long after.

Preaching againſt the Kings firſt Marriage.

This being done in the year of our Lord 1532, it followeth moreover the ſame year, that divers Preachings were in the Realm, one contrary to another, concerning the Kings Marriage: and in eſpecial one Thomas Abel Clerk, which was the Queens Chaplain, to pleaſe her withal, both preached and alſo wrote a Book in defence of the ſaid Marriage; whereby divers ſimple men were perſwaded. Wherefore the King cauſed to be compiled and reduced into a Book the determination of the Univerſities, with the judgments of great Clerks: which Book being printed and ſet abroad did again ſatisfie all indifferent and reaſonable perſons, which were not too much wedded to their wills.

Mention was made a little before, of a Parliament begun the 15*th* day of January, Anno 1533, in the which Parliament the Commons had put up a ſupplication, complaining of the ſtrait dealing of the Clergy in their proceeding Ex Officio. This complaint although at the firſt it ſeemed not to be greatly tendered of the King, yet in Prorogation of the Parliament the time ſo wrought withal, that the King having more clear underſtanding of the abuſes and enormities of the Clergy, and in eſpecial of the corrupt authority of the See of Rome, provided certain Acts againſt the ſame. Firſt, as concerning the Laws, Decrees, Ordinances and Conſtitutions made and eſtabliſhed by the pretenſed authority of the Biſhops of Rome, to the advancement of their worldly glory, that who ſo did or ſpake any thing either againſt their uſurped power, or againſt the ſaid Laws, Decrees, or Conſtitutions of theirs, not approved nor grounded upon Holy Scripture, or elſe being repugnant to the Kings Prerogative Royal, ſhould therefore ſtand in no danger, nor be impeachable of Hereſie. And likewiſe touching ſuch Conſtitutions, Ordinances, and Canons Provincial or Synodal, which were made in this Realm in the Convocation of Biſhops being either prejudicial to the Kings Prerogative, or not ratified before by the Kings aſſent, or being otherwiſe onerous to the King and his ſubjects, or in any wiſe repugnant to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, they were committed to the judgment of two and thirty perſons choſen by the King out of the higher and lower Houſe, to be determined either to ſtand in ſtrength, or to be abrogate at their diſcretions: and further, that all the Clergy of this Realm ſubmitting themſelves to the King, ſhould and did promiſe in verbo Sacerdotii, never hereafter to preſume to aſſemble in their Convocations without the Kings writ, or to Enact or execute ſuch Conſtitutions without his Royal aſſent, &c. *Ex Stat. Decrees and Conſtitutions Provincial of this Realm, committed to Examination.

No man to appeal to Rome. Bonner in his Prologue before De vera obedientia, ſaith, that this ravenous prey of the Pope cometh to as much almoſt as the Kings revenues.

Further, in the ſame Parliament was Enacted and Decreed, that in cauſes and matters happening in contention no perſon ſhould appeal, provoke, or ſue out of the Kings Dominions to the Court of Rome, under pain of proviſors, proviſion, or Premunire.

Item, In the ſame Parliament was defined and concluded, that all exportation of Annates and firſt-fruits of Archbiſhopricks and Biſhopricks out of this Realm to the See of Rome for any Bulls, Breves or Palls, or expedition of any ſuch thing, ſhould utterly ceaſe.

Alſo for the inveſting of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, or other of any Eccleſiaſtical dignity, ſuch order in the ſaid Parliament was taken that the King ſhould ſend a Licenſe under the great Seal, with a Letter Miſſive to the Prior and Covent, or to the Dean and Chapter of thoſe Cathedral Churches where the See was vacant: by the vertue of which Licenſe or Letters Miſſive, they within twelve days ſhould chooſe the ſaid perſon nominated by the King, and none other, and that Election to ſtand effectual to all intents. Which Election being done, then the party elect making firſt his Oath and fealty to the King, if it were a Biſhop that was elect, then the King by his Letters Patents to ſignifie the ſaid Election to the Archbiſhop of that Province, and two other Biſhops, or elſe to four Biſhops within this Realm to be aſſigned to that office, without any other ſuing, procuring, or obtaining any Bulls, Breves, or other things from the See of Rome.

Separation betwveen the King and the Lady Katharine by Act of Parliament.

All these things thus being defined and determined in this foresaid Parliament, and also being in the same Parliament concluded, That no man of what estate, degree, or condition soever, hath any power to dispence with Gods Laws, it was therefore by the authority aforesaid, agreeing with the authority of Gods Word, assented, That the Marriage aforetime solemnized between the King and the Lady Katharine, being before wife to Prince Arthur the Kings Brother, and carnally known by him (as is above proved) should be absolutely deemed and adjudged to be unlawful and against the Law of God, and also reputed and taken to be of no value nor effect; and that the separation thereof by Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, should stand good and effectual to all intents: and also that the lawful Matrimony between the King and the Lady Anne his wife, should be established, approved and ratified for good and consonant to the Laws of Almighty God. And further also, for the establishing of this Kings lawful succession, it was fully by the said Parliament adjudged, That the inheritance of the Crown should remain to the heirs of their two bodies, that is, of the King and Queen Anne his wife.

The Marriage betwveen the King and Qu. Anne, approved by publick Parliament.

The heirs of K. Henry and Q. Anne ratified by Parliament.

During the time of this Parliament, before the Marriage of Queen Anne, there was one Temse in the Common-House, which moved the Commons to sue to the King to take the Queen again into his company; declaring certain great mischiefs like to ensue thereof, as in Bastardizing the Lady Mary the Kings only child, and divers other inconveniences. Which being reported to the Kings ears, he sent immediately to Sir Thomas Audley, Speaker then of the Parliament, expressing unto him amongst other matters, that he marvelled much why one of the Parliament did so openly speak of the absence of the Queen from him; which matter was not to be determined there, for it touched (said he) his soul, and wished the Matrimony were good, for then had he never been so vexed in conscience. But the Doctors of Universities (said he) have determined the Marriage to be void, and detestable before God; which grudg of conscience (he said) caused him to abstain from her company, and no foolish nor wanton appetite. For I am (said he) forty one years old, at which age the lust of man is not so quick as it is in youth. And saving in Spain and Portugal it hath not been seen, that one man hath married two Sisters, the one being carnally known before: but the Brother to marry the Brothers wife, was so abhorred amongst all Nations, that I never heard it, That any Christian man so did but my self. Wherefore you see my conscience troubled, and so I pray you report. And so the Speaker departing, declared to the Commons the Kings saying.

The Kings vvords to Sir T. Audley Speaker of the Parliament.

Not long after that, the King, belike perceiving the minds of the Clergy not much favouring his Cause, sent for the Speaker again, and twelve of the Common-house, having with him eight Lords, and said to them, Welbeloved Subjects, We had thought the Clergy of our Realm had been our Subjects wholly, but now we have well perceived that they be but half our Subjects, yea and scarce our Subjects. For all the Prelates at their Consecration make an Oath to the Pope, clean contrary to the Oath that they make unto us, so that they seem to be his Subjects, and not ours: and so the King, delivering to them the Copy of both the Oaths, required them to invent some order that he might not thus be deluded of his Spiritual subjects. The Speaker thus departed, and caused the Oaths to be read in the Common-house, the very tenor whereof here ensueth.

The Oath of the Clergy to the Pope.

The Oath vvhich the Clergy commonly gives to the Pope

I John Bishop or Abbot of A. from this hour forward shall be faithful and obedient to Saint Peter, and to the holy Church of Rome, and to my Lord the Pope, and his Successors Canonically entring. I shall not be of counsel nor consent, that they shall lose either life or member, or shall be taken or suffer any violence, or any wrong by any means. Their counsel to me credited by them, their Messengers or Letters I shall not willingly discover to any person. The Popedom of Rome, the rules of the Holy Fathers, and Regalities of Saint Peter, I shall help and retain, and defend against all men. The Legate of the See Apostolick going and coming, I shall honourably intreat. The rights, honours, priviledges, authorities of the Church of Rome, and of the Pope and his Successors, I shall cause to be conserved, defended, augmented, and promoted, I shall not be in counsel, treaty, or any act, in the which any thing shall be imagined against him or the Church of Rome, their rights, States, honours or powers: and if I know any such to be moved or compassed, I shall resist it to my power, and as soon as I can, I shall advertise him, or such as may give him knowledg. The rules of the holy Fathers, the decrees, ordinances, sentences, dispositions, reservations, provisions and commandments Apostolick, to my power I shall keep and cause to be kept of other. Hereticks, Schismaticks, and Rebels to our holy Father and his Successors, I shall resist and persecute to my power. I shall come to the Synod when I am called, except I be letted by a Canonical impediment. The lights of the Apostles I shall visit personally, or by my Deputy. I shall not alien or sell my possessions without the Popes Council. So God me help, and the holy Evangelists.

¶ This Oath of the Clergy-men, which they were wont to make to the Bishop of Rome (now Pope quondam) was abolished and made void by Statute, and a new Oath ministred and confirmed for the same, wherein they acknowledged the King to be the Supreme Head under Christ in this Church of England, as by tenour thereof may appear hereunder ensuing.

Pope Quondam.

The Oath of the Clergy to the King.

The Oath of the Clergy to the King.

I John B. of A. utterly renounce and clearly forsake all such clauses, words, sentences and grants which I have or shall have hereafter of the Popes Holiness, of and for the Bishoprick of A. that in any wise hath been, is, or hereafter may be hurtful or prejudicial to your Highness, your heirs, successors, dignity, priviledg or estate royal: and also I do swear that I shall be faithful and true, and faith and truth I shall bear to you my Sovereign Lord, and to your heirs Kings of the same, of life and limb, and earthly worship above all creatures, to live and die with you and yours against all people; and diligently I shall be attendant to all your needs and business, after my wit and power: and your counsel I shall keep and hold: knowledging my self to hold my Bishoprick of you only; beseeching you of restitution of the Temporalties of the same: promising (as before) that I shall be faithful, true, and obediently subject unto your said Highness, heirs, and successors during my life, and the services and other things due to your Highness, for the restitution of the Temporalties of same Bishoprick, I shall truly do, and obediently perform. So God me help and all Saints.

These Oaths thus being recited and opened to the people, were the occasion that the Pope lost all his interest and jurisdiction here in England within short while after. Upon the occasion and reason whereof, the matter falling out more and more against the Pope, Sir Thomas More, of whom mention is made before, being a great maintainer of the Pope, and a heavy troubler of Christs people; and now not liking well of this Oath, by Gods good work was enforced to resign up his Chancellorship, and to deliver up the Great Seal of England into the Kings hands. After whom succeeded Sir Thomas Audley, Keeper of the Great Seal, a man in eloquence and gifts of tongue no less incomparable, than also for his godly disposed mind, and favourable inclination to Christs Religion, worthy of much commendation.

Sir Thomas More.

Tho. Audley made Lord Chancellor.

These things being done in the Parliament, the King within short time after proceeded to the Marriage of the foresaid Lady Anne Bullen, Mother to our most noble Queen now, who without all controversie was a special comforter and aider of all the Professors of Christs Gospel, as well of the learned as the unlearned; her life being also directed according to the same, as her weekly alms did manifestly declare; who besides the ordinary of a hundred Crowns, and other apparel that she gave weekly, a year before ſhe was Crowned, both to men and women, gave alſo wonderful much privy alms to widows and other poor houſholders continually till ſhe was apprehended, and ſhe ever gave three or four pound at a time to the poor people, to buy them kine withal, and ſent her Subamner to the Towns about where ſhe lay, that the Pariſhioners ſhould make a Bill of all the poor houſholders in their Pariſh, and ſome Towns received ſeven, eight, or ten pound to buy kine withal, according as the number of the poor in the Towns were. She alſo maintained many learned men in Cambridge. Likewiſe did the Earl of Wiltſhire her Father, and the Lord Rochford her Brother, and by them theſe men were brought in favour with the King: of whom ſome are yet alive and can teſtifie the ſame; which would to God they were now as great profeſſors of the Goſpel of Chriſt, as then they appeared to be: which were Doctor Heath, and Doctor Thirlby; with whom was joyned the Lord Paget, who at that preſent was an earneſt Proteſtant, and gave unto one Raynold Weſt Luther's Books, and other Books of the Germans, as Franciſ. Lambert. de Sectis, and at that time he read Melanchthons Rhetorick openly in Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, and was with his Maſter Gardiner a maintainer of Doctor Barnes, and all the Proteſtants that were then in Cambridge, and holp many Religious perſons out of their Cowles.

Heath, Thirlby, L. Paget.

Lord Paget, a maintainer of Dr. Barnes.

It hath been reported unto us by divers credible perſons which were about this Queen, and daily acquainted with her doings, concerning her liberal and bountiful diſtribution to the poor, how her Grace carried ever about her a certain little purſe out of the which ſhe was wont daily to ſcatter abroad ſome alms to the needy, thinking no day well ſpent wherein ſome man had not fared the better by ſome benefit at her hands. And this I write by the relation of certain noble Perſonages which were the chief and principal of her waiting-Maids about her, ſpecially the Dutcheſs of Richmond by name.

Alſo concerning the order of her Ladies and Gentlewomen about her, one that was her Silkwoman, a Gentlewoman not now alive, but of great credit and alſo of fame for her worthy doings, did credibly report, that in all her time ſhe never ſaw better order among the Ladies and Gentlewomen of the Court, than was in this good Queens days, who kept her Maids and ſuch as were about her ſo occupied in ſowing and working of ſhirts and ſmocks for the poor, that neither was there ſeen any idleneſs then among them, nor any leiſure to follow ſuch paſtimes as daily are ſeen now adays to reign in Princes Courts.

The praiſe of Q. Anne. The name of this Gentlewoman was M. Wilkinſon. The good order of the Court in Q. Anns time.

Thus the King being divorced from the Lady Dowager his Brothers wife, married this gracious Lady, making a proſperous and happy change for us, being divorced from the foreſaid Princeſs, and alſo from the Pope, both at one time. Notwithſtanding, as good and godly purpoſes are never without ſome incommodity or trouble following, ſo it happened in this divorcement, that the ſaid Princeſs procuring from Rome the Popes Curſe, cauſed both the King and the Realm to be Interdicted: whereof more is hereafter to be ſpoken.

The King divorced from Lady Katharine, and from the Pope, both at one time.

In the mean time Queen Anne ſhortly after her Marriage being great with child, the next year following, which was 1533, after the firſt divorcement publickly proclaimed, was Crowned with high ſolemnity at Weſtminſter: and not long after her Coronation, the ſeventh day of September, ſhe was brought to Bed, and delivered of a fair Lady: for whoſe good deliverance Te Deum was ſung in all places, and great preparation made for the Chriſtening.

Anno 1533. Qu. Anne Crowned. Q. Elizabeth born.

The Mayor and his Brethren with forty of the chief Citizens were commanded to be preſent, with all the Nobles and Gentlemen. The Kings Palace, and all the walls between that and the Friers, was hanged with Arras, and the Friers Church. Alſo the Font was of Silver, and ſtood in the middeſt of the Church, three ſteps high, which was covered with a fine cloth, and divers Gentlemen, with Aprons and Towels about their necks, gave attendance about it. Over the Font hung a fair Canopy of Crimſon Satten fringed with Gold. About it was a Rail covered with Say. Between the Quire and the Body of the Church was a cloſe place with a pan of fire to make the child ready in. Theſe things thus ordered, the child was brought into the Hall, and then every man ſet forward. Firſt the Citizens, two and two; then the Gentlemen, Eſquires, and Chaplains. Next after followed the Aldermen, and the Mayor alone. Next the Mayor followed the Kings Council. Then the Kings Chappel. Then Barons, Biſhops, and Earls. Then came the Earl of Eſſex, bearing the covered Baſons gilt. After him the Marqueſs of Exceſter, with the Taper of Virgin-wax. Next him the Marqueſs of Dorſet, bearing the Salt. Behind him the Lady Mary of Norfolk, bearing the Chryſome, which was very rich of Pearl and Stone. The old Dutcheſs of Norfolk bear the child in a Mantle of purple Velvet, with a long Train furred with Ermin. The Duke of Norfolk with his Marſhal-Rod, went on the right hand of the ſaid Dutcheſs, and the Duke of Suffolk on the left hand. Before them went the Officers of Armes. The Counteſs of Kent bear the long Train of the Childs Mantle. Between the Counteſs and the child, went the Earl of Wiltſhire on the right hand, and the Earl of Darby on the left hand, ſupporting the ſaid Train. In the midſt over the Child, was borne a Canopy by the Lord Rochford, the Lord Huſſey, the Lord William Howard, and the Lord Thomas Howard the Elder. In this order they came unto the Church-door, where the Biſhop of London met it, with divers Abbots and Biſhops, and began the obſervances of the Sacrament. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury was Godfather, and the old Dutcheſs of Norfolk, and the old Marchioneſs of Dorſet, Widows, were Godmothers, and the Child was named Elizabeth.

KING Hen 8.

Cranmer Godfather to Queen Elizabeth.

After all things were done at the Church-door, the Child was brought to the Font and Chriſtened. This done, Garter, the chief King at Armes, cried aloud, God of his infinite goodneſs, ſend proſperous life and long, to the High and Mighty Princeſs of England, ELIZABETH. Then the Trumpets blew, and the Child was brought up to the Altar, and immediately confirmed by the Archbiſhop, the Marchioneſs of Exceſter being Godmother. Then the Archbiſhop of Canterbury gave the Princeſs a ſtanding Cup of Gold. The Dutcheſs of Norfolk gave her a ſtanding Cup of Gold, fretted with Pearl. The Marchioneſs of Dorſet, three gilt Bowls pounced, with a Cover. The Marchioneſs of Exceſter three ſtanding Bowls gilt and graven, with a Cover. And ſo after a ſolemn Banquet ended with Hypocras, Waters, and ſuch like in great plenty, they returned in like order again unto the Court with the Princeſs, and ſo departed.

At the Marriage of this Noble Lady, as there was no ſmall joy unto all good and godly men, and no leſs hope of proſperous ſucceſs to Gods true Religion; ſo in like manner, on the contrary part, the Papiſts wanted not their malicious and ſecret attempts, as by the falſe hypocriſie and feigned holineſs of a falſe feigned hypocrite, this year being eſpied and found out, may ſufficiently appear what their Deviliſh devices and purpoſes were. For certain Monks, Friers, and other evil diſpoſed perſons, of a Deviliſh intent, had put into the heads of many of the Kings ſubjects, That they had a revelation of God and his Saints, that he was highly diſpleaſed with King Henry for the Divorcement of the Lady Katharine: and ſurmiſed among other things, That God had revealed to a Nun, named Elizabeth Barton, whom they called the holy Maid of Kent, That in caſe the King proceeded in the ſaid Divorce, he ſhould not be King of this Realm one month after, and in the reputation of God not one day nor hour. This Elizabeth Barton by falſe diſſimulation practiſed and ſhewed to the people marvelous alteration of her viſage, and other parts of her body, as if ſhe had been wrapt or in a trance, and in thoſe feigned trances, by falſe hypocriſie (as though ſhe had been inſpired of God) ſhe ſpake many words in rebuking of ſin, and reproving the Goſpel, which ſhe called Hereſie; and among them uttered divers things to the great reproach of the King and Queen, and to the eſtabliſhing of Idolatry, Pilgrimage, and the derogation of Gods glory. Which her naughtineſs being eſpied out by the great labour and diligence of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Cromwel, and Maſter Hugh Latimer, ſhe was condemned and put to death, with certain of her affinity and counſel, in the month of April, Anno 1533. The names of which Conſpirators with her were theſe, Edward Bocking, Monk of Canterbury, Richard Maſter, Parſon

Of the which persons, the said Elizabeth Barton, Henry Gold, Richard Master, Edward Bocking, John Dering, Hugh Rich, Richard Risby, were attainted of Treason by Act of Parliament, and put to execution.

A marvellous judgment of God against Pavier an open enemy to his Word.

The residue, as Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, Thomas Gold, Tho. Laurence, Edward Thwaits, John Adeson, Tho. Abel, being convict and attainted of Misprision, were condemned to Prison, and forfeited their Goods and Possessions to the King. Ex Statut. An. 25. Reg. Hen. 8.

Edward Hall, a Writer of our English Stories, making mention of this Elizab. Barton aforesaid, adjoyneth next in his Book the narration of one Pavier, or Pavy, a notorious enemy (no doubt) to Gods Truth. This Pavier being the Town-Clerk of the City of London, was a man (saith he) that in no case could abide to hear that the Gospel should be in English: insomuch that the said Hall himself heard him once say unto him, and to other by swearing a great Oath, that if he thought the Kings Highness would set forth the Scripture in English, and let it be read of the people by his Authority, rather than he would so long live, he would cut his own Throat; but he broke promise, saith Hall, for he did not cut his Throat with a Knife, but with a Halter did hang himself. Of what mind and intent he so did, God judge.

My information further addeth this, touching the said Pavier or Pavy, that he was a bitter enemy, very busie at the burning of Richard Bainham above mentioned. Who hearing the said Bainham at the stake speaking against Purgatory and Transubstantion; set fire, said he, to this Heretick, and burn him. And as the Train of Gunpowder came toward the Martyr, he lifted up his Eyes and Hands to Heaven, saying to Pavier, God forgive thee, and shew thee more mercy than thou doest to me. The Lord forgive Sir Thomas More, and pray for me all good people, and so continued he praying, till the Fire took his Bowels and his Head, &c.

After whose Martyrdom, the next year following, this Pavier the Town-Clerk of the City, went and bought Ropes. Which done, he went up to an high Garret in his house to Pray, as he was wont to do, to a Rood which he had there, before whom he bitterly wept: and as his own Maid coming up found him so doing, he bad her take the rusty Sword and go make it clean, and trouble him no more, and immediately he tyed up the Rope, and hung himself. The Maids heart still throbbed, and so came up, and found him but newly hanged. Then she having no power to help him, ran crying to the Church to her Mistris to fetch her home. His Servants and Clerks he had sent out before to Finsbury, and to Master Edney, Serjeant to the Lord Mayor, dwelling over Bishops-Gate, to tarry for him at Finsbury Court till he came: But he had dispatched himself before, so that they might long look for him before he could come. Which was, Anno 1533.

Pavier a persecutor hanged himself.

To this Story of Pavier, may also be added the like terrible example of Doctor Foxford, Chancellor to the Bishop of London, a cruel Persecutor, and a common Butcher of the good Saints of God; who was the condemner of all those aforenamed, which were put to death, troubled or abjured under Bishop Stokesley through all the Diocess of London. This Foxford dyed about this present year and time: Of whose terrible end it was then certainly reported and affirmed, by such as were of right good credit, unto certain persons, of whom some be yet alive, that he dyed suddenly sitting in his Chair, his belly being burst, and his Guts falling out before him.

The terrible hand of Gods judgment upon Foxford the Bishops Chancellor.

The death of William Warham Archbishop of Canterbury.

About the same time dyed also William Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury: In whose Room succeeded Thomas Crammer, which was the Kings Chaplain, and a great disputer against the unlawful Marriage of Lady Katherine, Princess Dowager, being then so called by Act of Parliament.

Tho. Crammer Archbishop of Canterbury.

Ye heard before, how the Parliament had enacted that no person after a certain day, should appeal to Rome for any cause. Notwithstanding which Act, the Queen, now called Princess Dowager, had appealed to the Court of Rome before that Act made: So that it was doubted, whether that Appeal was good or not. This question was well handled in the Parliament House, but much better in the Convocation House, and yet in both Houses it was alledged, yea, and by Books shewed, that in the Councils of Chalcedon, Africk, Toletane, and divers other famous Councils in the Primitive Church, yea, in the time of S. Augustine, it was affirmed, declared, and determined, that a cause arising in one Province, should be determined in the same, and that neither the Patriarch of Constantinople should meddle in causes moved in the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Antioch, nor any Bishop should intermeddle within anothers Province or Country. Which things were so Clerkly opened, and so cunningly set forth to all intents, that every man that had wit, and was determined to follow the Truth, and not wilfully wedded to his own mind, might plainly see, that all Appeals made to Rome were clearly void, and of none effect. Which Doctrines and Councils were shewed to the Lady Katherine Princess Dowager; but she (as women love to lose no dignity) ever continued in her old Song, trusting more to the Popes partiality, than to the determination of Christs verity.

Queen Katherine appealeth to Rome. Concluded by Councils of the primitive Church, that none should appeal out of their Provinces.

Whereupon the Archbishop of Canterbury, Crammer above named, accompained with the Bishops of London, Winchester, Bathe, Lincoln, and divers other great Clerks in a great number, rode to Dunstable, which is six miles from Ampthil, where the Princess Dowager lay: And there by a Doctor, called Dr. Lee, she was ascited to appear before the said Archbishop, in cause of Matrimony, in the said Town of Dunstable: And at the day of appearance she would not appear, but made default, and so was called peremptorily, every day Fifteen days together, and at the last, for lack of appearance, and for contumacy, by the assent of all the learned men there being present, she was divorced from the King, and their Marriage declared to be void and of none effect. Which sentence given, the Archbishop, and all the other returned back again.

Lady Katherine solemnly Divorced from the King.

¶ Where note, that although their divorce following after the new Marriage needed not at all to be made, the first Marriage being no Marriage at all before God, yet, to satisfie the voice of the people, more than for any necessity, the King was contented, through the perswasions of some, so to do. For else as touching God and Conscience, what great need was there of any divorce, where before God no Marriage was to be accounted, but rather an incestuous and detestable Adultery, as the Act of Parliament doth term it? But to our matter again.

After the dissolution of this first Marriage made between the King and the Lady Princess Dowager, she nevertheless bearing a stout mind, would not yet relent, neither to the determination of the Universities, nor to the censure of the Clergy, nor of the whole Realm; but following the Counsel rather of a few Spaniards, to molest the King and the Realm by sute, and means made to the Pope, procured certain Writings, first of monition and aggravation, then of Excommunication and Interdiction to be sent down from Rome, wherein the Pope had Interdicted both the King and the whole Realm. But the Popes Curser being not the hardiest man, belike, that ever shewed his Head, thought it much more sure for him to discharge his Popish carriage without the Kings reach, and so keeping himself a loof off (like a prety man) set up his writings in the Town of Dunkirk in Flanders. In the which Town, first upon the North door of the Church was set up a monition, that the King of England should surcease the sute of Divorce; the which John Butler, Clerk, then Commissary of Calice, by Commandment, took down in a Night.

Writings set up at Dunkirk against the King.

John Butler of Calice took down the Writ at Dunkirk against the King.

After that, before Whitsunweek, there was set up in the same place an Excommunication, Aggravation, Reaggravation, and Interdiction. For the which also, the said Butler by commandment was sent to Dunkirk to take it down. And because the Council of Calice would be certified of his diligence therein, they sent a Servant of the Lord Lisle, then Deputy of Calice, whose name was Cranvel; and upon Wednesday in Whitson week, at seven of the Clock in the morning, he took it down whole, and brought it with him, and delivered the same to the Lord Deputy aforesaid: which was about the year, 1533.

King Henry and the Realm Interdicted by the Pope.

This being known and certified to the King, he was motioned by his Council, That such as were about her, and moved her thereunto, should be put from her. And therefore the Duke of Suffolk was sent to Bugden, beside Huntingdon, where the said Lady Katharine lay: who perceiving he stomach to continue froward still, in answering him with high words, and suddenly so in a fury to part from him into her privy Chamber, and shut the door, brake up the order of her Court, and discharged a great sort of her houshold Servants, and yet left her a convenient number to serve her like a Princess. They that remained still were sworn to serve her as Princess only, and not as Queen: of whom some said, they were once sworn to serve her as Queen, and otherwise would not serve, and so were dismissed. The other which were sworn to serve her as Princess, she utterly refused for her Servants, and so she remained with the fewer, living after this about the space of two years.

The Lady Katharines Court discharged.

The abolishing of the Pope out of England.

These things thus finished and dispatched concerning the Marriage of Queen Ann, and Divorce of Lady Katherine Dowager, next followeth the year, 1534. In the which was assembled the high Court of Parliament again, after many Prorogations, upon the third day of February; wherein was made an act of Succession, for the more suerty of the Crown; to the which every person being of lawful age should be sworn. During this Parliament time, every Sunday preached at Pauls Cross a Bishop, which declared the Pope not to be head of the Church.

Preaching against the Pope.

After this, Commissions were sent over all England, to take the Oath of all men and women to the Act of Succession. At which few repined, except Doctor John Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, Sir Thomas More, late Lord Chancellor; and Doctor Nicholas Wilson, Parson of Saint Thomas Apostles in London. Wherefore these three Persons, after long exhortation to them made by the Bishop of Canterbury at Lambeth, refusing to be sworn, were sent to the Tower, where they remained, and were oftentimes motioned to be sworn: But the Bishop and Sir Thomas More excused them by their Writings, in which they said, That they had written before the said Lady Katherine to be Queen, and therefore could not well go from that which they had written. Likewise the Doctor excused, that he in preaching had called her Queen, and therefore now could not well unsay it again. Howbeit at length he was well contented to dissemble the matter; and so escaped: but the other two stood against all the Realm in their opinion.

Ex Ed. Hallo.

The Bishop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas More sent to the Tower.

Fisher Bishop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas More refuse to be sworn.

From the month of March this Parliament furthermore was Prorogued to the third day of November abovesaid. At what time, amongst divers other Statutes, most graciously, and by the blessed will of God it was enacted, That the Pope, and all his College of Cardinals, with his Pardons and Indulgences, which so long had clogged this Realm of England, to the miserable slaughter of so many good men, and which never could be removed away before, was now abolished, eradicate and exploded out of this Land, and sent home again to their own Country of Rome, from whence they came. God be everlastingly praised therefore, Amen.

¶ Act concerning the the Kings Highness to be the supream head of the Church of England, and to have authority to reform and redress all Errors, Heresies and abuses in the same. Cap. 1.

Albeit the Kings Majesty justly and rightly is and ought to be the supream head of the Church of England, and so is recognised by the Clergy of this Realm in their Convocations, yet nevertheless for corroboration and confirmation thereof, and for increase of vertue in Christs Religion within this Realm of England, and to repress and extirp all Errors, Heresies, and other enormities and abuses heretofore used in the same: be it enacted by authority of this present Parliament, that the King our Sovereign Lord, his Heirs and Successors, Kings of this Realm, shall be taken, accepted, and reputed the only supream head in Earth of the Church of England, called Anglicana Ecclesia, and shall have and enjoy annexed and united to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, as well the title and stile thereof, as all honours, dignities, preheminences, jurisdictions, privileges, authorities, immunities, profits and commodities to the said dignity of supream Head of the same Church belonging and appertaining. And that our said Sovereign Lord, his Heirs and Successors, Kings of this Realm, shall have full power and authority from time to time, to visit, repress, redress, reform, order, correct, restrain, and amend all such errors, abuses, offences contempts, and enormities, whatsoever they be, which by any manner of Spiritual authority or jurisdiction ought or may lawfully be reformed, repressed, ordered, redressed, corrected, restrained, or amended, most to the pleasure of Almighty God, the increase of vertue in Christs Religion, and for the conservation of the peace, unity, and tranquillity of this Realm; any usage, custom, foreign laws, foreign authority, prescription, or any thing or things, to the contray hereof notwithstanding.

The Kings Proclamation for the abolishing of the usurped power of the Pope.

'TRusty and Welbeloved, we Greet you well. And whereas not only upon good and just and vertuous grounds and respects, edified upon the Laws of holy Scripture, by due consultation, deliberation, advisement, and consent, as well of all other our Nobles and Commons Temporal, as also Spiritual, assembled in our High Court of Parliament, and by authority of the same, we have by good and wholesome Laws and Statutes, made for this purpose, extirped, abolished, separated, and secluded out of this our Realm, the abuses of the Bishop of Rome, his authority and jurisdiction of long time usurped, as well upon us and our Realm, as upon all other Kings and Princes and their Realms (like as they themselves have confessed and affirmed) but also forasmuch as our said Nobles and Commons, both Spiritual and Temporal, assembled in our high Court of Parliament, have upon good, lawful and vertuous grounds, and for the publick weal of this our Realm, by one whole assent, granted, annexed, knit, and united to the Crown Imperial of the same, the title, dignity, and stile of supream Head or Governour in Earth, immediately under God, of the Church of England, as we be, and undoubtedly have hitherto been: Which title and stile both the Bishops and Clergy of this Realm have no only, in Convocation Assembled, Consented, Recognized, and approved lawfully and justly to appertain unto us, but also by Word, Oath, Profession, and writing under their Signs and Seals, have confessed, Ratified, Corroborated and confirmed the same, utterly renouncing all other Oaths and Obedience to any other foreign Potentates, and all foreign jurisdictions and powers, as well of the said Bishop of Rome, as of all other whatsoever they be, as by their said professions and writings Corroborated with the subscription of their names, and appension of their Seals more plainly appeareth: we let you to wit, that calling to our remembrance the power, charge, and commission given unto us of Almighty God, and upon

KING Hen. 8.

'upon a vehement love and affection toward our loving and 'faithful Subjects, perceiving right well what great rest, 'quietness, and tranquillity of Conscience, and manifold 'other commodities might insurge and arise unto them, if 'that the said Bishops and other of the Clergy of this our 'Realm should set forth, declare and preach to them the 'true and sincere Word of God, and without all manner 'of colour, dissimulation, and hypocrisie, manifest and 'publish the great and innumerable enormities, and abu- 'ses which the said Bishop of Rome, as well in the title 'and stile, as also in authority and jurisdiction of long 'time unlawfully and unjustly hath usurped upon us and 'our Progenitors, and also other Christian Princes; have 'therefore addressed our Letters unto the Bishop of the Di- 'oces, straightly charging and commanding him in the 'same, that not only he in his own proper person, shall 'declare, teach and preach unto the people forthwith up- 'on the receit of our said Letters unto him directed, every 'Sunday and other high Feasts through the year, the true, 'meer and sincere Word of God; and that the same title, 'stile, and jurisdiction of supream head appertaineth on- 'ly to our Crown and dignity Royal, likewise, as the said 'Bishop and all other the Bishops of our Realm have by 'Oath affirmed and confirmed by subscription of their 'names, and setting to their Seals, but also gave warning, 'monition, and charge, to all manner Abbats, Priors, 'Deans, Archdeacons, Provosts, Parsons, Vicars, Curats, 'and all other Ecclesiastical persons, within his said Dioces, 'as well to teach, preach, publish, and declare in all man- 'ner Churches our aforesaid just title, stile, and jurisdicti- 'on, every Sunday and high Feast through the year, and 'further to monish and command all other Schoolmasters 'within his said Dioces, to instruct and teach the same 'unto the Children committed unto them, as also to cause 'all manner Prayers, Orizons, Rubricks, Canons of Mass 'Books, and all other Books in the Churches, wherein 'the said Bishop of Rome is named, or his presumptuous 'and proud pomp and authority preferred, utterly to be 'abolished, eradicate and raced out, and his name and 'memory to be never more (except to his contumely and 'reproach) remembred, but perpetually suppressed and 'obscured: and finally, to desist and leave out all such Ar- 'ticles as be in the general sentence, which is usually accu- 'stomed to be read four times in the year, and do tend to 'the glory and advancement of the Bishop of Rome, his 'name, title, and jurisdiction.

The Popes name and memory abolished.

'Whereupon we see esteeming and reputing you to be 'of such singular and vehement zeal and affection toward 'the Glory of Almighty God, and of so faithful, loving 'and obedient heart towards us, as you will not only do 'and accomplish with all Power, Wisdom, Diligence, 'and labour, whatsoever should or might be to the pre- 'ferment and setting forward of Gods Word, but also pra- 'ctise, study, and endeavour your self, with all your policy, 'wit, power, and good will, to amplifie, defend, and 'maintain all such interest, right, title, stile, jurisdiction, 'and authority, as is in any wise appertaining unto us, our 'dignity and prerogative, and Crown Imperial of this our 'Realm: have thought good and expedient, not only to 'signifie unto you by these our Letters the particulars of the 'charge, monition, and commandment given by us unto 'the said Bishop, as before is specified, but also to require, 'and straightly charge and command you, upon pain of 'your Allegiance, and as ye shall avoid our high indigna- 'tion and displeasure at your uttermost peril, laying apart 'all vain affections, respects, or other carnal consideratio- 'ons, and setting only before your eyes the mirror of truth, 'the glory of God, the dignity of your Sovereign Lord 'and King, and the great concord and unity, and inesti- 'mable profit and utility, that shall by the due execution of 'the premises insue to your self and all other faithful and 'loving Subjects, ye make or cause to be made diligent 'search and wait, and especially in every place of your 'Shirewick, whether the said Bishop do truly, and sin- 'cerely, and without all manner cloke, colour, or dissi- 'mulation, execute, and accomplish Our Will and Com- 'mandment, as is aforesaid. And in case ye shall hear, 'perceive, and approvably understand, and know that the 'said Bishop, or any other Ecclesiastical person within 'his Dioces, do omit and leave undone any part or 'parcel of the Premises, or else in the execution and setting 'forth of the same, do coldly and feignedly use any manner 'of sinister addition, wrong interpretation, or painted co- 'lour: then we straightly charge and command you, that 'forthwith upon any such default, negligence, or dissimu- 'lation of the said Bishop, or any other Ecclesiastical 'person of his Dioces, contrary to the true tenour, mean- 'ing and effect of the said charge by us to him appointed 'aforesaid, ye do make indelayedly, and with all speed 'and diligence, declaration and advertisement to us and our 'Council, of the said default, and of the behaviour, man- 'ner, and fashion of the same.

Given under our Signet, at our Palace of Westminster, the 9th day of June.

Futhermore, That no man shall Cavil or Surmise this fatal fall and ruine of the Pope to have come rashly upon the Kings own partial affection, or by any sensual temerity of a few, and not by the grave and advised judgment, approbation, and consent, generally and publickly, as well of the Nobles and Commons Temporal, as also upon substantial grounds, and the very strength of truth, by the Discussion and Consulation of the Spiritual and most learned persons in this Realm: it shall be requisite moreover to these Premises to adjoyn the Words and Testimonies also of the Bishops own Oaths and Profession made to the King, yielding and rendring unto him only the stile of Supreme head next under Christ of the Church of England, all other service, subjection, and obedience to be given to any other foreign Potentate, which should be prejudicial to the Kings Highness in this behalf, being excluded, and that both Frankly and Freely, of their own voluntary motion, and also upon the Faith and Fidelity of their Priesthood, as by their own words and hand-writing may appear, in form as hereunder followeth.

The Oath of Stephen Gardener to the King.

EGo Stephanus Wintonien. Episcopus, pure, sponte, & absolute, in verbo pontificio, profiteor ac spondeo Illustrissimæ vestræ Regiæ Majestati, singulari ac summo Domino meo, & patrono, Henrico Dei Gratia Angliæ & Franciæ Regi, Fidei defensori, Domino Hiberniæ, atque in terris Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ Supremo immediate sub Christo capiti, quod posthac nulli externo Imperatori, Regi, Principi aut Prælato, nec Romano Pontifici (quem Papam vocant) fidelitatem & obedientiam, &c.

In Engliſh.

I Stephen Biſhop of Wincheſter do purely of mine own voluntary accord, and abſolutely, in the word of a Biſhop, profeſs and promiſe to your Princely Majeſty, my ſingular and chief Lord and Patron, Henry the Eighth by the grace of God, King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in Earth of the Church of England ſupream Head immediately under Chriſt, that from this day forward I ſhall Swear, Promiſe, Give, or cauſe to be Given to no foreign Potentate, Emperor, King, Prince, or Prelat, nor yet to the Biſhop of Rome, whom they call Pope, any Oath or Fealty, directly or indirectly, either by word or writing; but at all times, and in every caſe and condition I ſhall Obſerve, Hold, and Maintain, to all effects and intents, the quarel and cauſe of your Royal Majeſty and your Succeſſors, and to the uttermoſt of my power ſhall defend the ſame againſt all manner of perſons whomſoever I ſhall know or or ſuſpect to be adverſaries to your Majeſty, or to your Succeſſors; and ſhall give my Faith, Truth, and Obedience, Sincerely, and with my very heart, only to your Royal Majeſty, as to my ſupream Prince. I profeſs the Papacy of Rome not to be ordained of God by holy Scripture, but conſtantly do affirm, and openly declare, and ſhall declare it, to be ſet up only by man, and ſhall cauſe diligently other men likewiſe to publiſh the ſame. Neither ſhall I enter any Treaty with any perſon or perſons either privily or apertly, or ſhall conſent thereto, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall have or exerciſe here any authority or juriſdiction, or is to be reſtored to any juriſdiction hereafter.

Stephen Gardener abrenounceth the Pope.

Furthermore, that the ſaid Biſhop of Rome now being, or any that ſhall ſucceed him hereafter in the ſaid See, is not to be called Pope nor Supream Biſhop or Univerſal Biſhop, nor moſt holy Lord, but only ought to be called Biſhop of Rome, and fellow Brother (as the old manner of the moſt ancient Biſhops hath been:) this I ſhall to my power openly maintain and defend.

And I ſhall firmly Obſerve and cauſe to be Obſerved of other, to the uttermoſt of my cunning, wit, and power, all ſuch Laws and Acts of this Realm, how and whatſoever, as have been enacted and eſtabliſhed for the extirpation and ſuppreſſion of the Papacy, and of the authority and juriſdiction of the ſaid Biſhop of Rome. Neither ſhall I appeal hereafter to the ſaid Biſhop of Rome, nor ever conſent to any perſon that ſhall appeal to him; neither ſhall I attempt, proſecute, or follow any ſute in the Court of Rome, for any cauſe of right or juſtice to be had, or ſhall make anſwer to any Plea or Action, nor ſhall take upon me the perſon and office either of the Plaintiff or Defendent in the ſaid Court. And if the ſaid Biſhop by his Meſſenger or by his Letters ſhall make any means or ſignification unto me, of any matter whatſoever it be, I ſhall with all ſpeed and diligence make declaration and advertiſment thereof, or cauſe the ſame to be ſignified either to your Princely Majeſty, or to ſome of your ſecret Council, or to your Succeſſors, or any of their Privy Council. Neither ſhall I ſend or cauſe to be ſent at any time any writing nor Meſſenger to the ſaid Biſhop or to his Court, without the knowledge and conſent of your Majeſty or your Succeſſors willing me to ſend writing or Meſſenger unto him. Neither ſhall I procure, or give Counſel to any perſon to procure Bulls, Briefs, or Reſcrips whatſoever, either for me or any other, from the ſaid Biſhop of Rome or his Court. And if any ſuch ſhall be procured againſt my will and knowledge, either in general or in ſpecial, or elſe howſoever they ſhall be granted unto them, I ſhall utter and diſcloſe the ſame, and not conſent thereunto, nor uſe them in any caſe, and ſhall cauſe them to be brought to your Majeſty, or your Succeſſors.

Furthermore, for the confirmation hereof I give my Faith and Truth by firm promiſe, and in the Faith of a Biſhop, that againſt this my foreſaid profeſſion and promiſe made, I ſhall defend my ſelf by no diſpenſation, exception, nor any remedy or cautel of Law or example, during this my natural life. And if heretofore I have done or made any proteſtation in prejudice of this my profeſſion and promiſe here made; the ſame I do revoke at this preſent, and for ever hereafter, and here utterly do renounce, by theſe preſents. Whereunto I have ſubſcribed and under written the name both of my ſelf and of my Biſhoprick, with my proper Hand, and thereto alſo ſet my Seal, in perpetual and undoubted teſtimony of the Premiſes.

Given the Tenth day of February, An. 1534, and of our Soveraign Lord King Henry the Eighth, twenty ſixth.

Stephen Winton.

¶ The like Oath of John Stokeſly Biſhop of London.

Per me Cuthbertum Dunelm.

And ſo likewiſe all the other Biſhops after the ſame order and form of Oath were obliged and bound to the King, as to the ſupream head of the Church of England immediately under Chriſt, renouncing and abjuring utterly and voluntarily the Popes too long uſurped juriſdiction in this Realm, teſtifing moreover the ſame both with their own Hand, and alſo with their Seal.

Beſides theſe confirmations and Teſtimonials of the Biſhops aforeſaid, ye ſhall hear yet moreover the Decree and publick ſentence of the univerſity of Cambridge, written likewiſe and ſubſcribed, and ſigned with the publick Seal of their Univerſity, the tenour of which their Letter here followeth.

TO all and ſingular Children of the Holy Mother Church, to whoſe hands theſe preſents ſhall come, the whole ſociety of Regents and not Regents of the Univerſity of Cambridge, ſendeth greeting in our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. A Letter of the Univerſity of Cambridge.

Whereas,

KING Hen. 8.

Whereas now of late it hath riſen up in queſtion among us, concerning the power of the Biſhop of Rome, which he doth both claim to himſelf by the holy Scripture over all Provinces and Nations in Chriſtendom, and hath now of long time exerciſed in this Realm of England: and foraſmuch as our cenſure concerning the cauſe is required, to wit, Whether the Biſhop of Rome hath any power or authority in this Kingdom of England allotted to him by God in the Scripture, more than any other foreign Biſhop, or no: We thought it therefore good reaſon, and our duty for the ſearching out of the verity of the ſaid queſtion, that we ſhould employ therein our whole endeavour and ſtudy, whereby we might render and publiſh to the world, what our reaſon and cenſure is touching the premiſes. For therefore we ſuppoſe, that Univerſities were firſt provided and inſtituted of Princes, to the end that both the people of Chriſt might in the Law of God be inſtructed, and alſo that falſe errors, if any did riſe, might through the vigilant care and induſtry of learned Divines be diſcuſſed, extinguiſhed, and utterly rooted out. For the which cauſe we in our aſſemblies and Convocations (after our accuſtomed manner) reſorting and conferring together upon the queſtion aforeſaid, and ſtuidouſly debating and deliberating with our ſelves how and by what order we might beſt proceed for the finding out of the truth of the matter; and at length chuſing out certain of the beſt learned Doctors and Bachelors of Divinity, and other Maſters, have committed to them in charge, ſtudiouſly to inſearch and peruſe the places of holy Scripture, by the viewing and conferring of which places together, they might certifie us what is to be ſaid to the queſtion propounded.

The cenſure of the Univerſity of Cambridge againſt the Popes ſupremacy.

Foraſmuch therefore, as we having heard, and well adviſed, and throughly diſcuſſed in open diſputations, what may be ſaid on both parts of the foreſaid queſtion, thoſe reaſons and arguments do appear to us more probable, ſtronger, truer, and more certain, and ſounding much more near to the pure and native ſenſe of Scriptures, which do deny the Biſhop of Rome to have any ſuch power given him of God in the Scripture. By reaſon and force of which arguments we being perſwaded, and conjoyning together in one opinion, have with our ſelves thus decreed to anſwer unto the queſtion aforeſaid, and in theſe writings thus reſolutely do anſwer in the name of the whole Univerſity, and for a concluſion undoubted do affirm, approve, and pronounce, that the Biſhop of Rome hath no more State, authority, and juriſdiction given him of God in the Scriptures, over this Realm of England, than any other extern Biſhop hath. And in teſtimony and credence of this our anſwer and affirmation; we have cauſed our common Seal to be put to theſe our foreſaid Letters accordingly.

The Biſhop of Rome hath no more ſtate in England than hath any other Biſhop.

At Cambridge in our regent houſe: Anno Dom. 1534.

Steph. Wint. De vera obedientia.

Steph. Wint. De vera Obedientia.

YOu have heard before of Stephen Gardener, of Lee, of Tonſtal, and of Stokeſley, how of their voluntary mind they made their profeſſion unto the King, every one ſeverally, taking and accepting a corporal Oath, utterly and for ever to renounce and reject the uſurped ſuperiority of the Biſhop of Rome. Now for a further teſtimony and declaration of their judgments and opinions which then they were of, following the force both of truth and of time then preſent, ye ſhall hear over and beſide their Oaths, what the foreſaid Biſhops in their own Books, Prologues, and Sermons do write, and publiſh abroad in Print, touching the ſaid cauſe of the Popes Supremacy.

Steph. Wint. againſt the marriage of the King with his Brothers Wife in his Book De vera Obedientia.

And firſt, God willing, to begin with Stephen Gardeners Book De vera obedientia, we will briefly note out a few of his own words, wherein with great Scriptures and good deliberation he not only confuteth the Popes uſurped authority, but alſo proveth the Marriage between the King and Queen Katherine his Brothers Wife not to be good nor lawful, in theſe words.

Of the which moral precepts in the old Law, to ſpeak of ſome (for to rehearſe all it needs not) the Levitical precepts touching forbidden and inceſtuous Marriages, as far as they concern chaſt and pure wedlock, wherein original of mans increaſe conſiſteth, are always to be reputed of ſuch ſort, that although they were firſt given to the Jews, yet becauſe they appertain to the Law of Nature, and expound the ſame more plainly to us, therefore they belong as well to all manner of people of the whole world for evermore. In which doubtleſs, both the voice of nature and Gods Commandment agreeing in one, have forbidden that which is contrary and divers from the one and from the other. And amongſt theſe, ſith there is commandment that a man ſhall not marry his Brothers Wife, what could the Kings excellent Majeſty do otherwiſe, than he did by the whole conſent of the people, and judgment of his Church, that is, to be divorced from unlawful Marrige, and uſe lawful and permitted copulation and obeying (as meet it was) conformably unto the commandment, caſt off her, whom neither Law nor right permitted him to retain, and take him to chaſt and lawful Marriage? Wherein although the ſentence of Gods word (whereunto all things ought to ſtoop) might have ſufficed; yet his Majeſty was content to have the aſſiſting conſents of the moſt notable grave men, and the cenſures of the moſt famous Univerſities of the whole world; and all to the intent that men ſhould ſee he did both that he might do, and ought to do uprightly, ſeeing the beſt learned and moſt worthy men have ſubſcribed unto; ſhewing therein ſuch obedience as Gods Word requireth of every good and godly man; ſo as it may be ſaid, that both he obeyed God, and obeyed him truly. Of which obedience, foraſmuch as I am purpoſed to ſpeak, I could not paſs this thing over with ſilence, whereof occaſion ſo commodiouſly was offered me to ſpeak.

Steph. Wint. againſt the marriage with his Brothers Wife.

Wincheſters Reaſons againſt the Popes Supremacy.

Steph. Wint a Lutheran in his Book De vera Obedientia.

MOreover, the ſaid Gardener in the forenamed Book De vera Obedientia, what conſtancy he pretendeth, what arguments he inferreth, how earneſtly and pithily he diſputeth on the Kings ſide againſt the uſurped ſtate of the Biſhop of Romes authority, by the words of his Book it may appear: whereof a brief Collection here followeth.

The Sword of the Church how far it extendeth.

IN the proceſs of his foreſaid Book, he alledging the old diſtinction of the Papiſts, wherein they give to the Prince the regiment of things temporal and to the Church of things ſpiritual, comparing the one to the greater Light, the other to the leſſer light, he confuteth and derideth the ſame diſtinction, declaring the ſword of the Church to extend no farther, than to teaching and Excommunication, and referreth all preheminence to the ſword of the Prince: alledging for this the ſecond Pſalm; And now you Kings be wiſe, and be learned ye that judge the Earth, &c. Pſal. 2.

Alſo the example of Solomon, who being a King, according to his Fathers appointment ordained the Offices of the Prieſts in their miniſteries, and Levites in their order, that they might give thanks, and miniſter before the Prieſts, after the order of every day, and Porters in their diviſions gate by gate. 2 Par. 28.

And ſpeaking more of the ſaid Solomon, he ſaith: For ſo commanded the man of God, neither did the Prieſts nor Levites omit any thing of all that he had commanded, &c. Exod. 32.

Beſide this, he alledgeth alſo the Example of King Ezechias, 2. Paralip. 28. He alledgeth moreover the example and fact of Juſtinian, which made laws touching the Faith, Biſhops, Clerks, Hereticks and ſuch other. 1 Reg. 22.

Aaron (ſaith he) obeyed Moſes. Solomon gave ſentence upon Abiather the High Prieſt.

Alexander the King, in the firſt of Machabees writeth thus to Jonathan; Now we have made thee this day the High-prieſt of thy people, &c. So did Demetrius to Simon. 1 Mach. 10. 1 Mach. 14.

Then coming to the words of Chriſt ſpoken to Peter, Mat. 16. Matthew. 16. upon which words the Pope pretendeth to build all his authority: To this he anſwereth, That if Chriſt by thoſe words had limited to Peter any ſuch ſpecial ſtate or preheminency above all Princes, then were it not true that is written; Cæpit Jeſus docere & facere: foraſmuch as the words of Chriſt ſhould then be contrary to his own facts and example, who in all his life never uſurped either to himſelf any ſuch domination above Princes, ſhewing himſelf rather ſubject unto Princes: nor yet did ever permit in his Apoſtles any ſuch example of ambition to be ſeen; but rather rebuked them for ſeeking any manner of majority amongſt them.

The Kings ſtile and title approved by Steph. Winc.

And where he reaſoneth of the Kings ſtile and title, being called King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and ſupream head in Earth of the Church of England immediately under Chriſt, &c. Thus he addeth his mind and cenſure, ſaying, that he ſeeth no cauſe in this Title, why any man ſhould be offended, that the King is called head of the Church of England, rather than of the Realm of England; and adeth his reaſon thereunto ſaying, If the Prince and King of England be the head of his Kingdom, that is, of all Engliſh men that be his Subjects, is there any cauſe why the ſame Engliſh Subjects ſhould not be ſubject to the ſame head likewiſe in this reſpect becauſe they are Chriſtians, that is to ſay, for the title of godlineſs, as though that God, which is the cauſe of all obedience, ſhould now be the cauſe of Rebellion?

At length thus he concludeth with an exclamation ſaying; To ſay (ſaith he) that a King is the head of the Kingdom, and not of the Church, what an abſurd and a fooliſh ſaying is this?

The King is as well the head of the Church, as of his Kingdom.

And further, adding for example the ſubjection of the Servant and Wife: If the Servant (ſaith he) be ſubject to his Maſter, or Wife to her Husband, being Infidels, doth their converſion afterward, or name of Chriſtians, make them leſs Subjects than they were before? As Religion therefore doth not alter the authority of the Maſter over the Servant, nor of the Husband over the Wife; no more (ſaith he) doth it between the Prince and Subject.

Paul making no exception nor diſtinction of ſubjection, ſave only of that which belongeth to God, willeth all men to oby their Princes; And what Princes? Thoſe Princes which bear the Sword. And although we are bound by the Scripture to obey our Biſhops and ſpiritual Paſtors of the Church, yet that obedience diminiſheth nothing the chief and head authority that ought to be given to the Prince, no more than the obedience of the Servant to his Maſter, or of the Wife to her Husband exempteth them from ſubjection due to their ſuperior powers.

A rule of the Law.

And herewithal he inferreth a principle of the Law: Divers juriſdictions (ſaith he) proceeding from one perſon do not mar nor hinder themſelves, but rather do confirm and fortifie one another.

Again, whereas the Biſhop of Rome under the name of Peter doth appropriate to himſelf the higheſt place in the Church, for that he is the Succeſſor of Peter: thereunto he anſwereth in one word, but in that one word he anſwereth enough, and to the full: I would (ſaith he) he were; for ſo in very deed he might well exceed and paſs all Kings and Princes, if not in preheminency of Dignity, yet in admiration and excellency of Vertue. In which kind of ſuperiority the Lord Chriſt would his Apoſtles and Miniſters to go before all Kings and Emperors in the whole world.

Wincheſters wiſh that the Pope were Peters Succeſſor.

Argument. The Prerogative was given to him which confeſſed. Fleſh and blood in Peter did not confeſs Chriſt. Ergo, the Prerogative was not given to the fleſh and blood of Peter.

After this, in proſecuting the argument of Peters confeſſion, he argueth thus and ſaith; That as fleſh and blood did not reveal to Peter that confeſſion, ſo neither was that Prerogative given to the fleſh and blood of Peter, but to the better part, that is, to the ſpirit of Peter, which is to mean, in reſpect of the ſpiritual confeſſion of Peter, and not in reſpect of any carnal place or perſon, &c.

Item, If the Scholer ought not to be above the Maſter, how then could either Peter take that upon him, which Chriſt his Maſter ſo conſtantly did refuſe; or how can the Biſhop of Rome now claim that by Succeſſion, whereof no example is to be found either in the head, or his Predeceſſor before him? for ſo we read in Euſebius, both of Peter, James, and John, that they did arrogate no ſuch primacy unto them, but were content that James, ſurnamed Juſtus, ſhould be the Biſhop of the Apoſtles.

And as for the name and ſignification of the word Primatus, i. Primacy, if it be taken for the firſt nomination, or the firſt place given, ſo he granteth that Peter had the preferment of the firſt name and place in the order of the Apoſtles. But it followeth not, that with this primacy he had alſo a Kingdom given. And though he were bid of the Lord to confirm his brethren, yet was he not bid to exercise an impery upon his brethren; for ſo were they not his brethren, but his Subjects.

Primatus Primacy, what it ſignifieth.

He ſaith confirm thy brethren, but not thy Subjects.

That Peter was Primus, that is, firſt or chief in the number of them which confeſſed Chriſt, it is not to be denyed. For firſt he confeſſed, firſt he taught the Jews, firſt he ſtood in defence of the verity, and was the firſt and chief prolocutor among them: but yet that maketh not, that he ſhould therefore vindicate a general primacy and rule over all other ſtates, and poteſtates of the World, no more than Apelles, becauſe he is noted the firſt and chief of all Painters, therefore ought to bear rule over all Painters; or becauſe the Univerſity of Paris is nominate for the firſt and chief of other Univerſities, ſhall therefore the French King, and all other Princes in their publick adminiſtration, wherein they are ſet of God, become ſubjects and underlings to that Univerſity?

Primus Primatus. Firſt Primacy meaneth as much as the firſt ſtanding in vocation, and is the name of vertue, and not of power.

Thus after many other reaſons and perſwaſions contained in ſaid Book De Obedientia (for I do but ſuperficially skim over the top only of his probations and arguments) Finally in the end of his probation, he concludeth the whole ſumm of his mind, in this effect; firſt, he denying that the Biſhop of Rome had ever any ſuch extern juriſdiction aſſigned to him abſolutely from God, to reign over Kings and Princes. For the probation whereof he hath alledged ſufficiently, as he ſaith, the examples and doings of Chriſt himſelf, which ought to be to us all a ſufficient document.

And as concerning the term of Primacy, albeit it be uſed ſometime of the Fathers, yet the matter being well conſidered and rightly expounded, maketh nothing for the large dominion of the Biſhop of Rome, which now he doth uſurpe.

Alſo as for the Prerogatives granted unto Peter, by the which Prerogatives our Saviour would Crown his own gifts given unto him, crowning not the fleſh and blood of Peter, but the marvellous teſtimony of his confeſſion, all this maketh nothing for the Popes purpoſe.

Succeſſion of Peter.

Likewiſe as concerning the local ſucceſſion of Peter, the Pope hath nothing thereby to claim. If he will be Succeſſor of Peter, he muſt ſucceed him in Faith, Doctrine, and conditions; and in ſo doing, he neither will, neither yet ſhall need to ſeek for honour, but ſhall be honoured of all good men, according as a good man ſhould be, and that much more than he being a good man would require.

Steph. Winc. taketh all Vale of the Pope, but not his ultimum Vale.

And thus Stephen Wincheſter taking his leave and bidding the Pope farewell, endeth with a friendly exhortation, willing him to be wiſe and circumſpect, and not to ſtrive ſtubbornly againſt the truth. The light of the Goſpel, ſaith he, ſo ſpreadeth his beams in all mens eyes, that the works of the Goſpel be known, the myſteries of Chriſts Doctrine are opened; both learned and unlearned, men and women being Engliſhmen born, do ſee and perceive, that they have nothing to do with Rome, nor with the Biſhop of Rome, but that every Prince in his own dominion is to be taken and accepted as a Vicar of God, and Vicegerent of Chriſt in his own bounds. And therefore ſeeing this order is taken of God, and one in the Church ſhould bear the Office of teaching, another ſhould bear the Office of ruling (which Office is only limited to Princes) he exhorteth him to conſider the truth, and to follow the ſame, wherein conſiſteth our true and ſpecial obedience, &c.

The Office of teaching. The Office of ruling.

To this Book of Stephen Wincheſter De Obedientia we will adjoyn for good fellowſhip the Preface alſo of Edmund Bonner, Archdeacon then of Leiceſter, prefixed before the ſame, to the intent that the Reader ſeeing the judgments of theſe men as they were then, and again the ſudden mutation afterward of the ſaid parties of the contrary opinion, may learn thereby what vain glory and pompe of this world can work in the frail nature of man, where Gods grace lacketh to ſuſtain. The Preface of

Bonner,

{KING Hen. 8.} Bonner, before the said Book of Winchester, De obedientia, proceedeth thus in effect, as followeth:

The Preface of Edmund Bonner, Arch-deacon of Leicester, prefixed before Stephen Gardiners Book, De vera obedientia.

Bonner's Preface before Winchesters Book of Obedience.

FOr asmuch as some there be no doubt (as the judgments of Men be always variable) which think the controversie which is between the Kings Royal Majesty, and the Bishop of Rome, consisteth in this point, for that his Majesty hath taken the most excellent and most vertuous Lady Ann to Wife, which in very deed Queen Ann. is far otherwise, and nothing so: to the intent therefore that all true hearty favourers of the Gospel of Christ, which hate not, but love the Truth, may the more fully understand the chief point of the controversie, and because they shall not be ignorant what is the whole voice and resolute determination of the best and greatest learned Bishops, with all the Nobles and Commons of England, not only in that cause of Matrimony, but also in defending the Doctrine of the Gospel: here shall be published the Oration of the Bishop of Winchester (a Man excellently learned in all kind of Learning) entituled De vera obedientia; that is, concerning true obedience. But as touching this Bishops worthy praises, there shall be nothing spoken of me at this time, not only because they are infinite, but because they are far better known to all Christendom, than becometh me here to make rehearsal. And as for the Oration it self (which as it is most learned, so is it most elegant) to what purpose should I make any words of it, seeing it praiseth it self enough, and seeing good Wine needeth no Tavern-Bush to utter it? But yet in this Oration, whosoever thou art, most gentle Reader, thou shalt beside other matters see it notably and learnedly handled, of what importance, and how invincible the power and excellency of Gods Truth is, which as it may now and then be pressed of the Enemies, so it cannot possibly be oppressed and darkned after such sort, but it sheweth it self again at length more glorious and more welcome. Thou shalt see also touching Obedience, that it is subject to truth, and what is to be judged true obedience. Besides this, of Mens traditions, which for the most part be most repugnant against the truth of Gods Law. And there by the way, he speaketh of the Kings said Highness Marriage, which by the ripe Judgment, Authority, and Priviledge of the most and principal Universities of the World, and then with the consent of the whole Church of England, he contracted with the most Excellent, and most Noble Lady Queen Ann. After that, touching the Kings Majesties Title, as pertaining to the Supreme head of the Church of England. Last of all, of the false pretensed Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome in the Realm of England most justly abrogated: and how all other Bishops being fellow-like to him in their function, yea and in some points above him within their own Provinces, were before-time bound to the King by their Oath.

The Kings Marriage with Queen Ann.

Supreme head. The Bishop of Romes pretenced Supremacy.

But be thou most surely perswaded of this, good Reader, That the Bishop of Rome, if there were no cause else but only this Marriage, would easily content himself, specially having some good morsel or other given him to chew upon. But when he seeth so mighty a King, being a right vertuous and a great learned Prince, so sincerely and so heartily favour the Gospel of Christ, and perceiving the yearly and great prey (yea so large a prey, that it came to as much almost as all the Kings Revenues) snapped out of his hands, and that he can no longer exercise his Tyranny in the Kings Majesties Realm ( alas heretofore too cruel and bitter) nor make Laws, as he hath done many, to the contumely and reproach of the Majesty of God, which is evident that he hath done in time past, under the title of the Catholick Church, and the Authority of Peter and Paul (when notwithstanding he was a very ravening Wolf, dressed in Sheeps clothing, calling himself the Servant of Servants) to the great damage of the Christian Common-wealth: here, here began all the mischief, thereof rose these discords, these deadly malices, and so great and terrible bustling: For if it were not thus, could any Man believe that this Jupiter of Olympus, (which falsly hath arrogated unto himself an absolute power without controlment) would have wrought so diligently by all means possible, to stir up all other Kings and Princes so traiterously against this so good and godly and so true Gospel-like Prince, as he hath done? Neither let it move thee (gentle Reader) that Winchester did not before now apply to this Opinion: for he himself in this Oration sheweth the cause why he did it not. And if he had said never a word, yet thou knowest well what a witty part it is for a Man to suspend his judgment, and not to be too rash in giving of Sentence. It is an old said saw: Mary Magdalen profited us less in her quick belief that Christ was risen, than Thomas that was longer in doubt. A Man may rightly call him Fabius, that with his advised taking of leisure restored the matter. Albeit I speak not thus as if Winchester had not bolted out this matter secretly with himself before hand (for he without doubt tried it out long ago) but that running fare and softly he would first with his painful study pluck the matter out of the dark, although of it self it was clear enough, but by reason of sundry Opinions it was lapped up in darkness, and then did he debate it wittily to and fro; and so at last after long and great deliberation had in the matter, because there is no better counsellor than leisure and time, he would resolutely with his learned and consummate judgment confirm it.

Winchester vvriteth against the Pope vvith advised judgment.

Thou shouldest, gentle Reader, esteem his censure and authority to be of more weighty credence, inasmuch as the matter was not rashly and at all adventures, but with judgment (as thou seest) and with wisdom examined and discussed. And this is no new example, to be against the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, seeing that not only this Man, but many Men oftentimes, yea and right great learned Men afore now, have done the same even in writing, whereby they both painted him out in his right colours, and made his sleights, falshood, frauds and deceitful wyles openly known to the World. Therefore if thou at any time heretofore have doubted either of true obedience, or of the Kings Majesties Marriage, or Title, or else of the Bishop of Romes false pretended Supremacy, as if thou hadst a good smelling Nose, and a sound Judgment, I think thou didst not: yet having read this Oration, (which, if thou favour the Truth, and hate the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and his satanical fraudulent falshood, shall doubtless wonderfully content thee) forsake thine Error, and acknowledge the Truth now freely offered thee at length, considering with thy self, that it is better late so to do, than never to repent. Fare thou heartily well, most gentle Reader, and not only love this most valiant King of England and of France, who undoubtedly was by the Providence of God born to defend the Gospel, but also honour him and serve him most obediently. As for this Winchester, who was long ago without doubt reputed among the greatest learned Men, give him thy good word, with highest commendation.

No new matter to vvrite against the Bishop of Romes

The end of Bishop Bonner's Prologue.

What Man reading and advising this Book of Winchester, De vera Obedientia, with Bonners Preface before the same, would ever have thought any alteration could so work in Mans heart, to make these Men thus to turn the Cat (as they say) in the Pan, and to start so suddainly from the Truth so manifestly known, so pithily proved, so vehemently defended, and (as it seemed) so faithfully subscribed? If they dissembled all this that they wrote, subscribed, and sware unto: what perjury most execrable was it before God and Man? If they meant good Faith, and spake then as they thought, what pestilent blindness is this so suddainly fallen upon them, to make that false now, which was true before, or that to be now true, which before was false? Thus to say and unsay, and then to say again, to do and undo, and as a Man would say to play fast or loose with truth, truly a Man may say is not

Note. The inconstant mutability of Winchester and Bonners

See how these clawbacks can cling together in truth and in falshood, and all to fashion themselves to the World, and the time present.

The Sermon of Tonſtal before the King, made on Palm-Sunday.

Furthermore, to add unto them the judgment alſo and argument of Tonſtal Biſhop of Dureſme, let us ſee how he agreeth with them, or rather much exceedeth them, in his Sermon made before King Henry upon Palm-Sunday, remaining yet in Print: in the which Sermon diſputing againſt the wrongful Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, he proves by manifeſt grounds moſt effectuouſly, both out of the Scripture, ancient Doctors, and of Counſels, not only that the Biſhop of Rome hath no ſuch Authority by the Word of God committed to him, as he doth challenge; but alſo in requiring and challenging the ſame he reproveth and condemneth him with great zeal and ardent ſpirit, to be a proud Lucifer, diſobedient to the ordinary powers of God ſet over him, contrary to Chriſt and Peter: and finally, in raiſing up War againſt us for the ſame, he therefore rebuketh and defieth him, as a moſt deteſtable ſower of diſcord, and a murderer of Chriſtian Men.

That Popes and Biſhops ought to be ſubject to their Sovereigns.

FIrſt by the Scripture he reaſoneth thus, and proveth, That all good Men ought to obey the Poteſtates and Governors of the World, as Emperors, Kings, and Princes of all ſorts, what name ſoever the ſaid ſupreme powers do bear or uſe for their Countries in which they be; for ſo
1 Pet. 2. St. Pet. doth plainly teach us, 1 Pet. 2. ſaying, Be ye ſubject to every human creature for Gods cauſe, whether it be King, as chief head, or Dukes or Governors, &c. So that St. Peter in his Epiſtle commandeth all worldly Princes in their office to be obeyed as the Miniſters of God, by all Chriſtian Men: and according unto the ſame, St. Paul, Rom. 13. ſaith, Let every living man be ſubject to the high powers; for the high powers be of God, and whoſoever reſiſteth the high powers, reſiſteth the ordinance of God, and purchaſeth thereby to himſelf damnation.

Whoſoever reſiſteth the High Powers reſiſteth God.

And in the ſame place of Tonſtal it followeth. And leſt Men ſhould forget their duty of obedience to their Princes, it is thrice repeated, That they be the Miniſters of God, whoſe place in their governance they repreſent: ſo that unto them all Men muſt obey, Apoſtles, Patriarcks, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prieſts, and all of the Clergy, &c. And therefore, ſaith he, the Biſhop of Rome, oweth to his Sovereign and Superior like ſubjection by the Word of God, taught unto us by Peter and Paul, as other Biſhops do to their Princes, under whom they be, &c.

Alſo, an other expreſs Commandment we have of Chriſt, Luke 22. who upon the occaſion of his Diſciples ſtriving for ſuperiority, diſcuſſeth the matter, ſaying on this Luke 22. wiſe, The Kings of the people and Nations have dominion over them, and thoſe that have power over them be called gracious Lords, but ſo it ſhall not be amongſt you: but whoſoever amongſt you is the greater, ſhall be as the younger; and whoſoever amongſt you ſhall be chief, ſhall be as a ſervant and a Miniſter, &c.

And again, Chriſt ſpeaking to Pilate of his Kingdom,
John 18. declareth that his Kingdom is not of this World, and therefore ſaith Tonſtal, thoſe that go about to make of Chriſts Spiritual Kingdom a Wordly Kingdom, do fall into the Error of ſome Hereticks that look that Chriſt, after the Day of Judgment, ſhall reign with all his Saints here in the Earth carnally in Jeruſalem; the Jews do believe that Meſſias is yet to come, and when he ſhall come, he ſhall Reign worldly in Jeruſalem.

By theſe and ſuch other places it may well appear, That Chriſt neither before his Incarnation, (as Tonſtal ſaith) nor after his Incarnation, did ever alter the Authority of Worldly Kings and Princes, but by his own Word commanded them ſtill to be obeyed of their ſubjects, as they had been in the ancient time before, &c. and for example of the ſame he alledgeth firſt the example of Mat. 22. Examples of Chriſts humble ſubjection. Chriſt himſelf, Matth. 22. who being asked of the Jews, Whether they ſhould give tribute to Cæſar or no, he bade them give to Cæſar thoſe things that be his, and to God thoſe things that be his; ſignifying, that Tribute was due to Cæſar, and that their Souls were due to God, &c.

Alſo in the ſeventeenth of Matthew it appeareth that Chriſt bade Peter pay tribute for him and his Diſciples, when it was demanded of him. And why? Becauſe he would not change the order of obeyſance to Worldly Princes due by their Subjects, &c.

Another example of Chriſt he citeth out of the 6th of John. John, where after Chriſt had fed five thouſand and more, with a few Loaves, and fewer Fiſhes, and that the Jews would have taken him and made him their King, he fled from them, and would not conſent unto them: For the Kingdom, ſaith he, that he came to ſet here in Earth, was not a Worldly and Temporal Kingdom, but an Heavenly and Spiritual Kingdom; that is, to reign Spiritually by Grace and Faith in the hearts of all Chriſtian and Faithful people, of what degree, or of what nature ſoever they be, and to turn all People and Nations, which at his coming were carnal and lived after the luſts of the Fleſh, to be Spiritual, and to live after the luſts of the Spirit, that Chriſt with his Father of Heaven might reign in the hearts of all Men, &c.

And here in theſe examples of Chriſts humility farther is to be noted, how Chriſt the Son of God did ſubmit himſelf not only to the rulers and powers of this World, but alſo dejected himſelf, and in a manner became ſervant to his own Apoſtles: ſo far off was he from all ambitious and pompous ſeeking of Worldly honour: for ſo it appeared in him, not only by waſhing the Feet of his Apoſtles, but alſo the ſame time a little before his Paſſion, when the Apoſtles fell at contention among themſelves, who among them ſhould be ſuperior, he ſetting before them the example of his own ſubjection asketh this queſtion: Who is ſuperior; he that ſitteth at the Table, or he that ſerveth at the Table? Is not he Superior that ſitteth? but I am amongſt you, as he that miniſtreth, and ſerveth, &c. Luke 22.

Examples of Peter's ſubjection.

The like examples Tonſtal alſo inferreth of Peter's Humility. For where we read in the Acts, how the Centurion, a Noble Man of great Age, did proſtrate himſelf upon the ground at the feet of Peter; then Peter, not ſuffering that, eſtſoons took him up and bade him riſe, ſaying, I am alſo a man as thou art. Acts 10.

So likewiſe did the Angel, Apocalypſe 19, and the 22d, to whom when John wauld have fallen down to have adored him which ſhewed him thoſe Viſions, the Angel ſaid unto him: See thou do not ſo; for I am the ſervant of God, as thou art, &c. Apoc. 19. 22.

Again, in the foreſaid Peter, what an example of reverent Humility is to be ſeen in this, that notwithſtanding he with other Apoſtles having his Commiſſion to go over all the World, yet nevertheleſs he being at Joppa, and ſent for by Cornelius, durſt not go unto him, without the Viſion of a Sheet let down from Heaven, by the which Viſion he was admoniſhed not to refuſe the Gentiles: or elſe he knew in himſelf no ſuch Primacy over all people and places given unto him, nor no ſuch Commiſſion ſo large above the other, &c.

Furthermore, the ſaid Peter, being rebuked of Paul his fellow Brother, took no ſcorn thereof, but was content, ſubmitting himſelf to due correction.

The Popes objections.

But here ſaith Tonſtal, ſteppeth in the Biſhop of Rome and ſaith, That Peter had Authority given him above all the reſidue of the Apoſtles, and alledgeth the words of Chriſt ſpoken to him, Matth. the 16th. Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, and will give to thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind upon Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven. This ſaid Chriſt, ſaith the Pope, and St. Peter is buried at Rome, whoſe ſucceſſor I am, and ought to rule the Church, as Peter did, and to be Porter of Heaven-gates, as Peter was, &c. Mat. 16.

The ambitious Pride of the Pope.

And Chriſt ſaid alſo to Peter after his Reſurrection, Feed my ſheep; which he ſpake to him only, ſo that thereby he had Authority over all that be of Chriſts flock; and I, as his ſucceſſor have the ſame. And therefore whoſo will not obey me, King or Prince, I will curſe him, and deprive him of his Kingdom of Seigniory: for all power is given to me that Chriſt hath, and I am his Vicar-General as Peter was here in Earth over all, and none but I, as Chriſt is in Heaven. John 21.

{KING Hen.8.}

This ambitious and pompous objection, ſaith Tonſtal, of the Pope and his adherents, hath of late years much troubled the World, and made diſſenſion, debate, and open War in all parts of Chriſtendom, and all by a wrong interpretation of the Scripture. Who if he would take thoſe places after the right ſenſe of them, as both the Apoſtles themſelves taught us, and all the ancient beſt learned Interpreters do expound them, the matter were ſoon at a point. But otherwiſe, ſith they pervert the Scripture, and preach another Goſpel in that point to us, than ever the Apoſtles preached, we have therein a general rule to follow: That though an Angel came from Heaven, and would tell us ſuch new expoſitions of thoſe places, as are now made, to turn the words, which were ſpoken for Spiritual authority of preaching the Word of God and miniſtring of the Sacraments, to a worldly authority, we ought to reject him: as St. Paul willeth us, Galat. 1.

The Scriptures falſly perverted by the Pope.

Gal. 1.

To open therefore the true ſenſe of the Scripture in the places aforeſaid, and firſt to begin with the ſixteenth Chapter of Matthew: here is to be obſerved, that the queſtion being put in general of Chriſt to all his Apoſtles, what they thought or judged of him; Peter anſwering for them all (as he was always ready to anſwer) ſaid, Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God. To whom Jeſus anſwered again, Bleſſed be thou Simon the ſon of Jonah, for fleſh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven: And I ſay unto thee, thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church; and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. That is to ſay, Upon this Rock of thy confeſſion of me to be the Son of God I will build my Church; for this Faith containeth the whole Summary of our Faith and Salvation, as it is written, Rom. 10. The Word of Faith that we do preach is at hand, in thy mouth and in thine heart. For if thou confeſs with thy mouth our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and with thy heart do believe that God raiſed him from death to life, thou ſhalt be ſaved, &c. And this confeſſion being firſt uttered by the mouth of Peter, upon the ſame confeſſion of his, and not upon the Perſon of Peter, Chriſt buildeth his Church, as Chryſoſtom expoundeth that place in the 26th Sermon of the Feaſt of Penticoſt, ſaying, Not upon the Perſon of Peter, but upon the Faith Chriſt hath builded his Church. And what is the Faith? This: Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God. What is to ſay, Upon this Rock? That is, Upon this confeſſion of Peter, &c. And with this ſaying of Chryſoſtom all ancient Expoſitors (ſaith Tonſtal) treating of that place, do agree: for if we ſhould expound that place, that the Church is builded upon the Perſon of Peter, we ſhould put another Foundation of the Church, than Chriſt: which is directly againſt St. Paul, ſaying, No man may put any other foundation but that which is put already, which is Chriſt Jeſus, &c.

The place of Matth. 16 expounded.

Peter the firſt confeſſor of Chriſt.

The Church builded upon the confeſſion of Peter, not upon the Perſon of Peter.

Rom. 10

Faith the mother of Salvation.

1 Cor. 3.

And becauſe Peter was the firſt of all the Apoſtles that confeſſed this, That Chriſt is the Son of God, by the which Faith all Men muſt be ſaved; thereof cometh the Primacy; that is, the firſt place or ſtanding of Peter in the number of all the Apoſtles.

What is the Primacy of Peter, and how it cometh.

And as Peter was the firſt of them that confeſſed Chriſt to be the Son of God, ſo was he moſt ardent in his Faith, moſt bold and hardy in Chriſt, as appeared by his coming out of the Ship in the great Tempeſt; and alſo moſt vehement in his Maſters cauſe, as appeared by drawing out his Sword; and after the Lords Reſurrection is declared out of the Second, Third, and Fourth Chapters of the Acts; where the Jews withſtanding the Apoſtles preaching the Faith of Chriſt, Peter as moſt ardent in Faith, was ever moſt ready to defend the Faith againſt the impugners thereof, ſpeaking for them all unto the people, &c. and therefore hath theſe Honourable names given him by the ancient Interpreters, that ſometimes he is called, The mouth of the Apoſtles; The chief of the Apoſtles; ſometime the Prince of the Apoſtles, ſometime the Preſident of the whole Church, and ſometime hath the name of Primacy or Priority attributed unto him. And yet that the ſaid Peter, notwithſtanding theſe honourable names given to him, ſhould not have a rule or a judicial power above all the other Apoſtles, it is plain by St. Paul and many other.

The honorable names of Peter in the old Doctors, how and wherefore they be given.

Firſt, St. Paul, Gal. 2. plainly declareth the ſame, ſaying, That as the Apoſtleſhip of the Circumciſion, that is, of the Jews, was given by Chriſt to Peter; ſo was the Apoſtleſhip of the Gentiles given to me among the Gentiles. Hereby it appeareth that Paul knew no Primacy of Peter concerning people and places, but among the Jews. And thereof St. Ambroſe, expounding that place ſaith thus: The Primacy of the Jews was given chiefly to Peter, albeit James and John were joyned with him; as the Primacy of the Gentiles was given to Paul, albeit Barnabas was joyned with him: ſo that Peter had no rule over all.

The Authority of the Apoſtles all alike.

Ambroſius.

Alſo in the Acts 10. when Peter was ſent for to Cornelius a Gentile, he durſt not go to him without a ſpecial Viſion given him from Heaven by the Lord.

Acts 10.

Item, That all the Apoſtles had like Dignity and Authority, it appeareth by St. Paul. Epheſ. 2. where he ſaith, Now ye are not ſtrangers nor Foreigners, but ye be Citizens with the Saints, and of the houſhold of Almighty God, builded (ſaith he) upon the foundations of the Apoſtles and the Prophets, Chriſt being the corner-ſtone; upon whom every edifice being builded, groweth up to an Holy Temple in our Lord, &c. Here he ſaith that they be builded not upon the Foundation of Peter only, but upon the Foundation of the Apoſtles, ſo that all they be in the Foundation ſet upon Chriſt the very Rock, whereupon ſtandeth the whole Church.

Epheſ. 2.

The Church founded not of Peter only, but of the Apoſtles.

In the 21ſt Chapter alſo of the Apocalypſe, the new City, and the Heavenly Jeruſalem of Almighty God is deſcribed of the Holy Ghoſt, not with one Foundation only of Peter, but with twelve foundations, after the number of the Apoſtles.

Apoc. 21

S. Cyprian. lib. de ſimplic. Prælat. giveth Record likewiſe to the ſame, that the Apoſtles had equal Power and Dignity given to them by Chriſt: and becauſe all ſhould preach one thing, therefore the beginning thereof firſt came by one, which was Peter, who confeſſed for them all, That Chriſt was the Son of the living God. Saying further, That in the Church there is one office of all the Biſhops, whereof every Man hath a part allowed wholly unto him. Now, if the Biſhop of Rome may meddle over all, where he will, then every Man hath not wholly his part, for the Biſhop of Rome may alſo meddle in his part joyntly with him; ſo that now he hath it not wholly; which is againſt Cyprian.

Cyprian. lib. De ſimplic. Prælatis.

Every Biſhop hath his part wholly to himſelf.

S. Auſten likewiſe expounding the Goſpel of John, in the fiftieth Treaty, ſpeaketh there of the Keys of Peter, which he ſaith were given of Chriſt to Peter, not for himſelf alone, but for the whole Church.

Aug. in Joban. Tractat. 50.

Cyrillus expounding the laſt Chapter of John, and there ſpeaking of the Words of Chriſt ſpoken unto Peter; Feed my ſheep, &c. thus underſtandeth the ſame: That becauſe Peter had Thrice denied Chriſt, whereby he thought himſelf he had loſt his Apoſtleſhip, Chriſt to comfort him again, and to reſtore him to his Office that he had loſt, asked him thrice whether he loved him, and ſo reſtored him again to his Office, which elſe he durſt not have preſumed unto; ſaying unto him, Feed my ſheep, &c. With which expoſition the ancient Holy Expoſitors of that place do likewiſe agree. So that by theſe words of feeding Chriſts Sheep, the Biſhop of Rome can take no advantage to maintain his Univerſal Paſtorality over all Chriſtian Dominions.

Cyrillus in ult. cap. Johan.

Paſce oves meas, makes nothing for the Popes Univerſal Paſtorality.

Again, whereas the Biſhop of Rome ſaith, that Peter by theſe words of Chriſt ſpoken to him hath a preheminency above the other, S. Paul, Acts 20. proveth the contrary, where he, ſpeaking to the Biſhops aſſembled at Miletę, ſaith to them, Take heed to your ſelves, and to all your Flock, in which the Holy Ghoſt hath put you to govern, &c.

Acts 20.

ποιμάνειν.

And Peter himſelf likewiſe, 1 Peter chapter 5. ſaith, Ye that be Prieſts feed the flock of God among you, &c.

So that by theſe Scriptures conferred together, it may appear, that neither the ſixteenth Chapter of Matthew, nor the one and twentieth of John, do prove that Peter had power, authority, or dignity given him of Chriſt over all the other, that they ſhould be under him: And yet notwithſtanding his Primacy, in that he firſt of all the Apoſtles confeſſed Chriſt to be the Son of the living God (with the which confeſſion all the other Apoſtles did conſent, Scriptures wrongfully alledged for the Popes Supremacy.

and

and alſo preached the ſame) ſtandeth ſtill. Which confeſſion firſt by Peter made, all other that will be ſaved muſt follow alſo, and be taught to confeſs the ſame. And thus the Biſhops of Romes power over all, which he would prove by thoſe places wrongfully alledged for his purpoſe, utterly quaileth, and is not proved. And thus much for the Scriptures and Doctors.

Now further proceeding in this matter, the ſaid Tonſtal cometh to Counſels, and Examples of the Primitive Church, as followeth:

Examples of the Primitive Church againſt the Popes Supremacy.

Fauſtinus, Legate to the Biſhop of Rome, in the ſixth Council of Carthage, alledged that the Biſhop of Rome ought to have the ordering of all great matters in all places by his Supreme Authority, bringing no Scripture for him (for at that time no Scripture was thought to make for it) but alledged for him, and that untruly, the firſt Council of Nice to make for his purpoſe. After this, when the Book was brought forth, and no ſuch Article found in it, but the contrary, yet the Council at that time ſent to Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch, where the Patriarchal Sees were, to have the true Copy of the Council of Nice, which was ſent unto them. And another Copy alſo was ſent from Rome, whither alſo they ſent for the ſame purpoſe.

The Supremacy of Rome reproved by the Counſil of Nice.

After that the Copy was brought to them, and no ſuch Article found in it, but in the fifth Chapter thereof the contrary, that all cauſes Eccleſiaſtical ſhould either be determined within the Dioceſs, or elſe, if any were grieved, then to appeal to the Council provincial, and there the matter to take full end, ſo that for no ſuch cauſes Men ſhould go out of their Provinces; the whole Council of Carthag wrote to Celeſtine, at that time being Biſhop of Rome, That ſince the Council of Nice had no ſuch Article in it, as was untruly alledged by Fauſtinus, but the contrary, they deſired him to abſtain hereafter to make any more ſuch demand, denouncing unto him that they would not ſuffer any cauſe great or ſmall, to be brought by Appeal out of their Country; and thereupon made a Law, That no Man ſhould Appeal out of the Country of Africk, upon pain to be denounced accurſed. Wherewith the Biſhop of Rome ever after held him content, and made no more buſineſs with them, ſeeing he had nought to ſay for himſelf to the contrary. And at this Council St. Auguſtine was preſent, and ſubſcribed his hand. Read more hereof before.

The Council of Nice falſified by Fauſtinus the Popes Legate.

It was determined alſo in the ſixth Article of the ſaid Council of Nice, That in the Orient the Biſhop of Antioch ſhould be chief; in Egypt the Biſhop of Alexandria; about Rome the Biſhop of Rome; and likewiſe in other Countries the Metropolitanes ſhould have their preheminence: ſo that the Biſhop of Rome never had meddling in thoſe Countries.

The ſixth Article of Nicen's Council. The four chief Patriarchs equal in power.

And in the next Article following, the Biſhop of Jeruſalem (which City before had been deſtroyed, and almoſt deſolate) was reſtored to his old Prerogative, to be the chief in Paleſtine and in the Country of Jury.

By this ye ſee how the Patriarch of Rome, during all this time of the Primitive Church, had no ſuch Primacy preheminent above other Patriarchs, much leſs over Kings and Emperors, as may appear by Agatho Biſhop of Rome long after that, in whoſe time was the ſixth Council General. Which Agatho after his Election ſent to the Emperor, then being at Conſtantinople, to have his Election allowed, before he would be Conſecrate, after the old cuſtom at the time uſed.

Pope Agatho ſubjected to the Emperor.

In like ſort, another Biſhop of Rome called Vitalianus did the ſame, as it is written in the Decrees, Diſtinct. 63. Cap. Agatho.

Pope Vitalianus ſubject to the Emperor. 63. Diſt. Agatho. 63. Diſt. cum longe.

The like did St. Ambroſe and St. Gregory before them, as it is written in the Chapter cum longe, in the ſame Diſtinction. During all which time the Biſhops of Rome followed well the Doctrine of Saint Peter and St. Paul, left unto them, to be ſubjects, and to obey their Princes.

Biſhop Tonſtal a right Lutheran.

Thus after that Biſhop Tonſtal, playing the earneſt Lutheran, both by Scriptures and ancient Doctors, alſo by examples ſufficient of the Primitive Church, hath proved and declared, how the Biſhops of Rome ought to ſubmit themſelves to the higher powers whom God hath appointed every Creature in this World to obey; now let us likewiſe ſee how the ſaid Biſhop Tonſtal deſcribeth unto us his Diſobedience intolerable, his Pride incomparable, and his malignant Malice moſt execrable.

The diſobedience, the pride, and the malice of the Pope deſcribed.

And firſt ſpeaking of the Diſobedience of Adam and Eve, then of the Pride of Nabuchadonoſor and of Lucifer, at length he compareth the Biſhops of Rome to them all. Who firſt for Diſobedience refuſe to obey Gods Commandment, and contrary to his Word will be above their Governours, in refuſing to obey them.

The pride of the Pope deſcribed.

Secondly, Beſides this rebellious Diſobedience in theſe Biſhops of Rome, not ſufferable, their Pride moreover ſo far exceedeth all meaſure, that they will have their Princes, to whom they owe ſubjection, proſtrate upon the ground, to adore them by godly honour upon the Earth; and to kiſs their Feet, as if they were God, whereas they be but wretched Men, and yet they look that their Princes ſhould do it unto them, and alſo all other Chriſtian-men, owing them no ſubjection, ſhould do the ſame.

The Pope exalted above the Clouds and the Stars of Heaven.

And who be theſe I pray you, that Men may know them? Surely (ſaith he) the Biſhops of Rome be theſe whom I do mean, who following the Pride of Lucifer their Father, make themſelves fellows to God, and do exalt their Seat above the Stars of God, and do aſcend above the Clouds, and will be like to Almighty God. By Stars of God be meant the Angels of Heaven; for as Stars do ſhew unto us in part the light of Heaven, ſo do Angels ſent unto Men, ſhew the Heavenly Light of the grace of God to thoſe to whom they be ſent. And the Clouds ſignified in the Old Teſtament the Prophets, and in the New do ſignifie the Apoſtles and Preachers of the Word of God. For as the Clouds do conceive and gather in the Sky moiſture, which they after pour down upon the Ground to make it thereby more fruitful; ſo the Prophets in the Old Teſtament, and the Apoſtles and Preachers in the New, do pour into our Ears the moiſture of the Heavenly Doctrine of the Word of God, to make therewith by Grace our Souls, being fear and dry, to bring forth fruit of the Spirit. Thus do all ancient Expoſitors, and amongſt them St. Auguſtine, interpret to be meant in Scripture, Stars and Clouds, in the Expoſition of the Five and fortieth Pſalm.

Apoc. 19. 22.

But St. John the Evangeliſt writeth in the Nineteenth Chapter of the Apocalypſe, and in the Two and twentieth alſo, that when he would have fallen down at the Angels Foot that did ſhew him thoſe Viſions there written, to have adored him with godly worſhip, the Angel ſaid unto him: See thou do not ſo, for I am the ſervant of God, as thou art: give adoration and godly worſhip to God, and not to me. Here it appeareth, that the Biſhops of Rome ſuffering all Men proſtrate before them to kiſs their Feet (yea the ſame Princes, to whom they owe ſubjection) do climb up above the Stars and Angels too, offering their Feet to be kiſſed, with Shoes and all. For ſo I ſaw my ſelf being preſent. Four and thirty years ago, when Julius, then Biſhop of Rome ſtood on his Feet, and one of his Chamberlains held up his skirt, becauſe it ſtood not (as he thought) with his Dignity, that he ſhould do it himſelf, that his Shoe might appear, whilſt a Noble Man of great Age, did proſtrate himſelf upon the Ground, and kiſſed his Shoe: which he ſtately ſuffered to be done, as of duty. Where me think I ſaw Cornelius the Centurion, Captain of the Italian Band, ſpoken of in the Tenth Chapter of the Acts, ſubmitting himſelf to Peter, and much honouring him: but I ſaw not Peter there to take him up, and to bid him riſe, ſaying, I am a man as thou art, as St. Peter did ſay to Cornelius: ſo that the Biſhops of Rome, admitting ſuch adoration due unto God, do climb above the Heavenly Clouds; that is to ſay, above the Apoſtles ſent into the World by Chriſt, to Water the Earthly and Carnal hearts of Men, by their Heavenly Doctrine of the Word of God.

The Pope exalted above Angels.

The Pope climbeth above the Apoſtles.

Thus Biſhop Tonſtal having deſcribed the paſſing Pride of the Pope, ſurmounting like Lucifer above Biſhops, Apoſtles, Angels and Stars of Heaven, proceeding then further, to the later end of his Sermon, cometh to ſpeak of his rage and malice moſt furious and peſtilent, in that he being juſtly put from his Kingdom here to wreak his ſpiteful malice, ſtirreth up War againſt us, and bloweth the Horn of miſchief in giving our Land for a ſpoil and prey to all, whoſoever at his ſetting on on will come and Invade us. But let us hear his own words preaching to the King and all English-men, touching both the Popes Malice, and the Treason of Cardinal Pool.

The Pope ſtirreth up War againſt England.

KING Hen.8. The Treason of Cardinal Pool.

Now, saith he, because he can no longer in this Realm wrongfully use his Usurped power in all things (as he was wont to do) and suck out of this Realm by avarice insatiable, innumerable sums of Mony yearly, to the great exhausting of the same: he therefore, moved and repleat with furious ire and pestilent malice, goeth about to stir all Christian Nations, that will give ears to his Devillish inchantments, to move War against this Realm of England, giving it in prey to all those, that by his instigation will invade it.

The Pope giveth England away for a prey.

And here Expounding these foresaid words (To give in prey) he declareth what great mischief they contain, and willeth every true English-man well to mark the same. First to make this Realm, saith he, a prey to all venturers, all spoilers, all snaphaunses, all forlorn hopes, all cormorants, all ravenors of the World, that will invade this Realm, is to say, Thou possessioner of any Lands of this Realm, of what degree soever thou be, from the highest to the lowest, shalt be slain and destroyed, and thy Lands taken from thee by those that will have all for themselves: and thou maist be sure to be slain, for they will not suffer thee, nor none of thy progeny to live to make any claim afterward, or to be revenged, for that were their unsurety. Thy Wife shall be abused before thy face: thy Daughter likewise defloured before thee: thy Children slain before thine eyes: thy House spoiled: thy Cattel driven away and sold before thy visage: Thy Plate, thy Mony by force taken from thee; all thy Goods, wherein thou hast any delight, or hast gathered for thy Children, ravened, broken and distributed in thy presence, that every ravenor may have his share. Thou Merchant art sure to be slain, for thou hast either Mony or Ware, or both, which they search for. Thou Bishop or Priest, whatsoever thou be, shalt never escape, because thou wouldst not take the Bishop of Romes part, and rebel against God and thy Prince, as he doth, If thou shalt flee and escape for a season, whatsoever thou be, thou shalt see and hear of so much misery and abhomination, that thou shalt judge them happy that be dead before: for sure it is, thou shalt not finally escape: for, to take the whole Realm in prey, is to kill the whole People, and to take the place for themselves, as they will do if they can.

Cardinal Pool traitor to England.

And the Bishop of Rome now of late, to set forth his pestilent malice the more, hath allured to his purpose a subject of this Realm, Reginald Pool, comen of a Noble blood, and thereby the more errant Traitor, to go about from Prince to Prince, and from Country to Country, to stir them to War against this Realm, and to destroy the same, being his Native Country: whose pestilent purpose, the Princes that he breaketh it unto have in much abomination, both for that the Bishop of Rome, (who being a Bishop should procure Peace) is a stirrer of War, and because this most errant and unkind Traitor is his minister to so devillish a purpose, to destroy the Country that he was born in, which any Heathen Man would abhor to do.

The Popes name and memory abolished.

And so continuing in his Discourse against Cardinal Pool, and the Bishop of Rome for stirring the People to War and Mischief, he further saith, and saith truly, That for these many years past, little War hath been in these parts of Christendom, but the Bishop of Rome either hath been a stirrer of it, or a nourisher of it, and seldom any compounder of it, unless it were for his ambition or profit. Wherefore since, as St. Paul saith, That God 1 Cor. 14 is not the God of dissension, but of peace, who commandeth by his Word, Peace alway to be kept; we are sure that all those that go about to break Peace between Realms, and to bring them to War, are the Children of the Devil, what holy names soever they pretend to cloak their pestilent malice withal; which cloking under Hypocrisie is double devilishness, and of Christ most detested, because under his blessed name they do play the Devils part.

And in the later end of his Sermon, concluding with Ezek. 39. the thirty ninth Chapter of Ezekiel, where the Prophet speaketh against Gog and Magog, going about to destroy the People of God, and prophesieth against them, That the People of God shall vanquish and overthrow them on the Mountains of Israel, that none of them shall escape, but their Carkasses shall there be devoured of Kites and Crows, and Birds of the Air; so likewise saith he of these our Enemies, wishing, that if they shall persist in their pestilent malice to make Invasion into this Realm, then their great Captain Gog (the Bishop of Rome he meaneth) may come with them to drink with them of the same Cup, which he maliciously goeth about to prepare for us, that the People of God might after live quietly in Peace.

The Pope compared to Gog.

We have heard hitherto the Oaths, Censures, and Judgments of certain particular Bishops, of York, of Winchester, of London, of Duresme, and also of Edmund Bonner, Archdeacon then of Leicester, against the Popes unlawful Usurpation. Now for the more fortification of the matter, and satisfying of the Reader, it shall not be much out of purpose, besides the consent and approbation of these aforesaid, to inser also the publick and general agreement of the whole Clergy of England, as in a total sum together, confirmed and ratified in their own publick Book, made and set forth by them about the same time, called then The Bishops Book. In the which Book, although many things were very slender and unperfect, yet as touching this cause of the Bishop of Romes Regality, we will hear (God willing), what their whole Opinion and Provincial determination did conclude, according as by their own words in the same Book is to be seen word for word, as followeth, subscribed also with their own names; the Catalogue of whom, under their own confession, shall appear.

Testimonies out of the Bishops Book, against the Popes Supremacy.

WE think it convenient, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach the people committed unto their spiritual charge, that whereas certain Men do imagine and affirm, That Christ should give unto the Bishop of Rome Power and Authority, not only to be Head and Governor of all Priests and Bishops in Christs Church, but also to have and occupy the whole Monarchy of the World in his hands, and that he may thereby Lawfully Depose Kings and Princes from their Realms, Dominions and Seigniories, and so transfer and give the same to such persons as him liketh, That is utterly false and untrue; for Christ never gave unto St. Peter, or unto any of the Apostles, or their successors, any such Authority. And the Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, do teach and command, That all Christian people, as well Priests and Bishops, as others, should be obedient and subject unto the Princes and Potentates of the World, although they were Infidels.

And as for the Bishop of Rome, it was many hundred years after Christ, before he could acquire or get any Primacy or Governance above any other Bishops, out of his Province in Italy: since the which time he hath ever Usurped more and more. And though some part of his power was given to him by the consent of the Emperors, Kings and Princes, and by the consent also of the Clergy in General Councils assembled: yet surely he attainted the most part thereof by marvelous subtilty and craft, and especially by colluding with great Kings and Princes, sometime training them into his Devotion by pretence and colour of Holiness and Sanctimony, and sometime constraining them by force and tyranny. Whereby the said Bishops of Rome aspired and rose at length unto such greatness in strength and authority, that they presumed and took upon them to be Heads, and to put Laws by their own Authority, not only unto all other Bishops within Christendom, but also unto the Emperors, Kings, and other the Princes and Lords of the World, and that under the pretence of the Authority committed unto them by the Gospel. Wherein the said Bishops of Rome do not only abuse and pervert the true sense and meaning of Christs Word; but they do also clean contrary to the use and custom of the Primitive Church; and so do manifestly violate, as well the Holy Canons made in the Church immediately after the time of the Apostles,

How the Bishop of Rome rose by ambition.

Concilium tertium Carthagin. cap. 26.

First the General Council of Nice Decreed, That the Patriarchs of Alexandria, and Antiochia, should have like power over the Countries about those Cities, as the Bishops of Rome had over the Countries about Rome.

In the Council of Milevitane, it was Decreed, That if a Clerk of Africk would Appeal out of Africk unto any Bishop beyond the Sea, he should be taken as a person Excommunicate.

as alſo the Decrees and Conſtitutions made in that behalf by the Holy Fathers of the Catholick Church, aſſembled in the firſt General Councils. And finally, they do tranſgreſs their own profeſſion, made in their Creation. For all the Biſhops of Rome always, when they be Conſecrated and made Biſhops of that See, do make a ſolemn Profeſſion and Vow, That they ſhall inviolably obſerve and keep all the Ordinances made in the eight firſt General Councils: among the which it is ſpecially provided and enacted, That all Cauſes ſhall be finiſhed and determined within the Province where the ſame begun, and that by the Biſhops of the ſame Province, and that no Biſhop ſhall exerciſe any Juriſdiction out of his own Dioceſs or Province; and divers ſuch other Canons were then made and confirmed by the ſaid Councils to repreſs and take away out of the Church all ſuch Primacy and Juriſdiction over Kings and Biſhops, as the Biſhops of Rome pretend now to have over the ſame. And we find that divers good Fathers, Biſhops of Rome, did greatly reprove, yea, and abhor (as a thing clean contrary to the Goſpel, and the Decrees of the Church) that any Biſhop of Rome, or elſewhere, ſhould preſume, uſurp, or take upon him the title and name of the Univerſal Biſhop, or of the Head of all Prieſts, or of the Higheſt Prieſt, or any ſuch like title. For confirmation whereof, it is out of all doubt, that there is no mention made, neither in Scripture, nor in the Writings of any Authentical Doctor or Author of the Church, being within the time of the Apoſtles, that Chriſt did ever make or inſtitute any diſtinction or difference to be in the preheminence of Power, Order, or Juriſdiction, between the Apoſtles themſelves, or between the Biſhops themſelves, but that they were all equal in Power, Order, Authority and Juriſdiction. And that there is now, and ſince the time of the Apoſtles, any ſuch diverſity, or difference among the Biſhops, it was deviſed by the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church for the conſervation of good Order and Unity of the Catholick Church, and that either by the conſent and authority, or elſe at the leaſt by the permiſſion and ſufferance of the Princes, and Civil Powers for the time Ruling, &c.

In the General Council of Conſtantinople the firſt, it was likewiſe Decreed, That every cauſe between any perſons, ſhould be determined within the Provinces where the matters did lie; and that no Biſhop ſhould exerciſe any power out of his own Dioceſs or Province. And this was alſo the mind of Holy S. Cyprian, and of other holy Men of Africa.

To conclude therefore, the Pope hath no ſuch Primacy given him either by the words of Scripture, or by any General Council, or by common conſent of the holy Catholick Church.

Gregorius lib. 4. Epiſt. Indictione 14. Epiſt. 32.

And ſhortly after followeth; And for the better confirmation of this part, we think it alſo convenient, that all Biſhops and Preachers ſhall inſtruct and teach the people committed unto their Spiritual charge, that Chriſt did by expreſs words prohibit, that none of his Apoſtles, nor any of their Succeſſors ſhould, under the pretence of the Authority given unto them by Chriſt, take upon them the Authority of the Sword; that is to ſay, the Authority of Kings, or of any Civil Power in this World, yea, or any Authority to make Laws or Ordinances in Cauſes appertaining unto Civil Powers. Truth it is, the Prieſts and Biſhops may execute all ſuch Temporal Power and Juriſdicton, as is committed unto them by the Ordinance and Authority of Kings, or other Civil Powers, and by the conſent of the people (as Officers and Miniſters under the ſaid Kings and Powers) ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe the ſaid Kings and People to permit and ſuffer them ſo to uſe and execute the ſame. Notwithſtanding, if any Biſhop of what Eſtate or Dignity ſoever he be, be he Biſhop of Rome, or of any other City, Province, or Dioceſs, do preſume to take upon him Authority or Juriſdiction in Cauſes or Matters which appertain unto Kings, and the Civil Powers and their Courts, and will maintain or think that he may ſo do by the Authority of Chriſt and his Goſpel, although the Kings and Princes would not permit and ſuffer him ſo to do; no doubt, that Biſhop is not worthy to be called a Biſhop, but rather a Tyrant, and an Uſurper of other Mens rights, contrary to the Laws of God, and is worthy to be reputed none otherwiſe, than he that goeth about to ſubvert the Kingdom of Chriſt. For the Kingdom of Chriſt in his Church is a Spiritual, and not a Carnal Kingdom of the World; that is to ſay, the very Kingdom that Chriſt by himſelf, or by his Apoſtles and Diſciples ſought here in this World, was to bring all Nations from the Carnal Kingdom of the Prince of Darkneſs unto the Light of his Spiritual Kingdom, and ſo himſelf to reign in the hearts of the People, by Grace, Faith, Hope and Charity. And therefore, ſith Chriſt did never ſeek nor exerciſe any Worldly Kingdom or Dominion in this World, but rather, refuſing and flying from the ſame, did leave the ſaid Worldly governance of Kingdoms, Realms, and Nations, to be governed by Princes and Potentates, (in like manner as he did find them) and commanded alſo his Apoſtles and Diſciples to do the ſemblable, as it was ſaid before; whatſoever Prieſt, or Biſhop will arrogate or preſume to take upon him any ſuch Authority, and will pretend the Authority of the Goſpel for his defence therein, he doth nothing elſe but (in a manner as you would ſay) Crowneth Chriſt again with a Crown of Thorn, and traduceth and bringeth him forth again with his Mantle of Purple upon his Back, to be mocked and ſcorned of the World, as the Jews did to their own damnation.

The Biſhop of Rome judged to be a Tyrant, and Uſurper.

This Doctrine was ſubſcribed and allowed by the Witneſs and Teſtimony of theſe Biſhops and other learned Men, whoſe names hereunder follow, as appeareth in the Biſhops Book before named.

Teſtimonies of Biſhops and Doctors of England againſt the Pope.

Theſe were Doctors of Divinity, and of both Laws.

Judge

KING Hen. 8.

JUdge now thy ſelf, loving Reader, per confeſſata & allegata; that is, by theſe things heretofore confeſſed, alledged, allowed, proved and confirmed, by Pen ſet forth, by Words defended, and by Oath ſubſcribed by theſe Biſhops and Doctors, if either Martin Luther himſelf, or any Lutheran elſe could or did ever ſay more againſt the proud uſurpation of the Biſhop of Rome, than theſe Men have done. If they diſſembled otherwiſe than they meant, who could ever diſſemble ſo deeply, ſpeaking ſo pithily? If they meant as they ſpake, who could ever turn head to tail ſo ſuddenly and ſo ſhortly as theſe Men did? But becauſe theſe things we write for edification of other, rather then for commendation of them, let us mark therefore their reaſons, and let the perſons go.

The Biſhops of England then good Lutherans.

And although the ſaid proofs and arguments heretofore alledged, might ſuffice to the full diſcuſſion of this matter againſt the Popes uſurped Primacy; yet becauſe many do yet remain, which will not be ſatisfied, to refel therefore and confute this Popiſh Article of the Popes vain and proud Primacy, with as much matter and furniture of reaſons and allegations, as the writings and teſtimonies of theſe Biſhops and others do miniſter unto us; we mind (the Lord willing) to annex to theſe former confirmations of the Biſhops aforeſaid, another ſupplement alſo of a certain Epiſtle ſent by Biſhop Tonſtal, and by John Stokeſly Biſhop of London, to Cardinal Pool, for a more ample confutation of the uſurped Power. Concerning the argument of which Epiſtle, here is firſt to be underſtood, that about this time, or not much after, Cardinal Pool, Brother to the Lord Mountague, was attainted of high Treaſon, and fled away unto Rome, where, within a ſhort time after, he was made Cardinal of Saint Mary Coſmeden: Of whom more is to be ſpoken hereafter, the Lord ſo permitting, when we come to the time of Queen Mary. In the mean time he remaining at Rome, there was directed unto him a certain Epiſtle exhortatory by Stokeſly, Biſhop of London, and Tonſtal, Biſhop of Dureſme, perſwading him to relinquiſh and abandon the Supremacy of the Pope, and to conform himſelf to the Religion of his King. The Copy of which Epiſtle, for the reaſons and arguments therein contained about the ſame matter, we thought here not unworthy to be put in, or unprofitable to be read. The Tenor whereof here followeth.

The Epiſtle of Tonſtal and Stokeſly to Pool.

The true Copy of a certain Letter written by Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of Dureſme, and John Stokeſly Biſhop of London, to Cardinal Pool; proving the Biſhop of Rome to have no ſpecial ſuperiority over other Biſhops.

This Letter was teſtified by Cuthbert Tonſtal to Matthew Archbiſhop of Canterbury and others to be his own, about 14. days before his death. Read his trayterous Oration to the Emperor in his Book intituled, De Eccleſiæ Concordia, moving him to ſeek the deſtruction of king Henry, and the whole Realm of England.

FOr the good will that we have born unto you in times paſt, as long as you continued the Kings true Subject, we cannot a little lament and mourn, that you neither regarding the Ineſtimable kindneſs of the Kings Highneſs heretofore ſhewed unto you in your bringing up, nor the honour of the Houſe that you be come of, nor the wealth of the Country that you were born in, ſhould ſo decline from your Duty to your Prince, that you ſhould be ſeduced by fair words and vain promiſes of the Biſhop of Rome, to wind with him, going about by all means to him poſſible, to pull down and put under Foot your natural Prince and Maſter, to the deſtruction of the Country that hath brought you up, and for a Vain-glory of a red Hat to make your ſelf an Inſtrument to ſet forth his Malice, who hath ſtirred up, by all means that he could, all ſuch Chriſtian Princes as would give ears unto him, to depoſe the Kings Highneſs from his Kingdom, and to offer it as a prey for them that ſhould execute his malice, and to ſtir, if he could, his Subjects againſt him, in ſtirring and nouriſhing Rebellions in his Realm, where the Office and Duty of all good Chriſtian Men, and namely of us that be Prieſts, ſhould be to bring all commotion to tranquillity, all trouble to quietneſs, all diſcord to concord; and in doing contrary, we do ſhew our ſelves to be but the Miniſters of Satan, and not of Chriſt, who ordained all us that be Prieſts to uſe in all places the Legation of Peace, and not of diſcord. But ſince that cannot be undone that is done, ſecond it is to make amends, and to follow the doing of the prodigal Son ſpoken of in the Goſpel, who returned home to his Father, and was well accepted; as no doubt you might be, if you will ſay as he ſaid in knowledging your folly, and do as he did, in returning home again from your wandring abroad in ſervice of them, who little care what come of you, ſo that their purpoſe by you be ſerved. And if you be moved by your conſcience, that you cannot take the King your Maſter as Supreme head of the Church of England, becauſe the Biſhop Rome hath heretofore many years uſurped that name Univerſally over all the Church, under pretence of the Goſpel of Saint Matthew, ſaying, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church: Surely that Text many of the moſt holy and ancient Expoſitors wholly do take to be meant of the Faith, then firſt confeſſed by the mouth of Peter; upon which Faith, confeſſing Chriſt to be the Son of God, the Church is builded, Chriſt being the very loweſt foundation Stone, whereupon both the Apoſtles themſelves, and alſo the whole Faith of the Church of Chriſt, by them preached through the World, is founded and builded; and other foundation none can be, but that only, as Saint Paul ſaith, No other foundation can any Man lay beſide that which is laid, which is Chriſt Jeſus.

Matth. 18. The place of Matthew, Tu es Petrus expounded.

1 Cor. 3.

And where you think that the Goſpel of Luke proveth the ſame authority of the Biſhop of Rome, ſaying: Peter, I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith ſhall not fail: and thou being once converted, confirm thy Brethren. Surely that ſpeaketh only of the fall of Peter, known to Chriſt by his godly preſcience, whereof he gave an inkling, that after the time of his fall, he ſhould not deſpair, but return again, and confirm his Brethren, as he ever being moſt fervent of them, was wont to do. The place doth plainly open it ſelf that it cannot be otherwiſe taken, but this to be the very meaning of it, and not to be ſpoken but to Peter: for elſe his ſucceſſors muſt firſt fail in the Faith, and then convert, and ſo confirm their Brethren. And whereas you think that this place of the Goſpel of John, Feed my Sheep, was ſpoken only to Peter, and that thoſe words make him Shepherd over all, and above all; Saint Peter himſelf teſtifieth the contrary in his Canonical Epiſtle, where he ſaith to all Prieſts, Feed the flock of Chriſt which is among you, which he bad them do by the authority that Chriſt had put them in as followeth: And when the chief Shepherd ſhall appear, ye ſhall receive the incorruptible Crown of eternal glory. The ſame likewiſe Saint Paul in the Acts teſtifieth, ſaying, Give heed to your ſelves and to the whole flock, wherein the Holy Ghoſt hath ſet you to govern the Church of God. Where, in the original Text, the word ſignifying Regere, to govern, ποιμάινειν is the ſame that was ſpoken to Peter, Paſce, Feed, for it ſignifieth both in the Scripture. And that by theſe words he was not conſtitute a Shepherd over all, it is very plain by the Fact of Saint Peter, which durſt not enterpriſe much converſation among the Gentiles, but eſchewed it as a thing unlawful, and much rather prohibited than commanded by Gods Law, until he was admoniſhed by the revelation of the Sheet full of divers Viands, mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles; where if Chriſt by theſe words, Feed my Sheep, had given ſuch an univerſal Governance to Peter, then Peter, being more fervent than other of the Apoſtles to execute Chriſts commandment, would of his own courage have gone, without any ſuch new admonition, to Cornelius: except peradventure you would ſay, that Peter did not underſtand the ſaid words of Chriſt, for lack of the Light which the later Men have obtained to perceive, and thereby underſtand the words of Chriſt to Peter, better than Peter himſelf did. And ſtrange alſo it were to condemn Peter as an high Traitor to his Maſter after his Aſcenſion: as he indeed were worthy, if his Maſter had ſignified unto him, that the Biſhops of Rome, by his dying there, ſhould be heads of all the Church; and he knowing the ſame by theſe words Feed my ſheep, yet notwithſtanding his Maſters high legacy and commandment, would flee as he did from Rome, until his Maſter, encountring him by the way, with terrible words cauſed him to return.

Acts 10

As great Primacy given to St. Paul, as to Peter.

And becauſe this Hiſtory peradventure cannot weigh againſt an obſtinate mind to the contrary; What ſhall we ſay to the words of Saint Ambroſe, declaring and affirming that as great and as ample Primacy was given to Paul, as to Peter? Upon theſe words of Paul, He that wrought by Peter, &c. thus he writeth; Petrum ſolum nominat & ſibi comparat, quia primatum ipſe acceperat ad fundandam Eccleſiam; ſe quoque pari modo electum ut primatum habeat in fundandis Eccleſiis Gentium, &c. That is to ſay, He nameth Peter only, and compareth him to himſelf, becauſe he received a Primacy to build a Church; and that he in like ſort was choſen himſelf to have a Primacy in building the Churches of the Gentiles. And ſhortly after it followeth; Of thoſe (that is to ſay of the Apoſtles) which were the chiefeſt, his gift, he ſaith, was allowed, which he had received of God; ſo that he was found worthy to have the Primacy of preaching to the Gentiles, as Peter had in preaching to the Jews. And as he aſſigned to Peter for his companions thoſe which were of the chiefeſt Men amongſt the Apoſtles, even ſo alſo did he take to himſelf Barnabas; who was joyned unto him by Gods judgment; and yet did he challenge to himſelf alone the Prerogative or Primacy which God had given him, as to Peter alone it was granted among the other Apoſtles. So that the Apoſtles of the circumciſion gave their Hands to the Apoſtles of the Gentiles; to declare their concord in fellowſhip, that either of them ſhould know that they had received the perfection of the Spirit in the preaching of the Goſpel, and ſo ſhould not need either other in any matter. And ſhortly after ſaith S. Ambroſe, who durſt reſiſt Peter the chief Apoſtle? But another ſuch a one, which by the confidence of his election might know himſelf to be no leſs, and ſo might reprove boldly that thing which he conſiderately had done.

Equality of degree among the Apoſtes.

This equality of dignity which Saint Ambroſe affirmeth by Scripture to be equally given to Peter and Paul, Saint Cyprian and Saint Hierom do extend to all the Apoſtles. Cyprian ſaying thus; Hoc erant utique & cæteri Apoſtoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio prædíti, & honoris & poteſtatis; all the reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame, that Peter was, being endued with like equality of honour and power. And Saint Hierom thus, Cuncti Apoſtoli claves regni cœlorum acceperunt & ex æquo ſuper eos Eccleſiæ fortitudo fundatur: All the Apoſtles received the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and upon them, as indifferently and equally, is the ſtrength of the Church grounded and eſtabliſhed. Which Saint Hierom alſo, as well in his Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to Titus, as in his Epiſtle to Euagrius, ſheweth that theſe Primacies long after Chriſts Aſcenſion were made by the deviſe of Men, whereas before by the common agreement and conſent of the Clergy every of the Churches were governed, yea the Patriarchal Churches.

Cap. 1. ſuper Titum.

The words of Saint Jerom be theſe; Sciant ergo Epiſcopi ſe magis ex conſuetudine, quam diſpenſationis Dominicæ veritate, presbyteris eſſe majores: Let the Biſhops underſtand, that they be greater than other Prieſts, rather of cuſtom, than by the vertue and verity of the Lords Ordinance. And in his ſaid Epiſtle to Euagrius he hath the like ſentence, and addeth thereunto, Ubicunque fuerit Epiſcopus, ſive Romæ, ſive Eugubii, ſive Conſtantinopoli, &c. Whereſoever a Biſhop be, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Conſtantinople, he is of all one worthineſs, and of all one Prieſthood. And that one was elected which ſhould be preferred before other, it was deviſed for the Redreſs of Schiſms, leſt any one, challenging too much to himſelf, ſhould rent the Church of Chriſt. Theſe words only of Saint Jerom be ſufficient to prove that Chriſt by none of theſe three Texts (which be all that you and others do alledge for your opinion) gave to Peter any ſuch ſuperiority, as the Biſhop of Rome by them uſurpeth, and that Peter, nor no other of the chief Apoſtoles, did vindicate ſuch Primacy or ſuperiority, but utterly refuſed it, and therefore gave Preheminence above themſelves to one, that thought be be ſometimes called an Apoſtle, yet he was none of the Twelve, as Euſebius in the beginning of his ſecond Book, called Hiſtoria Eccleſiaſtica, doth teſtifie, alledging for him the great and antient Clerk Clemens Alexandrinus, ſaying thus: Petrus, Jacobus, ac Johannes, poſt aſſumptionem Salvatoris, quamvis ab ipſo fuerant omnibus pene Prælati, tamen non ſibi vindicarunt gloriam, ſed Jacobum, qui dicebatur Juſtus, Apoſtolorum Epiſcopum ſtatuunt. Peter, James, and John, after Chriſts Aſcenſion into Heaven, although they were by him preferred almoſt before all other, yet they challenged not that glory to themſelves, but decreed that James, who was called Juſtus ſhould be chief Biſhop of the Apoſtles. By theſe words it is clear, that James was the Biſhop of the Apoſtles, not becauſe, as ſome Men do gloſe, he was elected by the Apoſtles, but becauſe he had thereby the Primacy and Honour of a Biſhop in Jeruſalem, above the reſt of the Apoſtles.

{ KING Hen. 8. }

James the juſt made the Biſhop of the Apoſtles.

Seeing Paul was chief Primate of the Gentiles, it is againſt reaſon that the Romans ſhould challenge the Primacy by Peter.

And one thing is eſpecially to be noted, and alſo marvelled at, that the Biſhops of Rome do challenge this Primacy only by Peter, and yet Saint Paul, who was his equal, or rather ſuperior by Scripture in his Apoſtleſhip amongſt the Gentiles, whereof Rome was the principal, ſuffered at Rome where Peter did, and is commonly in all the Roman Church joyned with Peter in all appellations and titles of Preheminence, and both be called Principes Apoſtolorum, The chief of the Apoſtles. Upon both is equally founded the Church of Rome. The accounting of the Biſhops of Rome many years agreeth thereunto. For Euſebius ſaith, that Clemens tertius poſt Paulum & Petrum pontificatum tenebat, Clement was the third Biſhop after Saint Paul and Peter, reckoning them both as Biſhops of Rome, and yet therein preferring Saint Paul; with like words, ſaying of Alexander Biſhop of Rome, that Quinta ſucceſſione poſt Petrum atque Paulum plebis gubernacula ſortitus eſt. Alexander obtained the governance of the people by ſucceſſion, the fifth Biſhop after Peter and Paul. Ireneus alſo ſaith, as Euſebius reciteth, that Fundata & ædificata Eccleſia, beati Apoſtoli Lino officium Epiſcopatus injungunt. After the Church was once founded and builded, the holy Apoſtles charged Linus with the Biſhoprick. Whereby appeareth, that they both joyntly conſtituted him Biſhop of Rome, and received only their Apoſtleſhip injoyned to them by Chriſt. And therefore if the Biſhops of Rome challenge any Preheminence of authority by Peter, they ſhould as well, or rather challenge the ſame by Paul, becauſe they both founded it, and both there preached, and both there ſuffered, reſigning firſt that Biſhoprick to Linus and all at once.

Lib. 3. c. 21.

Lib. 5. cap. 6.

And if you will peradventure lean to the former preaching there by Peter, which by Scripture cannot be proved, yet then at leaſt Saint Paul and his ſucceſſors in Epheſus, ſhould have like Primacy, becauſe he founded firſt that Church, though Saint John after that did build it, as witneſſeth Euſebius, ſaying, Eccleſia quæ eſt apud Epheſum, a Paulo quidem fundata eſt, a Joanne vere ædificata. The Church which is at Epheſus, was founded of Paul, but it was built of Saint John. And ſo Peter ſhould have no other Primacy in Rome, but as Paul had in Epheſus, that is to ſay, to be counted as the firſt Preacher and converter of the people there to the Faith of Chriſt: and as well might all the Biſhops of Epheſus challenge Primacy of all Nations, both Gentiles and Jews, by Saint Paul the Apoſtle of the Gentiles their Founder, as the Biſhop of Rome by Saint Peter the Apoſtle only of the circumciſion, in caſe he were the firſt Founder, challenging Primacy over all. But undoubtedly, this Primacy over all, that the Biſhops of Rome of late do challenge, was not allowed, nor yet known nor heard of amongſt the ancient Fathers, though they had their Church of Rome in high eſtimation, as well for the notable vertuous deeds that the Clergy did there ſhew and exerciſe aboundantly to their Neighbours (as witneſſeth the ſaid Euſebius, alledging there the Epiſtle that Dionyſius Alexandrinus wrote to Soter, Biſhop of Rome, teſtifying the ſame) as for that the City of Rome was the moſt ample and chief City of the World, witneſſing Saint Cyprian, ſaying, Plane, quoniam pro magnitudine ſua debeat Carthaginem Roma præcedere, illic majora & graviora commiſit: Certainly, becauſe that Rome ought for the greatneſs thereof to excel Carthage, there Novatus committed the greater and more grievous offences. Which Saint Cyprian alſo, when he had ordained and appointed certain Decrees and Statutes unto the Biſhop of Rome, he did not ſubmit them to his reformation or judgment, but only ſignified his own ſentence to like him alſo; and yet adding thereunto, that if any Biſhops (meaning as well of Rome as of others) which were of the contrary opinions to him, would otherwiſe think or do, he would not then that his ſentence ſhould be to them prejudicial, neither would he thereby compel them to any thing, but would that they ſhould follow their own minds and cuſtoms: partly for that every one of the Biſhops hath liberty of his own will, and partly for that every Governour ſhall make an account to God of his own deed, as it appeareth plainly in his Epiſtle to Stephanus and Julianus. And in the third Epiſtle to Cornelius, towards the end, ſpeaking of the appeal that one Feliciſſimus, a Novatian, after his condemnation in Africa, made to Rome, he impugneth ſuch appeals, ſaying; Quia ſingulis paſtoribus portio gregis eſt aſcripta, quam regat unuſquiſque & gubernet, rationem ſui actus Domino redditurus, &c. For as much as every Paſtor hath his own flock committed unto him, which every one ought to rule and govern, and muſt give account to the Lord of his adminiſtration, it is decreed of us all, and we think it both meet and juſt, that every Mans cauſe and plea ſhould there be heard, where the crime is committed. This holy and excellent Clerk and Martyr Saint Cyprian would never either have impugned their appeal to Rome from their own Primacies, or ſo earneſtly having maintained his determinations in the Councils of Africk contrary to the opinion of the Biſhops of Rome and to their cuſtoms, without any ſubmiſſion by word or writing, if the Primacy over all, which the Biſhops of Rome do challenge and uſurp, had been grounded upon the plain Scriptures, as you with ſome others do think: And it is to be ſuppoſed alſo, that he would in all his Epiſtles have called them Patres, or Dominos, Fathers or Lords, as ſuperiors, and not always Fratres & Collegas, Brothers and Fellows in office, as but only his equals.

Appeal to Rome forbidden.

Cypr. lib. 3. Epiſt. ad Cornelium.

Which thing yet more plainly doth appear by the Acts of the Councils of Africk in Saint Auguſtines time: by which it is evident, that though the Faith of Chriſt was by the Romans firſt brought into Africk, (as Saint Auguſtine doth confeſs) yet it was not read nor known that the Biſhops of Rome uſed or challenged any ſoveraignty in Africk, unto this time. And yet then he did not challenge it by the right of Gods Word, but by the pretence of a certain Canon ſuppoſed to be in the Council of Nice: Which Article could never be found, though it were then very diligently ſought for through all the principal Churches of the Eaſt and South; but only was alledged of Julius Biſhop of Rome, out of his own Library. And you may be well aſſured, that if the Scriptures had made for it, neither the Biſhop of Rome would have left that certain proof by Scriptures, and truſted only to the teſtimony of an Article of that Council, being in doubt and unlikely to be found; nor yet Saint Auguſtine, with his holy and learned Company, would have reſiſted this demand, if it had been either grounded upon Scriptures, or determined in that or other Councils, or yet had ſtood with equity, good order or reaſon. Howbeit the largeneſs and magnificence of the buildings of that City, and the ancient excellency and ſuperiority of the ſame in temporal Dominions, was the only cauſe that in the Councils (where the Patriarchal Sees were ſet in order) the Biſhop of Rome was lotted to the firſt place, and not by any ſuch conſtitution made by Chriſt, as appeareth well by that, that Conſtantinople being at the ſame time of this ordering of the Patriarchal Sees, moſt amply enlarged by the Emperors, being before a ſmall Town, and of no renown and by them moſt magnificently builded and advanced with all worldly titles, prerogatives, and priviledges temporal like unto Rome, and therefore called Nova Roma, New Rome, was therefore advanced alſo to the ſecond See and place; Antiochia in the Eaſt (where Saint Peter firſt took the Chair before he came to Rome, and where Chriſtian Men had firſt their name given them) yea, and Jeruſalem (which was the firſt Mother City of our Faith, and where Chriſt himſelf firſt founded the Faith) and alſo Alexandria, being recited to the third, fourth and fifth places, becauſe at that time they were not in ſo high eſtimation in the World, though in the Faith of Chriſt all they were Antients, and ſome of them Mothers to Rome.

Diſt. 16. Virginii.

Truth it is, that the Biſhops of the Orient, for debates in matters of the Faith amongſt themſelves, made ſutes to the Biſhop of Rome; but that was not for the ſuperiority of juriſdiction over them, but becauſe they were greatly divided, and thoſe Countries, as well Biſhops as others, much infected with the Hereſies of the Arrians, whereof the Weſt was in a manner clear: and among them of the Orient, none were counted indifferent to decide thoſe matters, but were all ſuſpected of affection for one cauſe or other. Wherefore they deſired the opinions of the Biſhops of the Weſt, as indifferent, and not intangled with affections of any of thoſe parts, neither corrupted with any of the Arrians, as appeareth by the Epiſtles of Saint Baſil, written in all their names for the ſaid purpoſe. In the which alſo it is eſpecially to be noted, that their ſute was not made to the Biſhop of Rome ſingularly, or by name, but (as the Titles do ſhew) to the whole Congregation of the Biſhops of Italy and France, or of the whole Weſt, and ſometime preferring the French and Italian Biſhops, ſaying, Gallis & Italis, and never naming the Romans. And for a clear proof that the ancient Fathers knew not this Primacy of one above all, we need none other teſtimony but their determination in the Council of Nice, that Alexandria, and Antiochia, and Univerſally all other Primates, ſhould have the whole governance of their confine Countries, like as the Biſhop of Rome had of thoſe that Inhabited within his Suburbs. And this determination proveth alſo, that your three Scriptures meant nothing leſs than this Primacy over all. For God forbid that we ſhould ſuſpect that Council as ignorant of thoſe plain Scriptures, to which ſince that time all Chriſtendom hath leaned, as the Anchor of our Faith. And if you like to read the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, there you may ſee, that Athanaſius, and other Patriarchs did execute that Primacy, as in making, conſecrating, and ordering of Churches, Biſhops and Clerks, in their Countries Eaſt and South, as the Biſhops of Rome in that time did in the Weſt and North.

The old Fathers never knew the Primacy of the Church of Rome.

And if you would yet any thing object againſt any of theſe witneſſes, then to eſchew contention, and for a final Concluſion, let the Biſhop of Rome ſtand to his own confeſſion made many years paſt by his Predeceſſor Agatho, to the Emperors, Conſtantine, Heraclius, and Tiberius, in his Epiſtle written to them in his name, and in the name of all the Synod which he thought to be under the See Apoſtolick: wherein, ſoon after the beginning of the Epiſtle, he comprehendeth them all under the name of the Biſhops dwelling in the North and Weſt parts of their Empire; ſo that there in his own Epiſtle he confeſſeth all his ſubjects and obedienciaries to be only of the North and Weſt. And ſo it appeareth evidently by his own confeſſion, that neither by Gods Law nor Mans Law he had to do with any perſon of the Eaſt or South. And this his high Sovereignty over all, challenged (as you and others ſay) by Scripture, as by his own confeſſion doth appear is brought into a little and ſtraight Angle. And this Agatho was not a Man unlearned, as appeareth by the Acts of the ſixth Synod of Conſtantinople, in the fourth Act, wherin is written at large and expreſſed the ſaid Epiſtle and Confeſſion. And the Primacy of Peter, which ancient Doctors ſpeak of, which was only in preaching and teaching the Faith of Chriſt, which he firſt among all the Apoſtles, and firſt of all mortal Men, did expreſs with his mouth, did after ſo adhere to his own perſon, that it was never derived either to any ſucceſſor, or to any other Apoſtle, but chiefly to himſelf; for all other afterwards profeſſing the ſame, ſpake it according unto him who had profeſſed it before. Moreover, all the Apoſtles (as Saint John ſaith) be foundations in the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and not Peter only. Alſo Cyprian affirmeth, (as is aforeſaid) that all the Apoſtles were of equal Dignity and Power; which all ancient Authors likewiſe do affirm. For Chriſt gave the Apoſtles like power in the Goſpel, ſaying; Go, Matth. 28. and teach all nations, baptiſing them, &c. And Saint Paul (as is ſaid before) knew no other Primacy given to Peter to preach in any place but among the Jews, as he himſelf had amongſt the Gentiles, as he writeth to the Galathians. Whereupon Saint Ambroſe writing (as is aforeſaid) affirmeth the ſame. And that the Mother of all Churches is Jeruſalem (as is aforeſaid) and not Rome, the Scripture is plain, both in the Prophet Eſay; Out of Sion ſhall the Law proceed, and the Word of the Lord out of Jeruſalem: Upon the which place Saint Jerom Eſay 2. ſaith; In Hieruſalem primum fundata Eccleſia totius orbis Eccleſias ſeminavit: Out of the Church being firſt founded in Jeruſalem, ſprung all other Churches of the whole World: and alſo in the Goſpel which Chriſt before his Aſcention commanded his Apoſtles to preach thorowout all the World, beginning firſt at Jeruſalem; ſo that the Biſhop of Romes Univerſal power by him claimed over all cannot by any Scripture be juſtified: as if you have read the ancient Fathers expoſitions of the ſaid Scriptures (as we ſuppoſe you have, ſince your Letters ſent hither concerning this matter) and would give more credence to their humble and plain ſpeaking, than to the later contentious and ambitious Writers of that high, and above the Ideas of Platoes ſubtilty (which paſſeth, as you write, the Lawyers learning and capacity) we doubt not but that you perceive and think the ſame.

In the time of Pope Agatho, the See of Rome had no rule over the Eaſt and South Churches.

A Prince may be head of his Church, and yet not preach nor minister Sacraments.

And where you think that the King cannot be taken as ſupreme head of the Church, becauſe he cannot exerciſe the chief Office of the Church in preaching and miniſtring of the Sacraments; it is not requiſite in every Body natural, that the Head ſhould exerciſe either all manner of Offices of the Body, or the chief Office of the ſame. For albeit the Head is the higheſt and chief Member of the natural Body, yet the diſtribution of life to all the Members of the Body, as well to the Head as to other Members, cometh from the Heart, and it is the Miniſter of life to the whole Body, as the chief act of the Body.

Neither yet hath this ſimilitude his full place in a myſtical Body, that a King ſhould have the chief Office of Adminiſtration in the ſame: and yet notwithſtanding the Scripture ſpeaking of King Saul, ſaith, I made thee head 1 Reg. 15. amongſt the Tribes of Iſrael. And if a King amongſt the Jews were the head in the Tribes of Iſrael, in the time of the Law, much more is a Chriſtian King head in the Tribes of ſpiritual Iſrael, that is, of ſuch as by true Faith ſee Chriſt who is the end of the Law. The Office deputed to the Biſhops in the myſtical Body, is to be as eyes to the whole Body, as Almighty God ſaith to the Prophet Ezechiel; I have made thee an overſeer over Ezech. 3. A Biſhop is an eye in the head, but not the head of the myſtical Body. the houſe of Iſrael. And what Biſhop ſoever refuſeth to uſe the Office of an eye in the myſtical Body, to ſhew unto the Body the right way of believing and living, which appertaineth to the ſpiritual eye to do, ſhall ſhew himſelf to be a blind eye; and if he ſhall take any other Office in hand than appertaineth to the right eye, he ſhall make a confuſion in the Body, taking upon him an other Office than is given him of God. Wherefore if the eye will not take upon him the Office of the whole head, it may be anſwered, it cannot ſo do, for it lacketh brain. And Examples ſhew likewiſe that it is not neceſſary alway that the head ſhould have the faculty or chief Office of Adminiſtration, as you may ſee in a Navy by Sea; where the Admiral, who is a Captain over all, doth not meddle with ſteering or governing of every Ship, but every particular Maſter muſt direct the Ship to paſs the Sea in breaking the Waves by his ſteering and governance, which the Admiral the head of all doth not himſelf, nor yet hath the faculty to do, but commandeth the Maſters of the Ship to do it. And likewiſe many a Captain of great Armies, which is not able, nor never could peradventure ſhoot, or break a Spear by his own ſtrength, yet by his wiſdom and commandment only atchieveth the Wars, and attaineth the Victory.

The office of a head ſtands not in doing, but in commanding.

Unity, what it is, and wherein it conſiſteth.

And where you think that Unity ſtandeth not only in the agreeing in one Faith and Doctrine of the Church, but alſo in agreeing in one head; if you mean the very and only head over all the Church our Saviour Chriſt, whom the Father hath ſet over all the Church, which is his Body, wherein all good Chriſtian Men do agree, therein you ſay truth. But if you mean of any one mortal Man to be the { KING, Hen. head over all the Church, and that to be the Biſhop of Rome, we do not agree with you. For you do there err in the true underſtanding of the Scripture; or elſe you muſt ſay that the ſaid Council of Nice, and other moſt ancient did err, which divided the Adminiſtration of Churches, the Orient from the Occident, and the South from the North, as is before expreſſed; and that Chriſt the Univerſal head is preſent in every Church, the Goſ- Matth. 18. pel ſheweth, Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. And in another place, Behold, I am with you until the end of the world. Matth. 28. By which it may appear Chriſt the Univerſal head every where to be with his myſtical Body the Church; who by his Spirit worketh in all places (how far ſoever they be diſtant) the unity and concord of the ſame. And as for any other Univerſal head to be over all, than Chriſt himſelf, Scripture proveth not, as it is ſhewed before. And yet for a further proof, to take away the ſcruples that peradventure do to your appearance riſe of certain words in ſome ancient Authors, and ſpecially in Saint Cyprians Epiſtles, as that the Unity of the Church ſtood in the Anſwer to St. Cyprian. Unity with the Biſhop of Rome, though they never call him ſupreme head; if you will weigh and conſider all their ſayings together, you ſhall perceive that they neither ſpake nor meant otherwiſe; but when the Biſhop of Rome was once lawfully elected and inthroned, if then any other would by faction, might, force, or otherwiſe (the other living and doing his Office) enterpriſe to put him down, and uſurp the ſame Biſhoprick, or exerciſe the others Office himſelf, as Novatianus did attempt in the time of Cornelius; then the ſaid Fathers reckoned them Catholicks that did Communicate with him that was ſo lawfully elected: and the cuſtom was, one Primacy to have to do with another, by congratulatory Letters, ſoon after the certainty of their Election was known, to keep the Unity of the Church; and all they that did take part with, or maintain the Uſurper, to be Schiſmaticks, becauſe that Uſurper was a Schiſmatick; Quia non ſit fas in eadem Eccleſia, duos ſimul Epiſcopos eſſe, nec priorem legitimum Epiſcopum ſine ſua culpa deponi; Becauſe it was not lawful for two Biſhops to be at once together in one Church, neither the former Biſhop being lawful, to be depoſed without his fault were proved. And this is not a Prerogative of the Church of Rome, more The Church of Rome hath no more prerogative than any other Church. than of any other Cathedral, ſpecial, Patriarchal, or Metropolitical Church, as appeareth in the third Epiſtle of the firſt Book, and in the eighth of the ſecond, and of the fourth Book of Saint Cyprian to Cornelius. Whoſe words and reaſons, although peradventure they might ſeem to include the Unity of the Church in the Unity of The Unity of the Church ſtandeth not on the Unity of the Biſhop of Rome. the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe they were all written to him in his own caſe, may as well be written unto any other Biſhop lawfully choſen, who percaſe ſhould be likewiſe diſturbed as the Biſhops of Rome then were be any Factions of ambitious Hereticks.

And where you think the name of ſupreme head under Chriſt, given and attributed to the Kings Majeſty, maketh an innovation in the Church, and perturbation of the Order of the ſame; it cannot be any innovation or trouble to the Church to uſe the room that God hath called him to, which good Chriſtian Princes did uſe in the beginning, when Faith was moſt pure, as Saint Auguſtine, Ad Glorium & Eleuſium ſaith; Ait enim quidam, non debuit Epiſcopus pro conſulari judicio purgari, &c. One there is which ſaith, that a Biſhop ought not to have been put to his purgation before the Judgment Seat of the Deputy, as though he himſelf procured it, and not rather the Emperor himſelf cauſed this inquiry to be made, to whoſe juriſdiction (for the which he muſt anſwer to God) that cauſe did ſpecially pertain. Chryſoſtome writeth of that Imperial authority thus: Læſus eſt qui non habet parem ullum ſuper terram: ſummitas & caput eſt omnium hominum ſuper terram: He is offended that hath no Peer at all upon the Earth, for he is the higheſt Potentate, and the head of all Men upon Earth. And Tertullian ad Scapulam ſaith, Colimus ergo & Imperatorem ſic, quomodo & nobis licet; & ipſi expedit, ut hominem a Deo ſecundum, &c. We honour and reverence the Emperor in ſuch wiſe, as is lawful to us and expedient to him, that is to ſay, as a Man next {KING Hen. 8.} and the ſecond to God, from whom he hath received all the power he hath, and alſo inferior to God alone, whoſe pleaſure it is ſo to have it: for thus he is greater than all Men, whilſt he is inferior but to God alone.

Tertul. in Apologet. And the ſaid Tertullian in his Book Apologetical ſpeaking of the Emperors, ſaith, Sciunt quis illis dederit imperium, &c. They know who hath given to them their government; they know that God is he alone, under whoſe only power they be, and take themſelves as ſecond to God, after whom they be chief above all other.

Theophil. in Rom. Theophylact alſo to the Romans upon this place, Omnis anima poteſtatibus ſublimioribus ſubdita ſit, ſaith, The Apoſtle there teacheth every Man, Sive Sacerdos ille ſit, ſive Monachus, ſive Apoſtolus, ut ſe Principibus ſubdat: That whether he be a Prieſt, or a Monk, or an Apoſtle, he ſhould ſubject himſelf to Princes: That is, although thou be an Apoſtle, an Evangeliſt, a Prophet, or whatſoever thou art, be ſubject. Non enim, ſaith he, ſubvertit pietatem hæc ſubjectio; For this ſubjection overthrows not godlineſs: And the Apoſtle ſaith not only, Let him obey, but let him be ſubject.

And if the Apoſtles be ſubject to Princes, much more all Biſhops and Patriarchs, yea the Biſhops of Rome and all other.

2 Paral. 28. 2 Paral. 16. 2 Paral. 19. It is written alſo in the Chronicles, David ſaid to Solomon, behold the Prieſts and Levites divided in Companies, to do all manner of ſervice that pertaineth to the Houſe of God. Alſo David did appoint chiefly to thank the Lord, Aſaph and his Brethren, &c. and Jehoſaphat the King did conſtitute Levites and Prieſts, and the ancient Families of Iſrael for the judgment and cauſe of the Lord towards all the Inhabitants of the Earth; and he charged them ſaying, Thus ſhall ye do in the fear of the Lord, faithfully and in a perfect heart. Chron. 31. Furthermore Ezechias appointed the Prieſts and the Levites in their Order, to wait by courſe every Man according to his Office. And it followeth, Ezechias gave commandment to the people dewelling in Jeruſalem, that they ſhould give their portions unto their Prieſts and Levites, that they might attend to the Law of the Lord. Where it followeth alſo, that by the Precept of Ezechias the King, and of Azarias the Biſhop of the Houſe of the Lord, all things were done, to whom pertained all the diſpenſation of the Houſe of the Lord. And in the end it is ſaid, Ezechias did theſe things in all Jury; he wrought that which was good, right and true before his Lord God in all the furniture of the miniſtery of the Houſe of the Lord, according to the Law and Ceremonies, Chron. 31. deſirous to ſeek his Lord God with all his heart, as he did and proſpered therein. Joſias alſo did ordain Prieſts in their Offices, and commanded many things.

By all which it may appear, that Chriſtian Kings be Sovereigns over the Prieſts, as over all other their Subjects, and may command the Prieſts to do their Offices, as well as they do others; and ought by their ſupreme Office to ſee that all Men of all degrees do the Duties, whereunto they be called either by God or by the King; and thoſe Kings that ſo do chiefly do execute well their Office. So that the Kings Highneſs taken upon him, as Supreme head of the Church of England, to ſee that as well ſpiritual Men as temporal do their Duties, doth neither make innovation in the Church, nor yet trouble the Order thereof; but doth as the chief and beſt of the Kings of Iſrael did, and as all good Chriſtian Kings ought to do. Which Office good Chriſtian Emperors always took upon them, in calling the Univerſal Councils of all Countries in one place and at one time, to aſſemble together, to the intent that all Hereſies troubling the Church might there be extirped; calling and commanding as well the Biſhop Rome, as other Patriarks and all Primates, as well of the Eaſt as of the Weſt, of the South as of the North, to come to the ſaid Councils. As Martianus the Emperor did in calling the great Council of Chalcedon, one of the four chief and firſt general Councils, commanding Leo then Biſhop of Rome to come unto the ſame. And albeit Leo neither liked the time, which he would for a ſeaſon ſhould have been deferred; nor yet the place, for he would have had it in Italy, whereas the Emperor by his own commandment had called it to Chalcis in Aſia: yet he anſwered the Emperor, that he would gladly obey his commandment, and ſent thither his Agents to appear there for him, as doth appear in the Epiſtles of Leo to Martian then Emperor, Forty firſt, Forty ſeventh, Forty eighth, and in the Forty ninth Epiſtle to Pulcheria the Empreſs. And likewiſe deſireth Theodoſius the Emperor to command a Council of Biſhops to be called in Italy, for taking away ſuch contentions and troubles, as at that time troubled the quietneſs of the Churches. And in many moe Epiſtles of the ſame Leo it doth manifeſtly appear, That the Emperors always aſſembled general Councils by their commandments: And in the Sixth general Council it appeareth very plainly, that at that time the Biſhops of Rome made no claim nor uſed any title to call themſelves heads Univerſal over all the Catholick Church, as it doth appear in the ſuperſcription or ſalutation of the foreſaid Synodical Preamble, which is this, word for word.

To the moſt godly Lords and moſt noble Victors and Conquerors, the welbeloved Children of God and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Conſtantine the great Emperor, and Heraclius and Tyberius, Cæſars: Biſhop Agatho the Servant of the Servants of God, with all the convocations ſubject to the Council of the See Apoſtolick, ſendeth greeting. And he expreſſeth what Countries he reckoned and comprehended in that ſuperſcription or ſalutation; for it followeth, that thoſe were under his aſſembly, which were in the North and Eaſt parts, ſo that at that time the Biſhop of Rome made no ſuch pretence to be over and above all, as he now doth by uſurpation, vendicating to himſelf the ſpiritual Kingdom of Chriſt, by which he reigneth in the hearts of all faithful People, and then changeth it to a temporal Kingdom over and above all Kings, to depoſe them for his pleaſure, preaching thereby the Fleſh for the Spirit, and an Earthly Kingdom for an Heavenly, to his own Damnation, if he repent not: whereas he ought to obey his Prince by the Doctrine of Saint Peter in his firſt Epiſtle, ſaying, 1 Pet. 2. Be ye ſubject to every ordinance of Man, for the Lords ſake, whether it be to the King as to the chief, or unto Governours, as ſent of him to the puniſhment of the evil doers, and to the praiſe of the good. Again, Saint Paul, Let every ſoul be ſubject to the higher powers. Rom. 13. With other things before alledged. So that this his pretenſed uſurpation to be above all Kings is directly againſt the Scriptures, given to the Church by the Apoſtles, whoſe Doctrine whoſoever overturneth, can be neither the Head, nor yet the leaſt Member of the Church.

Wherefore, albeit ye have hitherto ſticked to the ſaid wrongfully uſurped Power, moved thereto, as ye write, by your conſcience; yet ſithence now ye ſee further, if ye liſt to regard the meer truth, and ſuch ancient Authors as have been written to you of in times paſt, we would exhort you, for the weatlh of your ſoul, to ſurrender into the Biſhop of Romes hands your red Hat, by which he ſeduced you, truſting ſo to make you, being come of a Noble Blood, an inſtrument to advance his Vain-glory; whereof by the ſaid Hat he made you participant, to allure you thereby the more to his purpoſe.

In which doing ye ſhall return to the truth from which ye have erred, do your duty to your Sovereign Lord from whom ye have declined, and pleaſe thereby Almighty God, whoſe Laws ye have tranſgreſſed: and in not ſo doing ye ſhall remain in error, offending both Almighty God, and your natural Sovereign Lord, whom chiefly ye ought to ſeek to pleaſe. Which thing, for the good mind that we heretofore have born you, We pray Almighty God of his infinite mercy that you do not. Amen.

When all other the Kings Subjects, and the learned of the Realm had taken and accepted the Oath of the Kings Supremacy, only Fiſher the Biſhop of Rocheſter and Sir Thomas More refuſed (as is aforeſaid) to be ſworn: who therefore falling into the danger of the Law, were committed into the Tower, and executed for the ſame, An. 1535. This John Fiſher aforeſaid had written before againſt Oecolampadius, whoſe Book is yet extant, and afterward againſt Luther.

{Ann. 1535} John Fiſher Biſhop of Roeheſter enemy to Chriſts Goſpel.

Alſo amongſt other his Acts he had been a great enemy and perſecutor of John Frith, the godly and learned Martyr of Jeſus Chriſt, whom he and Sir Thomas More caused to be burned a year and half before: and shortly after the said Fisher, to his confusion, was charged with Elizabeth Barton (called the holy Maid of Kent) and found guilty by Act of Parliament, as is above recorded. For his learning and other vertues of life this Bishop was, well reputed and reported of by many, and also much lamented of some. But whatsoever his learning was pity it was that he, being endued with that knowledge, should be so far drowned in such superstition; more pity that he was so obstinate in his ignorance; but most pity of all, that he so abused the learning he had to such cruelty as he did. But this commonly we see come to pass, as the Lord saith, That whoso striketh with the sword shall perish with the sword, and they that stain their hands with blood seldom do bring their bodies dry to the grave; as commonly appeareth by the end of bloody Tyrants, and especially such as be persecutors of Christs poor Members. In the number of whom was this Bishop and Sir Thomas More, by whom good John Frith, Tewksbury, Thomas Hytten, Bayfield, with divers other good Saints of God were brought to their death. It was said, That the Pope, to recompence Bishop Fisher for his faithful service, had elected him Cardinal, and sent him a Cardinals Hat as far as Calice; but the head that it should stand upon was as high as London Bridge, ere ever the Popes Hat could come to him. Thus Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More, which a little before had put John Frith to death for Heresie against the Pope, were themselves executed and beheaded for Treason against the King, the one the 22*d* of June, the other the 6*th* of July Anno 1535.

Blood revenged with Blood.

Bishop Fisher and Sir Tho. More persecutors.

Bishop Fisher and Sir Tho. More beheaded.

Of Sir Thomas More something hath been touched before, who was also recounted a Man both witty and learned: but whatsoever he was beside, a bitter Persecutor he was of good Men, and a wretched enemy against the truth of the Gospel, as by his Books left behind him may appear, wherein most slanderously and contumeliously he writeth against Luther, Zuinglius, Tindal, Frith, Barns, Bayfield, Bainham, Tewksbury, falsly belying their Articles and Doctrine, as (God granting me life) I have sufficient matter to prove against him.

The lying Books of Sir Tho. More.

Briefly, as he was a sore Persecutor of them that stood in defence of the Gospel, so again on the other side such a blind devotion he bare to the Pope-holy See of Rome, and so wilfully stood in the Popes quarrel against his own Prince, that he would not give over till he had brought the Scaffold of the Tower-Hill, with the Axe and all upon his own neck.

M. More a persecutor.

Edward Hall in his Chronicle, writing of the death and manners of this Sir Thomas More, seemeth to stand in doubt whether to call him a foolish wise Man, or a wise foolish Man. For as by nature he was endued with a great Wit, so the same again was so mingled (saith he) with taunting and mocking, that it seemed to them that best knew him, that he thought nothing to be well spoken, except he had ministred some mock in the Communication; insomuch as at his coming to the Tower, one of the Officers demanding his upper Garment for his Fee, meaning his Gown, he answered that he should have it, and took him his Cap, saying it was the uppermost Garment that he had. Likewise even going to his death, at the Tower Gate, a poor Woman called unto him, and besought him to declare that he had certain Evidences of hers in the time that he was in Office (which after he was apprehended she could not come by) and that he would intreat that she might have them again, or else she was undone. He answered; Good Woman, have patience a little while, for the King is so good to me, that even within this half hour he will discharge me of all businesses, and help thee himself. Also when he went up the Stair of the Scaffold, he desired one of the Sheriffs Officers to give him his hand to help him up, and said, When I come down again, let me shift for my self so well as I can. Also the Hang-man kneeled down to him, asking him forgiveness of his death, as the manner is. To whom he answered, I forgive thee; but I promise thee that thou shalt never have honour of the striking off my Head, my neck is so short. Also even when he should lay down his neck on the block, he having a great gray Beard, striked out his Beard, and said to the Hang-man, I pray you let me lay my Beard over the block, lest you should cut it; thus with a mock he ended his life. {KING Hen 8}

M. More a scoffer unto his death.

There is no doubt but that the Popes Holyness hath hallowed and dignified these two persons long since for Catholick Martyrs. Neither is it to be doubted, but after an hundred years expired, they shall be also shrined and portissed, dying as they did in the quarrel of the Church of Rome, that is, in taking the Bishop of Romes part, against their own ordinary and natural Prince. Whereunto (because the matter asketh a long Discourse, and a peculiar Tractation) I have not in this place much to contend with Cope my Friend. This briefly for a Memorandum may suffice; That if the causes of true Martyrdom ought to be pondered, and not to be numbred, and if the end of Martyrs is to be weighed by judgment, and not by affection; then the cause and quarrel of these Men standing as it doth, and being tried by Gods Word, perhaps in the Popes Kingdom they may go for Martyrs, in whose Cause they died; but Certes in Christs Kingdom their Cause will not stand, howsoever they stand themselves.

The like also is to be said of the three Monks of the Charter-house, Ermew, Middlemore, and Nudigate, who the same year in the month of June were likewise attached and arraigned at Westminster, for speaking certain Traiterous words against the Kings Crown and Dignity; for the which they were Hanged, drawn, and Quartered at Tiburn: whom also, because Cope my good Friend doth repute and accept in the number of holy Catholick Martys, here would be asked of him a Question; What Martyrs be they, which standing before the Judge, deny their own words and sayings, and plead not guilty, so as these Carthusians did? Whereby it appeareth, that they would neither have stood nor have died in that Cause, as they did, if they might otherwise have escaped by denying. Wherefore if my Friend Cope had been so well advised in setting out his Martyrs, as God might have made him, he would first have seen the true records, and been sure of the ground of such matters, whereupon he so confidently pronounceth, and so censoriously controlleth others.

Rochester, More, Ermew, Middlemore, Nudigate, executed for Treason.

In the same cause and quarrel of Treason also, the same year, a little before these aforesaid, in the month of May were executed with the like punishment John Houghton, Prior of the Charter-house in London, Robert Laurence, Prior of the Charter-house of Bel-vail, Austen Webster, Prior of the Charter-house of Exham.

En actis in Termino Paschæ. An. 27 Reg. Henr. 8.

Beside and with these Priors suffered likewise the same time, two other Priests, one called Reignold, Brother of Sion, the other named John Haile Vicar of Thistleworth.

Divers other Charter-house Monks also of London were then put in prison, to the number of Nine or ten, and in the same prison died, for whom we will, the Lord willing, reserve another place hereafter to intreat of more at large.

Nine Carthusians died in prison refusing the Kings supremacy.

In the mean time, for so much as the foresaid Cope in his doughty Dialogues, speaking of these nine Worthies, doth commend them so highly, and especially the three Priors above recited, here by the way I would desire Master Cope simply and directly to answer me to a thing or two that I would put to him, and first of this John Houghton that angelical Prior of the Charterhouse, his old companion and acquaintance, of whom thus he writeth; Atqui cum Johannem illum Houghtonum cogito, non tam hominem quam Angelum in humana forma intueri mihi videor, cujus eminentes virtutes, divinas dotes, & heroicam animi magnitudinem, nemo unquam poterit satis pro dignitate explicare, &c. By these his own words it must needs be confessed, that the Author of these Dialogues, whosoever he was, had well seen and considered the form and personable stature, proportion and shape of his excellent Body, with such admiration of his personage, that, as he saith, as oft as he calleth the said John Houghton to mind, it seemeth to him even as though he saw an Angel in the shape and form of a Man. Whose eminent vertues moreover, whose divine gifts, and heroical celsitude of mind, no Man saith he, may sufficiently express, &c. And how old was this Master Cope then would I know, when he saw and discerned all this? For as I understand, Master Cope, being yet at this present ſent ſcarce come to the age of Forty years, he could not then be above Nine years old (the other ſuffering Anno 1535) in the which age in my mind, Maſter Cope had ſmall diſcretion to judge either of any ſuch angelical proportion of this Mans perſonage, or of his Divine qualities, and Heroical celſitude of his mind, and yet he remembreth him in his Dialogues. Which thing, among many other probabilities, maketh me vehemently to ſuſpect that theſe Dialogues Printed in Antwerpe, Anno 1566, were brought over by Maſter Cope there to be Printed, but were penned and framed by another Pſeudocopus, whatſoever, or in what Fleet ſoever he was, unleſs my marks do greatly fail me. But as the caſe is of no great weight, ſo I let it paſs, returning to other matters of more importance.

Copes Dialogues ſuſpected not to be his own.

Shortly after the overthrow of the Pope, conſequently began by little and little to follow the ruine of Abbies and religious Houſes in England, in a right order and method by Gods divine Providence. For neither could the fall of Monaſteries have followed after, unleſs that ſuppreſſion of the Pope had gone before; neither could any true reformation of the Church have been attempted, unleſs the ſubverſion of thoſe ſuperſtitious Houſes had been joyned withal.

Whereupon, the ſame year in the Month of October, the King having then Thomas Cromwel of his Council, ſent Doctor Lee to viſit the Abbies, Priories, and Nunneries in all England, and to ſet at liberty all ſuch religious Perſons as deſired to be free, and all other that were under the age of four and twenty years; providing withal, that ſuch Monks, Canons, and Friers, as were diſmiſſed, ſhould have given them by the Abbot or Prior, in ſtead of their habite, a Secular Prieſts Gown, and forty Shillings of Money. And likewiſe the Nuns to have ſuch apparel as Secular Women did then commonly uſe, and ſuffered to go where they would. At which time alſo from the ſaid Abbies and Monaſteries were taken their chief Jewels and Reliques.

WHen the King had thus eſtabliſhed his ſupremacy, and all things were well quieted within the Realm, he like a wiſe Prince, and having wiſe Counſel about him, forecaſting with himſelf what foreign dangers might fall unto him by other Countries about, which all were yet in ſubjection to the Biſhop of Rome, ſave only a few German Princes, and miſdoubting the malice of the Pope, to provide therefore betime for perils that might enſue, thought good to keep in by all means poſſible with other Princes.

And firſt to entertain the favour of the French King, who had been ſick a little before, and now was lately recovered to health, in ſignification of publick joy and friendſhip, the King commanded a ſolemn and famous Proceſſion to be ordained through the City of London, with the Waits and Children of the Grammar Schools, with the Maſters and Uſhers in their Array: then followed the Orders of the Friers and Canons, and the Priors with their pomp of Copes, Croſſes, Candleſticks, and Vergers before them. After theſe, followed the next Pageant of Clerks and Prieſts of London, all in Copes likewiſe. Then the Monks of Weſtminſter and other Abbies, with their glorious gardeviance of Croſſes, Candleſticks, and Vergers before them in like ſort. Laſt of all came the Quire of Pauls with their Reſidentiaries, the Biſhop of London and the Abbots following after in their Pontificalibus. After theſe courſes of the Clergy went the Companies of the City, with the Lord Maior and Aldermen in their beſt Apparrel, after their degrees. And leſt it might be thought this Proceſſion of the Church of London to make but a ſmall or beggerly ſhew, the furniture of the gay Copes there worn, was counted to the number of ſeven hundred and fourteen. Moreover, to fill up the joy of this Proceſſion, and for the more high ſervice to Almighty God, beſides the ſinging Quires, and chanting of the Prieſts, there lacked no Minſtrels withall; to pipe at the Proceſſions. Briefly here lacked nothing elſe but only the Ordnance to ſhoot off alſo. But becauſe that is uſed in the Proceſſions at Rome, therefore for difference-ſake the ſame is reſerved only for the Popes own Proceſſions, and for none other in the month of October.

This grand Proceſſion was appointed for a triumph or a thankſgiving for the late recovery of the French Kings health, as is aforeſaid.

Over and beſides this, the King, to nouriſh and retain Amity with Kings and Princes, leſt the Pope, being exiled now out of England, ſhould incite them to War againſt him, directed ſundry Embaſſadors and Meſſengers with Letters and Inſtructions. To the Emperor was ſent Sir Thomas Wyat, to the French King Sir Francis Brian, and Doctor Edward Fox, who was alſo ſent to the Princes of Germany; to the Scottiſh King was ſent Sir Ralph Sadler, Gentleman of the Privy-Chamber.

In Scotland the ſame time were caſt abroad divers railing Ballets and ſlanderous Rimes againſt the King of England, for caſting of the Lady Dowager, and for aboliſhing the Pope: for the which cauſe the foreſaid Sir Ralph Sadler being ſent into Scotland, with Leſſons and Inſtructions how to addreſs himſelf accordingly, after he had obtained acceſs unto the King, and audience to be heard, firſt declareth the effectuous and hearty commendations from the Kings Majeſty his Graces Uncle, and withall delivered his Letters of Credence. Which done, after a few words of Courtly entertainment, as occaſion ſerved him to ſpeak, the ſaid Sir Ralph Sadler obtaining audience, thus began in the King his Maſters behalf to declare, as followeth.

WHereas there is nothing after the glory of Almighty God in this World ſo much to be tendered by Kings, Princes, or any honeſt perſons, or ſo highly to be regarded and defended, as their Honour, Eſtimation, good Fame and Name, which whoſoever neglecteth is to be eſteemed unnatural: and unleſs a man labour to avoid and extinguiſh the falſe Reports, Slanders, and Diffamations made of him by malicious perſons, he may well be ſuſpected in conſcience to condemn himſelf: the King your Uncle conſidering the ſame, and hearing of ſundry Ballets, Criminations, and infamous Libels made and untruly forged and deviſed in Scotland againſt his Grace, by your Graces Subjects, not only upon truſt to find with your Grace ſuch natural Affection, Friendſhip, and Amity, as the nearneſs of blood between Uncle and Nephew, neceſſitude of Reverence, promixity both of kin and dominions together doth require; but alſo upon aſſurance that your Grace and Wiſdom will conſider how theſe Slanders and Diffamations, although they were but againſt a private perſon, whatſoever he were, moſt commonly redound and are imputed to the whole degree and eſtate, as the diffamation of Kings toucheth Kings, and ſo of other Degrees and Dignities: doth ſend at this time to your Grace, his Nephew (other he might have ſent more worthy, but me at this time, for lack of a better, hath he ſent) to deſire, pray, and require your Grace, according as the nearneſs of Blood, connexion of Eſtate, and other things before expreſſed, of right and juſtice do require: beſeeching your Grace, gently to weigh and balance, and well to ponder the malice of theſe the ſaid Slanderers, and to call in again, all the ſaid diffamatory Ballets, Libels, and other Writings, puniſhing the Authors and Setters forth thereof according to their demerits. And furthermore, to cauſe open Proclamations to be made through your Realm, that none of your Inhabitants there ſhall in any manner wiſe ſo miſuſe himſelf hereafter upon ſuch great pain and puniſhment as to your Grace and your Counſel ſhall be thought convenient for the tranſgreſſion thereof: ſo that other by their correction, and by the fearful example of the penalty, may beware how to commit the like offence in time coming.

The example of ſuch ſlanders is very pernicious to all Kings: for by ſuch ſlanders of other Princes, the Slanderers take boldneſs ſo to deal afterward with their own King as they have done with other, and the next ſtep from ſuch ſlanderous words is to attempt deeds, and ſo to fall to Sedition: of the importance and danger whereof no man is ignorant.

Evil example a pernicious thing in a Common wealth

Wherefore your Grace, at the contemplation of your dear Uncle, in tendering his proceedings, ſhall do well to follow therein the loving ſteps of his good Brother and Alley the French King, who hath already at Roan and ſundry places elſe, cauſed certain ſlanderous Preachers to be ſore puniſhed, and further directed Commiſſions through his Realm for repreſſing the ſame. As alſo other Princes

ſhall

ſhall be ready (his Majeſty truſteth) to do the like in their Dominions, if like occaſion ſhall be given to require the ſame of them. In which ſo doing, your Grace may be aſſured in this your gentle dealing in that part, to win your Uncles moſt ſincere and kind heart, to the increaſe of your Amity and Allyance, which as to you ſhall be moſt honourable, ſo ſhall it be no leſs profitable unto him.

And thus to conclude with the firſt part of my Narration, concerning the ſlanderous and diffamatory Libels, leſt The ſecond point. I ſhould ſeem with prolixity of matter more than needs to abuſe your Graces ſilence; I will now deſcend to the other point of that which I have to utter unto your Grace, as touching the Popes Nuncio or Meſſenger. Of whoſe late arrival the Kings Majeſty your Uncle having partly Intelligence, but not certainly knowing the ſpecial cauſe of his coming from Rome, and yet hearing by the common Bruit and talk of your Subjects, what his Errand ſhould be, that is to practiſe ſome annoyance by his pretended Cenſures againſt the Kings Majeſty your Uncle: he therefore premoniſhing your Grace before, as fearing the worſt, moſt juſtly maketh his complaint thereof unto your Grace his Nephew, requiring you, that foraſmuch as the foreſaid Bruits and Reports are ſlanderous to his Majeſty, and ſeeing that neither the Emperor nor the French King, nor any other Princes have conſented thereto, or underſtood thereof, the Kings Majeſty therefore your Uncle, willing to ſtop thoſe Bruits and talks, deſireth and moſt heartily prayeth your Grace, at his inſtant requeſt to vouchſafe to conſider and weigh,

Supremacy of Princes. Firſt, The Supremacy of Princes by the holy Scripture granted unto him and other Princes in Earth under Chriſt upon their Churches.

Secondly, To weigh what the Goſpel and Gods Word calleth a Church.

Alſo what Superſtitions, Idolatries, and blind abuſes have crept into all Realms, to the high diſpleaſure of Almighty God by reaſon thereof.

Fourthly, What is to be underſtood by the true Cenſure or Excommunication of the Church, and how no ſuch can be in the power of the Biſhop of Rome, or of any other man, againſt his Majeſty or any other Prince, having ſo juſt ground to avoid from the root, and to aboliſh that execrable authority, which the Biſhop of Rome hath uſurped and doth uſurp upon all Princes, to their great detriment and damage.

As touching the conſideration of which four Points, although the Kings Majeſty your Uncle doubteth not your Grace to be furniſhed and provided with ſufficient knowledge, rightly to diſcern and judge upon the ſame; yet if it ſhall ſo pleaſe your Grace further to know your Uncles mind touching the ſaid Points, I aſſure your Highneſs in the behalf of your foreſaid Uncle his Majeſty, that he will not ſtick to ſend unto you ſuch learned, wiſe, and diſcreet ment, as ſhall amply inform you thereof, and of ſuch other things as your Grace having once a ſmack thereof, ſhall think moſt worthy for a Prince to know.

His requeſt therefore to your Highneſs is, that you will conſider of what moment and importance it ſhall be unto your Grace (having the Scots your Subjects ſo evilly inſtructed in the premiſſes) for you to aſſent and agree to any ſuch Cenſure, and ſo by ſuch example to give ſuch an upper-hand over your ſelf and other Princes to that Uſurper of Rome, as is very like hereafter to happen in other places of Chriſtendom, whereſoever the true declaration of the Truth and Word of God ſhall have free courſe, to ſcourge them, unleſs they will adore, worſhip, and kiſs the Feet of that corrupt Holineſs, which deſireth nothing elſe but pride and the univerſal thrall of Chriſtendom under Romes Yokes.

Romes yokes But becauſe the Cenſures of that Nuncio be not yet opened, but lie ſecret and uncertain under muttering, I ſhall ceaſe further to proceed therein, till further occaſion ſhall miniſter to me more certain matter to ſay and to judge. In the mean time for ſo much as it is moſt certainly come to the Intelligence of the Kings Majeſty, that the Abbot of Arboth ſhould be choſen of late and elected to The Abbot of Arboth choſen Cardinal of Scotland. be a Cardinal in this your Realm of Scotland, his Majeſty therefore for the good love and hearty good will he beareth unto your Grace, as the Uncle is bound unto the Nephew, knowing that you as yet perceive not ſo well the hypocriſie and deceitful guile and malice of the Romans and their practiſes, as he himſelf doth by his long experience; could not but hearing thereof advertiſe your Grace, that his advice is, you ſhould not ſuffer any of your Subjects to take upon him that red Hat of pride, whereby he ſhall incontinently, the ſame being received (unleſs he be of a contrary nature to any man that ever was yet of that ſort) not only be in manner diſcharged of his Obedience, and become the Biſhop of Romes true liege-man; but alſo ſhall preſume of his Cardinalſhip to be your Fellow, and to have the rule as well as you. Then ſhould the Biſhop of Rome creep into your own very boſom, know all your ſecrets, and at laſt, unleſs you will be yoked and ſerve their pleaſure in all points, your Grace is like to ſmart for it. The thing perchance in the beginning ſhall ſeem to your Grace very honourable and pleaſant: but wiſdom it is to beware of the tail, which is very black and bitter.

{KING Hen. 8.}

His Majeſties Father, and Grandfather to your Grace, Inconvenience that cometh by Cardinals. had a Cardinal, whereof he was weary, and never admitted other after his deceaſe, knowing the importable pride of them. In like manner alſo his Highneſs by the experience of one, hath utterly determined to avoid all the ſort: ſo well his Grace hath known and experienced their miſchief, yoke, and thraldom that thereby is laid upon Princes. By reaſon whereof, as his Highneſs is the more able by his own experience to inform your Grace, ſo of good will and meer propenſity of heart, cauſed partly by nature and kin, partly by conjunction and vicinity of Dominions adjoyning ſo near together, he is no leſs ready to forwarn your Grace before, wiſhing that God will ſo work in your Princely heart and noble ſtomach, that his Majeſties monition and friendly warning, as it proceedeth from a ſincere affection and tender care of his part unto his Nephew, ſo it may prevail and take place in your mind, that your Grace wiſely in weighing with your ſelf, what ſupream Right Princes have and ought to have upon their Churches and Lands where they govern, and what little cauſe the Biſhop of Rome hath thereto, to proceed by unjuſt Cenſures againſt them: your Grace may therein not only ſtand to the juſt defence of your dear Uncle, but alſo may endeavour to follow his ſteps therein, and to take his counſel, which he doubteth not, but ſhall redound not only to your Graces honour, to the benefit, weal, and profit of your Realm and Subjects, but eſpecially to the Glory of Almighty God, and advancement of his true Religion.

And thus have I expounded unto your Grace, the ſum of my Errand and Meſſage from the Kings Majeſty your Uncle, who as he would be glad to be advertiſed by anſwer, of your Graces purpoſe, mind, and intention in this behalf, ſo for my part, according to my charge and duty, I ſhall be preſt and ready with all diligence to give mine attendance upon your pleaſure for the ſame accordingly.

The ſum and effect of the Kings Meſſage ſent to the French King in defence of his proceedings.

The Kings Meſſage to the French King. THe King conſidering the preſent ſtate of his Marriage, which was not yet well digeſted nor accepted in the Courts of other Princes: and alſo having Intelligence of the ſtraight Amity intended by the marriages between the Emperor and the French King, and alſo of the Popes inclination to pleaſure the Emperor, and further underſtanding of the order and meaning of the French Kings Counſel, not greatly favouring his Purpoſes, ſent therefore into France for his Embaſſador Edward Fox Doctor of Divinity, his Chaplain and Counſellor, with Inſtructions and Admonitions how to frame and attemper himſelf in thoſe the Kings Affairs. The contents of which his Inſtructions came to, this effect; That the ſaid Edward Fox, firſt declaring to the French King the moſt affectuous Commendations made on the Kings behalf, with Declaration of the Kings moſt intire and hearty good will to underſtand of his Proſperity, and the good ſucceſs of his Affairs, which his Majeſty no leſs deſired than his own: and alſo after the Kings Letters being delivered to him and to other Perſonages of his Council, then, after his acceſs made unto the King, he ſhould utter and inſinuate unto the King his Maſters mind and intent in theſe three ſpecial Points following.

Three cauſes to be declared in the Kings defence.

The firſt was, to declare the juſtneſs of the Kings cauſe concerning the late marriage with Queen Anne, and divorcement of the King from his Brothers Wife.

The ſecond to ſignifie and expreſs the injuries done by the Pope, as afterward ſhall be declared.

The third was, to win and allure to the Kings devotion the Chancellor of France.

And as touching the Declaration of the juſtneſs of the Kings cauſe, firſt he taking with him certain Books printed, containing the determinations of Univerſities in that behalf, with reaſons and authorities confirming the ſame, ſhould diſtribute the ſaid Books to the Biſhop of Saint Line, and to other Biſtops, to Mounſieur de Langez, and other of the Kings Council more, and to prove after the beſt faſhion, to obtain their approbations of the ſame Books, and with dexterity to aſſay whether he could induce them of the Univerſity of Paris, and other learned men, to ſend forth this Book with their authorities and approbations. That done, then he being acquainted with all thoſe Points and Articles of the Kings Cauſe, in communicating and conference (as the cauſe required) ſhould not only make anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be objected, but alſo furniſh and maintain the juſtneſs of that Opinion, with his Learning, in ſuch ſort as he could beſt invent and cogitate.

The Popes Injuries done to the King of England.

As touching the ſecond part which contained the Injuries done by the Pope againſt the King, the ſaid Embaſſador in that behalf being a man no leſs acquainted, than alſo well beaten and ripe in the manifold misbehaviours of the Pope, from the beginning of the cauſe, ſhould declare and expreſs to the French King, how injuriouſly the ſaid Pope had demeaned himſelf towards the Kings Highneſs: firſt, in ſending a Commiſſion decretal, and then commanding it to be burnt: as alſo in promiſing by Schedule of his own hand, not to call the cauſe out of England; and moreover, approving firſt the juſtneſs of the Kings cauſe, yet notwithſtanding afterward went from the ſame and did contrary.

The Pope inconſtant in his deeds and contrary to himſelf.

Touching all which Injuries received at the Popes hand, though the King had great cauſe juſtly to complain, yet other Injuries there were beſide theſe wherewith the King moſt eſpecially was moved.

The Pope calleth and citeth the King to Rome.

The one was for calling and citing the Kings Highneſs to appear at Rome.

Two ſpecial Injuries of the Pope againſt the King.

The other was for rejecting the Perſon of the Kings truſty Subject and Chaplain Maſter Kerne his Embaſſador, from making ſuch Allegations as to the King in that caſe appertained; beſide ſundry other no ſmall griefs and inconveniences, which here might be ſhewed and alledged: but in theſe two eſpecial Injuries the King thought himſelf moſt chiefly touched and agrieved. In opening and ripping up of which Injuries, and firſt in the ſaid injurious calling of the King to Rome, Inſtructions were given to the ſaid Embaſſador to explicate the open violation therein of the moſt ancient and general Councils, the Council of Nice, the Council of Africk, and the Council of Milven. In which Councils the contrary was, for quietneſs of the World, provided and ordered: Declaring withall, how agreeable the ſame is to all Laws, Reaſon and Equity, that Princes ſhould not be compelled to repair to Rome at the Popes calling, not be bound in a matter of ſuch weight and moment to ſend out of their Realms and Dominions, the Writings, Inſtruments, and Monuments containing the ſecrets of their affairs, or to make and truſt a Proctor, being in ſo far diſtant parts in a matter of ſuch importance, to abide and fulfil that which the ſaid Proctor ſhould agree unto there. The matter and cauſe whereof did not ſo much concern the ſtate of any one Prince alone, as it touched the dignity of all other Chriſtian Kings ſo near, that unleſs they would ſuffer themſelves to be yoked with the Popes Authority, it was time (in as much as the Pope now made this enterprize on them) to ſearch and know the bottom and ground both of his and of their Authority; and if any thing by negligence or miſuſe had been loſt, to recover the ſame, rather than to ſuffer it to decay any more. As touching all which griefs, hurts, inconveniences, prejudice, and evil example which might thereof enſue, the Kings Highneſs doubted not but that his good Brother the French King, would aſſiſt and concur with his Highneſs for maintenance and defence of the ſame.

The Pope violateth the Council of Nice, Africk and Milevitan.

The ſecond Point to be declared.

For declaration of the ſecond notable grief and injury done by the Pope to the Kings Highneſs, thus furthermore he was willed to inſinuate to the French King, what injury, or rather contumely the Kings Highneſs received at the Popes hand, in not ſuffering the Kings Subject and Embaſſador to alledge ſuch matter in defence of his Prince, as by Law, Reaſon and Equity was to be heard and admitted, for as much as the ſaid Embaſſador, Doctor Kerne, the Kings Chaplain being at Rome, at ſuch time as Citations were there publiſhed againſt the Kings Highneſs, and underſtanding his Grace by them to be called before one Capaſuccha, Dean of the Rota, was there ready to make anſwer to the Queens Agents complaint, and had by the advice of other great learned men conceived a certain matter containing cauſes reaſonable and lawful, why the Kings Highneſs ſhould not be bound to appear there either by himſelf, or by his Proctor. Which matter alſo he did exhibit on the Kings behalf, as a true Subject by Law of nature is bound to maintain and alledge in defence of his Prince that is abſent, and ought by equity to preſerve him from condemnation. And yet this notwithſtanding, the ſaid Capaſuccha, not regarding nor conſidering the matter alledged, demanded, whether the ſaid Doctor had any Proxy from the King, or no, for ſuch purpoſe, and upon default and lack of the ſaid Proxy (which was not neceſſary in this caſe) proceeded in the principal cauſe. By reaſon whereof the ſaid Doctor Kerne appealed to the Pope, alledging injury to be done not only to the Kings Highneſs, but alſo to himſelf, for that ſuch matter as he did alledge, was not conſidered nor regarded, but proceſs made. To the which Appellation notwithſtanding the ſaid Capaſuccha gave an ambiguous and a doubtful anſwer; which was, that as much as Doctor Kerne was by the Law a lawful perſon, ſo much he would give place, & deferre appellationi, and otherwiſe not.

The Kings Embaſſador could not be heard at Rome.

Thus, upon declaration of this doubtful anſwer paſſed certain days, the ſaid Capaſuccha promiſing always to open the ſaid anſwer and ſentence more plainly, and to give a determinate reſolution. Which he nevertheleſs did not, albeit he was divers times urged thereunto; but ſo paſſed the time, and ſuddenly returned to Proceſs. Whereupon the ſaid Doctor Kerne appealed eft-ſoons again, and put up a Supplication to the Pope, for admiſſion of the ſaid Appeal. By reaſon whereof the matter was reaſoned in the ſignature. In which ſignature by no Law it could be ſhewed why the ſaid Doctor Kerne ſhould not be admitted to alledge in defence of the Kings Highneſs, but only that they there among themſelves being the greater number, which were of the Emperors Dominions, and feed of him (among which was alſo the ſaid Capaſuccha) gave their Voices as the Pope ſaid, that Doctor Kerne ſhould not be heard, Sine mandato Regiæ Majeſtatis. Whereunto when Doctor Kerne replied, ſaying, Whatſoever they decreed or ſaid, there was no Law to maintain and bear it: It was ſaid again by Cardinal Anconitate, That the Pope might judge after his Conſcience. And upon this reſolution, they determined there to proceed in the principal cauſe: unleſs the King would ſend a Proxy, intending by this injury and wrong, to inforce his Highneſs to the exhibition of a Proxy there, to his Highneſs high prejudice, to the pernicious example of the like to be done to other Princes, and alſo to the derogation of the Liberties and Prerogatives of his gracious Realm. Unto the obſervation whereof his Highneſs is bound by his Oath, and alſo by the ſame Oath is bound to recover and reſtore ſuch Liberties and Priviledges as by any of his Predeceſſors have been loſt, diminiſhed or decayed in time paſt.

The Pope would have the King to appear by Proxy at Rome.

The third part or purpoſe of this Meſſage

Theſe, with other like injuries and wrongs of the Pope done to the King, the foreſaid Embaſſador Mr. Fox, according as he had in charge and Commiſſion, did declare, open, and ſhew unto the French King, to the intent to ſollicite the ſaid King, to do by his mediation for the remedy and redreſſing of thoſe foreſaid injuries and wrongful dealings of the Pope in this behalf.

Further-

Furthermore; for the third purpoſe touching the Chancellor of France, forſomuch as he was one of the chief Perſonages whom the French King moſt truſted in his great Affairs (by whoſe advice all matters of Learning were then conduced and trained) the King thought it not unprofitable by all ways and means to win and allure his Friendſhip and Amity alſo unto his devotion, either that by his means and dexterity the Kings Purpoſes might be advanced the better, or at leaſt for a Ne noceat; that is, to mitigate and diminiſh ſuch favour as he by the Admiral or otherwiſe was moved to ſhew to the Imperials. For the which cauſe the King committing in Charge to his Embaſſador aforeſaid, willed and inſtructed him how and what to do, and after what manner to attemperate himſelf to all occaſions and times of opportunity; as firſt to deliver to him from the King his Letters of Credence, and withall to declare and extend the Kings moſt effectuous Commendations, with the hearty good will and ſincere affections which his Highneſs bare to the ſaid Cardinal, Chancellor of France, with no leſs deſire alſo moſt gladly to do that thing which might be to his commodity and benefit, according as the manifold Pleaſures, Gratuities, and kindneſs done on his part for the Kings Highneſs did worthily deſerve. Then after ſuch words of mollification, to enter into further Communication with him, in ſuch ſort as might beſt ſerve his honour.

The vain-glory and avarice of the Cardinal.

And for as much as the Cardinal was then noted much to be moved with the affections of vain-glory and covetiſe; therefore amongſt other Communication, it was deviſed to infer mention of the Papality, noting what ways and means might be uſed to attain unto that dignity. Wherein if the Kings Highneſs could ſtand him in any ſtead, as he thought the perſon of the ſaid Chancellor moſt meet for the ſame, ſo he would not fail to move and to procure it to the beſt furtherance of his advancement. And finally, to declare how deſirous the Kings Highneſs was to retain and make ſure unto him the amity and friendſhip of the ſaid Chancellor, and that his Highneſs deviſing by what means and ways he might do the ſame (albeit his Grace knew well, that the Faith and Sincerity of the ſaid Chancellor towards his Maſter was ſuch, as no Gift, Penſion, or other offer could advance or increaſe that good will which for his Maſters ſake he would imploy in the Kings Highneſs affairs) thought, that for declaration of his hearty good will towards the ſaid Chancellor, it were convenient to offer unto him ſome yearly remembrance, &c.

The faſhion of Princes Courts to be noted.

This was the ſum and effect of the Meſſage which the King ſent unto the French King, and to other of his Council, by his Embaſſador, Maſter Edward Fox, which was eſpecially to ſignifie and make manifeſt to the ſaid French King, the unjuſt dealings and prejudicial proceedings of the Pope, in calling up the King of England to appear at Rome by Proxy, which was derogatory to the Kings Dignity and Crown, and alſo prejudicial both to General-Councils of the Primitive-time, and to the ancient Laws and Statutes of this Realm (as is afore declared) and no leſs hurtful for example to all other Princes and Kings likewiſe, &c.

Stephen Gardener Embaſſador to the French King.

The French Kings ſaying againſt the Kings ſucceſſion.

This Meſſage ſo done, ſhortly after was ſent to the ſaid French King, Stephen Gardener, Biſhop of Wincheſter, with the Kings Anſwer and Meſſage again on this manner: That foraſmuch as the ſaying of the French King to the Embaſſadors was this, That notwithſtanding all the Kings Realm ſhould agree and condeſcend never ſo much to the Right and Title which the Succeſſion procreated of this his lawful Matrimony hath in this his Realm; yet when outward Parties ſhall conceive any other or contrary opinion thereof, great trouble and vexation might inſue. Whereunto the King made anſwer again, declaring that he could not but greatly marvel, that the King his Brother, being ſo wiſe a Prince, and thereto well expert and learned in Chronicles and Hiſtories, not only of his own Realm, but alſo of all others, or any of his Council, being men of ſuch experience as they were taken to be, would think that the opinion and conſent of other outward Realms was ſo highly to be conſidered and regarded of any Prince or King, in eſtabliſhing or in executing things which might be lawfully done, and which touched the preſervation of the Rights,

The Kings anſwer to the French King.

Preheminences, Dignity and State of his Realm, and did alſo notably confer unto the ſingular benefit and tranquillity of the ſame, ſo as the words both of the ſaid King his Brother, and of the great Maſter did pretend. Who furthermore were not ignorant themſelves, that many things have been by his noble Progenitors Kings of France attempted and done, as well in caſes of Matrimony, as otherwiſe, which in ſome part in the opinion of the Popes of Rome then being, and in ſome part in the opinion of divers other outward Princes, States, Seigniories, and common people, have been thought not perfectly good, nor yet much acceptable unto them; and yet that notwithſtanding his ſaid Progenitors knowing themſelves the proſecuting of thoſe cauſes to be beneficial to them and to the Realm, have not therefore deſiſted from their ſaid purpoſes, but diligently imploying their own ſtrength and powers with the Succours of their Friends, have finally atchieved their ſaid enterprizes, without requiring or greatly regarding the opinion or agreement thereunto of outward Princes.

Kings in the right of their Realms are not bound to the agreement of outward Realms.

The Overture of the Chancellor of France, to the King, to take indifferent Judges by the Popes authority. The Kings anſwer to the Overture.

Again, whereas the Chancellor of France made this Overture to the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, Whether the King would be contented to have indiffent Judges to be appointed by the Authority of the Pope, to determine his Cauſe, with a Commiſſion decretal from the ſame, declaring, Quid juris, &c. The King, by his Embaſſador thereunto anſwering, declared, That the Pope having done unto him ſo notable and evident Injuries as he had done, it were his office, and duty now to labour himſelf to end this matter, and to ſtudy how to make due ſatisfaction to God, and his Juſtice, which he hath, tam indignis modis, offended and violated, and to deliver himſelf out of the danger, and the perpetual infamy of the World, which he hath incurred by reaſon of theſe his moſt ungodly doings, and not to look that the King ſhould make any requeſt or ſuit unto him therefore, or recompence for the ſame, &c.

Furthermore, whereas the Pope, at the requeſt of the French King, had in open Conſiſtory prorogued execution of his Cenſures and Excommunication againſt the King unto the firſt day of November, and word thereof was ſent to the King by his Embaſſadors, from the great Maſter of France, that the King might have the ſaid Prorogation made authentickly in writing, if he would: The King anſwering thereunto, thought it not unprofitable, that his Embaſſadors reſident in France ſhould receive into their hands the poſſeſſion of the ſaid new Prorogation, conceived and written in authentick form and manner, according to the order of the Laws.

The King requeſted by the French King to relent to the Pope.

After this again came other Letters to the King from France, namely, from the great Maſter of France, tending to this end; That if the King would do nothing for the Pope, (meaning by the revocation of ſuch Acts of Parliaments as were made in the Realm of England, to the Popes prejudice) it were no reaſon, neither ſhould it be poſſible for the French King to induce the Pope to any gratuity or pleaſure for the King in his affairs.

The Kings anſwer to the French Kings requeſt.

Whereunto the King anſwering again, ſendeth word to the French King, truſting and hoping well of the perfect Friendſhip of the French King his good Brother, that he will never ſuffer any ſuch Perſwaſion to enter into his breaſt, whatſoever the great Maſter, or any other ſhall ſay to the contrary thereof, nor that he will require any thing more of him to do for the Pope, Chancellor, or other, than his Council hath already deviſed to be done in this behalf, eſpecially, conſidering the words of the ſaid French Kings promiſe made before, as well to the Duke of Norfolk, as to the other Embaſſadors, promiſing his Friendſhip to the King ſimply, without requiring him to revocate or infringe any ſuch act or conſtitution made by the Realm and Parliament to the contrary. Perſwading moreover, and laying before the eyes as well of the Pope, as of the French King, how much it ſhould redound to the Popes diſhonour and infamy, and to the ſlander alſo of his cauſe, if he ſhould be ſeen ſo to pact and covenant with the King upon ſuch conditions, for the adminiſtration of that thing which he in his own Conſcience hath reputed and adjudged to be moſt rightful and agreeable to juſtice and equity, and ought of his office and duty to do in this matter ſimpliciter & gratis, and without all worldly reſpects, either for the advancement of his private lucre and commodity, or for the preſervation of his pretenſed power and authority. For ſurely it is not to be doubted, but that the Pope, being minded and determined to give Sentence for the invalidity and nullity of the Kings firſt pretenſed Matrimony, hath conceived and eſtabliſhed in his own conſcience a firm and certain opinion and perſwaſion, that he ought of juſtice and equity ſo to do.

The Pope ſeeketh not for juſtice, but his own lucre and commodity.

KING Hen. 8.

The Pope felleth Juſtice. The Pope doth againſt his own Conſcience.

Then to ſee the Pope to have this opinion indeed, and yet refuſe this to do for the King, unleſs he ſhall be content for his benefit and pleaſure, Cedere juri ſuo, and to do ſome things prejudicial unto his Subjects contrary to his honour: it is eaſie to be foreſeen, what the World and the Poſterity ſhall judge De tam turpi nundinatione juſtitiæ, & illius tam fœda & ſordida lucri & honoris ambitione. And as for the Kings part, if he ſhall not attain now juſtice at the mediation of his good Brother, knowing the Pope to be of this diſpoſition and determination in his heart, to ſatisfie all his deſires, being moved thereunto by juſtice, and that the let thereof is no default of juſtice in the cauſe, but only for that the King would not condeſcend to his requeſt: it is to the King matter ſufficient enough for diſcharge of his conſcience to God and to the World, although he never did execute indeed his ſaid determination. For ſith his corrupt affection is the only impediment thereof, what need either the King to require him any further to do in the cauſe, or elſe his Subjects to doubt any further in the juſtneſs of the ſame?

The Pope forgetteth his old Benefactors and Friends.

Albeit if reſpects to benefits and merits done towards the Pope and See of Rome, ſhould be regarded in the attaining of juſtice in a cauſe of ſo high conſequence as this is, reaſon would, that if it would pleaſe the Pope to conſider the former kindneſs of the King ſhewed unto him in time paſt, (whereof he is very loth to enter the rehearſal, Ne videatur velle exprobrare quæ de aliis fecerit bene) he ſhould not now require of him any new benefit or gratuity to be ſhewed unto him, but rather ſtudy to recompence him for the old graces, merits, pleaſures and benefits before received. For ſurely he thinketh that the Pope cannot forget, how that for the conſervation of his Perſon, his Eſtate and Dignity, the King hath not heretofore ſpared for any reſpect, in uſing the office of a moſt perfect and ſtedfaſt Friend, to relinquiſh the long continued good will eſtabliſhed between him and the Emperor, and to declare openly to all the World, that for the Popes ſake, and in default of his deliverance, he would become enemy to the ſaid Emperor, and to make againſt him actual War.

The benefits of the King upon the Pope, when he was taken by the D. of Burbon.

Beſide this, the King hath not failed him with right large and ample ſubventions of money, for the better ſupporting of his charges againſt the enterprizes of the ſaid Emperor, combining and knitting himſelf with the French King, to procure the advancement of the ſaid French Kings Army into Italy, to the Charges whereof the King did bear little leſs than the one half: Beſides notable loſſes ſuſtained as well in his Cuſtoms, Subſides, and other Duties, as alſo to the no little hinderance and damage of his Subjects and Merchants, occaſioned by diſcontinuance of the Traffick and entercouſe heretofore uſed with the Emperors Subjects. In doing of all which things, the King hath not been thus reſpective, as the Pope now ſheweth himſelf towards him, but like a perfect Friend hath been always contented frankly, liberally, and openly to expone all his ſtudy, labour, travel, treaſure, puiſſance, Realm and divers Subjects for the Popes aid, and maintenance of the State and Dignity of the Church and See of Rome. Which things although he doth not here rehearſe animo exprobrandi, yet he doubteth not but the ſame, weighed in the ballance of any indifferent mans judgment, ſhall be thought to be of that weight and value, as that he hath juſtly deſerved to have ſome mutual correſpondency of kindneſs to be ſhewed unto him at the Popes hands; eſpecially in the miniſtration of Juſtice, and in ſo reaſonable and juſt cauſe as this is, and not thus to have his moſt rightful Petition rejected and denied, becauſe he will not follow his deſire and appetite in revoking of ſuch Acts, as be here made and paſſed for the weal and commodity of his Realm and Subjects.

All is loſt that is done for a churle.

¶ Thus ye have heard how inſtantly the King had laboured by the means of the French King, to the Pope being then in France, for Right and Juſtice to be done for the diſſolution and nullity of his firſt pretenſed Matrimony with his Brothers wife. Which when it could not be attained at the Popes hands, unleſs the King would recompence and requite the ſame, by revoking of ſuch Statutes as were made and enacted here in the High Court of Parliament, for the ſurety of Succeſſion and eſtabliſhment of the Realm; what the King thereunto anſwered again, ye heard, declaring that to be a far unequal recompence and ſatisfaction for a thing which ought of right and juſtice to be miniſtred unto him, that a King therefore ſhould revocate and undo the Acts and Statutes paſſed by a whole Realm contrary to his own honour and weal of his Subjects, &c.

The craft packing of the Papiſts

Where is moreover to be underſtood, how that the Pope with all his Papiſts, and the French King alſo, and peradventure Stephen Gardener too, the Kings own Embaſſador, had ever a ſpecial eye to diſprove and diſappoint the Kings Succeſſion by Queen Anne, whom they knew all to be a great enemy unto the Pope, thinking thereby that if that ſucceſſion were diminiſhed, the Popes Kingdom might ſoon be reſtored again in England. But yet for all their unjuſt and crafty packing, they were through Gods Providence fruſtrate of their deſired purpoſe. For although they ſo brought to paſs the next year following, to adnull the Order of that Succeſſion by a contrary Parliament, yet neither did they ſo adnihilate it, but that both King Edward followed, yea, and alſo the ſame Succeſſion afterward by the ſaid King and other Parliaments was reſtored again, and yet, God be praiſed, hath hitherto reigned, and doth yet flouriſh in the Realm of England.

The Papiſts fruſtrate their purpoſe.

Now, as we have declared the Kings doings in the Realm of Scotland and of France proceeding further in the Kings proceedings with other Princes, let us ſee how the King defended himſelf and his cauſe before the Emperor, ſending his Embaſſador unto him, uſing theſe words before his Majeſty, as here followeth.

The Oration of the Kings Embaſſador before the Emperor in Defence of his Cauſe.

The Oration of the Embaſſador to the Emperor.

Sir, the King my Maſter, taking and reputing you as his perfect Friend, Confederate and Allie, and not doubting, but you remembring the mutual kindneſs between you in times paſt, will ſhew your ſelf in all occurrents to be of ſuch mind and diſpoſition, as Juſtice, Truth, and Equity doth require, hath willed me by his Letters, to open and to declare unto you, what he hath done, and in what wiſe he hath proceeded concerning ſuch Marriage as by many years was ſuppoſed to have been between your Ant and his Grace. In which matter there being two principal Points ſpecially to be regarded and conſidered: that is to ſay, the juſtice of the Cauſe, and the order of the Proceſs therein, his Highneſs hath ſo uſed him in both, as no man may right-wiſe complain of the ſame.

Diviſions conſiſting in two parts.

The juſtneſs of the Kings Cauſe.

For as touching the juſtneſs of the Cauſe; that is to ſay, of that marriage between him and your ſaid Ant to be naught, and of no moment, ne effect, but againſt the Law of God, Nature, and Man, and indiſpenſable by the Pope, and in no wiſe available; his Highneſs hath done therein as much as becometh him for diſcharge of his Conſcience, and hath found ſo certain, ſo evident, ſo manifeſt, ſo open and approved truth, as whereunto his Majeſty ought of good congruence to give place, and which by all other ought to be allowed and received, not as a matter doubtful, diſputable, or depending in queſtion and ambiguity; but as a plain determined and diſcuſſed verity of the true underſtanding of Gods Word and Law, which all Chriſtian men muſt follow and obey, and before all other worldly Reſpects prefer and execute. In attaining the knowledge whereof, if his Highneſs had uſed only his own particular judgment and ſentence, or the mind only and opinion of his own natural Subjects (although the ſame might in his Conſcience have ſufficed) it would not much have repugned, if ſome other had made difficulty to aſſent to him in the ſame, till further diſcuſſion had been made thereupon. But now, for as much as beſides his own certain underſtanding, and the agreement of his whole Clergy to the ſame in both both Provinces of this Realm, his Majeſty hath alſo for him the determination of the moſt famous Univerſities of Chriſtendom, and moſt indifferent to pronounce and give judgment in this caſe, and among them, the Univerſity of Bononi, (all fear of the Pope ſet apart) concluding againſt his Power, and alſo Padua (the Venetians threats not regarded) giving their Sentence for the truth and evident words of Gods Law; there ſhould no man, as ſeemeth to him, gain-ſay or withſtand, either in word or deed, the truth thus opened, but for his honour and duty to the obſervation of Gods Law, willingly embrace and receive the ſame.

Univerſities ſtanding with the Kings cauſe.

According whereunto his Grace perceiveth alſo as well in his Realm, as elſewhere, as a notable conſent and agreement amongſt all Divines, and ſuch as have ſtudied for knowledge of Gods Law without contradiction of any number, unleſs it be ſuch as applying their mind to the maintenance of worldly affections, do either in defence of ſuch Laws as they have ſtudied, or for ſatisfaction of their private appetite, forbear to agree unto the ſame. The number of whom is ſo ſmall, as in the diſcerning of truth it ought not to be regarded in a caſe ſo plainly deſcribed and determined by Gods Word, as this is.

Both the number and matter maketh with the King.

And if percaſe your Majeſty here not regarding the number, but the matter, ſhall ſeem to conſider in this caſe, not ſo much who ſpeaketh, as what is ſpoken; to anſwer thereunto, I ſay, Sir, the King my Maſter is of the ſame mind, for his own ſatisfaction, and taketh himſelf to be in the right, not becauſe ſo many ſay it, but becauſe he being learned, knoweth the matter to be right. Nevertheleſs reaſon would, and inforceth alſo, that ſtrangers to the cauſe, and not parties therein, ſhould be induced to believe that to be truth that ſuch a number of Clerks do ſo conſtantly affirm; eſpecially not being otherwiſe learned to be Judges of their ſayings, as your Majeſty is not. And if you were, then could your Highneſs ſhew ſuch Reaſons, Authorities and Grounds as cannot be taken away, and be ſo firm and ſtable, as they ought not of Chriſtian men in any part to be impugned, like as hath been partly heretofore ſhewed by his ſundry Embaſſadors to your Imperial Majeſty, and ſhould eftſoons be done, were it not too great an injury to that which is already paſſed in the Realm, to diſpute the ſame again in any other Country: which being contrarious to the Laws and Ordinances of his Realm, he truſteth your prudency will not require, but take that which is paſt for a thing done, and juſtly done; and as for Gods part, to leave his Conſcience to himſelf, Qui Domino ſuo ſtat aut cadit; and for the World, to paſs over as a Friend that which nothing toucheth you, and not to marvel though the ſaid King my Maſter, regarding the wealth of his Soul principally, with the commodity of his perſon, and ſo great benefit and quiet of his Realm, have percaſe done that which he for his private phantaſie would had not chanced; like as his Highneſs alſo would wiſh it had not hapned that ſuch cauſe had been given unto him to compel him ſo to do.

The ſecond part of his Oration touching the manner of the Kings proceedings

But theſe things in their outward viſage be but worldly, and inwardly touch and concern the Soul. Quid autem prodeſt homini ſi univerſum mundum lucretur, animæ vero ſuæ detrimentum patiatur? Primum quærite Regnum Dei, &c. And yet neither is his Highneſs ignorant what reſpect is to be had unto the World, and how much he hath laboured and travelled therein, he hath ſufficiently declared and ſhewed to the World in his Acts and proceedings. For if he had utterly contemned the order and proceſs of the World, or the Friendſhip and Amity of your Majeſty, he needed not to have ſent ſo often and ſundry Embaſſates to the Pope, and to you both, nor continued and ſpent his time in delays, as he hath done hitherto, but might many years paſt have done that he hath done now, if it had ſo liked him, and with as little difficulty then as now, if he would have without ſuch reſpect followed his pleaſure in that behalf. But now I doubt not, your Majeſty doth well remember how often the King my Maſter hath ſent unto your Highneſs, and that your Majeſty hath heard alſo what ſuits he hath made to the Pope, and how the ſaid Pope hath handled him again, only in delay and dalliance, with open Commiſſion given to his Legates to determine and give Sentence for him by a Commiſſion decretal, and ſecretly ſecretly to give him Inſtructions to ſuſpend and put over the ſame. By which means, and other ſemblable, he perceived plainly himſelf to be brought into ſuch a Labyrinth, as going forward that way he were like to come to no end, and was therefore compelled to ſtep right forth at once to the mazes end, there to quiet and repoſe himſelf at the laſt.

How the Pope dallied with the King by delays.

And is it not time to have an end in ſeven years, or elſe to ſeek for it another way? The Pope hath ſhewed himſelf both unwilling to have an end, and alſo ready and prone to do him injury, as well in citing him to Rome, as alſo ſending forth certain Briefs to his Grace ſlanderous, and for the injuſtice and iniquity of them, to himſelf diſhonourable: and he gave his Highneſs good and juſt cauſe to ſuſpect, whether any end to be made at his hand (if any he would make) might be in his Conſcience received and followed. For the Pope doing injury in ſome point, why ſhould he be thought a convenient Judge, not uſing himſelf indifferently in this matter (as many more particularities may be ſhewed and declared) conſidering there is a general Council, willing all matters to be determined where they firſt began, and that the whole body of our Realm hath, for the wealth of the ſame, by a Law eſtabliſhed the determination of ſuch Cauſes? By reaſon whereof the Biſhop of Canterbury, as Metropolitan of our Realm, hath given Sentence in due judgment for the Kings party. It is not to be asked, nor queſtioned, whether that matter hath been determined after the common faſhion, but whether it hath in it common Juſtice, truth, and equity of Gods Law? For obſervation of the common order, his Grace hath done that lay in him, and inforced by neceſſity, hath found the true order maintainable by Gods Word and General-Councils, which he hath in ſubſtance followed with effect, and hath done as becometh him, tendering either Gods Law, or his Perſon, or the wealth of his Realm, like as he doubteth not but your Majeſty (as a wiſe Prince) remembring his Cauſe from the beginning hitherto, will of your ſelf conſider and think, that among mortal men nothing ſhould be immortal, and Suits muſt once have an end, Si poſſis recte, ſi non quocunque modo. And if he cannot as he would, his Highneſs then to do as he may; and he that hath a journey to be perfected, muſt, if he cannot go one way, aſſay another. Whatſoever hath been herein done, neceſſity hath inforced him (that is to ſay, Gods Law) in the matter, and ſuch manner of dealing of the Pope as he hath ſhewed unto him in the ſame, doing ſundry injuries without effect of juſtice, wherein he promiſed the ſame. But as for the Kings matter to the Pope, he ſhall intreat with him apart. As touching your Majeſty, he taketh you for his friend, and as to a friend he openeth theſe matters unto you, truſting to find your Majeſty no leſs friendly hereafter unto him, than he hath done heretofore.

This general Council was the firſt Council of Conſtantinople.

By theſe matters thus paſſed and diſcourſed to and fro between the King and theſe foreign Princes above rehearſed, many things are to be underſtood of the Reader, whoſo is diſpoſed to behold and conſider the ſtate and proceeding of publick Affairs, as well to the Church appertaining, as to the Commonwealth. Firſt, how the King cleareth himſelf both juſtly and reaſonably for his divorce made with the Lady Katharine, the Emperors Ant. Secondly, how he proveth and defendeth his marriage with Queen Anne to be juſt and lawful, both by the authority of Gods Word, and the comprobation of the beſt and moſt famous learned men and Univerſities, and alſo by the aſſent of the whole Realm.

The King's divorce juſt.

The King's Marriage with Queen Anne lawful.

The Pope ſuppreſſed.

Furthermore, for the ſtabliſhing of the Kings Succeſſion in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, for the ſuppreſſion of the Pope, and uniting the Title of Supremacy unto the Kings Crown, what order was therein taken, and what penalty was ſet upon the ſame, may appear by the Act of Parliament ſet forth, Anno 1534. Ex H. reg. 26. cap. 13. in theſe words following:

The King's Title of Supremacy. Stat. An. 26 H. 8. c. 13

If any perſon or perſons after the firſt of Frebuary next, do maliciouſly imagine, invent, practice, or attempt to deprive the King of the Dignity, Title, or Name of his Royal Eſtate, &c. that then every ſuch perſon and perſons ſo offending in any of the premiſſes, their Aiders, Counſellors, Conſenters, and Abettors, being thereof lawfully convict, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of Denying of the King's Supremacy made Treaſon.

KING Hen. 8. of this Realm, ſhall be reputed, accepted and adjudged Traytors, and that every ſuch offence in any the premiſſes committed or done after the ſaid firſt day of February, ſhall be reputed, accepted and adjudged high Treaſon; and the offenders therein, their aiders, conſenters, counſellers and abettors, being lawfully convict of any ſuch offence, ſhall have and ſuffer ſuch pains of death and other penalties, as is limited and accuſtomed in caſes of High-Treaſon.

Upon this and ſuch other Acts concluded in thoſe Parliaments, what ſtomach the Pope took, what ſtir he kept, and what practices he wrought with Cardinal Pool, to ſtir up other Nations to War againſt us, what difficulty alſo there was with the Emperor, with the French King, and with the King of Scots, about the matter, and what labour was uſed on the Kings part to reconcile the Princes for his own indempnity, to keep from him their Wars and Invaſions, and ſpecially to obtain the Popes approbation, and to avoid his cenſures of Excommunication; and finally, what deſpightful injuries, and open wrongs the Pope wrought againſt him, upon the which Pope the King had beſtowed ſo much mony, and great treaſures before, all this likewiſe by the premiſſes may appear.

Wherefore, to end now with theſe, and to go forward in our ſtory, as the order and computation of years do give, we have now conſequently to enter into the ſtory of the good Martyr of God, William Tindal, being this preſent year falſly betrayed and put to death. Which William Tindal, as he was a ſpecial Organ of the Lord appointed, and as Gods Mattock to ſhake the inward roots, and foundation of the Popes proud Prelacy, ſo the great Prince of darkneſs, with his impious imps, having a ſpecial malice againſt him, left no way unſought how craftily to intrap him, and falſly to betray him, and maliciouſly to ſpill his life, as by the proceſs of his ſtory here following may appear.

The Life and Story of the true Servant and Martyr of God William Tindal; who, for his notable pains and travel may well be called the Apoſtle of England in this our later Age.

Will. Tindal Martyr. Ann. 1536 WILLIAM Tindal, the faithful Miniſter and conſtant Martyr of Chriſt, was born about the Borders of Wales, and brought up from a Child in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he by long continuance grew up, and increaſed as well in the knowledge of tongues, and other liberal Arts, as eſpecially in the knowledge of the Scriptures, whereunto his mind was ſingularly addicted; inſomuch that he, lying then in Magdalen Hall, read privily to certain Students and Fellows of Magdalen College, ſome parcel of Divinity; inſtructing them in the knowledge and truth of the Scriptures. Whoſe manners alſo and converſation, being correſpondent to the ſame, were ſuch, that all they that knew him, reputed and eſteemed him to be a man of moſt vertuous diſpoſition, and of life unſpotted.

The firſt taſte of Gods truth in Magdalen College by the means of Mr. Tind.

Thus he, in the Univerſity of Oxford, increaſing more and more in learning, and proceeding in degrees of the Schools, ſpying his time, removed from thence to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where after he had likewiſe made his abode a certain ſpace, being now further ripened in the knowledge of Gods Word, leaving that Univerſity alſo, he reſorted to one Maſter Welch a Knight of Gloceſterſhire, and was there Schoolmaſter to his Children, and in good favour with his Maſter. This Gentleman, as he kept a good Ordinary commonly at his Table, there reſorted to him many times ſundry Abbots, Deans, Archdeacons, with divers other Doctors, and great Beneficed men; who there together with Maſter Tindal ſitting at the ſame Table, did uſe many times to enter communication, and talk of learned men, as of Luther, and of Eraſmus; alſo of divers other controverſies and queſtions upon the Scripture.

Then Maſter Tindal, as he was learned and well practiſed in Gods matters, ſo he ſpared not to ſhew unto them ſimply and plainly his judgment in matters, as he thought; and when as they at any time did vary from Tindal in opinions and judgment, he would ſhew them in the Book, and lay plainly before them the open and manifeſt places of the Scriptures, to confute their errors, and confirm his ſayings. And thus continued they for a certain ſeaſon, reaſoning and contending together divers and ſundry times, till at length they waxed weary, and bare a ſecret grudge in their hearts againſt him.

Tindal diſputing with the Doctors

Not long after this, it happened that certain of theſe great Doctors had invited Mr. Welch and his Wife to a Banquet; where they had talk at will and pleaſure, uttering their blindneſs and ignorance without any reſiſtance or gain-ſaying. Then Maſter Welch and his Wife, coming home, and calling for Mr. Tindal, began to reaſon with him about thoſe matters, whereof the Prieſts had talked before at their Banquet. Maſter Tindal anſwering by Scriptures, maintained the truth, and reproved their falſe opinions. Then ſaid the Lady Welch, a ſtout and a wiſe woman (as Tindal reported) Well (ſaid ſhe) there was ſuch a Doctor which may diſpend an hundred pounds, and another two hundred pounds, and another three hundred pounds: and what, were it reaſon, think you, that we ſhould believe you before them? Maſter Tindal gave her no anſwer at that time, and alſo after that (becauſe he ſaw it would not avail) he talked but little in thoſe matters. At that time he was about the Tranſlation of a Book called Enchiridion militis Chriſtiani, which being tranſlated, he delivered to his Maſter and Lady. Who, after they had read and well peruſed the ſame, the Doctorly Prelates were no more ſo often called to the houſe, neither had they the chear and countenance when they came, as before they had. Which thing they marking, and well perceiving, and ſuppoſing no leſs but it came by the means of Maſter Tindal, refrained themſelves, and at laſt, utterly withdrew themſelves, and came no more there.

Tindal inſtructeth M. Welch and his Wife in the truth.

Enchiridion, a Book of Eraſmus, tranſlated by Tindal.

As this grew on, the Prieſts of the Country cluſtering together, began to grudge and ſtorm againſt Tindal, railing againſt him in Alehouſes and other places. Of whom Tindal himſelf, in his Prologue before the firſt Book of Moſes, thus teſtifieth in his own words, and reporteth that he ſuffered much in that Country by a ſort of unlearned Prieſts, being full rude and ignorant (ſaith he) God knoweth: (which have ſeen no more Latin, than that only which they read in their Porteſſes and Miſſalles; which yet many of them can ſcarcely read) except it be Albertus de ſecretis mulierum, in which yet, though they be never ſo ſorrily learned, they pore day and night, and make notes therein, and all to teach the Midwifes, as they ſay, and alſo another called Lindwood, a Book of Conſtitutions to gather Tythes, Mortuaries, Offerings, Cuſtoms, and other Pillage, which they call not theirs, but Gods part, the duty of Holy-Church, to diſcharge their Conſciences withal. For they are bound that they ſhall not diminiſh but increaſe all things unto the uttermoſt of their powers, which pertain to Holy-Church. Thus theſe blind and rude Prieſts flocking together to the Alehouſe (for that was their preaching place) raged and railed againſt him, affirming that his ſayings were Hereſie; adding moreover unto his ſayings, of their own heads, more than ever he ſpake, and ſo accuſed him ſecretly to the Chancellor, and other of the Biſhops Officers.

The Prieſts ſtorm againſt Tindal.

The rudeneſs of the Country Prieſts.

Tindal troubled by the Prieſts of the Country.

It followed not long after this, that there was a ſitting of the Biſhops Chancellor appointed, and warning was given to the Prieſts to appear, amongſt whom Maſter Tindal was alſo warned to be there. And whether he had any miſdoubt by their threatnings, or knowledge given him that they would lay ſome things to his charge, it is uncertain; but certain this is (as he himſelf declared) that he doubted their privy accuſations; ſo that he by the way, in going thitherwards, cried in his mind heartily to God, to give him ſtrength faſt to ſtand in the truth of his Word.

Tindal called before the Biſhops Chancellors.

Then when the time came of his appearance before the Chancellor, he threatned him grievouſly, reviling and rating at him as though he had been a Dog, and laid to his charge many things wherof no accuſer yet could be brought forth (as commonly their manner is, not to bring forth the accuſer) notwithſtanding that the Prieſts of the Country the ſame time were there preſent. And thus Maſter Tindal after thoſe Examinations, eſcaping out of

Tindal could not have his accuſers brought out their hands, departed home, and returned to his Maſter again.

One good old Doctor amongſt many naught.

There dwelt not far off a certain Doctor, that had been an old Chancellor before to a Biſhop, who had been of old familiar acquaintance with Maſter Tindal, and alſo favoured him well. Unto whom Maſter Tindal went and opened his mind upon divers queſtions of the Scripture; for to him he durſt be bold to diſcloſe his heart. Unto whom the Doctor ſaid, Do you not know that the Pope is very Antichriſt, whom the Scripture ſpeaketh of? But beware what you ſay; for if you ſhall be perceived to be of that opinion, it will coſt you your life: and ſaid moreover, I have been an Officer of his; but I have given it up, and defie him and all his works.

The Pope Antichriſt.

It was not long after, but Maſter Tindal happened to be in the company of a certain Divine, recounted for a learned man, and in communing and diſputing with him, he drave him to that iſſue, that the ſaid great Doctor, burſt out into theſe blaſphemous words, and ſaid, We were better to be without Gods Laws than the Popes. Mr. Tindal hearing this, full of godly zeal, and not bearing that blaſphemous ſaying, replied again, and ſaid, I defie the Pope, and all his Laws; and further added, That if God ſpared him life, ere many years, he would cauſe a boy that driveth the Plough to know more of the Scripture than he did.

The blaſphemy of a blind Dr. The Popes law preferred before Gods Law.

After this, the grudge of the Prieſts increaſing ſtill more and more againſt Tindal, they never ceaſed barking and ſnarling at him, and laid many things ſore to his charge, ſaying, That he was an Heretick in Sophiſtry, an Heretick in Logick, an Heretick in Divinity; and ſaid moreover to him, That he bare himſelf bold of the Gentlemen there in that Country; but notwithſtanding, ſhortly he ſhould be otherwiſe talked withal. To whom Maſter Tindal, anſwering again, thus ſaid, That he was contented they ſhould bring him into any Country in all England, giving him ten pounds a year to live with, and binding him to no more, but to teach children, and to preach.

To be ſhort, Maſter Tindal being ſo moleſted and vexed in the Country by the Prieſts, was conſtrained to leave that Country, and to ſeek another place; and ſo coming to Maſter Welch, he deſired him of his good will that he might depart from him, ſaying on this wiſe to him, Sir, I perceive that I ſhall not be ſuffered to tarry long here in this Country, neither ſhall you be able, though you would, to keep me out of the hands of the Spirituality; and alſo what diſpleaſure might grow thereby to you by keeping me, God knoweth, for the which I ſhould be right ſorry. So that in fine, Maſter Tindal, with the good will of his Maſter, departed, and eftſoons came up to London, and there preached a while, according as he had done in the Country before, and ſpecially about the Town of Briſtol, and alſo in the ſaid Town in the common place called St. Auſtens Green. At length he bethinking himſelf of Cuthbert Tonſtal then Biſhop of London, and eſpecially for the great commendation of Eraſmus, who in his Annotations ſo extolleth him for his learning, thus caſt with himſelf, that if he might attain unto his ſervice, he were a happy man. And ſo coming to Sir Henry Gilford, the Kings Controler, and bringing with him an Oration of Iſocrates, which he had then tranſlated out of Greek into Engliſh, he deſired him to ſpeak to the ſaid Biſhop of London for him; which he alſo did, and willed him moreover to write an Epiſtle to the Biſhop, and to go himſelf with him. Which he did likewiſe, and delivered his Epiſtle to a ſervant of his, named William Hebilthwait, a man of his old acquaintance. But God, who ſecretly diſpoſeth the courſe of things, ſaw that was not the beſt for Tindal's purpoſe, nor for the profit of his Church, and therefore gave him to find little favour in the Biſhops ſight. The anſwer of whom was this, That his houſe was full, he had more than he could well find, and adviſed him to ſeek in London abroad, where he ſaid he could lack no ſervice, &c. And ſo remained he in London, the ſpace almoſt of a year, beholding and marking with himſelf the courſe of the World, and eſpecially the demeanour of the Preachers, how they boaſted themſelves, and ſet up their authority and Kingdom; beholding alſo the pomp of the Prelates, with other things more, which greatly miſliked him. Inſomuch that he underſtood not only there to be no room in the Biſhops houſe for him to tranſlate the New Teſtament; but alſo that there was no place to do it in all England. And therefore, finding no place for his purpoſe within the Realm, and having ſome aid and proviſion by Gods Providence miniſtred unto him by Humfry Munmouth, above recited, (as you may ſee before) and certain other good men, he took his leave of the Realm, and departed into Germany. Where the good man, being inflamed with a tender care and zeal of his Country, refuſed no travel nor diligence, how by all means poſſible to reduce his Brethren and Countrymen of England, to the ſame taſte and underſtanding of Gods holy Word and verity, which the Lord had indued him withal.

Tindal departeth from Maſter Welch.

Tindal cometh to London.

Tindal departeth into Germany.

Whereupon he conſidering in his mind, and partly alſo conferring with John Frith, thought with himſelf no way more to conduce thereunto, than if the Scripture were turned into the vulgar ſpeech, that the poor people might alſo read and ſee the ſimple plain Word of God. For firſt, he wiſely caſting in his mind, perceived by experience, how that it was not poſſible to eſtabliſh the lay-people in any truth, except the Scripture were ſo plainly laid before their eyes in their Mother Tongue, that they might ſee the proceſs, order and meaning of the Text; for elſe whatſoever truth ſhould be taught them, theſe enemies of the truth would quench it again, either with apparent reaſons of ſophiſtry and traditions of their own making, founded without all ground of Scripture; or elſe jugling with the Text, expounding it in ſuch a ſenſe, as impoſſible it were to gather of the Text, if the right proceſs, order and meaning thereof were ſeen.

The cauſes moving Tindal to tranſlate the Scripture into the Engliſh Tongue.

Again, right well he perceived and conſidered, this only, or moſt chiefly to be the cauſe of all miſchief in the Church, that the Scriptures of God were hidden from the peoples eyes; for ſo long the abominable doings, and idolatries maintained by the Phariſaical Clergy, could not be ſpied, and therefore all their labour was with might and main to keep it down, ſo that either it ſhould not be read at all, or if it were, they would darken the right ſenſe with the Miſt of their Sophiſtry, and ſo entangle them which rebuked or deſpiſed their abominations, with arguments of Philoſophy; and with worldly ſimilitudes, and apparent reaſons of natural wiſdom; and with wreſting the Scripture unto their own purpoſe, contrary unto the proceſs, order and meaning of the Text, would ſo delude them in deſcanting upon it with allegories, and amaze them, expounding it in many ſenſes laid before the unlearned lay people, that though thou felt in thy heart, and wert ſure that all were falſe that they ſaid, yet couldſt thou not ſalve their ſubtil riddles.

Hiding of Scripture the cauſe of miſchief.

For theſe and ſuch other conſiderations this good man was moved (and no doubt ſtirred up of God) to tranſlate the Scripture into his Mother Tongue, for the publick utility and profit of the ſimple vulgar people of the Country; firſt ſetting in hand with the New Teſtament, which he firſt tranſlated about the year of our Lord 1527. After that he took in hand to tranſlate the Old Teſtament, finiſhing the five Books of Moſes, with ſundry moſt learned and godly Prologues prefixed before every one, moſt worthy to be read and read again of all good Chriſtians, as the like alſo he did upon the New Teſtament.

The New Teſtament and the five Books of Moſes tranſlated with Tindal's Prologues.

He wrote alſo divers other Works under ſundry Titles, amongſt the which is that moſt worthy Monument of his, entituled, The obedience of a Chriſtian man, wherein with ſingular dexterity he inſtructeth all men in the office and duty of Chriſtian obedience, with divers other Treatiſes, as, The wicked Mammon, The practice of Prelats; with Expoſitions upon certain parts of the Scripture, and other Books alſo, anſwering to Sir Thomas More, and other adverſaries of the truth, no leſs delectable, than alſo moſt fruitful to be read; which partly before being unknown unto many, partly alſo being almoſt aboliſhed and worn out by time, the Printer hereof (good Reader) for conſerving and reſtoring ſuch ſingular treaſures, hath collected and ſet forth in Print the ſame in one general Volum, all and whole together, as alſo the Works of John Frith, Barns and other, aſſure to be ſeen, moſt ſpecial and profitable for thy reading.

An Oration of Iſocrates, tranſlated out of Greek into Engliſh by W. Tindal

The

KING *Hen.*8.

The Books of William Tindal being compiled, published, and ſent over into England, it cannot be ſpoken what a door of light they opened to the eyes of the whole Engliſh Nation, which before were many years ſhut up in darkneſs.

Tindal went into Saxony.

At his firſt departing out of the Realm he took his journey into the further parts of Germany, as into Saxony, where he had conference with Luther, and other learned Men in thoſe Quarters, where after that he had continued a certain ſeaſon, he came down from thence into the Netherlands, and had his moſt abiding in the Town of Antwerp, until the time of his apprehenſion; whereof more ſhall be ſaid (God willing) hereafter.

Tindal came to Antwerp.

Amongſt his other Books which he compiled, one Work he made alſo for the declaration of the Sacrament (as it was then called) of the Altar; the which he kept by him, conſidering how the people were not as yet fully perſwaded in other matters tending to ſuperſtitious ceremonies and groſs Idolatry. Wherefore he thought as yet time was not come to put forth that Work, but rather that it ſhould hinder the people from other inſtructions, ſuppoſing that it would ſeem to them odious to hear any ſuch thing ſpoken, or ſet forth at that time, ſounding againſt their great Goddeſs Diana, that is, againſt their Maſs, being had every where in great eſtimation, as was the Goddeſs Diana amongſt the Epheſians, whom they thought to come from Heaven.

Tindal bearing with time.

Wherefore Maſter Tindal, being a man both prudent in his doings, and no leſs zealous in the ſetting forth of Gods holy truth, after ſuch ſort as it might take moſt effect with the people, did forbear the putting forth of that work, not doubting but by Gods merciful grace, a time ſhould come to have that abomination openly declared, as it is at this preſent day, the Lord Almighty be always praiſed therefore, Amen.

Theſe godly Books of Tindal, and eſpecially the New Teſtament of his Tranſlation, after that they began to come into mens hands, and to ſpread abroad, as they wrought great and ſingular profit to the godly; ſo the ungodly envying and diſdaining that the people ſhould be any thing wiſer than they, and again, fearing leſt by the ſhining beams of truth, their falſe hypocriſie and works of darkneſs ſhould be diſcerned, began to ſtir with no ſmall ado, like as at the birth of Chriſt Herod and all Jeruſalem was troubled with him. But eſpecially Satan the Prince of Darkneſs, maligning the happy courſe and ſucceſs of the Goſpel, ſet to his might alſo, how to impeach and hinder the bleſſed travels of that man; as by this, and alſo by ſundry other ways may appear. For at what time Tindal had tranſlated the fifth Book of Moſes called Deuteronomium, minding to Print the ſame at Hamborough, he ſailed thitherward; where by the way upon the Coaſt of Holland, he ſuffered Shipwrack, by the which he loſt all his Books, Writings and Copies, and ſo was compelled to begin all again anew, to his hindrance and doubling of his labours. Thus having loſt by that Ship, both Mony, his Copies and time, he came in another Ship to Hamborough, where at his appointment, Maſter Coverdale tarried for him, and helped him in the tranſlating of the whole five Books of Moſes, from Eaſter till December, in the houſe of a worſhipful Widow, Miſtris Margaret Van Emmerſon, Anno 1529. a great ſweating Sickneſs being the ſame time in the Town. So having diſpatched his buſineſs at Hamborough, he returned afterward to Antwerp again.

Darkneſs hateth light

Satan an enemy to all good purpoſes, eſpecially to the Goſpel.

Will. Tindal loſt his Books and Copies by ſhipwrack.

Mr. Coverdale a helper of Mr. Tindal in the Tranſlation of the Teſtament.

Thus as Satan is, and ever hath been an enemy to all godly endeavours, and chiefly to the promoting and furtherance of Gods Word, as by this and many other experiments may be ſeen, ſo his Miniſters and Members, following the like quality of their Maſter, be not altogether idle for their parts; as alſo by the Popes Chaplains and Gods enemies, and by their cruel handling of the ſaid Mr. Tindal the ſame time, both here in England and in Flanders, may well appear.

When Gods will was that the New Teſtament in the common tongue ſhould come abroad, Tindal the Tranſlator thereof added to the later end a certain Epiſtle, wherein he deſired them that were learned to amend, if ought were found amiſs. Wherefore if any ſuch default had been, deſerving correction, it had been the part of courteſie and gentleneſs, for men of knowledge and judgment to have ſhewed their learning therein, and to have redreſſed that which was to be amended. But the ſpiritual Fathers then of the Clergy, being not willing to have that Book to proſper, cried out upon it, bearing men in hand, that there were a thouſand Hereſies in it, and that it was not to be corrected, but utterly to be ſuppreſſed. Some ſaid it was not poſſible to tranſlate the Scripture into Engliſh; ſome that it was not lawful for the lay people to have it in their Mother-tongue; ſome that it would make them all Hereticks. And to the intent to induce the temporal Rulers alſo unto their purpoſe, they made matter, and ſaid that it would make the people to rebel and riſe againſt the King. All this Tindal himſelf, in his own Prologue before the firſt Book of Moſes declareth, and addeth further, ſhewing what great pains was taken in examining that Tranſlation, and comparing it with their own imaginations and terms, that with leſs labour, he ſuppoſeth, they might have tranſlated themſelves a great part of the Bible: ſhewing moreover, that they ſcanned and examined every tittle and point in the ſaid Tranſlation, in ſuch ſort, and ſo narrowly, that there was not one i therein, but if it lacked a prick over his head, they did note it, and numbred it unto the ignorant people for an Hereſie. So great were then the froward devices of the Engliſh Clergy (who ſhould have been the Guids of light unto the people) to drive the people from the text and knowledge of the Scripture, which neither they would tranſlate themſelves, nor yet abide it to be tranſlated of others; to the intent (as Tindal ſaith) that the Word being kept ſtill in darkneſs, they might ſit in the Conſciences of the people through vain ſuperſtition and falſe Doctrine, to ſatisfie their luſts, their ambition, and unſatiable covetouſneſs, and to exalt their own honour, above King and Emperor, yea and above God himſelf. Hæc ille.

The practice of Popiſh Prelates to keep the Scripture from the People.

The cauſes why the Popes Clergy could not abide the Scripture in the common tongue.

The Biſhops and Prelates of the Realm, thus (as ye have heard) incenſed and inflamed in their minds, although having no cauſe, againſt the Old and New Teſtament of the Lord newly tranſlated by Tindal, and conſpiring together with all their Heads and Councils, how to repeal the ſame, never reſted, before they had brought the King at laſt to their conſent. By reaſon whereof, a Proclamation in all haſte was deviſed and ſet forth under publick authority, but no juſt reaſon ſhewed, that the Teſtament of Tindal's Tranſlation, with other works more, both of his and of other Writers, were inhibited and abandoned, as ye heard before. Which was about the year of our Lord 1527. And yet not contented herewith, they proceeded further, how to intangle him in their Nets, and to bereave him of his life. Which how they brought to paſs, now it remaineth to be declared.

The Popiſh Prelates procured not only the condemnation of Mr. Tindal's Books, but alſo burned both them and the Teſtament, calling it Doctrinam peregrinam, ſtrange doctrine.

Privy conſpiration of the Biſhops againſt Mr. Tindal.

In the Regiſters of London it appeareth manifeſtly, how that the Biſhops and Sir Thomas More having any poor man under Coram, to be examined before them, namely ſuch as had been at Antwerp, moſt ſtudiouſly would ſearch and examine all things belonging to Tindal, where and with whom he hoſted, whereabout ſtood the houſe, what was his ſtature, in what apparel he went, what reſort he had, &c. All which things when they had diligently learned (as may appear by the Examination of Simon Smith and others) then began they to work their feats, as you ſhall hear by the relation of his own Hoſt.

The order and manner of taking Tindal, ſtifled by Pointz his Hoſt.

William Tindal being in the Town of Antwerp, had been lodged about one whole year, in the Houſe of Thomas Pointz an Engliſhman, who kept there an Houſe of Engliſh Merchants. About which time came thither one out of England, whoſe name was Henry Philips, his Father being Cuſtomer of Pool, a comely fellow like as he had been a Gentleman, having a ſervant with him, but wherefore he came, or for what purpoſe he was ſent thither, no man could tell.

The friendſhip of Tindal ſhewed to Philips his betrayer.

Maſter Tindal divers times was deſired forth to Dinner and Supper amongſt Merchants; by the means whereof this Henry Philips became acquainted with him, ſo that within ſhort ſpace Maſter Tindal had a great confidence in him, and brought him to his Lodging to the Houſe of Thomas Pointz, and had him alſo once or twice with him to Dinner and Supper, and further entred ſuch friendſhip with him, that through his procurement he lay in the ſame Houſe of the ſaid Pointz; to whom he ſhewed moreover his Books and other ſecrets of his ſtudy, ſo little did Tindal then miſtruſt this Traytor.

But Pointz having no great confidence in the fellow, asked Maſter Tindal how he came acquainted with this Philips. Maſter Tindal anſwered, that he was an honeſt man, handſomely learned, and very comfortable. Then Pointz, perceiving that he bare ſuch favour to him, ſaid no more, thinking that he was brought acquainted with him by ſome friend of his. The ſaid Philips being in the Town three or four days, upon a time deſired Pointz to walk with him forth of the Town to ſhew him the commodities thereof, and in walking together without the Town, had communication of divers things, and ſome of the Kings affairs; by the which talk Pointz as yet ſuſpected nothing, but after, by the ſequel of the matter, he perceived more what he intended. In the mean time this he well perceived, that he bare no great favour either to the ſetting forth of any good thing, or to the proceedings of the King of England. But after, when the time was paſt, Pointz perceived this to be his mind, to feel if he could perceive by him, whether he might break with him in the matter, for lucre of mony, to help him to his purpoſe; for he perceived before that he was monied, and would that Pointz ſhould think no leſs; but by whom it was unknown. For he had deſired Pointz before to help him to divers things, and ſuch things as he named, he required might be of the beſt, for ſaid he, I have mony enough; but of this talk came nothing, but that men ſhould think he had ſome things to do; for nothing elſe followed of his talk. So it was to be ſuſpected, that Philips was in doubt to move this matter for his purpoſe, to any of the Rulers or Officers of the Town of Antwerp, for doubt it ſhould come to the knowledge of ſome Engliſhmen, and by the means thereof Mr. Tindal ſhould have had warning.

The Papiſts will ſpare no coſt to fulfil their malicious enterprises.

Philips well monied by the Engliſh Biſhops.

So Philips went from Antwerp to the Court of Bruxels, which is from thence twenty four Engliſh miles, the King having there no Embaſſador; for at that time the King of England and the Emperor were at a controverſie, for the queſtion betwixt the King and the Lady Katharine, which was Aunt to the Emperor, and the diſcord grew ſo much, that it was doubted leſt there ſhould have been War between the Emperor and the King, ſo that Philips as a Traytor both againſt God and the King, was there the better retained, as alſo other Traitors more beſides him; who after he had betrayed Mr. Tindal into their hands, ſhewed himſelf likewiſe againſt the Kings own perſon, and there ſet forth things againſt the King. To make ſhort, the ſaid Philips did ſo much there, that he procured to bring from thence with him to Antwerp, that Procuror General, which is the Emperors Attorney, with certain other Officers, as after followeth. The which was not done with ſmall charges and expences, from whomſoever it came.

Within a while after, Pointz ſitting at his door, Philips man came unto him, and asked whether Mr. Tindal were there, and ſaid, his Maſter would come to him, and ſo departed. But whether his Maſter Philips were in the Town or not, it was not known; but at that time Pointz heard no more, neither of the Maſter nor of the Man. Within three or four days after, Pointz went forth to the Town of Barrow being eighteen Engliſh Miles from Antwerp, where he had buſineſs to do for the ſpace of a Month or ſix Weeks, and in the time of his abſence Henry Philips came again to Antwerp to the houſe of Pointz, and coming in, ſpake with his Wife, asking her for Mr. Tindal, and whether he would dine there with him, ſaying, What good meat ſhall we have? She anſwered, ſuch as the Market will give. Then went he forth again (as it is thought) to provide, and ſet the Officers which he brought with him from Bruxels, in the ſtreet, and about the door. Then about Noon he came again, and went to Maſter Tindal, and deſired him to lend him forty ſhillings; for (ſaid he) I loſt my Purſe this morning, coming over at the paſſage between this and Machelin. So Maſter Tindal took him forty ſhillings, the which was eaſie to be had of him, if he had it, for in the wyly ſubtilties of this World he was ſimple and unexpert.

H. Philips traytor and betrayer of Mr. Tindal.

The ſimplicity of Mr. Tindal.

Then ſaid Philips, Maſter Tindal you ſhall be my Gueſt here to day. No, ſaid Maſter Tindal, I go forth this day to Dinner, and you ſhall go with me, and be my Gueſt, where you ſhall be welcome. So when it was Dinner time, Maſter Tindal went forth with Philips, and at the going out of Pointz houſe, was a long narrow Entry, ſo that two could not go in a front. Maſter Tindal would have put Philips before him, but Philips would in no wiſe, but put Maſter Tindal afore, for that he pretended to ſhew great humanity. So Maſter Tindal, being a man of no great ſtature, went before, and Philips a tall comely perſon followed behind him; who had ſet Officers on either ſide of the Door upon two ſeats, which being there might ſee who came in the Entry; and coming through the ſame Entry, Philips pointed with his finger over Maſter Tindal's head down to him, that the Officers which ſate at the door might ſee that it was he whom they ſhould take, as the Officers that took Maſter Tindal, afterward told Pointz, and ſaid to Pointz when they had laid him in Priſon, That they pitied to ſee his ſimplicity when they took him. Then they took him and brought him to the Emperors Attorney, or Procuror General, where he dined. Then came the Procuror General to the Houſe of Pointz, and ſent away all that was there of Maſter Tindal's, as well his Books as other things, and from thence Tindal was had to the Caſtle of Filford, eighteen Engliſh Miles from Antwerp, and there he remained until he was put to death.

KING Hen. 8

How Tindal was betrayed into his enemies hands.

Tindal had to the Caſtle of Filford.

Then incontinent, by the help of Engliſh Merchants, were Letters ſent in the favour of Tindal to the Court of Bruſſels. Alſo not long after, Letters were directed out of England to the Council at Bruſſels, and ſent to the Merchant Adventurers to Antwerp, commanding them to ſee that with ſpeed they ſhould be delivered. Then ſuch of the chief of the Merchants as were there at that time, being called together, required the ſaid Pointz to take in hand the delivery of thoſe Letters, with Letters alſo from them in the favour of Maſter Tindal, to the Lord of Barrow and others; the which Lord of Barrow (as it was told Pointz by the way) at that time was departed from Bruſſels, as the chiefeſt Conductor of the eldeſt Daughter of the King of Denmark, to be married to the Paleſgrave, whoſe Mother was Siſter to the Emperor, ſhe being chief Princeſs of Denmark. Who, after he heard of his departure, did ride after the next way, and overtook him at Achon, where he delivered to him his Letters. The which when he had received and read, he made no direct anſwer, but ſomewhat objecting, ſaid, There were of their Countrymen that were burned in England not long before; as indeed there were Anabaptiſts burned in Smithfield, and ſo Pointz ſaid to him; Howbeit, ſaid he, whatſoever the crime was, if his Lordſhip or any other Nobleman had written, requiring to have had them, he thought they ſhould not have been denied. Well, ſaid he, I have no leiſure to write, for the Princeſs is ready to ride.

Letters ſent from England by the Lord Cromwel and others in the behalf of Mr. Tindal.

Then ſaid Pointz, If it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip, I will attend upon you unto the next baiting place, which was at Maſtricht. If you ſo do, ſaid the Lord, I will adviſe my ſelf by the way what to write. So Pointz followed him from Achon to Maſtricht, the which are fifteen Engliſh Miles aſunder, and there he received Letters of him, one to the Council there, another to the company of the Merchant Adventurers, and another alſo to the Lord Cromwel in England.

Letters from the Lord of Barrow to the Lord Cromwel concerning Mr. Tindal.

So Pointz rode from thence to Bruſſels, and then and there delivered to the Council the Letters out of England, with the Lord of Barrows Letters alſo, and received eftſoons anſwer into England of the ſame by Letters, which he brought to Antwerp to the Engliſh Merchants, who required him to go with them into England. And he very deſirous to have Mr. Tindal out of Priſon, let not to take pains, with loſs of time in his own buſineſs and occupying, and diligently followed with the ſaid Letters, which he there delivered to the Council, and was commanded by them to tarry until he had other Letters, of the which he was not diſpatched thence in a Month after. At length the Letters being delivered him, he returned again, and delivered them to the Emperors Council at Bruſſels, and there tarried for anſwer of the ſame.

Pointz ſent with Letters from Bruſſels to England.

When

{KING Hen.8.}

When the ſaid Pointz had tarried three or four days, it was told him of one that belonged to the Chancery, that Maſter Tindal ſhould have been delivered to him according to the tenour of the Letters; but Philips being there, followed the Suit againſt Maſter Tindal, and hearing that he ſhould be delivered to Pointz, and doubting leſt he ſhould be put from his purpoſe, he knew none other remedy but to accuſe Pointz, ſaying, That he was a dweller in the Town of Antwerp, and there had been a ſuccourer of Tindal, and was one of the ſame Opinion, and that all this was only his own labour and ſuit, to have Maſter Tindal at liberty, and no mans elſe.

The ſuit of Philips againſt Mr. Tindal.

The Martyrdome of Maſter William Tindall in Flanders, by Vilvord Caſtle.

Thus upon his information and accuſation Pointz was attached by the Procuror General; the Emperors Attorny, delivered to the keeping of two Serjeants at Arms; and the ſame Evening was ſent to him one of the Chancery, with the Procuror General, who miniſtred unto him an Oath, that he ſhould truly make anſwer to all ſuch things as ſhould be inquired of him, thinking they would have had no other examinations of him but of his meſſage. The next day likewiſe they came again, and had him in examination, and ſo five or ſix days one after another, upon not ſo few as an hundred Articles, as well of the Kings affairs, as of the meſſage concerning Tindal, of his aiders, and of his Religion. Out of the which examinations, the Procuror General drew twenty three or twenty four Articles, and declared the ſame againſt the ſaid Pointz, the Copy whereof he delivered to him to make anſwer thereunto, and permitted him to have an Advocate and Proctor, that is, a Doctor and Proctor in the Law; and order was taken, that eight days after he ſhould deliver unto them his anſwer, and from eight days to eight days, to proceed till the Proceſs were ended. Alſo that he ſhould ſend no meſſenger to Antwerp whereas his houſe was, being twenty four Engliſh Miles from Bruſſels, where he was Priſoner, nor to any other place, but by the Poſt of the Town of Bruſſels, nor to ſend any Letters, nor any to be delivered to him, but written in Dutch, and the Procuror General, who was party againſt him, to read them, to peruſe and examine them throughly, contrary to all right and equity, before they were ſent or delivered: neither might any be ſuffered to ſpeak or talk with Pointz in any other Tongue or Language, except only in the Dutch Tongue, ſo that his Keepers, who were Dutch men might underſtand what the contents of the Letters or talk ſhould be. Saving that at one certain time the Provincial of the White Friers came to Dinner where Pointz was Priſoner, and brought with him a young Novice, being an Engliſhman, whom the Provincial after Dinner, of his own accord, did bid to talk with the ſaid Pointz; and ſo with him he was licenſed to talk. The purpoſe and great policy therein was eaſie to be perceived. Between Pointz and the Novice was much pretty talk, as of Sir Thomas More, and of the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and of their putting to death, whoſe death he ſeemed greatly to lament, eſpecially dying in ſuch a quarrel, worthy (as he ſaid) to be accounted for Martys; with other noble Doctrine, and deep learning in Divinity, meet to feed Swine withal. Such blindneſs then in thoſe days reigned amongſt them. After this Pointz delivered up his anſwer to the Procuror General, and then after, at the days appointed, went forth with Replication duplick, with other anſwers each to other in writing, what they could.

Pointz attached by Philips.

Pointz examined.

Talk between Pointz and a Novice.

As the Commiſſioners came to Pointz, Philips the Traitor accompanied them to the Door in following the Proceſs againſt him, as he alſo did againſt Maſter Tindal, for ſo they that had Pointz in keeping, ſhewed him. Thus Pointz for Maſter Tindal was ſore troubled, and long kept in Priſon; but at length, when he ſaw no other remedy, by night he made his eſcape, and avoided their hands. But good Tindal could not eſcape their hands, but remained in Priſon ſtill, who being brought unto his anſwer, was offered to have an Advocate and a Proctor; for in any criminal cauſe there, it ſhall be permitted to have Council, to make anſwer in the Law. But he refuſed to have any ſuch, ſaying, That he would anſwer for himſelf; and ſo he did.

Pointz troubled for Mr. Tindal.

At laſt, After much reaſoning, when no reaſon would ſerve, although he deſerved no death, he was condemned by vertue of the Emperors Decree, made in the Aſſembly at Ausburgh (as is before ſignified) and upon the ſame brought forth to the place of Execution, was there tied to the Stake, and then ſtrangled firſt by the Hangman, and afterward with fire conſumed in the morning at the Town of Filford, Anno 1536. crying thus at the Stake with a fervent zeal, and a loud voice, Lord open the King of England's Eyes.

The condemnation of M. Tindal

The Martyrdom of W. Tindal.

{Ann. 1536}

The Prayer of M. Tindal

Such was the power of his Doctrine, and ſincerity of his life, that during the time of his impriſonment (which endured a year and a half) it is ſaid, he converted his Keeper, his Daughter, and other of his houſhold. Alſo the reſt that were with him converſant in the Caſtle reported of him, that if he were not a good Chriſtian man, they could not tell whom to truſt.

Mr. Tindal converted his Keeper.

Commendation of Mr. Tindal, by them that were about him.

The Procurator General, the Emperors Attorney, being there, left this teſtimony of him, that he was Homo doctus, pius & bonus, that is, a learned, a good and a godly man.

The ſame Morning in which he was had to the fire, he delivered a Letter to the Keeper of the Caſtle which the Keeper himſelf brought to the Houſe of the foreſaid Pointz in Antwerp, ſhortly after; which Letter with his Examinations and other his Diſputations, I would might have come to our hands; all which I underſtand did remain, and yet perhaps do, in the hands of the Keepers Daughter. For ſo it is of him reported, that as he was in the Caſtle Priſoner, there was much writing, and great Diſputation to and fro, between him and them of the Univerſity of Lovain (which was not paſt nine or ten Miles from the place where he was Priſoner) in ſuch ſort, that they all had enough to do, and more than they could well wield, to anſwer the authorities and teſtimonies of the Scripture, whereupon he moſt pithily grounded his Doctrine.

Of Judas that betrayed Chriſt it is written, That he returned the Mony again to the Phariſees, and afterward hanged himſelf. So Philips this miſerable Traitor, after he had bin received of Tindal, and borrowed mony of him, and yet betrayed him and purſued him to death; albeit he rejoyced a while after that he had done it, yet the ſaying ſo goeth, that he not long time after enjoyed the price of innocent bloud, but was conſumed at laſt with Lice.

Gods judgment upon Philips the betraier of Tindal.

The worthy vertues and doings of this bleſſed Martyr, who for his painful travels, and ſingular zeal to his Country, may be called in theſe our days, an Apoſtle of England, it were long to recite. Among many other, this becauſe it ſeemeth to me worthy of remembrance, I thought not in ſilence to overpaſs, which hath unto me been credibly teſtified by certain grave Merchants, and ſome of them alſo ſuch as were preſent the ſame time at the fact, and men yet alive. The Story whereof is this.

There was at Antwerp on a time, amongſt a company of Merchants, as they were at Supper, a certain Jugler, which through his Diabolical Inchantments of Art Magical, would fetch all kind of Viands, and Wine from any place they would, and ſet it upon the Table incontinent before them, with many other ſuch like things. The fame of this Jugler being much talked of, it chanced that as Maſter Tindal heard of it, he deſired certain of the Merchants, that he might alſo be preſent at Supper, to ſee him play his parts.

To be brief, the Supper was appointed, and the Merchants with Tindal were there preſent. Then the Jugler being required to play his feats, and to ſhew his cunning, after his wonted boldneſs began to utter all that he could do, but all was in vain. At the laſt with his labour, ſweating and toyling, when he ſaw that nothing would go forward, but that all his enchantments were void, he was compelled openly to confeſs, that there was ſome man preſent at Supper, which diſturbed and letted all his doings. So that a man, even in the Martyrs of theſe our days, cannot lack the Miracles of true faith, if Miracles were now to be deſired.

The power of Gods Saints againſt the Devil.

As concerning the Works and Books of Tindal, which extend to a great number, thou waſt told before, loving Reader, how the Printer hereof mindeth, by the Lords leave, to collect them all in one Volume together, and put them out in Print. Wherefore it ſhall not greatly at this time be needful to make any ſeveral rehearſal of them.

W. Tindal's Works looked for to be all ſet out in one Volum.

And as touching his Tranſlation of the New Teſtament, becauſe his enemies did ſo much carp at it, pretending it to be ſo full of Hereſies, to anſwer therefore to their ſlanderous tongues and lying lips, thou ſhalt hear and underſtand, what faithful dealing, and ſincere Conſcience he uſed in the ſame, by the teſtimony and allegation of his own words written in the Epiſtle to John Frith as followeth, I call God to record againſt the day we ſhall appear before our Lord Jeſus, to give our reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one ſyllable of Gods Word againſt my conſcience, nor would do this day, if all that is in Earth, whether it be honour, pleaſure, or riches, might be given me, &c.

And as ye have heard Tindal's own words thus proteſting for himſelf, now let us hear likewiſe the faithful teſtimony of John Frith, for Tindal his dear companion and Brother, thus declaring in his anſwer to Maſter More, as followeth:

The Teſtimony of John Frith in his Book of the Sacrament, concerning William Tindal.

The teſtimony of J. Frith, for Tindal.

AND Tindal I truſt liveth, well content with ſuch a poor Apoſtles life, as God gave his Son Chriſt, and his faithful Miniſters in this World, which is not ſure of ſo many nŋtes, aye be yearly of pounds, although I am ſure that for his learning and judgment in Scripture, he were more worthy to be promoted than all the Biſhops in England. I received a Letter from him, which was written ſince Chriſtmas, wherein among other matters he writeth this, I call God to record againſt the day we ſhall appear before our Lord Jeſus, to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one ſyllable of Gods Word againſt my Conſcience, nor would do this day, if all that is in Earth, whether it be honour, pleaſure, or riches might be given me.

The words of Tindal written to J. Frith.

Moreover, I take God to witneſs to my Conſcience, that I deſire of God to my ſelf in this World, no more than that, without which I cannot keep his Laws, &c. Judge, Chriſtian Reader, whether theſe words be not ſpoken of a faithful clear innocent heart. And as for his behaviour, it is ſuch, that I am ſure no man can reprove him of any ſin; howbeit no man is innocent before God, which beholdeth the heart. Thus much out of Frith.

And thus being about to conclude and finiſh with the life and ſtory of William Tindal, it ſhall be requiſite now that the Reader do hear ſomething likewiſe of his ſupplications made to the King and Nobles of the Realm, as they are yet extant in his works to be ſeen, and worthy in all ages to be marked, the tenor whereof tendeth to this effect as followeth.

Ex lib. Tind. praxi prælatorum.

Tindal's Supplication to the King, Nobles and Subjects of England.

Tindal's ſupplication to the King and ſtates of England

I Beſeech the Kings moſt Noble Grace, well to conſider all the ways, by the which the Cardinal, and our holy Biſhops have led him ſince he was firſt King, and to ſee whereunto all the pride, pomp and vain boaſt of the Cardinal is come, and how God hath reſiſted him and our Prelates in their wiles. We, having nothing to do at all, have medled yet with all matters, and have ſpent for our Prelats cauſes, more than all Chriſtendom, even unto the utter beggering of our ſelves, and have gotten nothing but rebuke and hate among all Nations, and a mock and a ſcorn of them whom we have moſt holpen. For the Frenchmen (as the ſaying is) of late days made a Play, or a Diſguiſing at Paris, in which the Emperor daunced with the Pope, and the French King, and wearied them; the King of England ſitting on a high Bench, and looking on. And when it was asked why he daunced not, it was anſwered, that he ſat there but to pay the Minſtrels their wages. As who ſhould ſay, we paid for all mens dauncing. We moyed the Emperor openly, and gave the French King double and treble ſecretly; and to the Pope alſo. Yea, and though Ferdinandus had mony ſent openly to blind the World withal, yet the ſaying is through all Dutchland, that we ſent mony to the King of Pole, &c.

The King of England pays for all.

Furthermore, I beſeech His Grace alſo to have mercy of his own ſoul, and not to ſuffer Chriſt and his holy Teſtament to be perſecuted under his name any longer, that the ſword of the wrath of God may be put up again, which for that cauſe, no doubt, is moſt chiefly drawn.

The 2d Petition of Tindal.

Thirdly,

KING Hen. 8.

Thirdly, My Petition is to his Grace, to have compaſſion on his poor ſubjects, that the Realm utterly periſh not with the wicked counſel of our peſtilent Prelates. For if his Grace, which is but a man, ſhould die, the Lords and Commons not knowing who hath moſt right to enjoy the Crown, the Realm could not but ſtand in great danger.

The third Petition of Tindal.

My fourth ſuit and exhortation is to all the Lords Temporal of the Realm, that they come and fall before the Kings Grace, and humbly deſire his Majeſty to ſuffer it to be tried, who of right ought to ſucceed: and if he or ſhe fail, who next, and who third. And let it be proclaimed openly: and let all the Lords Temporal be ſworn thereto, and all the Knights, and Squires and Gentlemen, and the Commons above eighteen years old, that there be no ſtrife for the Succeſſion. If they try it by the ſword, I promiſe them, I ſee no other likelihood, but it will coſt the Realm of England, &c.

The fourth Petition of Tindal. Limitation of ſucceſſion to the Crown. I pray God this be not a Propheſie againſt England.

Further, of all the ſubjects of England this I crave, That they repent. For the cauſe of evil rulers is the ſin of the ſubjects, as teſtifieth the Scripture. And the cauſe of falſe Preachers is, that the people have no love unto the truth, ſaith Paul, in the ſecond Chapter of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians. We be all ſinners an hundred times greater than all that we ſuffer. Let us therefore each forgive other, remembring the greater ſinners, the more welcome if we repent, according to the ſimilitude of the riotous Son, Luk. 15. For Chriſt died for ſinners, and is their Saviour, and his blood their treaſure, to pay for their ſins. He is that fatted Calf which is ſlain to make them good cheer withal, if they will repent and come to their Father again; and his merits is the goodly raiment to cover the naked deformities of their ſins.

The fifth Petition of Mr. Tindal.

Finally, if the perſecution of the Kings Grace, and other Temporal perſons conſpiring with the Spiritualty, be of ignorance, I doubt not but that their eyes ſhall be opened ſhortly, and they ſhall ſee and repent, and God ſhall ſhew them mercy. But if it be of a ſet malice againſt the truth, and of a grounded hate againſt the Law of God, by the reaſon of a full conſent they have to ſin, and to walk in their old ways of ignorance, whereunto being now paſt all repentance, they have utterly yielded themſelves, to follow with full luſt without bridle or ſnaffle which is the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, then ye ſhall ſee even ſhortly, that God ſhall turn the point of the ſword, wherewith they now ſhed Chriſts blood homeward to ſhed their own again, after all the examples of the Bible.

Theſe things thus diſcourſed pertaining to the ſtory and doings of Tindal, finally it remaineth to infer certain of his private Letters and Epiſtles, whereof among divers other which have not come to our hands, two ſpecial he wrote to John Frith, one properly under his own name, another under the name of Jacob, but in very deed was written and delivered to John Frith, being priſoner then in the Tower, as ye ſhall further underſtand by the ſequel hereafter. The Copy and tenour of the Epiſtles here followeth.

A Letter ſent from Tindal unto Maſter Frith, being in the Tower.

A Letter of Tindal to Mr. Frith.

THE Grace and Peace of God our Father, and of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord be with you, Amen. Dearly beloved Brother John, I have heard ſay, how the hypocrites now that they have overcome that great buſineſs which letted them, or at the leaſt way have brought it to a ſtay, they return to their old nature again. The will of God be fulfilled, and that which he hath ordained to be ere the world was made, that come, and his glory reign over all.

Dearly beloved, however the matter be, commit your ſelf wholly and only unto your moſt loving Father, and moſt kind Lord, fear not men that threat, nor truſt men that ſpeak fair: but truſt him that is true of promiſe, and able to make his word good. Your cauſe is Chriſts Goſpel, a light that muſt be fed with the blood of faith. The lamp muſt be dreſſed and ſnuffed daily, and that oyl poured in every evening and morning, that the light go not out. Though we be ſinners, 1 Pet. 2. yet is the cauſe right. If when we be buffeted for well doing, we ſuffer patiently and endure, that is acceptable to God. For to that end we are called. Hereby have we perceived love, that he laid down his life for us; therefore we ought 1 Joh. 3. alſo to lay down our lives for the Brethren. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven. For we ſuffer with him, that we may alſo be glorified with him: Mat. 5. who ſhall change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned Rom. 8. like unto his glorious body, according to the working where- Phil. 3. by he is able even to ſubject all things unto him.

Dearly beloved, be of good courage, and comfort your ſoul with the hope of this high reward, and bear the image of Chriſt in your mortal body, that it may at his coming be made like to his immortal; and follow the example of Boldneſs of ſpirit. all your other dear Brethren, which choſe to ſuffer in hope of a better Reſurrection. Moreover, the death of them that come again after they have once denied, though it be accepted with God, and all that believe, yet it is not glorious: for the hypocrites ſay, he muſt needs die, denying helpeth not. But might it have holpen, they would have denied five hundred times, but ſeeing it would not help them, therefore of pure pride and meer malice together, Death after denying evil ſpoken of by the adverſaries. they ſpake with their mouths that their conſcience knoweth falſe. If you give your ſelf, caſt your ſelf, yield your ſelf, commit your ſelf wholly and only to your loving Father, then ſhall his power be in you and make you ſtrong, and that ſo ſtrong, that you ſhall feel no pain, which ſhould be to another preſent death; and his ſpirit ſhall ſpeak in you, Obedience to God. and teach you what to anſwer, according to his promiſe: he ſhall ſet out his truth by you wonderfully, and work for you above all that your heart can imagine; yea and you are To look for no mans help bringeth Gods help. Conſtancy in ſtanding. If the pain be above your ſtrength, remember, Whatſoever ye ſhall ask in my name, I will give it you. And pray to your Father in that name, and he ſhall ceaſe your pain, or ſhorten it. The Lord of peace, of hope, and of faith, be with you,* Amen.

Another notable and worthy Letter of Maſter William Tindal, ſent to the ſaid John Frith, under the name of Jacob.

The Grace of our Saviour Jeſus, his patience, meekneſs, humbleneſs, circumſpection, and wiſdom, be with your heart, Amen.

Another Letter of W. Tindal.

DEarly beloved Brother Jacob, mine hearts deſire in our Saviour Jeſus, is that you arm your ſelf with patience, and be cold, ſober, wiſe and circumſpect, and that you keep you a low by the ground, avoiding high Queſtions, that paſs the common capacity. But expound the Law truly, and open the vail of Moſes to condemn all fleſh, and prove all men ſinners, and all deeds under the Law, before mercy have taken away the condemnation thereof, to be ſin and damnable, and then as a faithful Miniſter, ſet abroach the mercy of our Lord Jeſus, and let the wounded conſciences drink of the water of him. And then ſhall your preaching be with power, and not as the doctrine of the hypocrites; and the Spirit of God ſhall work with you, and all conſciences ſhall bear record unto you, and feel that it is ſo. And all Doctrine that caſteth a miſt on thoſe two, to ſhadow and hide them, I mean the Law of God, and mercy of Chriſt, that reſiſt you with all your power. Sacraments without ſignification refuſe. If they put ſignifications to them, receive them, if you ſee it may help, though it be not neceſſary.

High Queſtions to be avoided.

All deeds before they be ſummed by faith are ſin.

Preaching the Law of God, and mercy of Chriſt.

Sacraments without ſignifications to be refuſed.

Of the preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, meddle as little as you can, that there appear no diviſion among us. Barnes will be hot againſt you. The Saxons be ſore on the affirmative; whether conſtant or obſtinate I remit it to God. Philip Melancthon is ſaid to be with the French King. There be in Antwerp that ſay, they ſaw him come into Paris with an hundred and fifty Horſes, and that they ſpake with him. If the French men receive the Word of God, he will plant the affirmative in them. George Joy would have put forth a Treatiſe of that matter, but I have ſtopt him as yet: what he will do if he get money, I wot not. I believe he would make many reaſons little ſerving to that purpoſe; My mind is that nothing be put forth till we hear how you ſhall have ſped. I would have the right uſe preached, and the preſence to be an indifferent thing, till the matter might be reaſoned in pece at leiſure of both parties. If you be required, ſhew the phraſes of the Scripture, and let them talk what they will. For as to believe that God is every where, hurteth no man that worſhippeth him no where but within the heart, in ſpirit and verity: even ſo to believe that the Body of Chriſt is every where (though it cannot be proved) hurteth no man that worſhippeth him no where ſave in the faith of his Goſpel. You perceive my mind: howbeit if God ſhew you otherwiſe, it is free for you to do as he moveth you.

Mr. Tindal bear-eth with time.

By the affirmative, he meaneth the opinion which M. Luther and the Saxons do hold of the Sacrament.

Mr. Tindal here beareth with time.

Ubiquity cannot be proved.

I gueſſed long ago, that God would ſend a dazing into the head of the Spirituality, to catch themſelves in their own ſubtilty, and truſt it is come to paſs. And now me thinketh I ſmell a counſel to be taken, little for their profits in time to come. But you muſt underſtand; that it is not of a pure heart and for love of the truth, but to avenge themſelves, and to eat the Whores fleſh, and to ſuck the marrow of her bones. Wherefore cleave faſt to the Rock of the help of God, and commit the end of all things unto him: and if God ſhall call you, that you may then uſe the wiſdom of the worldly, as far as you perceive the glory of God may come thereof, refuſe it not; and ever among thruſt in, that the Scripture may be in the Mother-tongue, and learning ſet up in the Univerſities. But if ought be required contrary to the glory of God, and his Chriſt, then ſtand faſt, and commit your ſelf to God, and be not overcome of mens perſwaſions; which haply ſhall ſay, We ſee no other way to bring in the truth.

Eating the Whores fleſh, is to ſpoil the Popes Church only for the prey and ſpoil thereof.

Worldly wiſdom ſo far as it may ſerve Gods glory may be uſed

Brother Jacob, beloved in my heart, there liveth not in whom I have ſo good hope and truſt, and in whom my heart rejoiceth, and my ſoul comforteth her ſelf, as in you; not the thouſand part ſo much for your learning, and what other gifts elſe you have, as becauſe you will creep alow by the ground, and walk in thoſe things that the conſcience may feel, and not in the imaginations of the brain: in fear, and not in boldneſs: in open neceſſary things, and not to pronounce or define of hid ſecrets, or things that neither help nor hinder, whether it be ſo or no; in unity, and not in ſeditious opinions: inſomuch that if you be ſure you know, yet in things that may abide leiſure you will defer, or ſay (till other agree with you) Methinks the Text requireth this ſenſe or underſtanding. Yea, and if you be ſure that your part be good, and another hold the contrary, yet if it be a thing that maketh no matter, you will laugh and let it paſs, and refer the thing to other men, and ſtick you ſtiffly and ſtubbornly in earneſt and neceſſary things. And I truſt you be perſwaded even ſo of me: for I call God to record againſt the day we ſhall appear before our Lord Jeſus, to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one ſyllable of Gods Word againſt my conſcience, nor would this day, if all that is in the Earth, whether it be pleaſure, honour, or riches, might be given me. Moreover, I take God to record to my conſcience, that I deſire of God to my ſelf in this world, no more than that without which I cannot keep his Laws.

{KING} {Hen. 8.}

Love Walkings.

The upright handling in the tranſlation of Mr. Tindal.

Finally, if there were in me any gift that could help at hand, and aid you if need required, I promiſe you I would not be far off, and commit the end to God. My ſoul is not faint, though my body be weary. But God hath made me evil favoured in this world, and without grace in the ſight of men, ſpeechleſs and rude, dull and ſlow witted; your part ſhall be to ſupply what lacketh in me: remembring, that as lowlineſs of heart ſhall make you high with God, even ſo meekneſs of words ſhall make you ſink into the hearts of men. Nature giveth age authority, but meekneſs is the glory of youth, and giveth them honour. Abundance of love maketh me exceed in babling.

A love heart maketh a man high with God. Authority is the glory of age. Meekneſs is the glory of youth.

Sir, as concerning Purgatory and many other things, if you be demanded, you may ſay, if you err, the Spirituality hath ſo led you, and that they have taught you to believe as you do. For they preached you all ſuch things out of Gods Word, and alledged a thouſand Texts, by reaſon of which Texts you believed as they taught you, but now you find them lyers, and that the Texts mean no ſuch things, and therefore you can believe them no longer; but are as ye were before they taught you, and believe no ſuch thing: howbeit you are ready to believe, if they have any other way to prove it; for without proof you cannot believe them when you have found them with ſo many lyes, &c. If you perceive wherein we may help, either in being ſtill or doing ſomewhat, let us have word, and I will do mine uttermoſt.

Purgatory hath no proof by Scriptures.

My Lord of London hath a ſervant called John Tiſen, with a red beard, and a black-reddiſh head, and was once my Scholar; he was ſeen in Antwerp, but came not among the Engliſhmen: whither he is gone an Embaſſador ſecret I wot not.

The mighty God of Jacob be with you, to ſupplant his enemies, and give you the favour of Joſeph, and the wiſdom and the ſpirit of Stephan, be with your heart, and with your mouth, and teach your lips what they ſhall ſay, and how to anſwer to all things. He is our God, if we deſpair in our ſelves, and truſt in him: and his is the glory. Amen.

William Tindal.

I hope our Redemption is nigh.

This Letter was written Ann. 1533, in the month of January. Which Letter, although it do pretend the name of Jacob, yet underſtand (good Reader) that it was written in very deed to John Frith, as is above told thee. For the more proof and evidence whereof, read Friths Book of the Sacrament, and there thou ſhalt find a certain place of this Epiſtle repeated word for word, beginning thus, I call God to record againſt the day we ſhall appear before our Lord Jeſus to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one ſyllable of Gods Word againſt my conſcience, &c. Which Epiſtle John Frith himſelf witneſſeth that he received from Tindal, as in his teſtimony above appeareth.

The

KING Hen.8.

The death of Lady Katharine, and of Queen Anne.

Anno 1536

THE ſame year in the which William Tindal was burned, which was the year of our Lord 1536, in the beginning of the year, firſt died Lady Katharine Princeſs Dowager, in the month of January.

The death of Lady Katharine, Princeſs Dowager.

After whom the ſame year alſo in the month of May next following, followeth the death alſo of Queen Anne, who had now been married to the King the ſpace of three years. In certain Records thus we find, that the King being in his Juſts at Greenwich, ſuddenly with a few perſons departed to Weſtminſter, and the next day after Queen Anne his wife was had to the Tower, with the Lord Rochford her Brother and certain other; and the nineteenth day after was Beheaded. The words of this worthy and Chriſtian Lady at her death were theſe.

The death of Queen Anne.

The words of Q. Anne at her death.

Good Chriſtian people, I am come hither to die, for according to the Law, and by the Law I am judged to death, and therefore I will ſpeak nothing againſt it. I am come hither to accuſe no man, nor to ſpeak any thing of that whereof I am accuſed and condemned to die, but I pray God ſave the King, and ſend him long to reign over you, for a gentler, or a more merciful Prince was there never; and to me he was a very good, a gentle, and a Soveraign Lord. And if any perſon will meddle of my cauſe, I require them to judg the beſt. And thus I take my leave of the world, and of you all, and I heartily deſire you all to pray for me. O Lord have mercy on me. To God I commend my ſoul. And ſo ſhe kneeled down, ſaying, To Chriſt I commend my ſoul: Jeſus receive my ſoul. Repeating the ſame divers times, till at length the ſtroke was given, and her head was ſtricken off.

Queen Anne Beheaded.

Commendations of Qu. Anne.

And this was the end of that godly Lady and Queen. Godly I call her, for ſundry reſpects, whatſoever the cauſe was, or quarrel objected againſt her. Firſt, her laſt words ſpoken at her death declared no leſs her ſincere Faith and truſt in Chriſt, than did her quiet modeſty utter forth the goodneſs of the cauſe and matter, whatſoever it was. Beſides that, to ſuch as wiſely can judg upon caſes occurrent, this alſo may ſeem to give a great clearing unto her, that the King the third day after was married in his whites unto another. Certain this was, that for the rare and ſingular gifts of her mind ſo well inſtructed, and given toward God, with ſuch a fervent deſire unto the truth and ſetting forth of ſincere Religion, joyned with like gentleneſs, modeſty, and pity toward all men, there have not many ſuch Queens before her born the Crown of England. Principally this one commendation ſhe left behind her, that during her life, the Religion of Chriſt moſt happily flouriſhed, and had a right proſperous courſe.

The mild nature of Q. Anne in taking admonition.

Many things might be written more of the manifold vertues, and the quiet moderation of her mild nature, how lowly ſhe would bear, not only to be admoniſhed, but alſo of her own accord would require her Chaplains plainly and freely to tell whatſoever they ſaw in her amiſs. Alſo how bountiful ſhe was to the poor, paſſing not only the common example of other Queens, but alſo the revenues almoſt of her eſtate: inſomuch that the Alms which ſhe gave in three quarters of a year, in diſtribution, is ſummed to the number of fourteen or fifteen thouſand pounds. Beſides the great piece of money which her Grace intended to impart into four ſundry quarters of the Realm, as for a ſtock there to be imployed to the behoof of poor artificers and occupiers. Again, what a zealous defender ſhe was of Chriſts Goſpel, all the world doth know, and her acts do and will declare to the worlds end. Amongſt which other her acts this is one, that ſhe placed Maſter Hugh Latimer in the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, and alſo preferred Doctor Shaxton to his Biſhoprick, being then accounted a good man. Furthermore, what a true Faith ſhe bare unto the Lord, this one example may ſtand for many: for that when King Henry was with her at Woodſtock, and there being afraid of an old blind Propheſie, for the which neither he nor other Kings before him durſt hunt in the ſaid Park of Woodſtock, nor enter into the Town of Oxford, at laſt through the Chriſtian and faithful counſel of that Queen, he was ſo armed againſt all infidelity, that both he hunted in the foreſaid Park, and alſo entred into the Town of Oxford, and had no harm. But becauſe touching the memorable vertues of this worthy Queen, partly we have ſaid ſomething before, partly becauſe more alſo is promiſed to be declared of her vertuous life (the Lord ſo permitting) by other who then were about her; I will ceaſe in this matter further to proceed.

The great Alms of Q. Anne.

This I cannot but marvel at, why the Parliament holden this year, that is, the twenty eighth year of the King (which Parliament three years before had eſtabliſhed and confirmed this Marriage as moſt lawful) ſhould now ſo ſuddenly, and contrary to their own doings, repeal and diſable the ſaid Marriage again as unlawful, being ſo lawfully before contracted. But more I marvel, why the ſaid Parliament, after the illegitimation of the Marriage Enacted, not contented with that, ſhould further proceed, and charge her with ſuch carnal deſires of her body, as to miſuſe her ſelf with her own natural Brother, the Lord Rochford, and others, being ſo contrary to all nature, that no natural man will believe it.

Stat. An. 28 Hen. 8. cap. 7

Parliaments not always conſtant.

But in this Act of Parliament lay (no doubt) ſome great myſtery, which here I will not ſtand to diſcuſs, but only that it may be ſuſpected ſome ſecret practiſing of the Papiſts here not to be lacking, conſidering what a mighty ſtop ſhe was to their purpoſes and proceedings; and on the contrary ſide, what a ſtrong Bulwark ſhe was for the maintenance of Chriſts Goſpel, and ſincere Religion, which they then in no caſe could abide. By reaſon whereof it may be eaſily conſidered, that this Chriſtian and devout Deborah, could lack no enemies amongſt ſuch a number of Philiſtins, both within the Realm, and without.

Again, neither is it unlike, but that Stephen Winchester, being then abroad in Embaſſie, was not altogether aſleep. The ſuſpition whereof may be the more conjectural, for that Edmund Bonner Archdeacon of Leiceſter, and then Embaſſador in France, ſucceeding after Stephen Winchester, did manifeſtly detect him of plain Papiſtry, as in the ſequel of their Stories; when we come to the time, more amply (the Lord granting) ſhall be expreſſed.

The lawfulneſs of Qu. Anns Succeſſion defended.

And as touching the Kings mind and aſſent, although at that time, through crafty ſetters on, he ſeemed to be ſore bent both againſt the Queen, and to the diſheriting of his own Daughter: yet unto that former Will of the King ſo ſet againſt her then, I will oppoſe again the laſt Will of the King, wherein expreſly and by name he did accept, and by plain ratification did allow the ſucceſſion of his Marriage to ſtand good and lawful.

Defence of Q. Anne againſt privy backbiters.

Furthermore, to all other ſiniſter judgments and opinions, whatſoever can be conceived of man againſt that vertuous Queen, I object and oppoſe again (as inſtead of anſwer) the evident demonſtration of Gods favour, in maintaining, preſerving and advancing the off-ſpring of her body, the Lady ELIZABETH now Queen, whom the Lord hath ſo marvellouſly conſerved from ſo manifold dangers, ſo Royally hath exalted, ſo happily hath bleſſed with ſuch vertuous patience, and with ſuch a quiet Reign hitherto, that neither the Reign of her Brother EDWARD, nor of her Siſter MARY, to hers is to be compared, whether we conſider the number of the years of their Reigns, or the peaceableneſs of their ſtate. In whoſe Royal and flouriſhing Regiment we have to behold, not ſo much the natural diſpoſition of her Mothers qualities, as the ſecret judgment of God in preſerving and magnifying the fruit and off-ſpring of that godly Queen.

Paulus Jovius can find no whoredom in all Rome, but muſt come and pick matter where none is in England.

And finally, as for the blaſphemous mouth both of Cardinal Pool, and of Paulus Jovius, that Popiſh Cardinal, who meaſuring belike other women by his Curtezans of Rome, ſo impudently abuſeth his pen in lying and railing againſt this noble Queen: To anſwer again in defence of her cauſe to that Italian, I object and oppoſe the conſent and judgment of ſo many noble Proteſtants and Princes of Germany, who being in League before with King Henry, and minding no leſs but to have made him the Head of their Confederation, afterward hearing of the death of this Queen, utterly brake from him, and refuſed him only for the ſame cauſe.

The Proteſtants of Germany forſake K. Henry for the death of Q. Anne.

But

The wily practices of the Papiſts.

But all this ſeemeth (as is ſaid) to be the drift of the wily Papiſts, who ſeeing the Pope to be repulſed out of England, by the means chiefly of this Queen, and fearing always the ſucceſſion of this Marriage in time to come; thought by ſiniſter practice to prevent that peril before, whiſpering in the Kings ears what poſſibly they could, to make that Matrimony unlawful, and all for the diſheriting of that ſucceſſion.

Again, Stephen Gardiner (who was a ſecret worker againſt that Marriage, and a perpetual enemy againſt Lady Elizabeth) being then abroad with the French King, and the great Maſter of France, ceaſed not in his Letters, ſtill to put the King in fear, that the foreign Princes and Powers of the world, with the Pope, would never be reconciled to the King, neither ſhould he be ever in any perfect ſecurity, unleſs he undid again ſuch Acts before paſſed, for the ratification of that ſucceſſion. Which thing when they had now brought to paſs after their own deſire, in that both now the Queen was Beheaded, and Elizabeth the Kings Daughter diſherited, they thought all things to be ſure for ever. But yet Gods Providence ſtill went beyond them, and deceived them; for incontinently after the ſuffering of Queen Anne, the King within three days after, married Lady Jane Seimer, of whom came King Edward, as great an enemy to Gods enemy the Pope, as ever his Father was, and greater too.

God Providence ſtill diſappointeth the Papiſts. The King married Lady Jane.

In the mean time as theſe troublous tumults were in doing in England, Paul the third, Biſhop of Rome, for his part was not behind, to help forward in his own advantage. Who ſeeing his uſurped Kingdom and ſeat to be darkned in the Countries of Germany, and alſo in England, thought it high time to beſtir him: and therefore to provide ſome remedy againſt further dangers, appointed a General Council at Mantua in Italy, requiring all Kings and Princes either perſonally to be there, or elſe to ſend their Embaſſadors under fair pretences, as to ſuppreſs Hereſies, and to reſtore the Church, and to war againſt the Turk, &c. This Bull was ſubſcribed with the hands of ſix and twenty Cardinals, and ſet up in divers great Cities, that it might be known and publiſhed to the whole world. Unto the which Bull firſt the Proteſtants of Germany do anſwer, declaring ſufficient cauſes why they refuſed to reſort to that Council, being Indicted at Mantua, in the Popes own Country. Whoſe Declaration, with their cauſes grave and effectual, being ſet forth in print, and in the Engliſh Tongue, although they were worthy here to be inſerted, yet for brevity, and more ſpeed in our Story, I will pretermit the ſame, and only take the Oration or Anſwer of our King here: wherein he likewiſe rendereth reaſons and cauſes moſt reaſonable, why he refuſeth to come or ſend at the Popes call to this Council Indicted at Mantua. Whoſe Oration or Proteſtation, becauſe it containeth matter of ſome weight and great experience, I thought good here to expreſs as followeth.

The ſeat of the Beaſt darkned. Apoc. 16.

Ex Joan. Sleidan. lib. 10

A Proteſtation in the Name of the King, and the whole Council and Clergy of England, why they refuſe to come to the Popes Council at his call.

The Kings Proteſtation why he ſends not to the Popes Council.

SEeing that the Biſhop of Rome calleth learned men from all parts, conducting them by great rewards, making as many of them Cardinals as he thinketh moſt meet, and moſt ready to defend frauds and untruths; we could not but with much anxiety caſt with our ſelves, what ſo great a preparance of wits ſhould mean. As chance was, we gueſſed even as it followed. We have been ſo long acquainted with Romiſh ſubtilties and Popiſh deceits, that we well and eaſily judged the Biſhop of Rome to intend an Aſſembly of his adherents, and men ſworn to think all his luſts to be Laws; we were not deceived. Paul the Biſhop of Rome hath called a Council, to the which he knew well either few or none of the Chriſtian Princes could come. Both the time that he Indicted it, and alſo the place where he appointed it to be, might aſſure him of this. But whither wander not theſe Popiſh Bulls: whither go they not aſtray? what King is not cited and ſummoned by a proud Miniſter and ſervant of Kings, to come to bolſter up errors, frauds, deceits and untruths, and to ſet forth this fained General Council? For who will not think that Paul the Biſhop of Rome goeth ſooner about to make men believe that he pretendeth a General Council, than that he deſireth one indeed? No, who can leſs deſire it, than they that do deſpair of their cauſe, except they be Judges, and give ſentence themſelves againſt their adverſaries? We which very ſore againſt our will at any time leave off the procurement of the Realm any Commonweal, need neither to come our ſelves, nor yet to ſend our Procurators thither, no, nor yet to make our excuſe for either of both. For who can accuſe us, that we come not at his call, which hath no authority to call us?

The Kings not coming to their call.

But for a ſeaſon let us (as a ſort of blindlings do) grant that he may call us, and that he hath authority ſo to do, yet (we pray you) may not all men ſee, what availeth it to come to this Council, where ye ſhall have no place, except ye be known both willing to oppreſs truth, and alſo ready to confirm and ſtabliſh Errors? Do not all men perceive as well as we, with what integrity, fidelity, and Religion, theſe men go about to diſcuſs matters in controverſie, that take them in hand in ſo troubleſome a time as this is? Is it not plain what fruit the Commonweal of Chriſtendom may look for there, whereas Mantua is choſen the place to keep his Council in? Is there any Prince not being of Italy, yea, is there any of Italy, Prince, or other diſſenting from the Pope, that dareth come to this aſſembly, and to this place? If there come none that dare ſpeak for trodden truth, none that will venture his life, is it marvel if the Biſhop of Rome being Judg, no man repining, no man gain-ſaying, the defenders of the Papacy obtain that Popiſh authority, now quailing and almoſt fallen, to be ſet up again?

Who be they that have place in the Popes Council.

The place of the Council not indifferent.

No reaſon that the Pope ſhould be Judg in his own cauſe.

Is this the way to help things afflict? to redreſs troubled Religion? to lift up oppreſſed truth? Shall men this way know, whether the Roman Biſhops (which in very deed are, if ye look upon either their Doctrine or life, far under other Biſhops) ought to be made like their fellows, that is, to be Paſtors in their own Dioceſs, and ſo to uſe no other power; or elſe, whether they may make Laws, not only unto other Biſhops, but alſo to Kings and Emperors? O boldneſs, meet to be beaten down with force, and not to be convinced with arguments! Can either Paul that now Lordeth, or any of his earneſtly go about (if they alone, or at the leaſt without any adverſary, be thus in a corner aſſembled together) to heal the ſickneſſes, to take away the Errors, to pluck down the abuſes that now are crept into the Church, and there be bolſtered up, by ſuch Councils as now is like to be at Mantua?

The Biſhop of Rome in learning and life fit under other Biſhops.

Is it very like, that theſe which prole for nothing but profit, will right gladly pull down all ſuch things as their forefathers made, only for the increaſe of money? Whereas their forefathers, when their honour, power, and primacy was called into queſtion, would either in deſpight of Gods Law maintain their dignity, or to ſay better, their intolerable pride: Is it like, that theſe will not tread in their ſteps, and make naughty new Canons, whereby they may defend old evil Decrees? Howbeit, what need we to care, either what they have done, or what they intend to do hereafter, foraſmuch as England hath taken her leave of Popiſh crafts for ever, never to be deluded with them hereafter? Roman Biſhops have nothing to do with Engliſh people: The one doth not traffick with the other; at the leaſt, though they will have to do with us, yet we will none of their Merchandize, none of their ſtuff. We will receive them of our Council no more. We have ſought our hurt, and bought our loſs a great while too long. Surely their Decrees, either touching things ſet up or put down, ſhall have none other place with us, than all Biſhops Decrees have, that is, if we like them, we admit them; if we do not, we refuſe them. But leſt peradventure men ſhall think us to follow our ſenſes too much, and that we, moved by ſmall or no juſt cauſes, forſake the Authority, Cenſures, Decrees, and Popiſh Councils, we thought it beſt here to ſhew our mind to the whole world. Wherefore we proteſt before God and all men, that we imbrace, profeſs, and will ever ſo do, the right and holy Doctrine of Chriſt. All the Articles of his Faith, no jot omitted, be all ſo dear unto us, that we ſhould much ſooner ſtand in jeopardy of our Realm, than to ſee any point of Chriſts Religion in jeopardy with us. We

Paul the Pope proleth for his own profit.

England taketh her leave of the Pope for ever.

England refuſeth the Popes Merchandize.

The Popes craft eſpi'd.

KING Hen.8.

England goeth not from the unity of Faith, although it goeth from the Pope.

We proteſt that we never went from the unity of his Faith, neither that we will depart an inch from it. No, we will much ſooner loſe our lives, than any Article of our belief ſhall decay in England. We which in all this cauſe ſeek nothing but the glory of God, the profit and quietneſs of the world, proteſt that we can ſuffer deceivers no longer. We never refuſed to come to a General Council; no, we promiſe all our labour, ſtudy, and fidelity, to the ſetting up of trodden truth, and troubled Religion, in their place again, and to do all that ſhall lye in us, to finiſh ſuch controverſies as have a great while too long vexed Chriſtendom. Only we will all Chriſtian men be admoniſhed, that we can ſuffer no longer that they be eſteemed willing to take away errors, which indeed, by all the ways their wits will ſerve them, go about this alone, that no man, under pain of death may ſpeak againſt any error or abuſe.

The Faith of England Catholick, England ready to ſend to any General Council where truth may be advanced.

What a true General Council ought to be.

We would have a Council, we deſire it, yea, and crave nothing ſo oft of God, as that we may have one. But yet we will that it be ſuch, as Chriſtian men ought to have, that is, frank and free, where every man without fear may ſay his mind. We deſire that it be an holy Council, where every man may go about to ſet up Godlineſs, and not apply all their ſtudy to oppreſſing of truth. We will it be general, that is to ſay, kept at ſuch time, and in ſuch place, that every man which ſeeketh the glory of God may be preſent, and there frankly utter his mind: For when it ſhall ſeem general, either when no man that diſſenteth from the Biſhop of Rome is compelled to be from it; or when they that be preſent are not letted by any juſt terror, to ſay boldly what they truly think; for who would not gladly come to ſuch a Council, except it be the Pope, his Cardinals, and Popiſh Biſhops? On the other ſide, who is ſo fooliſh, whereas the chief point that is to be handled in this Council is the Popes own cauſe, power and primacy, to grant that the Pope ſhould reign, ſhould be Judg, ſhould be Preſident of this Council? if he, which indeed can never think himſelf able to defend his cauſe before any other Judg, be evermore made his own Judg, and ſo Controverſies not decided, but errors ſet up, what can be deviſed in the Common-wealth of Chriſtendom more hurtful to the truth, than General Councils?

Conditions of a true General Council.

The Pope would be Judg in his own cauſe.

The Pope hath no power to ſummon Councils.

And here to touch ſomewhat their impudent arrogancy; by what law, power, or honeſt title take they upon them to call Kings, to ſummon Princes to appear, where their Bulls command them? In time paſt all Councils were appointed by the authority, conſent and commandment of the Emperor, Kings and Princes; why now taketh the Biſhop of Rome this upon him? Some will ſay, It is more likely that Biſhops will more tender the cauſe of Religion, gladlier have errors taken away, than Emperors, Kings and Princes. The world hath good experience of them, and every man ſeeth how faithfully they have handled Religious matters. Is there any man that doth not ſee how vertuouſly Paul now goeth about by this occaſion to ſet up his tyranny again? Is it not like that he that chooſeth ſuch a time as this is, to keep a Council, much intendeth the redreſs of things that now are amiſs? that he ſeeketh the reſtoring of Religion, that now calleth a Council, the Emperor and the French King, two Princes of great power, ſo bent to wars, that neither they, nor any other Chriſtian Prince can, in a manner, do any thing but look for the end of this long war? Go too, go too Biſhop of Rome, occaſion long wiſhed for offereth her ſelf unto you; take her, ſhe openeth a window for your frauds to creep in at. Call your Cardinals, your own creatures, ſhew them that this is a jolly time to deceive Princes in.

The Pope hovv he can vvatch his time.

O Fools: O wicked men! May we not juſtly ſo call you? Are ye not Fools, which being long ſuſpected, not only of Princes, but of all Chriſtian people in a manner, that in no caſe you could be brought to a General Council, plainly ſhew the whole world, that by theſe your conciliables, your hutter mutter in corners, you take away all hope of a lawful Catholick and General Council? Are you not wicked, which ſo hate truth, that except ſhe be utterly baniſhed, ye will never ceaſe to vex her? The living God is alive, neither truth his darling, he being alive, can be called to ſo great ſhame, contumely, and injury; or if it may be called to all theſe, yet can it come to none of them. Who is he that grievouſly lamenteth not, men to be of ſuch ſhameful boldneſs, to ſhew apertly that they be enemies unto Chriſt himſelf? On the other ſide, who will not be glad to ſee ſuch men as fooliſh as they be wicked? The world is not now in a light ſuſpition, as it hath been hitherto, that you intend no reformation of errors, but every man ſeeth before his eyes your deceits, your wicked minds, your immortal hatred that ye beat againſt the truth. Every man ſeeth how many miſerable Tragedies your pretence of an unity and concord hath brought into Chriſtendom? they ſee your fair face of peace hath ſerved Sedition, and troubled almoſt all Chriſtian Realms. They ſee ye never oppugn Religion more, than when ye will ſeem moſt to defend it. They be ſorry to ſee that great wits a long ſeaſon have ſpent their whole ſtrength in defence of deceits: Reaſon to put his whole power to the promoting of pride and ungodlineſs; Vertues to ſerve vices: Holineſs to be ſlave to Hypocriſie; Prudence to ſubtilty: Juſtice to tyranny. They be glad that Scripture now fighteth for it ſelf, and not againſt it ſelf. They be glad that God is not compelled to be againſt God: Chriſt againſt Chriſt. They be glad that ſubtilty hath done no more hurt to Religion in time paſt, than now conſtancy doth good to truth. They ſee the marks that ye have ſhot at in all your Councils paſt, to be lucre, money, gains. They ſee you ſought your profit, yea, though it were joyned with the ſlaughter of truth. They ſee, ye would ever that ſooner injury ſhould be done to the Goſpel, than that your authority, that is to ſay, arrogant impudency ſhould in any point be diminiſhed.

Truth may be preſſed, it cannot be oppreſſed.

The Pope enemy to Chriſt.

The Popes hatred againſt the Truth.

The Pope troubler of all Chriſtian Realms

The Popes marks vvhereat he ſhooteth.

And we pray you, what may Paul the Biſhop of Rome ſeem now to go about, which ſeeing all Princes occupied in great affairs, would ſteal (as he calleth it) a General Council? what other thing, than hereby to have ſome excuſe to refuſe a General Council hereafter, when time and place much better for the handling of matters of Religion ſhall be given unto Princes of Chriſtendom? He will think he may then do as Princes now do. He will think it lawful not to come then, becauſe Princes now come not. We pray God that we ever brawle not one with another in Religion: and whereas diſſention is amongſt us, yet for our parts do ſay, that we, as much as men may, defend the better part; and be in the right way. We pray God that the world may enjoy peace and tranquillity, and that then we may have both time and place to ſettle Religion. For except firſt Princes agree, and ſo (war laid aſide) ſeek peace, he loſeth his labour that ſeeketh a General Council. If the Biſhop of Rome may keep his Council while they thus be together, will not there be made many pretty Decrees? If they which would come if they had leiſure, be abſent, and we, which though we ſafely might come, will not loſe any part of our right; trow you, in all our abſence, that the Biſhop of Rome will not handle his profit and Primacy well?

The Popes craft in ſtealing a General Council.

Paul, how can any of ours not refuſe to come to Mantua, through ſo many perils, a City ſo far ſet from England, ſo nigh your friends, kinſmen, and adherents? Is he not unworthy of life, that where he may tarry at home, will paſs through ſo many jeopardies of life? Can he which cometh to Cremona, a City not far from Mantua, be ſafe if he be taken not to be the Biſhop of Romes friend, that is, (as the common ſort of deceived people doth interpret) an Heretick? And if there come to Mantua ſuch a number as would furniſh a General Council, may not Mantua ſeem too little to receive ſo many gueſts? Put theſe two together, all the way from England to Mantua is full of juſt perils, and yet if ye eſcape all thoſe, the very place where the Council is kept is more to be ſuſpected, than all the way. Do ye not know all Civil Laws to compell no man to come to any place, where he ſhall be in jeopardy of his life all the way? We have no ſafe conduct to paſs and return by the Dominions of other Princes. And if we had a ſafe conduct, yet ſhould not we be charged with raſhneſs, that where juſt terror might have diſſwaded us from ſuch a journey, we committed our ſelves to ſuch perils? Surely, he that the time being as it is, things ſtanding as they do, will go from England to Mantua, may be careleſs, if he lack not wit, ſure of his arrival, or return from thence he cannot be. For who doth not know how oft the Biſhops of Rome have plaid falſe parts with them, that in ſuch matters have truſted to their ſafe conducts? how oft have they cauſed by their Perfidie ſuch

The time and place pretily picked of the Pope.

What an Heretick is among the Papiſts.

The vvay to Mantua along and dangerous.

The falſhood of popes no new thing.

ſuch men to be ſlain, as they have promiſed by their faith before, that they ſhould both come ſafe, and go ſafe? Theſe be no news, Popes to be falſe, Popes to keep no promiſe neither with God nor man; Popes contrary to their Oaths, to defile their cruel hands with honeſt mens blood. But we tarry too long in things that as well touch all men as us.

We will, theſe now laid apart, turn our Oration unto ſuch things, as privately touch both us, King Henry the Eighth, and all Engliſhmen. Is it unknown to any man what mind Paul the Biſhop of Rome beareth to us, King Henry the Eighth, to us his Nobility, to us his Graces Biſhops, and to us all his Graces ſubjects, for the pulling down of his uſurped power, and proud Primacy; for expelling of his uſurped Juriſdiction; and for deliverance of our Realm from his grievous bondage and pollage? Who ſeeth not him even inflamed with hatred againſt us, and the flames to be much greater than he can now keep them in? He is an open enemy, he diſſembleth no longer, provoking all men by all the means that he can, to endamage us and our Country. Theſe three years he hath been occupied in no one thing ſo much, as how he might ſtir up the Commons of England, and corrupting ſome with money, ſome with dignities. We let paſs what Letters he hath written to Chriſtian Princes: with how great fervent ſtudy he hath exhorted them to ſet upon us. The good Vicar of Chriſt by his doing ſheweth how he underſtandeth the words of Chriſt. He thinketh he playeth Chriſts part well, when he may ſay as Chriſt did, Non veni pacem mittere in terram, ſed gladium, I come not to make peace in earth, but to ſend ſwords about; and not ſuch ſwords as Chriſt would his to be armed withal, but ſuch as cruel manquellers abuſe in the ſlaughter of their neighbours. We marvel little though they vext other Princes oft, ſeeing they recompence our favour ſhewed to them with contumelies, our benefits with injuries.

The hatred of the Pope againſt England.

The Pope bringeth not peace but the ſword to the earth; otherwiſe than Chriſt did.

We will not rehearſe here how many our benefits beſtowed upon Roman Biſhops be loſt. God be with ſuch ungrate Carles, unworthy to be numbred amongſt men: Certes ſuch that a man may well doubt, whether God or man hath better cauſe to hate them. But that we have learned to owe good will even to them that immortally hate us, what could we wiſh them ſo evil, but they have deſerved much worſe? We wiſh them this hurt alone that God ſend them a better mind. God be thanked, we have made all their ſeditious intents ſooner to ſhew their great malice towards us, than to do us much hurt; yea, they have well taught us, evermore to take good heed to our enemies. Undoubtedly it were good going to Mantua, and to leave their whelps amongſt the Lambs of our flock. VVhen we be weary of our wealth, we will even do then as they would have us now do. No, no, as long as we ſhall ſee his heart ſo good towards us, we truſt upon his warning we ſhall well provide to withſtand his cruel malice. No, let him now ſpend his deceits, when they can hurt none but ſuch as would deceive, and are deceived.

Benefits caſt away upon the Pope.

They have by ſundry ways made us privy, how much we be bound unto them. It went nigh their hearts, to ſee the judgment of July, of Clement the Seventh, of Paul the Third, nothing to be regarded with us. They be afraid, if we ſhould ſuſtain no hurt, becauſe we juſtly rejected their Primacy, that other Princes would begin to do likewiſe, and to ſhake from their ſhoulders the heavy burdens that they ſo long have born againſt Scriptures, all right and reaſon. They be ſorry to ſee the way ſtopped, that now their tyranny, avarice, and pride, can have no paſſage unto England, which was wont to walk, to triumph, to toſs, to trouble all men. They can ſcarce ſuffer priviledges, that is to ſay, licenſe to ſpoil our Citizens, given them by our forefathers, and brought in by errorful cuſtom, to be taken from them. They think it unlawful, that we require things lawful of them that will be under no Laws. They think we do them wrong, becauſe we will not ſuffer them to do us wrong any longer. They ſee their Merchandize to be baniſhed, to be forbidden. They ſee that we will buy no longer Chalk for Cheeſe. They ſee they have loſt a fair fleece, vengeable ſorry that they can diſpatch no more Pardons, Diſpenſations, Totquots, with the reſt of their baggage and trumpery. England is no more a Babe. There is no man here, but now he knoweth that they do fooliſhly that give Gold for Lead, more weight of that than they receive of this. They paſs not though Peter and Pauls faces be graven in the Lead, to make fools fain. No, we be ſorry that they ſhould abuſe holy Saints viſages, to the beguiling of the world.

The Popes Curſes not feared in England.

The Popes Trumpery diſpatched out of England.

KING Henry 8. Gold given for Lead.

Surely, except God take away our right wits, not only his authority ſhall be driven out for ever, but his name alſo ſhortly ſhall be forgotten in England. We will from henceforth ask counſel from him and his, when we liſt to be deceived, when we covet to be in error, when we deſire to offend God, truth and honeſty. If a man may gueſs the whole work by the foundation, where deceit beginneth the work, can any other than deceits be builded upon this foundation? VVhat can you look for in this Mantuan Council, other than the oppreſſion of truth and true Religion? If there be any thing well done, think, as every man doth, Biſhops of Rome to be accuſtomed to do a few things well, that many evil may the better be taken at their hands. They, when they liſt, can yield ſome part of their right. They are content that ſome of their Decrees, ſome of their Errors and abuſes be reprehended; but they are never more to be feared, than when they ſhew themſelves moſt gentle. For if they grant a few, they ask many, if they leave a little, they will be ſure of a great deal. Scarce a man may know how to handle himſelf, that he take no hurt at their hands, yea, when they bleſs him: which ſeldom do good, but for an intent to do evil. Certainly, come who ſo will to theſe ſhops of deceits, to theſe Fairs of frauds, we will loſe no part of our right, in coming at his call, that ought to be called, and not to call. VVe will neither come at Mantua, nor ſend thither for this matter, &c.

God grant.

The Popes foundation to all deceit.

The Pope doth a few things well that many evils may the better proceed.

The Pope ought to be called, and not to call.

And ſo the King, proceeding in the ſaid his Proteſtation, declareth moreover, how the Pope after he had ſummoned his Council firſt to be kept at Mantua, the three and twentieth day of May, Anno 1537, ſhortly after directed out another Bull, to propagate the ſame Council to the month of November, pretending for his excuſe, that the Duke of Mantua would not ſuffer him to keep any Council there, unleſs he maintained a number of warriors for defence of the Town. And therefore in his later Bull he prorogueth this Aſſembly, commanding Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, and other of the Spiritualty, by the vertue of obedience, and under pain of curſing, to be preſent, but ſheweth no place at all where he would be, nor whither they ſhould come. And in very deed no great matter though no place were named. For as good a Council no where to be called, as where it could not be. And as well no place ſerved him that intended no Council; as all places. And to ſay truth, much better no place to be named, than to name ſuch as he purpoſed not to come to; for ſo ſhould he break no promiſe which maketh none. And ſo going forward in his Oration, toward the later end he thus inferreth by his words of Proteſtation, ſaying:

The Pope again prorogues his Council.

No, we will the Pope and his adherents to underſtand that which we have oft ſaid, and now ſay, and ever will ſay, He nor his hath no authority, nor juriſdiction in England. We give him no more than he hath, that is, never a deal. That which he hath uſurped againſt Gods Law, and extorted by violence, we by good right take from him again. But he and his will ſay, we gave them a Primacy. We hear them well: we gave it you indeed. If you have authority upon us as long as our conſent giveth it you, and you evermore will make your plea upon our conſent, then let it have even an end where it began; we conſent no longer, your authority muſt needs be gone. If we being deceived by falſe pretence of evil-alledged Scriptures, gave to you that ye ought to have refuſed, why may we not, our errror now perceived, and your deceit eſpied, take it again? VVe Princes wrote our ſelves to be inferiors to Popes. As long as we thought ſo, we obeyed them as our ſuperiors. Now we write not as we did, and therefore they have no great cauſe to marvel, if we hereafter do not as we did; both the Laws civil, and alſo the Laws of God, be on our ſide. For a free man born doth not loſe his liberty, no nor hurt the plea of his liberty, though he write himſelf a bondman.

Princes as they gave the Pope Primacy, ſo they take it from him again.

Again,

KING Hen. 8. Cuſtom.

Again, If they lean to cuſtom, we ſend them to Saint Cyprian, which ſaith, That cuſtom, if truth be not joyned with it, is nothing, but Erroris vetuſtas, that is, An old error. Chriſt ſaid, Ego ſum via, veritas, & vita: I am the way, the truth, and life. He never ſaid, Ego ſum conſuetudo, I am the cuſtom. Wherefore, ſeeing cuſtom ſerveth you on the one ſide, and Scripture us on the other, are ye able to match us? In how many places doth Chriſt admoniſh you to ſeek no Primacy, to prefer your ſelves before no body? No, to be obedient unto all Creatures? Your old Title, Servus ſervorum, evil agreeth with your new forged dignity. But we will not tarry in matters ſo plain: We only deſire God, that Cæſar, and other Chriſtian Princes, would agree upon ſome holy Council, where Truth may be tried, and Religion ſet up, which hath been hurt by nothing ſo ſore, as by general not general Councils; errors and abuſes grow too faſt. Erudimini qui judicatis terram: Get you learning you that judge the Earth and, excogitate ſome remedy for theſe ſo many diſeaſes of the ſick Church. They that be wiſeſt, do deſpair of a general Council. Wherefore we think it now beſt, that every Prince call a Council Provincial, and every Prince to redreſs his own Realm. We make all men privy what we think beſt to be done, for the redreſs of Religion. If they like it, we doubt not but they will follow it, or ſome other better. Our truſt is, that all Princes will ſo handle themſelves in this behalf, that Princes may enjoy their own, and Prieſts of Rome content themſelves with that they ought to have. Princes as we truſt will no longer nouriſh Wolves whelps, they will ſubſcribe no more to popiſh pride, to the Papacy, &c.

The Popes title and his dignity agree not together.

Beſt that every Prince reform his Realm and tarry not for general Councils.

Favour our doings, O Chriſtian Princes. Your honour and ancient Majeſty is reſtord. Remember there is nothing pertaining ſo much to a Princes honour, as to ſet forth truth, and to help Religion. Take you heed that their deceits work not more miſchief than your vertue can do good, and everlaſting War we would all Princes had with this Papacy. As for their Decrees, ſo harken to them, that if in this Mantuan Aſſembly things be well done, ye take them, but not as authoriſed by them, but that truth, and things that maintain Religion, are to be taken at all mens hands. And even as we will admit things well made, ſo if there be any thing determined in prejudice of truth, for the maintenance of their evil grounded Primacy, or that may hurt the authority of Kings, we proteſt unto the whole world that we neither allow it, nor will at any time allow it.

Ye have Chriſtian Readers our mind concerning the General Council. We think you all ſee, that Paul and his Cardinals, Biſhops, Abbots, Monks, Friers, with the reſt of the Rabblement, do nothing leſs intend, than the knowledge and ſearch of truth. Ye ſee this is no time meet, Mantua no place meet for a General Council. And though they were both meet, yet except ſome other call this Council, you ſee, that we neither need to come, nor to ſend. You have heard how every Prince in his own Realm may quiet things amiſs. If there be any of you that can ſhew us a better way, we promiſe with all hearty deſire, to do that that ſhall be thought beſt for the ſetling of Religion, and that we will leave our own advices, if any man ſhew us better. Which mind of ours, we moſt heartily pray God that gave it us, not only to increaſe in us, but alſo to ſend it unto all Chriſtian Princes, all Chriſtian Prelates, and all Chriſtian people.

A little before the death of Queen Ann, there was a Parliament at Weſtminſter, wherein was given to the King by conſent of the Abbots, all ſuch Houſes of Religion, as were under three hundred Marks. Which was a ſhrewd Prognoſticate of the ruine of greater Houſes, which indeed followed ſhortly after, as was and might eaſily be perceived before of many, who then ſaid, that the low Buſhes and Brambles were cut down before, but great Oaks would follow after.

The Papiſts purpoſe diſappointed.

Although the proceeding of theſe things did not well like the minds of the Popes friends in England, yet notwithſtanding they began again to take ſome breath of comfort, when they ſaw the foreſaid Queen Ann diſpatched. Nevertheleſs they were fruſtrate of their purpoſe (as as is afore ſhewed) and that double wiſe. For firſt, after they had their wills of Queen Ann, the Lord raiſed up another Queen, not greatly for their purpoſe, with her Son King Edward. And alſo for that the Lord Cromwel the ſame time began to grow in authority. Who like a mighty Pillar ſet up in the Church of Chriſt, was enough alone to confound and overthrow all the malignant deviſes of the Adverſaries, ſo long as God gave him in life here to continue; whoſe Story hereafter followeth more at large.

Queen Jane Married to the King.

Lord Cromwel groweth in authority.

Shortly after this foreſaid Marriage of the King with this Queen Jane Seimer above mentioned, in the month of June, during the continuation of the Parliament, by the conſent of the Clergy holding then a ſolemn Convocation in the Church of Saint Paul, a Book was ſet forth containing certain Articles of Religion neceſſary to be taught to the people; wherein they intreated ſpecially but of three Sacraments, Baptiſm, Penance, and the Lords Supper. Where alſo divers other things were publiſhed concerning the alteration of certain points of Religion, as that certain Holidays were forbidden, and many Abbeys began to be ſuppreſſed. For the which cauſe the rude multitude of Lincolnſhire, fearing the utter ſubverſion of their old Religion, wherein they had been ſo long nuſled, did riſe up in a great Commotion, to the number well near of twenty Thouſand, having for their Captain a Monk called Doctor Makerel, calling himſelf then Captain Cobler; but thoſe Rebels being repreſſed by the Kings power, and deſiring pardon, ſoon brake up their Aſſembly. For they hearing of the Royal Army of the King coming againſt them with his own perſon there preſent, and fearing what would follow of this, firſt the Noblemen and Gentlemen which before favoured them, began to withdraw themſelves, ſo that they were deſtitute of Captains; and at the laſt they in writing made certain Petitions to the King, proteſting that they never intended hurt toward his Royal Perſon. Theſe Petitions the King received, and made this anſwer again to them as followeth.

Alteration of Religion a little beginneth.

Commotion in Lincolnſhire.

A Monk Stirrer of the Commotion.

The Kings anſwer to the Rebels.

The Kings anſwer to the Rebels.

FIrſt, we begin to make anſwer to the fourth and ſixth Articles, becauſe upon them depend th much of the reſt. Concerning chooſing of Counſellors, I never have read, heard, or known, that Princes, Counſellors, and Prelats, ſhould be appointed by rude and ignorant common people, nor that they were perſons meet, or of ability to diſcern and chooſe meet and ſufficient Counſellors for a Prince. How preſumptuous then are ye the rude Commons of one Shire, and that one the moſt baſe of the whole Realm, and of the leaſt experience, to find fault with your Prince, for the electing of his Counſellors and Prelats, and to take upon you, contrary to Gods Law and Mans Laws to rule your Princes, whom you are bound by all Law to obey and ſerve with both your Lives, Lands and Goods, and for no worldly cauſe to withſtand.

For ſuppreſſion of Religious Houſes.

As for the ſuppreſſion of Religious Houſes and Monaſteries, We will that ye and all Our Subjects ſhould well know, that this is granted Us by all the Nobles Spiritual and Temporal of this Realm, and by all the Commons in the ſame, by Act of Parliament; and not ſet forth by any Counſellor or Counſellors upon their meer will and fantaſie, as you full falſly would perſwade Our Realm to believe.

In theſe viſitations of Religious houſes horrible it is to read what wickedneſs and abomination was there found and regiſtred by the viſitors.

And where ye alledge, that the ſervice of God is much diminiſhed, the truth thereof is contrary; for there be no Houſes ſuppreſſed where God was well ſerved, but where moſt vice, miſchief, and abomination of living was uſed, and that doth well appear by their own confeſſions ſubſcribed with their own hands in the time of their Viſitations, and yet We ſuffered a great many of them (more than we needed by the Act) to ſtand; wherein if they amend not their living, We fear We have more to anſwer for, than for the ſuppreſſion of all the reſt. And as for the Hoſpitality for the relief of the poor, We wonder ye be not aſhamed to affirm that they have been a great relief of poor people, when a great many or the moſt part hath not paſt four or five Religious perſons in them, and divers but one which ſpent the ſubſtance of the goods of their Houſes in nouriſhing of vice and abominable living. Now what unkindneſs and unnaturality may we impute to you and all Our Subjects that be of that mind, which had lever ſuch an unthrift ſort of vicious perſons ſhould enjoy ſuch poſſeſſions, profits, and emoluments, as grow of the ſaid houſes, to the maintenance of their unthrifty life, than we your natural Prince, Sovereign Lord and King, which doth and hath ſpent more of our own in your defences, than ſix times they be worth?

The Act of uſes. As touching the Act of Uſes, we marvel what madneſs is in your Brain, or upon what ground ye would take authority upon you to cauſe us to break thoſe Laws and Statutes which by all the noble Knights and Gentlemen of this Realm (whom the ſame chiefly touched) have been granted and aſſented to, ſeeing in no manner of things it toucheth you the baſe Commons of our Realm.

Alſo, the grounds of all thoſe Uſes were falſe, and never admitted by Law, but uſurped upon the Prince, contrary to all Equity and Juſtice, as it hath been openly both diſputed and declared by all the well learned men in the Realm of England, in Weſtminſter-Hall: Whereby ye may well perceive how mad and unreaſonable your demands be, both in that and in the reſt, and how unmeet it is for us, and diſhonourable, to grant or aſſent unto, and leſs meet and decent for you in ſuch a rebellious ſort to demand the ſame of your Prince.

The Act of fifteen. As touching the Fifteen which you demand of us to be releaſed, think ye that we be ſo faint hearted, that perforce ye of one Shire (were ye a great many more) could compel us with your inſurrections and ſuch rebellious demeanor to remit the ſame? Or think you that any man will or may take you to be true Subjects, that firſt make and ſhew a loving grant, and then perforce would compel your Sovereign Lord and King to releaſe the ſame? The time of payment thereof is not yet come; yea, and ſeeing the ſame will not countervail the tenth peny of the charges which we have and daily do ſuſtain for your tuition and ſafegard, make you ſure by your occaſions of theſe ingratitudes, unnaturalneſs, and unkindneſs to us now adminiſtred, ye give us cauſe (which have always been as much dedicate to your wealth, as ever was King) not ſo much to ſet our ſtudy for the ſetting forward of the ſame, ſeeing how unkindly and untruly ye deal now with us, without any cauſe or occaſion: And doubt ye not, though ye have no grace nor naturalneſs in you to conſider your duty of Allegiance to your King and Sovereign Lord, the reſt of our Realm (we doubt not) hath, and we and they ſhall ſo look on this cauſe, that we truſt it ſhall be to your confuſion, if according to your former Letters you ſubmit not your ſelves.

The Act of firſt fruits. As touching the Firſt Fruits, we let you to wit, it is a thing granted us by Act of Parliament alſo, for the ſupportation of part of the great and exceſſive charges, which we ſupport and bear for the maintenance of your wealths and other our Subjects: And we have known alſo that ye our Commons have much complained alſo in times paſſed, that the moſt part of our Goods, Lands, and poſſeſſions of this our Realm, were in the ſpiritual mens hands; and yet bearing us in hand that ye be as loving Subjects to us as may be, ye cannot find in your hearts that your Prince and Sovereign Lord ſhould have any part thereof (and yet it is nothing prejudicial unto you our Commons) but do Rebel and unlawfully Riſe againſt your Prince, contrary to the duty of Allegiance and Gods Commandment. Sirs, remember your follies and Traiterous demeanors, and ſhame not your native Country of England, nor offend no more ſo grievouſly your doubted King and natural Prince, which always hath ſhewed himſelf moſt loving unto you, and remember your duty of Allegiance, and that ye are bound to obey us your King, both by Gods Commandment and Law of Nature.

Wherefore we charge you eftſoons, upon the foreſaid Bonds and Pains, that you withdraw your ſelves to your own houſes every man, and no more to aſſemble contrary to our Laws and your Allegiances, and to cauſe the provokers of you to this miſchief, to be delivered to our Lieutenants hands or ours, and you your ſelves to ſubmit you to ſuch condign puniſhment, as we and our Nobles ſhall think you worthy: For doubt you not elſe, that We and Our Nobles neither can nor will ſuffer this injury at your hands unrevenged, if ye give not to us place of Sovereignty, and ſhew your ſelves as bounden and obedient Subjects, and no more intermeddle your ſelves from henceforth with the weighty affairs of the Realm, the direction whereof only appertaineth to Us your King, and ſuch Noble Men and Counſellors as we liſt to Elect and Chooſe to have the ordering of the ſame.

KING A. ...

And thus we pray unto Almighty God, to give you grace to do your duties, to uſe your ſelves towards Us like true and faithful Subjects, ſo as we may have cauſe to order you thereafter: and rather obediently to conſent amongſt you to deliver into the hands of our Lieutenant, a hundred perſons to be ordered according to their demerits, at Our Will and Pleaſure, than by your obſtinacy, and wilfulneſs to put your ſelves, your Wives, Children, Lands, Goods and Chattels, beſide the indignation of God, in the utter adventure of total deſtruction, and utter ruine, by force and violence of the Sword.

After the Lincolnſhire men had received this the Kings anſwer aforeſaid, made to their Petitions, each miſtruſting other who ſhould be noted to be the greateſt medler, even very ſuddenly they began to ſhrink, and out of hand they were all divided, and every man at home in his own houſe in Peace: But the Captains of theſe Rebels eſcaped not all clear, but were after apprehended, and had as they deſerved. Ex Ed. Hal. The commotion of Lincolnſhire aſſwaged.

A Popiſh Inſurrection in Yorkſhire. After this, immediately within ſix days upon the ſame, followed a new Inſurrection in Yorkſhire for the ſame cauſes, through the Inſtigation and lying tails of ſeditious perſons, eſpecially Monks and Prieſts, making them believe, that their Silver Chalices, Croſſes, Jewels, and other Ornaments, ſhould be taken out of their Churches, and that no man ſhould be married, or eat any good meat in his houſe, but ſhould give tribute therefore to the K. But there eſpecial malice was againſt Cromwel and certain other Counſellors.

The number of theſe Rebels were near 40000 having for their Badges the five wounds, with the ſign of the Sacrament, and Jeſus written in the midſt. The Badges of the Rebels.

A holy Pilgrimage. This their diveliſh Rebellion they termed by the name of a Holy Pilgrimage, but they ſerved a wrong and a naughty Saint. They had alſo in the field their Streamers and Banners, whereupon was painted Chriſt hanging upon the Croſs on the one ſide, and a Chalice with a painted Cake in it on the other ſide, with other ſuch Enſigns of like hypocriſie and fained ſanctity, pretending thereby to fight for the Faith, and right of holy Church.

The Kings power againſt the Rebels in the North. As ſoon as the King was certified of this new ſeditious Inſurrection, he ſent with all ſpeed the Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Suffolk, Marqueſs of Exceſter, Earl of Shrewsbury, and other with a great Army, forthwith to encounter with the Rebels.

The blind ſtubbornneſs of ſuperſtitious people, rebelling where they have no cauſe. Theſe Noble Captains and Counſellors thus well furniſhed with habiliments of War, approaching toward the Rebels, and underſtanding both their number, and how they were full bent to Battel, firſt with policy went about to aſſay and practiſe how to appeaſe all without bloodſhedding; but the Northern men, ſtoutly and ſturdily ſtanding to their wicked cauſe and wretched enterpriſe, would in no caſe relent from their attempts. Which when the Nobles perceived, and ſaw no other way to pacifie their furious minds utterly ſet on miſchief, determined upon a Battel. The place was appoi[illegible]d, the day aſſigned, and the hour ſet; but ſee the wonderous work of Gods gracious providence. The night before the day of Battel came (as teſtifieth Edward Hall) fell a ſmall Rain, nothing to ſpeak of, but yet, as it were by a great miracle of God, the water which was but a very ſmall Foord, and that men, in manner the day before, might have gone dry-ſhod over, ſuddenly roſe of ſuch a height, deepneſs, and breadth, that the like no man that there did inhabit could tell they ever ſaw afore; ſo that that day, even when the hour of Battel ſhould come, it was impoſſible for the one Army to come at the other.

A great miracle of God in defending the cauſe of his Goſpel. After this, that the appointment made between both of the Armies being thus diſappointed (as it is to be thought only by God, who extended his great mercy, and had compaſſion on the great number of innocent perſons that in that deadly ſlaughter had like to have been murthered) could take no place; then by the great wiſdom and policy of the ſaid Captains, a Communication was had, and a Pardon of the Kings Majeſty obtained for all the Captains, and chief doers of this Inſurrection, and they promiſed that ſuch things as they found themſelves agrieved withal, they ſhould gently be heard, and their reaſonable Petitions granted, and that their Articles ſhould be preſented to the King, that by his Highneſs authority, and wiſdom of his Council, all things ſhould be brought to good order and concluſion; and with this order every man quietly departed, and thoſe which before were bent as hot as fire to fight, being letted thereof by God, went now peacebly to their houſes, and were as cold as water.

A domino factum eſt iſtud.

In the time of this ruffle in Yorkſhire, and the King lying the ſame time at Windſor, there was a Butcher dwelling within five miles of the ſaid Town of Windſor, which cauſed a Prieſt to preach that all they that took part with the Yorkſhiremen, whom he called Gods people, did fight in Gods quarrel; for the which both he and the Prieſt were apprehended and executed.

Popiſh Prieſts rebelling againſt the King.

Divers other Prieſts alſo, with other about the ſame time committing in like ſort Treaſon againſt the King, ſuffered the like execution. Such a buſineſs had the King then to rid the Realm from the ſervitude of the Romiſh yokes.

Tantæ molis erat Romanam evertere ſedem.

But Gods hand did ſtill work withal, in upholding his Goſpel and trodden Truth, againſt all ſeditious ſtirs, Commotions, Rebellions, and whatſoever was to the contrary, as both by the Stories afore paſſed, and by ſuch alſo as hereafter follow, may notoriouſly appear.

The next year after this, which was of the Lord 1537, after the great execution had been done upon certain rebellious Prieſts, and a few other Lay men, with certain Noble perſons alſo and Gentlemen, amongſt whom was the Lord Darcy, the Lord Huſſy, Sir Robert Conſtable, Sir Thomas Percy, Sir Francis Bygot, Sir Stephen Hamelton, Sir John Bulmer, and his Wife, William Lomeley, Nicholas Tempeſt, with the Abbots of Gerney, and of Rivers, &c. In the month of October, the ſame year following, was born Prince Edward. Shortly after whoſe birth, Queen Jane his mother, the ſecond day after, died in Childbed, and left the King again a Widdower, which ſo continued the ſpace of two years together. Upon the death of which Queen Jane, and upon the birth of Prince Edward her Son, theſe two Verſes were made which follow.

Prince Edward born. Queen Jane dyed in childbed.

Theſe verſes were thought to be made by M. Armigyl Wade.

Phœnix Jana jacet nato Phœnice, dolendum

Here by the way is to be underſtood, that during all this ſeaſon, ſince the time that the King of England had rejected the Pope out of the Realm, both the Emperor, the French King, and the King of Scots, with other foreign Potentates (which were yet in ſubjection under the Pope) bare him no great good favour inwardly, whatſoever outwardly they pretended. Neither was here lacking privy ſetters on, nor ſecret working among themſelves how to compaſs ungracious miſchiefs, if God by contrary occaſions had not ſtopped their intended deviſes. For firſt the Pope had ſent Cardinal Pool to the French King, to ſtir him to War againſt the Realm of England.

The Pope ſtirreth war againſt England by Cardinal Pool.

Secondly, Whereas the French King, by Treaty of perpetual Peace, was bound yearly to pay to the King of England at the firſt days of May, and November, about 25000 Crowns of the Sun, and odd money, and over that ten thouſand Crowns at the ſaid two terms, for recompence of ſalt due, as the Treaties thereof did purport, that penſion remained now unpaid four years and more.

The Emperor, the French King, and the King of Scots, ſet againſt the King of England.

Furthermore, the Emperor, and the French King both, retained Grancetor a Traiterous Rebel againſt the King, and condemned by Act of Parliament, with certain other Traitors more, and yet would not deliver him unto the King at his earneſt ſute and requeſt.

The French King alſo, digreſſing from his promiſe and Treaty, made Alliance with the Biſhop of Rome, Clement, in marrying the Dauphin to his Neece, called Katherine de Medices.

The ſaid French King moreover, contrary to his contract made, married his Daughter to the King of Scots. All which were prejudicial; and put the King no doubt in ſome fear and perplexity (though otherwiſe a ſtout and valiant Prince) to ſee the Pope, the Emperor, the French King, and the King of Scots ſo bent againſt him.

And yet all this notwithſtanding, the Lord ſtill defended the juſtneſs of his cauſe againſt them all. For although the French King was ſo ſet on by the Pope, and ſo linked in marriage with the Scots, and lacked nothing now but only occaſion to invade the Realm of England, yet notwithſtanding he hearing now of the birth of Prince Edward the Kings Son by Queen Jane, and underſtanding alſo by the death of the ſaid Queen Jane that the King was a Widdower, and perceiving moreover talk to be that the King would joyn in marriage with the Germans, began to wax more calm and cold, and to give much more gentle words, and to demean himſelf more courteouſly, labouring to marry the Queen of Navarr his Siſter to the King.

The Embaſſadors reſident then in France for the King, were Stephen Gardiner, with Doctor Thirleby, &c. Which Stephen Gardiner what he wrought ſecretly for the Popes devotion, I have not expreſly to charge him. Whether he ſo did, or what he did, the Lord knoweth all. But this is certain, that when Doctor Bonner, Archdeacon then of Leiceſter, was ſent into France by the King (through the means of the Lord Cromwel) to ſucceed Stephen Gardiner in Embaſſy, which was about the year of our Lord 1538, he found ſuch dealing in the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, as was not greatly to be truſted, beſide the unkind parts of the ſaid Biſhop againſt the foreſaid Bonner, coming then from the King and Lord Cromwel, as was to be liked.

Ann. 1538 Doctor Bonner, the Kings Embaſſador in France.

Long it is to recite from the beginning, and few men peradventure would believe the brawling matters, the privy complaints, the contentious quarrels and bitter diſſenſions between theſe two, and eſpecially what deſpiteful contumelies Doctor Bonner received at the hands of Wincheſter. For underſtand good Reader, that this Doctor Bonner all this while remained yet, as he ſeemed, a good man, and was a great furtherer of the Kings proceedings, and a favourer of Luthers Doctrine, and was advanced only by the Lord Cromwel. Whoſe promotions here to rehearſe; firſt he was Archdeacon of Leiceſter, Parſon of Bledon, of Derham, Cheſwick, and Cheriburton. Then he was made Biſhop of Hereford, and at laſt preferred to be Biſhop of London. The chief of which preferments and dignities were conferred unto him only by the means and favour of the Lord Cromwel, who was then his chief and only Patron, and ſetter up; as the ſaid Bonner himſelf in all his Letters doth manifeſtly proteſt and declare. The Copies of which his Letters I could here produce and exhibit, but for prolonging my Story with ſuperfluous matter. Yet that the world and all poſterity may ſee, how the coming up of Doctor Bonner was only by the Goſpel (howſoever he was after unkind unto the Goſpel) this one Letter of his, which I will here infer, written to the Lord Cromwel out of France, may ſtand for a perpetual teſtimony, the tenour whereof here enſueth.

Doctor Bonner in the beginning a favourer of the truth, and a Lutheran.

Lord Cromwel the only ſetter up of D. Bonner.

Doctor Bonners coming up was by the Goſpel.

A Letter of Doctor Bonner the Kings Embaſſador reſident in France, ſent to the Lord Cromwel, declaring the order of his promotions and coming up.

Out of Bonners own hand writing.

MY very ſingular eſpecial good Lord, as one moſt bounden, I moſt humbly commend me unto your honourable good Lordſhip. And whereas in times paſt it hath liked the ſame, without any my deſerts or merits, even only of your ſingular exceeding goodneſs, to beſtow a great deal of love, benevolence, and good affection upon me ſo poor a man, and of ſo ſmall qualities, expreſſing indeed ſundry ways the good effect thereof to my great preferment, I was very much bound thereby unto your Honourable good Lordſhip, and thought it always my duty (as indeed it was) both to bear my true heart again unto your Lordſhip, and alſo remembring ſuch kindneſs, to do unto the ſame all ſuch ſervice and pleaſure as might then lie in my ſmall power to do.

Doctor Bonner confeſſeth himſelf much bound to the Lord Cromwel.

But where of your infinite and ineſtimable goodneſs it hath further liked you of late, firſt to advance me unto the office of Legation from ſuch a Prince as my Sovereign Lord is, unto the Emperor and French King; and next after to procure and obtain mine advancement to ſo honourable a promotion as the Biſhoprick of Hereford, I muſt here acknowledge the exceeding greatneſs of your Lordſhips benefit, with mine own imbecillity to recompence it, and ſay, as Virgil Writeth.

Doctor Bonner preferred to the Biſhoprick of Hereford by the Lord Cromwel.

Grates perſolvere dignas non opis eſt noſtræ.

Surely my good Lord, I neither am, neither ſhall be able to requite this your Lordſhips moſt ſpecial kindneſs and bountiful goodneſs at any time, unleſs I ſhould uſe that civil remedy called in Law Acceptilation, which great Debtors eſpecially are accuſtomed to procure to the hands of their Creditors: Whereby yet nevertheleſs your goodneſs, the only doer thereof, ſhould rather be increaſed, than my duty towards the ſame thereby diminiſhed. And ceſſio Bonorum (the only extream refuge and help of poor Debtors deviſed alſo in civil) might ſomewhat help herein, ſaying that it is not poſſible that I ſhould come Ad tam pinguem fortunam (whereupon that remedy is grounded) whereby I may recompence and requite this Debt worthily.

Acceptilation.

Here ſeemeth to lack ſome word, but that I would not alter any thing in his own Copy.

So that in concluſion there reſteth this, that unleſs your Lordſhips ſelf do looſe me, as you have bound me, I ſhall (and that full gladly) remain continually your moſt bounded Beadſman. And Sir I moſt humbly beſeech your good Lordſhip, in the honour of God, ſeeing this thing is begun, and advanced only by your goodneſs and means, you will to the intent the Act may be wholly your own, ſtretch out your goodneſs, not ſuffering the reſt to be perfected otherwiſe than by your own hands; wherein as I muſt and ſhall acknowledge my ſelf to be exceedingly beholden unto your good Lordſhip, ſo ſhall I the ſame more eſteem and ſet by, during my life, having ſo attained it by your only goodneſs: And verily, if your good Lordſhip be not better to me herein than I can (unleſs it be of your own goodneſs) deſire you, I know not how I ſhall be able to overcome the great charges annexed to this promotion. For though my promotions afore were right honeſt and good, yea, and ſuch as one of far better qualities then I was, or am of, ought therewith to have been contented; yet conſidering that of divers of them, that is to wit, Leiceſter, Bledon, Derham, Cheſwick, and Cheriburton, the firſt fruits, tenths, and charges born, I have not received clearly one peny, I am now never a whit the moreable to bear the great charges of this.

The promotion of Bonner.

I ſhall therefore herein and in all things elſe pertaining hereunto, ſeeing your Lordſhip is ſo great a Patron, and will needs bind me forever to be your own (as indeed I will) referr all together unto your goodneſs, beſeeching you to take the order and diſpoſition of all into your hands. I cannot tell wether the late Biſhop ſtandeth bounden for the firſt fruits, tenths, or other duties which by Statute may be demanded of his Succeſſor, but I fear it greatly, and beſeech your Lordſhip that I may be holpen therein. My charges now here enforceth me the more to ſpeak and trouble your good Lordſhip, which at the beginning are not a few, and yet not ended. Of my fidelity to your good Lordſhip, I have of five hundred Crowns remaining forty, beſtowed upon Horſes, Mules, Mulet, Rayment, and other neceſſaries, ſtanding Debtor to Maſter Thirleby nevertheleſs, and alſo to Maſter Dr. Heyns, for an hundred Marks, or faſt upon, to them both. And beſides this, ſuch is my chance now at the beginning, divers of my Servants have fallen ſick, being in great peril and danger, putting me to no little charges.

Over and beſides theſe diſpleaſures coming unto me by not having their ſervice, and other to keep them, and alſo wanting mine other Servants in England, which though I have ſent for them, yet neither they, neither my Horſes or ſtuff are come, I muſt and do take patience, truſting it will mend.

Upon the cloſing up of this Letter, and depeach of this Bearer, God willing I will pack up my gear, and to morrow betime follow the French King, who yeſterday departed from Shambour, and maketh haſt toward Paris. And thus our bleſſed Lord long and well preſerve your good Lordſhip in health.

At Bloys, the ſecond of Sceptember in the evening.

Scribled by the weary hand of him that is bounden to be, and is indeed, your Lordſhips Beadſman at commandment.

Edmund Bonner.

DIvers other Letters beſide this of Doctor Bonner remain in writing unto the like effect and purport, which here alſo I might add for a further demonſtration hereof; but this one in ſtead of many may ſuffice. Now to our purpoſe again; which is to declare how this Doctor Bonner, in the time of his firſt ſpringing up, ſhewed himſelf a good man, and a faſt friend to the Goſpel of Chriſt and to the Kings proceedings: And contrariwiſe, how Stephen Gardiner did halt then both with God and with the King: Alſo what unkindneſs and contumelies the ſaid Bonner received at his hands; what rancour and heart-burning was between them; and what complaints the one moved againſt the other, remaineth conſequently by their Writings and Records to be opened. For the more evident demonſtration whereof, they that have the Letters of the ſaid Doctor Bonner, written from France to the King and the Lord Cromwel, may right well perceive. And firſt to note what a Goſpeller he was; in his Letter from Roan he ſpeaking of his truſty companion, and bearer of his Letters (who was belike Doctor Heyns) he giveth this report both of him and of himſelf; ſaying, Rancor and heartburning between the Biſhop of Winchester and Bonner.

If this bearer had been ſo much deſirous to pleaſe the Emperor, and follow his religion, as he was ſtudious to ſerve truly your Grace, and to advance the Truth, he had not wanted, &c.

The words of Bonner declaring himſelf to be a Goſpeller.

And Again:

And beſides that, he hath not wanted the evil report of naughty fellows, naming him a Lutheran wherein for company I was joyned, ſuch was their goodneſs, &c.

Bonner reckoned a Lutheran.

Again, in another Letter written to the Lord Cromwel, theſe words he hath, ſpeaking of his companion Doctor Heyns.

Eſpecially for that the ſaid Doctor Heyns by his upright dealing herein, and profeſſing the Truth, neither gave thanks nor reward, but was blazed abroad by honeſt folks to be a Lutheran. The leſs he pleaſeth in Spain, the better argument it is, that his intent was to ſerve none but the Kings Highneſs and the Truth, &c.

D. Bonner & D. Heyns noted for Lutherans.

And furthermore, In another minute writing to the Lord Cromwel of Stephen Wincheſter, and of his Churliſhneſs toward him, thus he ſaith:

And there I found in Maſter Doctor Thirleby much kindneſs, and in the Biſhop of Wincheſter as little, &c.

Winchester againſt Bonner.

And in the ſame Letter it followeth:

And if I had received any entertainment of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, I would likewiſe have ſent you Word. I thank God I need not, for I had nothing of him, &c.

Alſo in another Letter the ſaid Bonner writing to the Lord Cromwel concerning one Barnabe, and himſelf, what cold welcome they both had at the hands of Wincheſter, uſed theſe words following:

And my good Lord, I beſeech you to continue your good favour to this honeſt poor man Barnabe, who is body and ſoul aſſuredly your own, and as well beloved of the Biſhop of Wincheſter a I am: And of my troth I ſuppoſe and believe verily, one of the chief grudges the Biſhop hath againſt him, is becauſe your Lordſhip of your charitable goodneſs doth love and favour him.

Stephen Winchester againſt Barnabe becauſe the Lord Cromwel favoured him.

Another Letter of Doctor Bonner to the Lord Cromwel, complaining of Wincheſter, and alſo declaring how he was promoted by the ſaid Lord Cromwel, to the Biſhoprick of Hereford.

MY very ſingular eſpecial good Lord, according to my moſt bounden duty, I commend me right humbly unto your good Lordſhip, advertiſing the ſame, that the nine and twentieth of the laſt month, about four of the Clock at afternoon, there arrived here Barnabe with your Lordſhips Letters, dated at Ewrige the four and twentieth of the ſame: And thinking that at the ſaid arrival, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, M. Thirleby and I had been all lodged together, where in very deed we had ſeveral lodgings, he went ſtraight to the Biſhop of Wincheſters lodging (Maſter Thirleby and I being then walking in the fields) and the Biſhop incontinently inquired of him, not how the Kings Grace did, as was his duty; but

The Biſhop of Winchester inquired not how the King did.

KING Hen. 8. (as Barnabe told me) inquired of him where he left the Kings Grace at his coming away, whether he had brought any Letters for him: whether Maſter Brian and Maſter Wallop were in the Court at his departing, and finally what news were in England? To the which queſtions, when Barnabe had made anſwer, ſaying that he left the Kings Grace at Byrling, and that Maſter Brian and Maſter Wallop were in the Court at his departing, and withal, that he had no Letters from them, nor any other to him, and finally, for the news that the Kings Highneſs had given me the Biſhoprick of Hereford: the Biſhop (as Barnabe reporteth, and I doubt not but he ſaith truly) caſt down his head, making a plaice mouth with his lip; and afterward lifting up his eyes and hands (as curſing the day and hour it chanced) ſeemed ſo evil contented therewith, that he would neither bid Barnabe drink, or tarry ſupper, nor yet further commune with him, but turning from him, called one Maſter Medow, and ſhewed him of the ſame tidings, taking it (as it appeared) very heavily, ſemblably as he doth every thing, that is or may be for my preferment. And when Barnabe perceived that I was not there, and then alſo this comfortable countenance and good cheer made unto him, he went thence and ſearched for me, who then was walking with Maſter Thirleby, as is before, and by chance communing with him of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, giving him advertiſement that he ſhould not be abuſed by the ſaid Biſhop, who I ſaid made him, not for any hearty love I thought he bear unto him, but either in deſpite of me, to whom he thought it ſhould be greatly diſpleaſant; Or elſe under colour thereof, and by familiarity, for to grope him and to ſerve his own crafty purpoſes by him. And ſoon after the departure of Maſter Thirleby from me, who then went to the Biſhop to Supper, I returned towards my lodging, and by the way met with Barnabe, whoſe ſalutation was after that ſort, that it cauſed me to wonder at it, eſpecially I having no expectation or hope of ſuch things as he rehearſed unto me. And ſurely my good Lord I would not believe him in the thing he told, till I perceived the ſame by the ſuperſcription of your Lordſhips Letter, which he afterwards delivered unto me: declaring withal (to my great comfort) the proſperous eſtate of the Kings Highneſs, and of your good Lordſhip. Which known, I beſought Almighty God to grant the long continuance thereof, and alſo as was my duty, did give moſt humble thanks to the Kings Highneſs, and to your ſaid good Lordſhip. And hereupon keeping your Lordſhips Letters ſtill in my hands unbroken, I went incontinently to the lodging of Maſter Thirleby which was in my way, to communicate theſe my news and great good fortune with him, and not finding him there, I read over your Lordſhips Letters, ſending the ſame afterward to Maſter Thirleby, and perceiving by Barnabe, that he had other Letters for me, which he told me he muſt deliver unto me ſecretly, I went to mine own lodging with him, and there receiving them accordingly, did read them over, both that your Lordſhips ſecond Letter ſent to me, and alſo the other ſent to Mr. Wyat, &c.

Edmund Bonner.

When the King, by the advice of the Lord Cromwell, and other of his Council had appointed Doctor Edmund Bonner to return from the Emperor, and to be reſident in France, in the place of Wincheſter and of Doctor Thirleby, he ſent his Letters to the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, and to maſter Thirleby, ſhewing his pleaſure unto them in that behalf, with this Clauſe in the ſame Letters contained in expreſs words as followeth.

And where the ſaid M. Bonner wanteth furniture of ſtuff and plate meet for that Office, Our pleaſure is that you M. Thirleby ſhall deliver unto him by Indenture, all the Plate you have of Ours in your cuſtody, and that you my Lord of Wincheſter ſhall furniſh him with all ſuch other ſtuff, as ſhall be neceſſary for him, Wherein as you ſhall do unto us Pleaſure, ſo we ſhall be content at your return, to ſatisfie you for the ſame, &c.

The Kings pleaſure was not regarded of the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter receiving theſe Letters from the King, and being loath to come into England (whatſoever the matter was) alſo hearing that Doctor Bonner ſhould ſucced him, his diſdainful nature did ſtomach him exceedingly. But becauſe there was no other remedy but that the Kings commandment muſt be done, firſt he ſendeth the Kings Letter, with his alſo to the Emperors Court, unto Maſter Bonner, and to Doctor Heyns, willing them in all haſt to repair to Lyons within two days. Beſide theſe Letters of Wincheſter, Dr. Thirleby adjoyned his Letters alſo with the like quickneſs to the ſaid Doctor Heyns and to Bonner, the Contents whereof here followeth.

The Letter of Doctor Thirleby to Doctor Heyns and Bonner.

D. Thirlby's quick Letter to D. Heyns and D. Bonner.

WIth my hearty commendations, and the deſire of your company, and now ſo much rather that I ſhall thereby have a great benefit, viz. the deliverance from trouble to eaſe, from a ſtrange Country to mine own, from the waiting upon him that forceth as little for me, as I am acquainted with him, to the ſervice of him whoſe proſperity and love I account as my life; theſe ſhall be to pray you to make no leſs ſpeed hither, than you would make to a good feaſt when that you are hungry. M. Bonner ſhall know many things, but when you come I ſhall tell you more, ſo that you haſt you. Come I pray you, I would fain be at home. I ſaw not my Maſter theſe four months. When as you Maſter Bonner ſhall come to Lyons, it ſhall be good to go to Bonuiſe, he is a good money maker; in faith I can write no more, but bid you come heartily, haſtily I would have written, and the ſooner the better welcome to Lyons, where this was given the laſt of July.

He meaneth her, the French King.

The King of England he meaneth.

By him that hath loved you well, and now will love you better,

if you haſt you hither.

Thomas Thirleby.

At the receit of theſe Letters, Doctor Bonner, and Doctor Heyns did put themſelves in a readineſs to repair incontinent unto Lyons, thinking there to have found Wincheſter and Thirleby, according to the purport of their Letters. But Wincheſter and Thirleby not abiding their coming, made haſt away from Lyons to la Barella; where Bonner, in riding in Poſt after him overtook him. With whom what entertainment and talk he had, and what accuſations he laid to his charge, and what brawling words paſſed between them, and what great miſliking Bonner had of him for ſpecial cauſes here in this brabling matter or brawling Dialogue under following may appear, which for thy recreation, and for the further underſtanding of Wincheſters qualities, I wiſh thee loving Reader to peruſe and conſider.

But firſt here is to be noted, that the King and the Lord Cromwell, at what time they had appointed Doctor Edmund Bonner to be Reſident Ambaſſador in France, required in their Letters, that he ſhould advertiſe them by writing, what he did miſlike in the doings and behaviour of certain perſons whom they did then noté unto him. Whereupon the ſaid Doctor Bonner ſendeth this declaration of Stephen Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter; as followeth.

Out of the Copy of Bonner, own Letters by his own hand writing which I have to ſhew.

A Declaration ſent by Doctor Bonner to the Lord Cromwell, deſcribing to him the evil behaviour of Stephen Wincheſter, with ſpecial cauſes therein contained, wherefore, and why miſliked of him.

Complaints of Doctor Bonner againſt Steph. Gardener.

FIrſt, I miſliked in the Biſhop of Wincheſter, that when any man is ſent in the Kings affairs, and by his Highneſs commandment, the Biſhop, unleſs he be the only and chief inventer of the matter and ſetter forth of the perſon, he will not only uſe many cavillations, but alſo uſe great ſtrangeneſs in countenance and cheer to the perſon that is ſent; over and beſides, as ſmall comfort and Counſel as may be in the matter, rather diſſwading and diſcouraging the perſon earneſtly to ſet forward his Meſſage, than boldning and comforting him, as is his duty, with help and Counſel to adventure and do his beſt therein. The experience whereof I have had my ſelf with him, as well at Roan, the firſt time I was ſent to Rome, commanded by the Kings Highneſs to come by him, and at Marcels, the time of the intimation of the Kings proteſtation, provocation and appeal, as alſo lately going to Nice, touching the general Counſel, and the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, and finally, now laſt of all, at my return from Spain, where neither my diligence in coming to him and uſing him in the beginning with all the reverence I could, neither the Kings Letter written unto him in favour, nor yet other thing could mollify his hard heart, and cankred malicious ſtomach, but that he would ſpitefully ſpeak, and unkindly do, as indeed he did, to his great ſhame and my diſhoneſty, as followeth.

What excellence D. Bon. hath of Wincheſters pride.

When riding in Poſt I came to la Barella, a Poſt on this ſide Lyons, the ſeventh day of Auguſt, he being in bed there, I tarried till he riſing up and making himſelf ready, came at laſt out to me, ſtanding and tarrying for him in a ſecond Chamber, and at his coming thither, he ſaid; What! Maſter Bonner, good morrow. Ah Sir, ye be welcome, and therewithal he put out his hand, and I kiſſing mine, took him by it, and incontinently after he ſaid; come on, let us go and walk a while into the Fields, and withal drew towards the door, preparing him to walk. To whom I ſaid, I would waite upon him. His going to the Fields (as appeared afterwards) was not ſo much to walk, as to have a place where he might ſpeak loud, and triumph alone againſt me calling in his words again, if he ſpake any amiſs, and utterly deny them if that made for his purpoſe. And by chance, or rather than by good wiſdom, afore I went forth, I asked for Maſter Thirleby, and deſired I might ſee him and ſpeak with him. The Biſhop that perceiving, and with all that I ſtuck upon it, he commanded one of his Servants to call Maſter Thirleby, but yet afore his coming the Biſhop would not be idle, but ſaid thus to me.

The cankred malicious ſtomach of Wincheſter.

The Dialogue between Bonner and Gardener begineth.

Maſter Bonner, your ſervant was yeſterday with me, and as I told him, I will tell you; In good faith you can have nothing of me. Nothing, my Lord, quoth I, merrily ſpeaking, Marry God forbid, that is a heavy word, and much uncomfortable to him that wanteth all things, and truſteth much upon your goodneſs that hath a great deal. In faith, quoth he, ye ſhall have nothing of me: Marry, ye ſhall have of Maſter Thirleby his Carriage, Mules, his Bed, and divers other things, that he may ſpare, and which he hath kept for you. Well My Lord, quoth I, if I ſhall have nothing of you, I muſt make as good ſhift as I can for my ſelf otherwiſe, and provide it where I may get it. And here the Biſhop, becauſe I would not give him thanks for that thing which was not worthy thanks, and that alſo I would not ſhew my ſelf greatly contented and pleaſed, though I received nothing at his hands, he began ſomewhat to kindle, and asked what I wanted. I told him again, that I wanted all things ſaving money and good will to ſerve the Kings Highneſs.

Wincheſter will do nothing for Dr. Bonner.

Doctor Bonner will give no thanks to Wincheſter for nothing.

Wincheſter begineth to kindle.

Tell me one thing, quoth he; that you want. One thing, quoth I? Marry amongſt many things that I want, I want Napery. That ſhall ye not need, quoth he, here in this Country: And here he began to tell a long tail, that none uſed that but Maſter Wallop and he in the beginning. Which is not true generally. And from that he began to go, deſcending by his Negatives; my Mulets, ſaid he, ye cannot have, for if ye ſhould, I muſt needs provide other for them again: my Mulet clothes ye cannot have, becauſe mine Arms are on them, not meet for you to bear: my Raiment (I being Biſhop) that is Negatives not meet for you: And ſo proceeding forth in the reſt, nothing had he for me, and nothing ſhould I have.

Wincheſters Negatives.

Doctor Thirleby preſent at this party.

And here came Maſter Thirleby, who welcomed me very gently, and after an honeſt ſort: To whom the Biſhop rehearſeth again his Negatives, and maketh a long diſcourſe, bringing in concluſion, for all that he could do, that nothing I ſhould have of him, and this rehearſed he ſtill on end, I am ſure above a dozen times, and that with a Pilates voice, ſo that all his Company, ſtanding more than than three or four pair of Butts length off, heard him.

The Pilates voyce of Winc.

When I ſaw that he would make no end, but ever rehearſed one thing ſtill, I ſaid to him, My Lord, I beſeech you, ſeeing I ſhall have nothing of you, but of Maſter Doctor here, let me give him thanks that deſerved it, and trouble you therein no more: But leaving communication therein, let me deſire and pray you, that we may commune of the Kings matters. And that I may have therein knowledge, as well of the ſtate thereof, as alſo of your Counſel in that behalf. The Biſhop was ſo hot and warm in his own matters, that he would not hear, but needs would return again, and ſhew why that I could have nothing of him. My Lord, quoth I, here is ſtill on End one Tail, which me thinketh, ſeeing that I underſtand it, ye need not ſo oft to repeat it, eſpecially ſeeing that it cometh always to this concluſion, that I ſhall have nothing of you. Ye lie, quoth he, I ſaid not ſo. I report me, quoth I, to Maſter Thirleby here preſent, whom I ſhall deſire to bear record of your ſad and diſcreet honeſt behaviour with me. I ſay you lie, quoth he: My Lord, quoth I, I thank you.

Stephen Gardener more reſpective to his own matters than to the Kings affairs.

Ye lie quoth Wincheſter.

I do not ſay, quoth he, that ye ſhall have nothing of me; but I ſay you can have nothing of me. And though the one here comprehendeth the other, yet there is a great diverſity between theſe two manners of ſpeaking: I can ſpare nothing unto you, and therefore ye ſhall have nothing; and though I can ſpare you, yet you ſhall have nothing; for in the one is an honeſty in the Speaker, which would, if he could do, pleaſure; and in the other there lacketh that honeſty.

Wincheſters old ſophiſtication.

My Lord, quoth I, to examine whether I ſhall have nothing, becauſe ye can ſpare nothing; or ſhall have nothing, though ye have plenty, becauſe ye will I ſhall have nothing, it ſhall not much help me in my journey. Wherefore ſeeing you bide upon this, I ſhall have nothing, I thank you for nothing, and provide otherwiſe for my ſelf. Turd in your teeth, quoth he, and provide as ye will. Biſhop-like ſpoken; by my Faith, quoth I, and well it becometh you to ſpeak thus to me. Yea marry doth it become me, quoth he, and repeating the words again, ſaid with a ſharp accent, Have nothing of me? Turd in your teeth. Well my Lord, quoth I, this needeth not, ſaving that ye have a full ſtomach, and your wit abroad, willing hereby to eaſe your ſtomach againſt me. Yes marry, quoth he, it needeth for me, though it needeth not for you, for I intend, quoth he, I would ye ſhould know it, to juſtifie my ſelf to the King in all things. If ye do ſo, quoth I, ye ſhall do the better. Nay, quoth he, I do it, and will do it. Well, quoth I, ye are the more to be commended, if ye ſo can do. Yes, quoth he, I can do it.

Biſhop-like ſpoken.

The melliſluous and honymouthed words of Wincheſter to Bonner.

Now, by my Troth, quoth I, ſeeing the Kings Highneſs hath written ſo tenderly for me unto you, as appeareth by his Highnſs Letters that his Grace hath done; me thinketh, ye having ſo great plenty of all things, and I ſo great need thereof, coming Poſt, as I do, ye go about as evil to juſtifie your ſelf to the King, as any one that I have ſeen. And I wiſs my Lord (quoth I) I would have reckoned, that coming as I do come, I ſhould have been both better welcome, and better intreated of you, than now I am, if it had been for no other reſpect, than becauſe I am an Engliſh man.

The ſtomach of Steph. Gardener againſt Bonner.

I ſhall tell you, quoth he, for the Kings ſake ye may look to have; but for your own ſake ye get nothing. Well, quoth I, then having nothing, I will give no thanks at all, and having any thing, I ſhall give thanks to the King.

KING Hen.8.

The like trembling and leaping of his Veins and Fleſh for anger did M. Bonner alſo note in this Gardiners diſputing with him in Germany. Vide Bucer.

King, and none to you. I tell you, quoth he, ye get nothing. And I tell you again, quoth I, that I will thank you for nothing: and here the Fleſh of his Cheek began to ſwell and tremble, and he looked upon me as he would have run through me, and I came and ſtood even by him, and ſaid, Trow you, my Lord, quoth he, that I fear your great looks? Nay faith do I not. Ye had need to get another ſtomach to whet upon, than mine, and a better Whetſtone than any ye have. For, I aſſure you, you ſhall not whet me to your purpoſe: and if ye knew how little I do ſet by this unloving and indiſcreet behaviour of yours, you would not uſe it upon me. And I ſhall tell you, quoth I, if I were not bridled, and had other reſpects both to the Kings Highneſs my Sovereign Lord, and alſo unto other that may command me, I would have told you ere this time my mind after another ſort. Tell me, quoth he, Turd in your Teeth. Well my Lord, quoth I, ye would, I perceive by you, and by your words, provoke me to ſpeak as undiſcreetly and bedlemly, as ye do. But ſurely ye ſhall not, howſoever ye ſhall ſpeak. But this will I tell you, I ſhall ſhew how I am handled of you. Marry ſpare not, quoth he. Well my Lord, quoth I, you have here full well plaid the part of a Biſhop, and it is great joy of you, that with this your furious anger and choler, ye can make all the company here about you to be aſhamed of you, as I am ſure they are. And for my part, if ye your ſelf be not aſhamed, or coming to your ſelf (for now your anger is ſuch that you hear not your ſelf) be not diſpleaſed, I ſhall be aſhamed, and pity this your doing without wiſdom, and the oftener ye uſe this manner, the more ſhall it be to your diſhoneſty.

de Cælibatu. Steph. Gardiner Bedlem like.

All the company aſhamed of Gardiners talk.

Lo, quoth he, how fondly he ſpeaketh, as who ſaith, I were all in the blame. Will ye not hear, quoth he, this wiſe Man? My Lord, quoth I, I would you could hear with indifferent Ears, and ſee with indifferent Eyes your ſelf. Ye have made a brabling here for nothing, and would that I ſhould give you thanks for that thing which Maſter Thirelby hath done for me, I look for no thanks of you, quoth he, and ſaid withal, looking ſpightfully, that he knew me well enough; and that he was not deceived in me. Well quoth I, and me think I know you well enough too, wherefore as ye ſay you are not deceived in me, ſo I truſt I will not be deceived by you. But I pray you, Sir, quoth I, becauſe ye ſay ye know me well enough, and that ye be not deceived in me, How do you know me? for honeſt and true, or otherwiſe? If you do, ſay it, and I ſhall make anſwer.

Brabling for nothing.

The ſpightful looks of Wincheſter.

I could not drive him to anſwer hereunto; ſo that I ſuppoſe, either of his own naughty Nature he hath made me an image after his own fantaſie, or elſe believed the report of ſuch in conditions, as he is himſelf, who in malice, I ſuppoſe, and diſdain may be compared to the Devil in Hell, not giving place to him in Pride at all. In communication he repeated oft the proviſion of the M. Crowns. I told him they went in my diets, and that it would be a good while afore they would come out: and further I ſaid, That ſeeing they had been ſimpliciter given to me, I would never thank him for them, but the Kings Highneſs: And I ſaid, That if they were twenty thouſand, he ſhould break ſo many ſleeps afore he ſhould have any part thereof, intreating me as he did. Well, quoth he, you have them. That is truth, quoth I, and nothing thankful to you.

Steph. Gardiner for Malice, and Diſdain, and Pride, compared by Bonner to the Devil of Hell.

Why then, quoth he, ſeeing you have here divers things of M. Thirlebies, and all other things are parabilia pecunia, which you have, you may make thereby good proviſion for your ſelf. That is truth, quoth I, and that can I and will do, though you tell me not, ſeeing I have nothing of you, and afore this had provided at Lyons for all things neceſſary, if ye without neceſſity had not made that great haſte to depart thence, inforcing me thereby to follow you. And yet, quoth I, one thing may I tell you; ye are very deſirous I ſhould be provided well for, as appeareth in that you have taken away at Lyons one Horſe that Frantis had provided for me, and alſo your ſervant Mace having an Horſe to ſell, and knowing my need, by your conſent hath ſold his Horſe to a ſtranger rather than he would ſell him to me. So that nothing ſuffering me to have of you, and taking away that proviſion which I make, and go about to make, you well declare how heartily you deſire I ſhould be provided for. In faith (quoth he) chuſe you, ye may provide if you will; and ſeeing your journey hither from Lyons is vain, you may thither return again, and make there proviſion for your ſelf. I thought, quoth he, departing from Lyons, to have made eaſie journies, and to have followed the Court till you had come, and now come you ſquirting in Poſt, and trouble all. I came forth in Poſt, quoth I, by the commandment of the King my Maſter, and had liberty to return at pleaſure by his Graces Letters, and ſeeing that I had no Horſes for the journy, me thought better to ride in Poſt than go on foot. Well, quoth he, I will not depart hence this twelve month, except ye be otherwiſe provided. Provided (quoth I) I muſt tarry till I may be provided of Horſes, if ye ſpeak of that proviſion: and ſeeing that this riding in Poſt grieveth you, it cauſeth me to think you are loth to depart, and angry that I ſhould ſucceed you. I have here already two Gowns and a Velvet Jacket, ſo that you ſhall not be letted an hour by me.

Wincheſter angry that Bonner ſhould ſucceed him.

The churliſh dealing of Wincheſter.

I tell you, quoth he, ye ſhall otherwiſe provide, or elſe I will not depart. For I tell you, quoth he, though you care not for the Kings Honour, but wretchedly do live with ten Shillings a day, as ye did in yonder parts, you and your companion, I muſt and will conſider the Kings Honour. And I tell you again, quoth I, I will and do conſider the Kings Honour as much as ye at any time will do, and as ſorry will be that it ſhould be touched by any negligence or default in me: yea, and I ſay more to you (quoth I) though ye may ſpend far above me, I ſhall not ſtick if any thing be to be ſpent for the Kings Honour, to ſpend as liberally as you, ſo long as either I have it, or can get it to ſpend. And whoſoever informed you of the wretchedneſs and ſpending ſcarcely of my companion and me in the parts where we have been, made a falſe lye, and ye ſhew your wiſdom full well in ſo lightly believing and rehearſing ſuch a tale.

I cannot tell, quoth he, but this was openly rehearſed by Maſter Brians ſervants at my Table. Yea, was? (quoth I) Yea marry was it, quoth he. Now, by my Troth, quoth I, then was the fare that was beſtowed upon them very well caſt away: for of my Fidelity, that Week that Maſter Brian and his ſervants were with us at Villa Franca, it coſt my companion and me five and twenty Pounds in the Charges of the Houſe. This they ſay, quoth he. Yea, quoth I, and therein they lye. And here I ſhewed him, that being well ſettled at Nice, and having made there good and honeſt proviſion, to our no little charges, Maſter Wyat would not reſt till he had gotten us to Villa Franca, where even upon the firſt words of Maſter Hayns, he was right well content to take of us twenty Shillings by the day. Which was not during ten days; where at his coming to us to Nice, himſelf and all his ſervants, and then tarrying with us two days, we took not one peny of him. And moreover, at the departing of Maſter Wyat from Villa Franca, in Poſt into England, we found our ſelves, our Servants, all Maſter Wyat's Servants, to the number of ſixteen, all his acquaintance, which Dinner and Supper continually came to us, ſometime twelve, ſometimes ten, and when they were leaſt, ſix or eight, and for this had not one peny of Maſter Wyat, and yet at our coming from Barcelone, where we tarried about eight days, we gave to Maſter Wyat twenty eight Pounds, and to his Servants five Pounds, beſides forty Shillings that privately I gave to ſome being of gentle faſhion, out of mine own Purſe: ſo that I told him, it was neither Maſter Wyat, nor Maſon, that found us and our Servants, but we prayed for the finding of them, and here it chanced to us to have all the charge, and other Men to have all the thanks.

Wincheſter reproved to his face of falſe flattery.

The Biſhop when he heard this was amazed, and ſtood ſtill, finally ſaying, By my Troth, quoth he, I tell you as it was told me, and Maſter Doctor here can tell whether it was ſo or no. Yea, and I will tell you more, quoth he, They ſaid that Maſter Hayns, would have been more liberal a great deal, if you had not been. Now by my Troth, quoth I, I ſhall therein make Maſter Heyns, himſelf Judge thereof, who can beſt tell what communication hath been between him and me therein.

Thirlelby

The Biſhops of Winchesters vvild head.

Thinking that this communication had driven the other matters out of the Biſhops wild Head, I held my peace; and by and by was he in hand again with them as hot as ever he was. My Lord (quoth I) I deſired ere while your Lordſhip to make an end of this Communication, wherein the longer ye talk, the more ye make me believe that you would (where ye have ſpoken undiſcreetly, yea, and unkindly, not regarding the Kings Letters) with multitude of words, and great countenance I ſhould think ye had not done amiſs. But ſurely you loſe your labour, for ye ſhall never make me think that ye are deſirous to do me pleaſure, neither for mine own ſake, nor for the Kings. For if your words be well weighed, I have as much of you indeed for mine own ſake, as I have for the Kings ſake, that is nothing at all.

Winchester regarded not the Kings Letters.

Here both of us were talking together; but I held on ſtill, and ever inforced him to this: My Lord, quoth I, this is the thing that I ſhall only deſire of you: That where the Kings Grace hath here in the French-Court divers affairs (as I take it) ye would therein inſtruct me in the ſtate thereof, and give me your beſt counſel and advice: and this I proteſt unto you, that if ye this will do, I will attentively hear you: and if ye will not, I ſhall with pain hear you in your other things, but I will make no anſwer at all.

Bonner out-ſcolded by Winchester, and driven to ſilence.

For all this the Biſhop ended not: but in concluſion, when he ſaw by no means that he could induce me to anſwer, he returned homewards, and I brought him unto his Lodging and Chamber.

Doctor Bonner taketh his leave of Winchester.

It being Dinner-time, and all things provided, and ſtanding afore him, and he turning his back from me into a Window: I at his turning towards me again, put off my Bonnet, and ſaid, God be with you my Lord. He gave no anſwer to me at all, nor countenance, but ſuffered me to go. Whereupon returning to my Lodging, which was in Maſter Thirlebies Chamber, I cauſed my Dinner to be provided, and when it was almoſt ready, the Biſhops Steward, called Myrrel, came for me (whether ſent from the Biſhop or not, I cannot tell) and I told him my Dinner was provided for, and withal, that my Lord his Maſter had given me ſuch a Breakfaſt, that I need no Dinner nor Supper, and ſo the Steward, drinking with me, returned again, and I went to Dinner at Maſter Thirlebies Lodging, and after Dinner I went to the Biſhops Lodging, who at my coming, very gently put off his Bonnet, and ſo we walked together quietly a while, and ſhortly after, the Biſhop began after this manner: Maſter Bonner, to day we communed of proviſion for you, and becauſe ye ſhall lay no blame upon me, I will tell you what I will do for you, I will provide and make ready for you, Mules, Mulets, Horſes, Servants, Money, yea, and all things that ſhall be neceſſary.

Winchesters good vvill come upon him at laſt.

My Lord, quoth I, here is a large offer, and a great kindneſs come upon you; I marvel, quoth I, that I could hear nothing of this to day in the Morning. I tell you, quoth he, this will I do, for know you, that I will conſider the Kings honour and pleaſure, and doubt not but the King will pay me again. My Lord, quoth I, I have ſent my Servant already to Lions, to make proviſion for me, and I have ſent other abroad here in the Town and Country, to do the ſame: ye ſhall never need to trouble your ſelf herewith. I will, quoth he, you ſhall not ſay another day, that ye could not be provided for. My Lord, quoth I, let me have inſtructions in the Kings matters, and as for other things I ſhall not ask of you, becauſe this day ye made me ſo plain anſwer. After much communication I departed from him lovingly, telling him that I would be at Terrara that night where he intended to be lodged. And ſo the Biſhop bidding me farewel, took ſoon after his Horſe, riding to Terrara to Bed.

Winchesters offer to Bonner refuſed.

Winchester and Bonner depart.

Another meeting of Winchester and Bonner.

And by the way I overtook him, and paſſing by, doing my duty to him and his company, I came to Terrara, lodging at the Poſt-Houſe, and even as the Biſhop came into the Town, ſtood at the Poſt-Houſe-door: To whom the Biſhop ſaid, We ſhall ſee you ſoon, Maſter Bonner. Yea, my Lord, quoth I, thinking that thereby he had deſired me to Supper, and at Supper-time I went to his Lodging, having other to eat my Supper at home, and glad he appeared to be that I was come, making merry communication all Supper-while, but nothing at all yet ſpeaking to me, or giving any thing to me, ſaving at the coming of the Fruit, he gave me a Pear, I trow, becauſe I ſhould remember mine own Country. After Supper he walked, taking Maſter Thirleby with him, and I with an Italian, being Embaſſador for the Count Mirandula, and after a good ſpace he returned, and bade the Biſhop good night.

Bonner ſeemeth by this Pear to be a Wincheſterſhire Man.

I did not after that night Dine or Sup with the Biſhop, till he came to Burges in Berry, whereupon the diſpeach of Frances, and cloſing up of our Letters ſent to the Kings Highneſs, the Supper was ſo provided, and ſet upon the Board, and the Biſhop in waſhing, ſtanding ſo between me and the Door that I could not get out; and there would he needs that I ſhould waſh with him and Sup, and I ſuppoſe all the way from Barella to Bloys, he talked not above four times with me, and at every time ſaving at Molyns (where he by mouth told me ſomewhat of the Kings affairs here in France) and at Veronne (when he anſwering to my requeſts in writing, delivered me his Book of his own hand for mine inſtructions, the Copy whereof is now ſent herewithal) there was quick communication between us. His talking by the way was with Maſter Thirleby, who I think knoweth a great deal of his doing, and will, if he be the Man I take him for, tell it plainly to your Lordſhip. I my ſelf was out of credence with the Biſhop, not being appliable to his manners and deſires.

The ſtrangeneſs betvveen Winchester and Bonner. Winchesters Book of inſtructions delivered to Bonner. Thirleby and Winchester great togeather. Why Bonner vvas out of credit vvith Winchester. Winchesters Fleſh trembled at the firſt coming of Doctor Thirleby to ſucceed him

And ſurely, as Maſter Thirleby told me, at his firſt coming to Lyons, and then ſpeaking with the Biſhop, the Biſhop ſeemed to be ſo well content to return, and ſo glad of his coming to ſucceed him, that his fleſh in his Face began all to tremble, and yet would the Biſhop make Men believe that he would gladly come home. Which thing, believe it who will, I will never believe; for ever he was looking for Letters out of England, from M. Wallop and Maſter Brian, whom he took for his great Friends: and Maſter Wyat himſelf reckoned, that the Biſhop ſhould have come into Spain, or elſe my Lord of Dureſme; ſo that the Biſhop of Wincheſter ever coveted to protract the time, deſiring yet withal to have ſome ſhadow to excuſe and hide himſelf; as tarrying at Barella, he made excuſe by my not coming to Lyons; and coming to Varennes, and there hearing by the Embaſſadors of the Venetians a flying tale of the going of the French-King towards Bayon to meet the Emperor, by and by he ſaid, Lo, where is Maſter Diligence now? If he were now here (as then I was that night) we would to the Court and Preſent him, and take our leave. But when I in the morning was up afore him, and ready to Horſe, he was nothing haſty. No, coming to Molyns after him, and there tarrying for him, the French-King lying at Schavenna, three ſmall Leagues off; he made not half the ſpeed and haſte that he pretended.

Winchester loth to return into England.

Bonner called M. Diligence.

I miſlike in the Biſhop of Wincheſter, that he cannot be content that any joyned in Commiſſion with him ſhould keep Houſe, but to be at his Table. Wherein either he ſearcheth thereby a vain-glory and pride to himſelf, with ſome diſhonour to the King, as who ſaith, there were among all the Kings Embaſſadors but one able to maintain a Table, and that were he, or elſe he doth the ſame for an evil intent and purpoſe, to bring them thereby into his danger, that they ſhall ſay and do as liketh him alone, which I ſuppoſe verily hath been his intent.

The ſecond complaint.

Winchester vvould be alone.

I miſlike in the ſaid Biſhop, that where he for his own pomp and glory hath a great number of Servants in their Velvets and Silks, with their Chains about their Necks, and keepeth a coſtly Table with exceſſive Fare, and exceeding Expences many other ways; he doth ſay, and is not aſhamed to report, that he is ſo commanded to do by the Kings Grace, and that is his anſwer commonly, when his Friends tell him of his great Charges; and ſo, under colour of the Kings Commandment and Honour, he hideth his Pride, which is here diſdained.

The third complaint, the pomp and glory of Wincheſter.

I miſlike in the ſaid Biſhop, That he having private hatred againſt a Man, will rather ſatisfie his own ſtomach and affection, hindering, and neglecting the Kings Affairs, than relenting in any part of his ſturdy and ſtubborn will, give familiar and hearty counſel (whereby the Kings Highneſs matters and buſineſs may be advanced and ſet forth) to him that he taketh for his Adverſary.

The fourth complaint, Wincheſter given more to his own affections than to the Kings Affairs.

I miſ

KING H. 8. The fifth complaint of Wincheſter ſuſpected to be Imperial.

I miſlike in the ſaid Biſhop, That he ever continually here in this Court of France, made incomparably more of the Emperors, King of Portugals, Venetians, and Duke of Ferraries Embaſſadors, than of any French-men in the Court, which with his Pride cauſed them to diſdain him, and to think that he favoured not the French-King, but was Imperial.

The ſixth complaint Bonner like a true Goſpeller compla neth of Papiſts.

I miſlike in the Biſhop, That there is ſo great familiarity and acquaintance, yea, and ſuch mutual confidence between the ſaid Biſhop and M. as naughty a fellow, and as very a Papiſt as any that I know, where he dare expreſs it. The Biſhop in his Letters to Maſter Wyat, ever ſendeth ſpecial Commendations to Maſon, and yet refuſeth to ſend any to Maſter Heyns and me, being with Maſter Wyat, as we perceived by the ſaid Letters. And Maſon maketh ſuch foundation of the Biſhop, that he thinketh there is none ſuch. And he told me at Villa Franca, That the Biſhop upon a time, when he had fallen out with Germain, ſo truſted him, that weeping and ſobbing he came unto him, deſiring and praying him that he would ſpeak with Germain, and reconcile him, ſo that no words were ſpoken of it, and what the matter was he would not tell me. That young fellow Germain knoweth all: and Preſton, which is Servant to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſhewed me one Night in my Chamber at Bloys after Supper, that Germain is ever buſie in ſhewing the Kings Letters to ſtrangers, and that he himſelf hath given him warning thereof. This thing Preſton told me the Night before that the Biſhop departed hence, and when I would have had more of him therein, he conſidering how the Biſhop and I ſtood, kept him more cloſe, and would ſay no further.

Wincheſter ſuſpected of untrue dealing.

Things in the foreſaid Declaration to be noted. The rancor and pride of Stephen Gardiner.

In this Declaration of Doctor Edmund Bonner, above-prefixed, ſent to the Lord Cromwel, diver things we have to note: Firſt, as touching Stephen Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, here we have plain demonſtration of his vile Nature and peſtilent Pride, joyned with malice and diſdain intolerable: whereof worthily complaineth Doctor Bonner aforeſaid, ſhewing ſix ſpecial cauſes, why and wherefore he miſliketh that perſon, according as he was willed before by the Kings Commandment ſo to do.

2. Stephen Gardiner revolteth to Papiſtry.

Secondly, In the ſaid Stephen Wincheſter, this we have alſo to note and underſtand, That as he here declareth a ſecret inclination from the truth (which he defended before in his Book De Obedientia) to Papiſtry, joyning part and ſide with ſuch as were known Papiſts; ſo he ſeemeth likewiſe to bear a like ſecret grudge againſt the Lord Cromwel, and all ſuch whomſoever he favoured.

Thirdly, As concerning the fore-named Doctor Edmund Bonner the Author of this Declaration, here is to be ſeen and noted, That he all this while appeared a good Man and diligent friend to the Truth; and that he was favoured of the Lord Cromwel for the ſame.

4. Dr. Bonners coming up only by the Goſpel.

Fourthly, That the ſaid Doctor Bonner was not only favoured of the Lord Cromwel, but alſo by him was advanced firſt to the Office of Legation, then to the Biſhoprick of Hereford, and laſtly, to the Biſhoprick of London, whom the ſaid Doctor Bonner in his Letters agniſeth and confeſſeth to be his only Patron, and ſingular Mecænas.

5.

Which being ſo, we have in this ſaid Doctor Bonner greatly to marvel, what ſhould be the cauſe, that he, ſeeing all his ſetting up, making and preferring came only by the Goſpel, and by them of the Goſpels-ſide, he being then ſo hated of Stephen Gardiner, and ſuch as he was, being alſo at that time ſuch a furtherer and defender of the Goſpel (as appeared both by his Preface before Gardiner's Book De Obedientia, and by his Writings to the Lord Cromwel, alſo by helping forward the Printed Bibles at Paris) could ever be a Man ſo ungrateful and unkind afterward, to joyn part with the ſaid Stephen Gardiner againſt the Goſpel (without the which Goſpel he had never come to be Biſhop neither of Hereford, nor yet of London) and now to abuſe the ſame Biſhoprick of London, to perſecute that ſo vehemently which before ſo openly he defended? Wherein the ſame may well be ſaid to him in this caſe, that he himſelf was reported once to ſay to the French-King in the cauſe of Grancetor: to wit, That he had done therein againſt his Honour, againſt Juſtice, againſt Reaſon, againſt Honeſty, againſt Friendſhip, againſt his own Promiſe and his Oath ſo often made, againſt his own Doctrine and Judgment, which then he profeſſed, againſt all Truth, againſt the Treaties and Leagues between him and his ſetters up, and againſt all together, and to conclude, againſt the Salvation of his own Soul.

Bonner's own words Retorted againſt him.

But to refer this to the Book of his Accompts, who ſhall judge one day all things uprightly, let us proceed further in the continuation of this Doctor Bonner's Legation. Who being now Embaſſador in the Court of France (as ye have heard) had given him in Commiſſion from the King to entreat with the French-King for ſundry points, as for the Printing of the New Teſtament in Engliſh, and the Bible at Paris; alſo for ſlanderous preachers, and malicious ſpeakers againſt the King; for Goods of Merchants taken and ſpoiled, for the Kings Penſion to be paid; for the matters of the Duke of Suffolk; for certain Priſoners in France; Item, For Grancetor the Traitor, and certain other Rebels to be ſent into England, &c. Touching all which Affairs, the ſaid Doctor Bonner did employ his diligence and travel to the good ſatisfaction and contentment of the Kings mind, and diſcharge of his duty, in ſuch ſort as no default could be found in him, ſave only that the French King one time took diſpleaſure with him, for that the ſaid Bonner, being now made Biſhop of Hereford, and bearing himſelf ſomewhat more ſeriouſly and boldly before the King; in the Cauſe of Grancetor the Traitor (wherein he was willed, by the advertiſement of the Kings pleaſure, to wade more deeply and inſtantly) uſed theſe words to the French-King (as the French-King himſelf did afterward report them) ſaying, That he had done in deliverance of that foreſaid Grancetor being an Engliſh-Man, againſt God, againſt his Honour, againſt Juſtice, againſt Reaſon, againſt Honeſty, againſt Friendſhip, againſt all Law, againſt the Treaties and Leagues between him and his Brother, the King of England, yea, and againſt all together, &c. Theſe words of Biſhop Bonner, although he denieth to have ſpoken them in that form and quality, yet howſoever they were ſpoken, did ſtir up the ſtomach of the French-King to conceive high diſpleaſure againſt him, inſomuch that he, anſwering the Lord Embaſſador again, bade him write theſe three things unto his Maſter.

Printing the New Teſtament in Engliſh and the Bible at Paris.

The diligence and truſt of Dr. Bonner in Legation.

The words of D. Bonner uſed to the French-King.

The French-King diſpleaſed with Biſhop Bonner.

Biſhop Bonner bidden to write to the King his Maſter three things.

Firſt, Among other things, That his Embaſſador was a great fool.

Secondarily, That he cauſed to be done better Juſtice there in his Realm in one hour, than they did in England in a whole year.

Thirdly, That if it were not for the love of his Maſter, he ſhould have an hundred ſtrokes with a Halbard, &c.

And furthermore, The ſaid French-King beſide this, ſending a ſpecial Meſſenger with his Letters to the King of England, willed him to revoke and call this Embaſſador home, and to ſend him another. The cauſe why the French-king took theſe words of Biſhop Bonner ſo to ſtomach (as the Lord Chancellor ſaid) was this: For that the Kings of France, ſtanding chiefly, and in manner only upon their honour, can ſuffer that in no caſe to be touched. Otherwiſe, in thoſe words (if they had been well taken) was not ſo much blame, perchance, as boldneſs, being ſpoken ſomewhat vehemently in his Maſters behalf. But this one thing ſeemeth to me much blameworthy, both in this Biſhop, and many other, that they in Earthly matters, and to pleaſe terrene Kings, will put forth themſelves to ſuch a boldneſs and forwardneſs, and in Chriſts cauſe, the King of all kings, whoſe cauſe they ſhould only attend upon and tender, they are ſo remiſs, cold, and cowardly.

Biſhops common bolder in Princes matters than in the cauſe of Chriſts.

To theſe Letters of the French-King, the King of England ſent anſwer again by other Letters, in which he revoked and called home again Biſhop Bonner, giving unto him about the ſame time the Biſhoprick of London, and ſent in ſupply of his place Sir John Wallop, a great Friend to Stephen Gardiner. Which was in February, about the beginning of the year of our Lord 1540. Here now followeth the Oath of Bonner to the King, when he was made Biſhop of London.

¶ The Oath of Doctor Edmund Bonner, when he was made Biſhop of London, againſt the Pope of Rome.

Dr. Bonner's Oath againſt the Pope.

YE ſhall never conſent nor agree that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall practiſe, exerciſe, or have any manner of Authority, Juriſdiction, or Power within this Realm, or any other the Kings Dominion, but that you ſhall reſiſt the ſame at all times, to the uttermoſt of your power: and that from henceforth ye ſhall accept, repute, and take the Kings Majeſty to be the only Supreme Head in Earth of the Church of England, and that to your cunning, wit, and uttermoſt of your power, without guile, fraud, or other undue mean, ye ſhall obſerve, keep, maintain, and defend the whole effects and contents of all and ſingular Acts and Statutes made and to be made within this Realm, in derogation, extirpation, and extinguiſhment of the Biſhop of Rome, and his Authority, and other Acts and Statutes made and to be made in Reformation and Corroboration of the Kings Power of Supreme Head in the Earth of the Church of England; and this ye ſhall do againſt all manner of Perſons, of what Eſtate, Dignity, Degree, or Condition they be, and in no wiſe do nor attempt, nor to your power ſuffer to be done or attempted, directly or indirectly: any thing or things, privily or apertly, to the let, hinderance, dammage, or derogation thereof or of any part thereof; by any manner of means, or for any manner of pretence: and in caſe any Oath be made, or hath been made by you to any perſon or perſons in maintainance or favour of the Biſhop of Rome, or his Authority, Juriſdiction, or Power, ye repute the ſame as vain and adnihilate: So help you God, &c.

In fidem præmiſſorum ego Edmundus Bonner, electus & confirmatus Londonienſis Epiſcopus, huic præſenti Chartæ ſubſcripſi.

Eccleſiaſtical matters, Anno 1538.

{Anno 1538} It will be judged, that I have lingred peradventure too much in theſe outward Affairs of Princes and Embaſſadors. Wherefore leaving theſe by-matters pertaining to the Civil State a while, I mind (the Lord willing) to put my Story in order again, of ſuch occurrents as belong unto the Church, firſt ſhewing ſuch Injunctions and Articles as were deviſed and ſet forth by the King, for the behoof of his Subjects. Wherein firſt is to be underſtood, that the King, when he had taken the Title of Supremacy from the Biſhop of Rome, and had tranſlated the ſame to himſelf, and was now a full Prince in his own Realm, although he well perceived by the wiſdom and advice of the Lord Cromwel and other of his Council, that the corrupt ſtate of the Church had need of Reformation in many things; yet becauſe he ſaw how ſtubborn and untoward the hearts of many Papiſts were to be brought from their old perſuaſions and cuſtoms, and what buſineſs he had with them, only about the matter of the Popes Title, he durſt not by and by reform all at once (which notwithſtanding had been to be wiſhed) but leading them fare and ſoftly, as he might, proceeded by little and little, to bring greater purpoſes to perfection (which he no doubt would have done, if the Lord Cromwel had lived) and therefore firſt he began with a little Book of Articles (partly above-touched) bearing this Title: Articles deviſed by the Kings Highneſs to ſtabliſh Chriſtian quietneſs and unity among the People, &c.

The King and his Council bearing with the weakneſs of the People.

The Book of Articles deviſed by the King for quietneſs of the People, &c.

Articles deviſed by the King.

IN the Contents of which Book, firſt he ſet forth the Articles of our Chriſtian-Creed, which are neceſſarily and expreſly to be believed of all Men. Then with the Kings Preface going before, followeth the Declaration of three Sacraments; to wit, of Baptiſm, of Penance, and of the Sacrament of the Altar. In the tractation whereof, he altereth nothing from the old trade received heretofore from the Church of Rome.

Of three Sacraments.

{KING Hen.}

Further then, proceeding to the order and cauſe of our Juſtification, he declareth, That the only Mercy and Grace of the Father promiſed freely unto us for his Sons ſake Jeſus Chriſt, and the Merits of his Paſſion and Blood, be the only ſufficient and worthy cauſes of our Juſtification: yet good Works with inward Contrition, Hope, and Charity, and all other Spiritual Graces and Motions, be neceſſarily required, and muſt needs concur alſo in Remiſſion of our Sins; that is, our Juſtification; and afterward we being Juſtified, muſt alſo have good Works of Charity, and Obedience towards God, in the obſerving and fulfilling outwardly of his Laws and Commandments, &c.

Of Juſtification.

As touching Images, he willeth all Biſhops and Preachers to teach the People in ſuch ſort as they may know how they may uſe them ſafely in Churches, and not abuſe them to Idolatry, as thus: That they be repreſenters of Vertue and good Example, and alſo by occaſion may be ſtirrers of Mens minds and make them to remember themſelves, and to lament their ſins, and ſo far he permitteth them to ſtand in Churches. But otherwiſe, for avoiding of Idolatry, he chargeth all Biſhops and Preachers diligently to inſtruct the People, that they commit no Idolatry unto them, in cenſing of them, in kneeling and offering to them, with other like worſhippings, which ought not to be done, but only to God.

Of Images.

And likewiſe for honouring of Saints, the Biſhops and Preachers be commanded to inform the People how Saints hence departed ought to be reverenced and honoured, and how not. That is, that they are to be praiſed and honoured as the Elect Servants of Chriſt, or rather Chriſt to be praiſed in them for their excellent Vertues planted in them, and for their good Example left us, teaching us to live in Vertue and in Goodneſs, and not to fear to die for Chriſt, as they did. And alſo as advancers of our Prayers in that they may, but yet no confidence, nor any ſuch honour to be given unto them, which is only due to God: And ſo forth charging the ſaid Spiritual Perſons to teach their flock that all Grace and Remiſſion of Sins and Salvation, can no otherwiſe be obtained but of God only, by the Mediation of our Saviour Chriſt, who is only a ſufficient Mediator for our ſins; that all Grace and Remiſſion of ſin, muſt proceed only by the Mediation of Chriſt and no other.

Of honouring of Saints.

No Mediation but by Chriſt.

From that he cometh further to ſpeak of Rites and Ceremonies in Chriſts Church, as in having Veſtiments uſed in Gods Service, ſprinkling of Holy Water, giving of Holy Bread, bearing of Candles on Candlemas-day, taking of Aſhes, bearing of Palms, creeping to the Croſs, ſetting up the Sepulchre, hallowing of the Font, with other like Cuſtoms, Rites, and Ceremonies; all which old Rites and Cuſtoms the foreſaid Book doth not by and by repeal, but ſo far admitteth them for good and laudable, as they put Men in remembrance of Spiritual things: but ſo, that the People withal muſt be inſtructed, how the ſaid Ceremonies contain in them no ſuch power [illegible] ſin, but only that to be referred unto God, by w[illegible] y our ſins be forgiven us.

Of Rites and Ceremonies.

And ſo concluding with Purgatory, he maketh an end of thoſe Articles, thus ſaying thereof: That becauſe the Book of Macchabees alloweth praying for Souls departed, he therefore diſproveth not that ſo laudable a Cuſtom, ſo long continued in the Church. But becauſe there is no certain place named, nor kind of pains expreſſed in Scripture, he therefore thinketh neceſſary ſuch abuſes clearly to be put away, which under the name of Purgatory have been advanced: as to make Men believe, that by the Biſhop of Romes Pardons, or by Maſſes ſaid at Scala Cœli, or otherwiſe, in any place, or before any Image, Souls might clearly be delivered out of Purgatory, and from the pains thereof, to be ſent ſtaight to Heaven, and ſuch other like abuſes, &c.

Of Purgatory.

And theſe were the Contents of that Book of Articles deviſed, and paſſed by the Kings Authority, a little before the ſtir of Lincolnſhire and Yorkſhire. Wherein although there were many and great imperfections and untruths not to be permitted in any true reformed Church: yet notwithſtanding, the King and his Council, to bear with the weaklings which were newly weaned from their Mothers Milk of Rome, thought it might ſerve ſome-

Milk for new weanlings.

what for the time, in ſtead of a little beginning till better come.

Injunctions for abrogating certain Holy-days.

And ſo conſequently, not long after theſe Articles thus ſet forward, certain other Injunctions were alſo given out about the ſame year 1536, whereby a number of Holy-days were abrogated; and eſpecially ſuch as fell in the Harveſt-time: The keeping of which redounded greatly to the hinderance of gathering in their Corn, Hay, Fruit, and other ſuch like neceſſary commodities. The Copy and Tenor of which Injunctions I have alſo hereunto annexed, as under followeth:

The Kings Injunctions.

Injunctions by the King

FOraſmuch as the number of Holy-days is ſo exceſſively grown, and yet daily more and more by Mens Devotion, yea, rather Superſtition, was like further to increaſe, that the ſame was and ſhould be not only prejudicial to the Commonweal, by reaſon that it is occaſion as well of much ſloth and idleneſs, the very nurſe of Thieves, Vagabonds, and of divers other unthriftineſs and inconveniences, as of decay of good Myſteries and Arts, profitable and neceſſary for the Commonweal, and loſs of Mans food, many times being clean deſtroyed through the Superſtitious obſervance of the ſaid Holy-days, in not taking the opportunity of good and ſerene weather offered upon the ſame in time of Harveſt, but alſo pernitious to the Souls of many Men, which (being inticed by the licentious vacation and liberty of thoſe Holy-days) do upon the ſame commonly uſe and practiſe more exceſs, riot, and ſuperfluity, than upon any other days. And ſith the Sabbath-day was uſed and ordained but for Mans uſe, and therefore ought to give place to the neceſſity and behoof of the ſame, whenſoever that ſhall occur, much rather than any other Holy-day Inſtituted by Man: It is therefore by the Kings Highneſs Authority, as Supreme Head in Earth of the Church of England, with the common aſſent and conſent of the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm, in Convocation lawfully Aſſembled and Congregated, amongſt other things, Decreed, Ordained, and Eſtabliſhed:

Feaſts of Dedication to be kept all upon one day.

Firſt, That the Feaſt of Dedication of Churches ſhall in all places throughout this Realm, be Celebrated and kept on the firſt Sunday of the Month of October for ever, and upon none other day.

Church Holy-days forbidden.

Item, That the Feaſt of the Patron of every Church within this Realm, called commonly the Church Holy-day, ſhall not from henceforth be kept and obſerved as a Holy-day, as heretofore have been uſed; but that it ſhall be Lawful to all and ſingular Perſons reſident or dwelling within this Realm, to go to their work, occupation or myſtery, and the ſame truly to exerciſe and occupy upon the ſaid Feaſt, as upon any other work-day, except the ſaid Feaſt of Church-holy-day be ſuch as muſt be elſe univerſally obſerved and kept as a Holy-day by this Ordinance following.

Holy-days in the Harveſt-time put down.

Alſo that all thoſe Feaſts or Holy-days which ſhall happen to fall or occur either in the Harveſt-time, which is to be accounted from the firſt day of July, unto the twenty ninth day of September, or elſe in the Term-time at Weſtminſter, ſhall not be kept or obſerved from henceforth as Holy-days, but that it may be lawful for every Man to go to his work or occupation upon the ſame, as upon any other work-day, except always the Feaſts of the Apoſtles, or of the bleſſed Virgin, and of St. George, and alſo ſuch Feaſts as wherein the Kings Highneſs Judges at Weſtminſter do not uſe to ſit in Judgment. All which ſhall be kept Holy and Solemn of every Man, as in time paſt have been accuſtomed. Provided always, that it may be Lawful unto all Prieſts and Clerks, as well Secular as Regular, in the foreſaid Holy-days now abrogate to ſing or ſay their accuſtomed Service for thoſe Holy-days, in their Churches; ſo as they do not the ſame Solemnly, nor do ring to the ſame, after the manner uſed in high Holy-days, ne do command or indict the ſame to be kept or obſerved as Holy-days.

Four Offering-days.

Finally, That the Feaſts of the Nativity of our Lord, of Eaſter-day, of the Nativity of St. John the Baptiſt, and of St. Michael the Archangel, ſhall be from henceforth counted, accepted, and taken for the four general Offering-days.

And for further Declaration of the Premiſſes, be it known that Eaſter beginneth always the eighteenth day after Eaſter, reckoning Eaſter-day for one, and endeth the Monday next following the Aſcenſion-day. Eaſter Term.

Trinity Term beginneth always the Wedneſday next after the Octaves of Trinity Sunday, and endeth the eleventh or twelfth day of July. Trinity Term.

Michaelmas Term beginneth the ninth or tenth day of October, and endeth the 28th or 29th day of November. Michaelmas Term.

Hillary Term beginneth the twenty third or twenty fourth day of January, and endeth the twelfth or thirteenth day of February. Hillary Term.

In Eaſter Term, upon the Aſcenſion-day; in Trinity Term, upon the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt; in Michaelmas Term, upon Allhallow-day; in Hillary Term, upon Candlemas-day, the Kings Judges at Weſtminſter do not uſe to ſit in Judgment, nor upon any Sunday.

After theſe Articles and Injunctions thus given out by the King and his Council, then followed moreover as time ſerved, other Injunctions moe, concerning Images, Relicts, and blind Miracles, and for abrogating of Pilgrimages, deviſed by Superſtition, and maintained for lucres ſake, alſo for the Pater-Noſter, Creed, and Gods Commandments, and the Bible to be had in Engliſh, with divers other points moe, neceſſary for Religion: The words of which Injunctions here alſo enſue:

Other Injunctions given by the Authority of the Kings Highneſs, to the Clergy of this his Realm.

Other Injunctions.

IN the Name of God, Amen. In the year of our Lord God 1536, and of the moſt Noble Reign of our Soveraign Lord Henry the Eighth, King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in the Earth Supreme Head of the Church of England, the twenty eighth, &c. I Thomas Cromwel, Knight, Lord Cromwel, Keeper of the Privy Seal of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and Vicegerent to the ſame, for and concerning all his Juriſdiction Eccleſiaſtical within this Realm, to the glory of Almighty God, to the Kings Highneſs Honour, the publick Weal of this Realm, and increaſe of Vertue in the ſame, have appointed and aſſigned theſe Injunctions enſuing to be kept and obſerved of the Dean, Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and Stipendaries, reſident or having cure of Souls, or any other Spiritual Adminiſtration within this Deanry, under the pains hereafter limited and appointed.

THE firſt is, That the Dean, Parſons, Vicars, and other having cure of Soul any where within this Deanry, ſhall faithfully keep and obſerve, and as far as in them may lie, ſhall cauſe to be kept and obſerved of all other, all and ſingular Laws and Statutes of this Realm, made for the aboliſhing and extirpation of the Biſhop of Romes pretenſed and uſurped Power and Juriſdiction within this Realm, and for the Eſtabliſhment and Confirmation of the Kings Authority and Juriſdiction within the ſame, as of the Supreme Head of the Church of England, and ſhall to the uttermoſt of their Wit, Knowledge, and Learning, purely, ſincerely and without any colour or diſſimulation, declare, manifeſt, and open, by the ſpace of one quarter of a year now next enſuing, once every Sunday, and after at the leaſt twice every quarter of a year, in their Sermons and other Collations, that the Biſhop of Romes, uſurped Power and Juriſdiction, having no eſtabliſhment nor ground by the Law of God, was for moſt juſt cauſes taken away and aboliſhed, and that therefore they owe unto him no manner of obedience or ſubjection, and that the Kings power is within his Dominion the Higheſt Potentate and Power under God, to whom all Men within the ſame Dominion, by Gods Commandment owe moſt Loyalty and Obedience afore and above all other Potentates in Earth. Confirmation of the Kings Supremacy. Againſt the Popes Primacy.

Item, Whereas certain Articles were lately deviſed and put forth by the Kings Highneſs Authority, and condeſcended unto by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in in Convocation (whereof part were neceſſary to be holden and believed for our Salvation, and the other part do concern and touch certain laudable Ceremonies, Rights, and Uſages of the Church, meet and convenient to be kept and uſed for a decent and politick order in the ſame) the ſaid Dean, Parſons, Vicars, and other Curates ſhall ſo open and declare, in their Sermons and other Collations, the ſaid Articles unto them that be under their Cure, that they may plainly know and diſcern which of them be neceſſary to be believed and obſerved for their Salvation, and which be not neceſſary, but only do concern the decent and politick order of the ſaid Church, according to ſuch Commandment and Admonition as hath been given unto them heretofore by the Authority of the Kings Highneſs in that behalf.

The Kings Articles to be read to the People.

Moreover, That they ſhall declare unto all ſuch as be under their Cure the Articles likewiſe deviſed, put forth, and authoriſed of late, for and concerning the abrogating of certain ſuperſtitious Holy-days, according to the effect and purport of the ſame Articles, and perſuade their Pariſhioners to keep and obſerve the ſame inviolably, as things wholſom, provided, decreed, and eſtabliſhed by the common conſent and publick authority for the Commonweals commodity, and profit of all this Realm.

Images aboliſhed.

Beſides this, to the intent that all Superſtition and Hypocriſie, crept into divers Mens hearts, may vaniſh away, they ſhall not ſet forth or extol any Images, Relicts, or Miracles, for any Superſtition or lucre, nor allure the People by any intreatments to Pilgrimages of any Saints, otherwiſe than is permitted in the Articles lately put forth by the Authority of the Kings Majeſty, and condeſcended unto by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in Convocation, as though it were proper and peculiar to that Saint to give this commodity or that, ſeeing all goodneſs, health, and grace ought to be both looked and asked for only of God, as of the very Author of the ſame, and of none other, for without him it cannot be given; but they ſhall exhort as well their Pariſhioners, as other Pilgrimes, that they do rather apply themſelves to the keeping of Gods Commadments, and the fulfilling of his works of Charity; perſwading them that they ſhall pleaſe God more by the true exerciſe of their bodily labour, travel, or occupation, and providing for their Families, than if they went about to the ſaid Pilgrimages; and it ſhall profit more their Souls health, if they do beſtow that on the poor and needy, which they would have beſtowed upon the ſaid Images or Relicts.

Pilgrimages forbidden.

Prayers in the Mother-Tongue.

Alſo in the ſame their Sermons and other Collations, the Parſons, Vicars, and other Curates aforeſaid ſhall diligently admoniſh the Fathers and Mothers, Maſters and Governors of Youth, being within their Cure, to teach or cauſe to be taught their Children and Servants, even from their infancy, the Pater-Noſter, the Articles of our Faith, and the Ten Commandments in their Mother-Tongue, and the ſame ſo taught ſhall cauſe the ſaid Youth oft to repeat and underſtand. And to the intent this may be the more eaſily done, the ſaid Curates ſhall in their Sermons deliberately and plainly recite of the ſaid Pater-Noſter, Articles, or Commandments, one Clauſe or Article one day, and another another day, till the whole be taught and learned by little and little, and ſhall deliver the ſame in Writing, or ſhew where Printed Books containing the ſame be to be ſold to them that can read, or will deſire the ſame; and thereto that the ſaid Fathers and Mothers, Maſters and Governors do beſtow their Children and Servants, even from their Childhood, either to learning, or to ſome honeſt exerciſe, occupation, or husbandry, exhorting, counſelling, and by all the ways and means they may, as well in their ſaid Sermons and Collations, as otherwiſe, the ſaid Fathers, Mothers, Maſters, and other Governors being under their cure and charge, diligently to provide and foreſee, that the ſaid Youth be in no manner-wiſe kept or brought up in idleneſs, leſt at any time afterward they be driven, for lack of ſome myſtery or occupation to live by, to fall to begging, ſtealing, or ſome other unthriftineſs, foraſmuch as we may daily ſee, through ſloath and idleneſs divers valiant Men fall, ſome to begging, ſome to theft and murther, which after brought to calamity and miſery, impute a great part thereof to their Friends and Governors, which ſuffered them to be brought up ſo idly in their youth; where if they had been brought up and educated in ſome good literature, occupation, or myſtery, they ſhould (being rulers of their own Families) have profited as well themſelves, as divers others Perſons, to the great Commodity and Ornament of the Commonweal.

For bringing up of youth in ſome Art or occupation.

Alſo that the ſaid Parſons, Vicars, and other Curates ſhall diligently provide, that the Sacraments and Sacramentals be duly and reverently Miniſtred in their Pariſhes. And if at any time it happen them either in any of the Caſes expreſſed in the Statutes of this Realm, or of ſpecial licenſe given by the Kings Majeſty, to be abſent from their Benefices, they ſhall leave their cure not to a rude and unlearned Perſon, but to an honeſt well-learned, and expert Curate, that may teach the rude and unlearned of their Cure, wholſome Doctrine, and reduce them to the right way, that they do not err; and always let them ſee, that neither they nor their Vicars do ſeek more their own profit, promotion, or advantage, than the profit of the Souls that they have under their Cure, or the glory of God.

Placing of good Vicars and Curates.

Item, That every Parſon or Proprietary of any Pariſh-Church within this Realm ſhall on this ſide the Feaſt of St. Peter, ad vincula, next coming, provide a Book of the whole Bible both in Latin and alſo in Engliſh, and lay the ſame in the Quire, for every Man that will, to look and read thereon, and ſhall diſcourage no Man from the reading of any part of the Bible, either in Latin or Engliſh, but rather comfort, exhort, and admoniſh every Man to read the ſame, as the very Word of God, and the Spiritual Food of Mans Soul, whereby they may the better know their duties to God, to their Sovereign Lord the King, and their Neighbour; ever gently and charitably exhorting them, that uſing a ſober and a modeſt behaviour in the reading and inquiſition of the true ſenſe of the ſame, they do in no wiſe ſtiſly or eagerly contend or ſtrive one with another about the ſame, but refer the declaration of thoſe places that be in controverſie to the judgment of them that be better learned.

Every Pariſh to provide a Bible in Engliſh.

Alſo the ſaid Dean, Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and other Prieſts ſhall in no wiſe at any unlawful time, nor for any other cauſe than for their honeſt neceſſity, haunt or reſort to any Taverns or Ale-houſes, and after their Dinner and ſupper they ſhall not give themſelves to drinking or riot, ſpending their time idly by day or by night, at Tables or Cards playing, or any other unlawful Game, but at ſuch times as they ſhall have ſuch leiſure, they ſhall read or hear ſomewhat of Holy Scripture, or ſhall occupy themſelves with ſome honeſt exerciſe, and that they always do thoſe things that appertain to good congruence and honeſty, with profit of the Commonweal, having always in mind, that they ought to excel all other in purity of life, and ſhould be example to all other to live well and Chriſtianly.

Prieſts not to haunt Ale-houſes.

Furthermore, becauſe the goods of the Church are called the goods of the poor, and in theſe days nothing is leſs ſeen than the poor to be ſuſtained with the ſame, all Parſons, Vicars, Prebendaries, and other beneficed Men within this Deanry, not being reſident upon their Benefices, which may diſpend yearly twenty pounds or above, either within this Deanry or elſewhere, ſhall diſtribute hereafter yearly amongſt their poor Pariſhioners or other inhabitants there, in the preſence of the Churchwardens or ſome other honeſt Men of the Pariſh, the fortieth part of the Fruits and Revenues of their ſaid Benefices, leſt they be worthily noted of ingratitude, which reſerving ſo many parts to themſelves, cannot vouchſafe to impart the fortieth portion thereof amongſt the poor people of that Pariſh that is ſo fruitful and profitable unto them.

Parſons not reſident, to pay the fortieth part to their Pariſhes.

And to the intent that learned Men may hereafter ſpring the more, for the executing of the ſaid Premiſes, every Parſon, Vicar, Clerk, or Beneficed Man within this Deanry, having yearly to ſpend in Benefices or other promotions of the Church, an hundred pounds, ſhall give competent exhibition to one Sholar, and for as many hundred pounds more as he may diſpend, to ſo many Scholars more ſhall give like exhibition in the Univerſity of Oxford or Cambridge, or ſome Grammar-School, which after they have profited in good learning, may be partners of their Patrons Cure and charge, as well in preaching as otherwiſe in the execution of their Offices, or may when need ſhall be, otherwiſe profit the Commonwealth with their counſel and wiſdom.

Beneficed men to maintain their manſions.

Alſo that all Parſons, Vicars and Clerks, having Churches, Chappels, or Manſions within this Deanery, ſhall beſtow yearly hereafter upon the ſame Manſions or Chancels of their Churches being in decay, the fifth part of thoſe their Benefices, till they ſhall be fully repaired, and the ſame ſo repaired they ſhall always keep and maintain in good eſtate.

All which and ſingular Injunctions ſhall be inviolably obſerved of the ſaid Dean, Parſons, Vicars, Curates, Stipendaries, and other Clerks and beneficed men, under pain of ſuſpenſion, and ſequeſtration of the fruits of their Benefices, until they have done their duties according to theſe Injunctions.

After theſe Injunctions and Articles afore expreſſed (which were given about the year of our Lord, 1536 and 1537.) it was not above the ſpace of a year, but other Injunctions alſo were publiſhed, to the further inſtruction of the people in the proceedings of Religion, whereby both the Parſons of Churches, and the Pariſhes together, were enjoyned to provide in every Church to be a Bible in Engliſh: Alſo for ever Pariſhioner to be taught by the Miniſter, to underſtand and to ſay the Lords Prayer and Creed in their own Vulgar tongue, with other neceſſary and moſt fruitful Injunctions, the Tenor wherof followeth.

Injunctions exhibited, Anno 1538.

Injunctions by the King.

IN the Name of God, Amen. By the authority and commiſſion of the moſt excellent Prince Henry by the grace of God, King of England, and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in the Earth ſupreme head under Chriſt of the Church of England; I Thomas Lord Cromwel, Lord privy Seal, Vicegerent to the Kings ſaid Highneſs for all his juriſdiction Eccleſiaſtical within this Realm, do for the advancement of the true honour of Almighty God, increaſe of Vertue, and diſcharge of the Kings Majeſty, give and exhibite unto you N. theſe Injunctions following to be kept, obſerved and fulfilled upon the pain hereafter declared.

Firſt, That ye ſhall truly obſerve and keep all and ſingular the Kings Highneſs Injunctions given unto you heretofore in my name by his Graces authority, not only upon the pains therein expreſſed, but alſo in your default now after this ſecond monition continued, upon further puniſhment to be ſtraightly extended towards you by the Kings Highneſs arbitrement or his Vicegerent aforeſaid.

For the Bible to be ſet up in Churches.

Item, That ye ſhall provide on this ſide the Feaſt of N. next coming, one Book of the whole Bible of the largeſt Volume in Engliſh, and the ſame ſet up in ſome convenient place within the ſaid Church, that ye have Cure of, whereas your Pariſhioners may moſt commodiouſly reſort to the ſame and read it. The charges of which Book ſhall be ratably born between you, the Parſon and Pariſhioners aforeſaid, that is to ſay, the one half by you, and the other half by them.

Item, That ye ſhall diſcourage no Man privily nor apertly from the reading or hearing of the ſaid Bible, but ſhall expreſly provoke, ſtir, and exhort every perſon to read the ſame, as that which is the very lively Word of God, that every Chriſtian perſon is bounden to embrace, believe and follow, if he look to be ſaved, admoniſhing them nevertheleſs to void all contention and altercation therein, and to uſe an honeſt Sobriety in the Inquiſition of the true ſenſe of the ſame, and to refer the explication of the obſcure places, to Men of higher judgment in Scripture.

The Lords Prayer to be learned in Engliſh.

Item, That ye ſhall every Sunday and Holy-day through the year openly and plainly recite to your Pariſhioners, twice or thrice together, or oftner if need require, one Article or Sentence of the Pater Noſter, or Creed in Engliſh, to the intent they may learn the ſame by heart, and ſo from day to day, to give them one like Leſſon or Sentence of the ſame, till they have learned the whole Pater Noſter, and Creed in Engliſh by rote: and as they be taught every ſentence of the ſame by rote, ye ſhall expound and declare the underſtanding of the ſame unto them, exhorting all Parents and Houſholders, to teach their Children and Servants the ſame, as they are bound in conſcience to do: and that done, ye ſhall declare unto them, the Ten Commandments, one by one, every Sunday and Holy-day, till they be likewiſe perfect in the ſame.

Item, That ye ſhall in Confeſſions every Lent, examine every perſon that cometh to Confeſſion to you, whether they can recite the Articles of our Faith, and the Pater Noſter in Engliſh, and hear them ſay the ſame particularly: wherein if they be not perfect, ye ſhall declare to them, that every Chriſtian perſon ought to know the ſame before they ſhould receive the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and moniſh then to learn the ſame more perfectly by the next year following: or elſe, like as they ought not to preſume to come to Gods boord without perfect knowledge of the ſame (and if they do, it is to the great peril of their ſouls) ſo ye ſhall declare unto them that ye look for other Injunctions from the Kings Highneſs by that time, to ſtay and repel all ſuch from Gods boord, as ſhall be found ignorant in the premiſſes: wherefore do ye thus admoniſh them, to the intent they ſhould both eſchew the peril of their ſouls, and alſo the worldly rebuke that they might incur hereafter by the ſame.

Sermons quarterly to be made.

Item, That ye ſhall make or cauſe to be made in the ſaid Church, and every other Cure ye have, one Sermon every quarter of a year at the leaſt, wherein ye ſhall purely and ſincerely declare the very Goſpel of Chriſt, and in the ſame exhort your hearers to the works of Charity, Mercy and Faith, ſpecially preſcribed and commanded in Scripture, and not to repoſe their truſt or affiance in other works deviſed by Mens fantaſies beſides Scripture: as in wandring to Pilgrimages, offering of Money, Candles, or Tapers to fained Reliques, or Images, or Kiſſing or Licking the ſame, ſaying over a number of Beads not underſtood, ne minded on, or ſuch like ſuperſtition: for the doing whereof, ye not only have no promiſe of reward in Scripture, but contrariwiſe great threats and maledictions of God, as things tending to Idolatry and Superſtition, which of all other offences, God Almighty doth moſt deteſt and abhor, for that the ſame diminiſheth moſt his honour and glory.

Images pulled down.

Item, That ſuch fained Images as ye know in any of your Cures to be ſo abuſed with Pilgrimages or offerings of any thing made thereunto, ye ſhall for avoiding of that moſt deteſtable offence of Idolatry, forthwith take down without delay, and ſhall ſuffer from henceforth no Candles, Tapers, or Images of Wax, to be ſet afore any Images or Picture, but only the light that commonly goeth about the Croſs of the Church by the Rood-loft, the light afore the Sacrament of the Altar, and the light about the Sepulcher; which, for the adorning of the Church and divine Service, ye ſhall ſuffer to remain ſtill, admoniſhing your Pariſhioners, that Images ſerve for none other purpoſe, but as the Books of unlearned Men, that can no Letters, whereby they might be admoniſhed of the lives and converſation of them, that the ſaid Images do repreſent. Which Images if they abuſe for any other intent than for ſuch remembrances, they commit Idolatry in the ſame to the great danger of their ſouls: and therefore the Kings Highneſs, graciouſly tendering the weal of his Subjects ſouls, hath in part already, and more will hereafter travel for the aboliſhing of ſuch Images, as might be occaſion of ſo great offence to God, and ſo great danger to the ſouls of his loving Subjects.

Good miniſters to be placed.

Item, That in all ſuch Benefices or Cures, as ye have, whereupon you be not your ſelf reſident, ye ſhall appoint ſuch Curates in your ſtead, as both can by ability, and will alſo promptly execute theſe Injunctions, and do their duty otherwiſe, that ye are bound to do in every behalf accordingly, and profit their Cure no leſs with good example of living than with declaration of the Word of God, or elſe their lack and defaults ſhall be imputed unto you, who ſhall ſtraightly anſwer for the ſame, if they do otherwiſe.

Item, That you ſhall admit no Man to preach within any of your Benefices or Cures, but ſuch as ſhall appear unto you to be ſufficiently licenſed thereunto by the Kings Highneſs, or his Graces authority, or the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, and ſuch as ſhall be ſo licenſed, ye ſhall gladly receive, to declare the Word of God without any reſiſtance or contradiction.

Pilgrimages and Images abandoned.

Item, If ye have heretofore declared to your Pariſhioners any thing to the extolling and ſetting forth of Pilgrimages to feigned Reliques or Images, or any ſuch ſuperſtition, you ſhall now openly afore the ſame recant and reprove the ſame, ſhewing them, as the truth is, that ye did the ſame upon no ground of Scripture, but as being led and ſeduced by a common error and abuſe crept into the Church through the ſufferance and avarice of ſuch as felt profit by the ſame.

The word of God to be preached without ſtop or interruption.

Item, If ye do or ſhall know any within your Pariſh, or elſewhere, that is a Letter of the Word of God to be read in Engliſh, or ſincerely Preached, or of the execution of theſe Injunctions, or a fautor of the Biſhop of Romes pretenced power, now by the Laws of this Realm juſtly rejected and extirped: ye ſhall detect the ſame to the Kings Highneſs, or his Honourable Council, or to his Vicegerent aforeſaid, or to the Juſtice of Peace next adjoyning.

Regiſter Book for every Pariſh.

Item, That you and every Parſon, Vicar, or Curate, within this Dioceſs, ſhall for every Church keep one Book of Regiſter, wherein ye ſhall write the day and year of every Wedding, Chriſtening, and Burying, made within your Pariſh for your time, and ſo for every Man ſucceeding you likewiſe, and alſo therein ſet every perſons name that ſhall be ſo Wedded, Chriſtened or Buried, and for the ſafe keeping of the ſame Book, the Pariſh ſhall be bound to provide of their common charges one ſure Coffer with two Locks and Keys; whereof the one to remain with you; and the other with the Wardens of every ſuch Pariſh wherein the ſaid Book ſhall be layed up: which Book ye ſhall every Sunday take forth, and in the preſence of the ſaid Wardens or one of them, write and record in the ſame, all the Weddings, Chriſtenings and Buryings, made the whole week before: and that done, to lay up the ſaid Book in the ſaid Coffer as afore, and for every time the ſame ſhall be omitted, the party that ſhall be in the fault thereof, ſhall forfeit to the ſaid Church three Shillings four Pence, to be imployed on the reparation of the ſame Church.

Item, That ye ſhall once every quarter of a year, read theſe and the other former Injunctions given unto you by authority of the Kings Highneſs, openly and deliberately before all your Pariſhioners, to the intent that both you may be the better admoniſhed of your duty, and your ſaid Pariſhioners the more incited to enſue the ſame for their part.

Tithes to be payed.

Item, Forſomuch as by a Law eſtabliſhed, every Man is bound to pay his Tithes, no Man ſhall by colour of duty omitted by their Curates, detain their Tithes, and ſo redouble one wrong with another; and be his own judge, but ſhall truly pay the ſame as hath been accuſtomed to their Parſons and Curates without any reſtraint or diminution: and ſuch lack and default as they can juſtly find in their Parſons and Curates, to call for reformation thereof, at their Ordinaries and other Superiors hands, who upon complaint and due proof thereof, ſhall reform the ſame accordingly.

Item, That no Parſon ſhall from henceforth alter or change the order and manner of any Faſting day that is commanded and indicted by the Church, nor of divine Prayer, nor of Service, otherwiſe than is ſpecified in the ſaid Injunctions, until ſuch time as the ſame ſhall be ſo ordered and tranſported by the Kings Highneſs authority: the Evens of ſuch Saints, whoſe Holy-days be abrogated, only excepted, which ſhall be declared henceforth to be no faſting days, except alſo the Commemoration of Thomas Becket ſometimes Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which ſhall be clean omitted, and inſtead thereof, the ferial Service uſed.

Becket's day abrogate.

Knoling of Aves forbidden.

Item, That the knoling of the Aves after Service and certain other times, which hath been brought in and begun by the pretence of the Biſhop of Romes Pardon, henceforth be left and omitted, leſt the people do hereafter truſt to have Pardon for the ſaying of their Aves between the ſaid knoling, as they have done in times paſt.

Suffrages of Saints rejected.

Item, Where in times paſt, Men have uſed in divers places in their proceſſions, to ſing, Ora pro nobis, to ſo many Saints, that they had no time to ſing the good ſuffrages following: as Parce nobis Domine, and Libera nos Domine, it muſt be taught and preached, that better it were to omit Ora pro nobis, and to ſing the other ſuffrages being moſt neceſſary and effectual. All which ſingular Injunctions, I miniſter unto you and to your Pariſhioners by the Kings Highneſs authority to be committed in this part, which I charge and command you by the ſame authority to obſerve and keep, upon pain of deprivation, ſequeſtration of your fruits, or ſuch other coercion as to the King or his Vicegerent for the time being ſhall be ſeen convenient. {KING Hen. 8.}

By theſe Articles and Injunctions thus coming forth one after another, for the neceſſary inſtruction of the people, it may appear, how well the King then deſerved the title of his ſupreme Government, given to him over the Church of England: By the which title and authority he did more good for the redreſſing and advancing of Chriſts Church and Religion here in England, in theſe three years, than the Pope, the great Vicar of Chriſt, with all his Biſhops and Prelates had done the ſpace of three hundred years before. Such a vigilant care was then in the King and in his Council, how by all ways and means to redreſs Religion, to reform Errors, to correct corrupt cuſtoms, to help ignorance, and to reduce the miſleading of Chriſts Flock drowned in blind Popery, Superſtition, Cuſtoms, and Idolatry, to ſome better form of more perfect reformation. Whereunto he provided not only theſe Articles, Precepts, and Injunctions above ſpecified, to inform the rude people; but alſo procured the Biſhops to help forward in the ſame cauſe of decayed Doctrine, with their diligent preaching and teaching of the people, according as ye heard before, how that in the year 1534 during the whole time of Parliament, there was appointed every Sunday a Biſhop to Preach at Pauls Croſs, againſt the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome.

The King better deſerving the name of ſupreme governor than the Pope.

Read before.

Amongſt which Biſhops, John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, the Kings Confeſſor, and a great perſecutor of the poor Flock of Chriſt (as is before ſufficiently recorded) made a Sermon before the King, upon Good-Friday, this preſent year 1538 at Greenwich, ſeriouſly and effectuouſly preaching on the Kings behalf, againſt the uſurped Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, the Contents of whoſe Sermon wholly to expreſs were here too long and tedious. So much as may ſuffice for our purpoſe I thought ſhould remain to the poſterity, beginning at his Theme, which when he took in hand to intreat upon, written in the thirteenth Chapter to the Hebrews, as followeth.

Read before.

The Sermon of John Longland, Biſhop of Lincoln, on Good-Friday, before the King at Greenwich.

THe words of the Apoſtle are theſe, Habemus altare de quo edere non habent poteſtatem qui tabernaculo deſerviunt. Quorum enim animalium infertur ſanguis pro peccato in ſancta per pontificem, horum corpora cremantur extra caſtra, Propter quod & Jeſus extra portam paſſus eſt. Exeamus igitur ad eum extra caſtra improperium ejus portantes.

Ann. 1538. A Sermon of Biſhop Longland before the King. An. 1538. The Theme. Heb. 13.

Theſe are the words of the Apoſtle: Many things contained in few words, and the Engliſh thereof is this; We have an Altar, we have an Altar (ſaith the Apoſtle) an Altar, and a Sacrifice upon this Altar. And they that ſerve at the Tabernacle may not eat of this Altar, may not eat of this Sacrifice, that is offered upon this Altar For the Apoſtle here (Per metonymiam) doth put the Altar for that that is Sacrifice upon the Altar. The blood of thoſe Beaſts that were ſlain for the Sacrifice was brought into the holy ſecret high place of the Temple where the Ark was, between the high Altar, (as we will ſay) and the veil by the Biſhop, and there offered up for the ſin of the people. The bodies of the Beaſts that were burned without the Pavilions or Tents, for the which, Propter quod, for which, what? for the fulfilling of which myſtery. Alſo to verifie and fulfil the figure, and that the thing figured might be correſpondent to the figure, Jeſus ſuffered without the Gate, to ſanctifie the people by his blood. Let us go out therefore and ſuffer with Chriſt, bearing his opprobries and rebukes. Theſe be the words of the Apoſtle now taken.

{KING} Hen. 8.

I will by the help of our Lord God declare theſe words in order, even as they do ſtand. Here is an Altar, here is a Sacrifice, here is a Biſhop which did offer this Sacrifice, here is a Tabernacle, a ſerving of the Tabernacle, the Blood of the Sacrifice which was offered by the Biſhop for the ſins of the people, in the moſt holy place of the Temple, and the bodies of the Beaſts (whoſe blood was offered) were burned without the Tents. And this was done the Tenth day of the ſeventh Month. Ye hear now the words of the Apoſtle, wherein appeareth the manifeſt figure of the paſſion of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which we this day do honour.

In theſe words the Apoſtle toucheth the figure of the Law, and bringeth it to a ſpiritual underſtanding; For it was commanded in the Law, in the Book of Numbers, the Tenth day of the ſeventh Month, in the Feaſt that was called the Feaſt of the propitiation of mercy of remiſſion, or the Feaſt of Purgation, when the people were purged. At which time they ſhould take a Colt and a Kid and ſlay them; whoſe blood the only Biſhop ſhould bring In ſancta ſanctorum, into the moſt holy, ſolemn, and ſecret place of the Temple, wherein the Biſhop never came unleſs he brought with him Blood to offer in Sacrifice. Quia omnia fere in ſanguine ſecundum legem mundabantur, & ſine ſanguinis effuſione non ſit remiſſio, ſaith the Apoſtle. Almoſt all things after the Law, or in the Law, were cleanſed in Blood, and by Blood, and without the effuſion of Blood was no remiſſion: and in that place of the Temple called Sancta ſanctorum, the Biſhop prayed and offered for the People. The Fleſh and Corps of the Sacrifice was burned without the Tents, without their pavillions. And it was not lawful to any that did ſerve the Tabernacle to eat of the Fleſh of that Sacrifice.

Numb. 19.

Heb. 13.

Here is a manifeſt figure (as I ſaid) of the paſſion of our Saviour Chriſt. The Altar that was conſecrated and hallowed in this ſolemnity of the Blood of the eternal Teſtament, was that holy Croſs that Chriſt ſuffered on. Which as on this day he did conſecrate, hallow, dignifie, and dedicate, and did adorn and deck the ſame with the Members of his moſt precious Body, more gloriouſly than if it had been imbroidered and inſerted with precious ſtones. For as Gold which is the moſt precious Metal is made more precious when it is ſet with precious Stones, and is dignified therewith, whether it be Altar, Image, Crown, Ring or Owch; ſo was the Altar the holy Croſs, beautified, dignified, adorned, and made precious with the Members of that moſt precious Stone Chriſt, which is as Peter ſaith, Lapis vivus, ab hominibus reprobatus, a Deo electus, probatus angularis, & precioſus. This Chriſt is (he ſaith) the lively ſtone, which men did reprove, which God did elect for the approved ſtone, for a Corner ſtone, for the chief ſtone in the building of his Church, for the ſtone that joyneth the Walls of the Church together, for the ſtone whereupon the Faith of Chriſt and his Church is builded. A precious ſtone, a ſtone of price, a ſtone of high value, far paſſing in the eſtimation of a good Chriſtian Man all other precious ſtones in the world. This precious ſtone Chriſt, with the members of his moſt precious body, did deck, adorn, and make precious this Altar of the Croſs, when his body was by the Jews, with violence, extreamly ſtrained upon the ſame, that all his bones (as teſtifieth the Prophet) might be numbred. Upon this Altar was the great Sacrifice of the World offered, Chriſt himſelf. He was the Sacrifice, and he was the Prieſt. He offered up himſelf to God his Father, for the ſin of Man; Obtulit ſemetipſum immaculatum Deo, ut ſanctificaret inquinatos, ſaith the Apoſtle. He offered himſelf a pure, clean, immaculate Hoſt to God, to redeem the world, to ſanctifie ſinners, to juſtifie man.

1 Pet. 2. The ſtone Chriſt.

Pſal. 21. Chriſt the ſacrifice of the world.

This Chriſt the Biſhop of good things to come (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth) entred once into the place called Sancta ſanctorum, not only of the Temple, but In Sancta ſanctorum, into the holy place of places, into Heaven. He entred with Sacrificed Blood like a Biſhop. Not with the Blood of Goats or Calves, not with the Blood of Rams or Bulls, but with his own precious Blood. For if the Blood of Goats and Bulls, and the aſhes of the burned Calf ſprinkled abroad, were ſufficient to the making clean of the fleſh, how much more then is the Blood of Chriſt, who by the Holy Ghoſt did offer up himſelf to God, a moſt pure, moſt clean, and immaculate Sacrifice, able to purge, cleanſe, and make fair our Conſciences from the works of Death, and to live in the living God?

Heb. 9.

This is our great Biſhop, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Habemus pontificem magnum qui penetravit cœlos Jeſum Filium Dei. We have a great Biſhop, which did penetrate the Heavens, whoſe name is Jeſus the Son of God. This is our great Biſhop, our high Biſhop, our univerſal Biſhop. This is the head Biſhop of all Biſhops and of all the world, named of God (as the Apoſtle ſaith) to be our great Biſhop, properly called Summus Pontifex, the higheſt Biſhop, the Biſhop of Biſhops. For this is he only that is, Summus, maximus, & univerſalis Pontifex.

Leviet. 16. Heb. 4.

Heb. 5.

The Biſhop of Rome therefore ought herein to be abaſhed, aſhamed, and to abhor his own pride. For in this he outragiouſly doth offend God, and blaſpheme him, in that he preſumeth to take this high Name from our Biſhop Chriſt; in that he taketh away, as much as lieth in him, the glory of God, the majeſty appertaining unto Chriſt; in that he taketh upon him theſe names appropriate only to Chriſt, Summus Pontifex, maximus Pontifex, univerſalis Pontifex, the higheſt Biſhop, the greateſt Biſhop, the univerſal Biſhop, the Biſhop of all the world. I much marvel how he dare be ſo bold to uſurp and take theſe great names upon him. Greater Blaſphemy cannot be, than to take from God that that naturally belongeth unto him; than to take from God his glory and honour; than to vindicate and take upon him ſuch high names, as beſeemeth no Chriſtian Man to uſurp. God ſaid by his Prophet, Non dabo gloriam meam alteri, I will not give my glory away to any other, to any creature. He doth reſerve the glory, that laud and honour that belongeth only unto him, unto himſelf; no Man may attempt ſo far, no Man may take ſo much upon him.

The pride of the Pope. The Pope blaſphemeth God.

No greater blaſphemy than in the Pope.

Eſay 42.

Peter, Peter, thou waſt once Biſhop of Rome, and the firſt Biſhop of Rome; Didſt thou ever take this Name upon thee, Summus, Maximus, Univerſalis; No, no, no. And why? for the Holy Ghoſt was in thee. Thou wouldeſt take no more upon thee than God gave thee. Thou waſt not deſirous of worldly fame and glory. All that thou ſoughteſt for, was for the glory of God; as all that will read thy Sermons, thy Epiſtles, and thy Life, ſhall ſoon perceive. Look a great number of Biſhops that next followed Peter in the ſame See; what were they? Holy Martyrs, Holy Livers, which never attempted thus far. Let the Biſhop of Rome therefore acknowledge his great fault, his high folly, his unlawful uſurpation, his unprieſtly preſumption, and humble himſelf to Chriſt and God his great Biſhop. Would God he would reform himſelf, would God he would keep himſelf within that compaſs of his authority, and encroach no more upon other Mens juriſdictions, but diligently keep and overlook his own Dioceſs and be content with that; would God he would look upon his predeceſſor Saint Gregory in his Regiſter, which was a Biſhop of Rome, a holy Man. Let him learn there how he did rebuke John, that time the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, for taking on him ſo highly, in ſuch names; univerſal Biſhop, higheſt Biſhop, greateſt Biſhop; and how he proved it to be againſt the Law of God. He ſaith there in one place to this proud Biſhop John, What anſwer ſhalt thou make in that ſtrait examination at that laſt judgment to Chriſt the head of the Univerſal Church, that goeſt about to have ſubject unto thee all the Members of Chriſt, by taking on thee the name of Univerſal Biſhop? In another place again in the ſame Book he ſaith unto him, who art thou that doſt preſume to uſurp a new name upon thee of Univerſal Biſhop, contrary to the Statutes of the Goſpel and Decrees?

Peter never took upon him at Rome as the Pope doth.

Gregorius in regiſtro, lib. 4. indictione 30. Epiſt. 38.

Idem.

God forbid that ever this Blaſphemy ſhould come in the hearts of Chriſtian people. In the which the honour of all Prieſthood is taken away, when a Man ſhall raſhly and arrogantly take that name upon him. Let this Biſhop of Rome therefore humble himſelf unto our great Univerſal Biſhop Chriſt, humble himſelf under the mighty hand of God, and know what the Apoſtle doth write of the honour and power of this Chriſt our great high Biſhop. He is (he ſaith) Pontifex miſericors, fidelis, potens, magnus, humilis, penetrans cœlum, compatiens infirmitatibus noſtris, offerens dona & ſacrificia pro peccatis noſtris, condolens iis qui ignorant & errant: Qui poteſt ſalvum facere a morte, offerens preces & ſupplicationes

Heb. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9.

The titles and properties attributed to Christ in the Scripture.

cum clamore valido & lachrymis, & exauditus est pro reverentia sua: Pontifex appellatus a Deo: Pontifex sanctus, innocens, impollutus, segregatus a peccatoribus, excelsior cœlis: Non habens necessitatem (quemadmodum alii) prius pro suis delictis hostias offerre, deinde pro populo: Pontifex sedens in dextris Dei interpellans pro nobis, emundans conscientias nostras ab operibus mortuis, intrans Sancta sanctorum, per proprium sanguinem. Hic est Pontifex confessionis nostræ.

Let earthly Bishops learn of this heavenly Bishop Christ: some of these properties are appropriate and belong only to God, and not to Man. In some we ought to follow him, in some we cannot, ne ought to do. This our high and great Bishop is Misericors (saith the Apostle) merciful. A merciful Bishop, ready to forgive, ready to remit those that have offended him. He is not cruel, nor vengeable, but full of pity, full of mercy. And in this we ought to follow him.

Misericors.

He is Pontifex potens, a mighty Bishop, mighty and full of power. We be but weak and feeble Bishops, not able to do any thing but by his permission and help. He is able to make sick, to make whole, to make rich, to make poor, to set up, to put down. Potens, a mighty Bishop, mighty and able to remit sin, to forgive, to save both body and soul from damnation. Potens, a mighty Bishop, and full of power. No power in this world but of him: Omnis potestas a Domino Deo est; All power is of him. And as he witnesseth, Data est mihi omnis potestas in Cœlo & in Terra; All power is given unto me in Heaven and in Earth. Potens salvare a morte; He can save the body and save the soul. He can deliver the one and deliver the other from the everlasting death. Who can forgive sin but he? Quis potest dimittere peccatum nisi solus Deus? Est potens; He is a mighty Bishop: Of him and by him Emperors, Kings, Magistrates, and Potestates, Bishops, Priests, with all other that have power, have their power and authority. Who is able to turn the Wind, to make the Wind blow or cease, but he? Who is able to say and prove, I will now have it Rain, now clear? The Sun to shine, the Water to flow, to ebb, with such other, but only he? This is our mighty Bishop. Pontifex potens, mighty, yea, Omnipotens, Almighty. He can do all; nothing is to him impossible. Ipse dixit, & facta sunt omnia. Mandavit, & creata sunt universa. Potens ergo est, He is a mighty Bishop. We are not so.

Potent.

Rom. 14.

Matth. 28.

Mark. 2.

Omnipotens. Psal. 32.

Fidelis Pontifex. He is a faithful Bishop: faithful. He is a faithful Bishop to God, referring all lauds, all honour and glory to his Father. In all things that he did, miracles or other, he took never the more upon himself. He was also a faithful Bishop to the world; for he did all that belonged to the Office of a good Bishop. The very Office of a Bishop is, Prædicare, orare & sacrificare, sive offerre. To preach, to pray, to do sacrifice, or to offer. He preached to his people; he taught the world most wholesome Doctrine, whereby he called the people to God, he converted sinners, he called them to Penance. He made them weep and lament their sins, they followed his person, they followed his word, they followed his ensample. They came out of all the Coasts to see him, to hear him, to learn of him. They forsook Meat and Drink, House and Home, and followed him whersoever he went, as well in Wilderness as elsewhere. Insomuch that after they had followed him three days, he being moved with pity, lest they should perish for lack of Food, being in Wilderness far from succour, he fed them twice miraculously. Once in the Desart with five loaves and two fishes he fed five thousand men, besides women and children, and there were left twelve Baskets, twelve Maunds full of brokelets and offalls at that meal. At another time he fed in the Wilderness to the number of four thousand men, besides women and children, with seven loaves, and a few little fishes, and there was left of fragments, seven Maunds full.

Fidelis.

The office of a Bishop. If he had placed here, administrare sacramenta, for sacrificare, his partition so might have stood.

Matth. 14.

Matth. 15.

The second office of a Bishop is to pray.

The second Office of a Bishop he fulfilled also, for he prayed. He was most devout in Prayer, so to teach all Bishops and Preachers not to presume in their wit or learning, neither in their capacity, memory, fair tongue or utterance; but that the Preacher do studiously apply his Book with all diligence to study how to speak, what to speak, afore whom he shall speak, and to shape his Sermon after the audience. The Preacher ought also besides his study and preaching to pray. For by devout Prayer he shall attain percase as much or more, as by study or learning. For without Prayer the words will little prevail. Look in Christ his Life, and thou shalt find, that in every thing he went about, he prayed, to shew the valiancy, the vertue and strength of Prayer; to shew our necessities, our weakness and feebleness of nature. He prayed for his people (as Luke witnesseth) the space of one whole night. And what a marvelous devout Prayer made he for his people in the Mount the night afore his Passion, when the Chalice of death was represented unto him? When he sweat water and blood? When he cried thrice, Transeat a me Calix iste, Let this Chalice, let this passion and blood, let the vertue thereof pass from me unto all mankind. Let every Man have the vertue and merit thereof; Let it work in all folks, let every faithful Man and Woman be partaker thereof; let it not be lost, but work to the worlds end. This was a marvelous devout merciful Prayer. And again, he suffering and hanging on the Cross, offered up for his people, Preces & supplicationes cum clamore valido & lachrymis. He offered up his prayers and supplications with a huge cry, with a pitious voice, with a lamentable and deadly shriek, and with weeping tears to God his Father; he hanging on the Cross, even when the Spirit should depart the Body, not then forgetting his people at the hour when all the people forgetteth both the world and themselves. Which cry was so huge and great, so marvelous, and of that effect that the Heavens trembled thereat, the Angels mourned for pity, the Sun lost his light, the Veil in the Temple rived in two, the Earth quaked, the Stones rent asunder and brake in Gobbets, the Graves opened, the Dead bodies rose to life, and appeared in the City. Centurio, and those that kept Christ to see the execution done, cried, Vere, Filius Dei erat iste: This was the undoubted Son of God. His prayer and weeping tears were so pleasant to the Father that he was heard; Exauditus est pro reverentia sua. He was heard, and why? For it was so entire, so devout, so reverently done, in such a manner and fashion, with such a zeal grounded upon such a charity, suffering for our guilt, and not for his own. And for that he did the very Office of a Bishop, so intirely to pray, and so reverently to offer up himself in Sacrifice for his people, he was heard, he was heard, his Prayer was heard of God. And that is the third property of a good Bishop to offer Sacrifice for his people. Every Bishop, every Bishop, for his Dioceſans and for the whole Universal Church. In these three we ought as much as we may to follow Christ.

{KING Hen. 8.}

Luke 6.

Matth. 26.

Heb. 5. The cry of Christ on the Cross.

The heavens trembled. The Angels mourned. The Sun lost his light. The Veil rived. The Earth quaked. The Stones rent. The Graves opened. The Dead rose.

The third office of a Bishop is to minister, and not to sacrifice.

Thus this Christ was and is Pontifex fidelis, a faithful Bishop. Faithful: faithful in his Word, true in his Promise, deceiving no Man, but profiting all. In all that he did or spake, or sought nothing his own glory, but the glory of God; teaching thereby all Bishops of the World in all that they go about, to do it unto the praise and glory of God. And herein we ought also to follow him.

Magnus Pontifex, he is the great Bishop, the high Bishop, the supreme Bishop, the universal Bishop over all the World. No great Bishop but he. None high, none Supreme nor Universal Bishop but he.

Magnus. No great Bishop but only Christ.

The Pope blasphemeth God.

What is blasphemy.

And herein the Bishop of Rome outragiously usurpeth upon God, as he doth upon the World, to take the honour and name (only to God appropriate) to himself, and doth grievously blaspheme and offend God therein. Greater blasphemy cannot be, than to ascribe to God that that no ways belongeth unto him, or to take from God, that that is to him appropriate. It is meet therefore he do betimes, and in season leave his unjust incroachments both against his Lord God, and also against the World, lest he do provoke God to pour out all his vials of wrath upon him: the Væes, I mean the maledictions and vengeance that John speaketh of in the Apocalyps. I would advise him to cease the injuries which he hath, and daily doth against thee Christ our great high Universal Bishop, lest thou excommunicate and strike him, lest thou shew thy wrath and judgment against him, and utterly extinct his pride, and ambitious pretensed authority. For thou wilt be known, thou wilt be known to be God. And thou art and wilt be our great Univer-ſal and Supreme Biſhop, whatſoever the Biſhop of Rome ſhall attempt to the contrary; and thou wilt puniſh his worldly arrogancy, and ſtrike when thou ſeeſt thy time. And though it be long ere thou ſtrike, yet let him beware, for ſtrike thou wilt if thou be utterly provoked, and when thou doſt ſtrike, thy ſtroke is great, thy ſtroke is dreadful and ſore. It vanquiſheth the Body, it ſlayeth the Soul, it damneth both. Beware therefore, thou Biſhop of Rome, and be content with thine own Dioceſs, with thine own charge, as other Biſhops are with theirs: for further than thine own Dioceſs thy juriſdiction doth not ſtretch.

The ſtroke of God is ſlow but ſure.

The Popes power ſtretcheth no further than his Dioceſs.

A marvelous blindneſs in thee therefore, to take upon thee to anſwer for all the World, and art not able to anſwer our great Biſhop Chriſt for thy ſelf at the dreadful day of Judgment, when he ſhall ask but theſe few queſtions of thee; Quomodo intraſti? Quomodo rexiſti? Quomodo vixiſti? Quomodo paviſti? Quæ & qualia exempla dediſti? Quid ad meam gloriam feciſti? & hujuſmodi. How didſt thou enter into the Biſhoprick? By me, or by the world? unlawfully, or lawfully? By Symony or freely? By labour, by paction, or called of God? How didſt thou rule thy Cure, thy Dioceſs? Didſt thou pray for thy people? Didſt thou preach me to thy Dioceſans? Didſt thou give them ghoſtly and bodily food? Didſt thou miniſter ſpiritual and ghoſtly ſalves (the Sacraments I mean) to heal the Sores of their ſouls? How didſt thou live? Didſt thou caſt away the care, the glory and pomp of the World? Didſt thou follow me in humility, in charity, in compaſſion, in poverty, in cleanneſs, and in chaſt living?

Queſtions to be asked of the Pope in the laſt judgment.

Nay, rather Ghoſtly doctrine you ſhould ſay.

How didſt thou govern thy Dioceſans? Didſt thou not make of all things that thou didſt meddle with, a Money matter, in ſelling that which was not in thee to ſell nor give, which thou calledſt thy Pardons, thy Commiſſions, thy Brieves, thy Delegacies, Reſervations, Exemptions, Appellations, Bulls, and Diſpenſations? Didſt not thou under theſe pretences, and like other doings, deceive the world? What anſwer ſhalt thou make to this at that day, to our and thy great Biſhop Chriſt, when he ſhall viſit thee and all thy Dioceſs, me and all my Dioceſs; yea, when he ſhall viſit all the World? What anſwer ſhall you then make? I think verily thou ſhalt then have enough to do, yea, and more than thou canſt wind thy ſelf out of to make anſwer for thy ſelf, for thine own Dioceſs, and for thine own Dioceſans, though thou uſurp not upon other Mens as thou doſt. The Apoſtle writeth of Chriſt humbly, and calleth him Magnum Pontificem, the Great Biſhop. And he of Rome is not with this word contented, but will have a higher word for himſelf in the ſuperlative Degree, Maximum Pontificem. The greateſt Biſhop. Oh, where is the humbleneſs and meekneſs that ſhould be in him? Alas, he that taketh on him to teach all the World, how can he for ſhame ſuffer ſo blaſphemous words to paſs in his name, to his great ſhame and rebuke; to the great danger of his ſoul, and to the perillous enſample unto other? Oh, fie upon pride! It is a common Proverb, Pride will have a fall.

The Pope maketh all things a money matter.

Pontif. Maximus.

The Popes pride will have a fall.

Our Biſhop Chriſt was humilis, meek, lowly, and humble in heart. He rode not upon any Palfrey or courageous Horſe, but upon an Aſs, and that but once. He never was born pompouſly abroad in a Chair upon Mens ſhoulders. He never profered his Foot to any body to Kiſs. We read that he waſhed the feet of his Diſciples and wiped them. We read that Mary Magdalen profered to have kiſſed his feet, but he did prohibit her, ſaying, Noli me tangere; Touch me not. He would not ſuffer the Woman then to touch him. He never had Gard to defend him. He never followed the pomp of the world. He diſdained not to go upon the ground with his bare Feet. What ſhall I ſay? He gave enſamples enough to the Biſhop of Rome, to me, and all other Biſhops, to be meek and humble: he to know himſelf, and we our ſelves, as if he and we diligently look in Scripture, we ſhall find. And herein in meekneſs we are bound to follow him.

Humilis.

John 13.

Matth. 20.

The humility of Chriſt.

Compatiens infirmitatibus. This Biſhop Chriſt, had compaſſion of our infirmities, of our frailties. It is impoſſible for a Man to know the afflictions of a miſerable perſon, that never ſuffered himſelf affliction, that never had experience of pains, that never felt what pain meant. But this Biſhop Chriſt, had experience of our nature, how weak, how feeble the nature of Man is, how weak, of himſelf to do any good work without the help of God, how feeble to reſiſt temptations. He ſuffered and felt the infirmities and pains of this natural body. He hath therefore compaſſion upon Man, when he doth ſee him fall. He ſorroweth his ruine, teaching Biſhops in eſpecial afore all other, to have compaſſion and pity upon the ſinner, to help him ſpiritually, to comfort him ghoſtly, to help him to ariſe from ſin, to allure him to Penance, to draw him to Vertue, to make him know God, to fear his Juſtice, to love his Laws, and thus to ſeek all the ways that he and we can, to ſave the ſinners ſoul, for whom he ſhall make anſwer to God for his own Dioceſans; Soul for Soul, Blood for Blood, Pain for Pain, Hell for Hell, Damnation for Damnation. For which which ſoul, our great Biſhop Chriſt (as the Apoſtle doth witneſs) did offer Gifts and Sacrifice himſelf, having compaſſion of them that by ignorance and by error did ſin and offend God. Even when he was in his greateſt agony upon the Croſs, he cried to his Father; Forgive them Father, forgive them, they know not what they do, they are ignorant people, they know not what is what, or what danger they run into by thus intreating me. They know not their offences, forgive them Father, forgive them. In this compaſſion we ought alſo to follow our great Biſhop Chriſt.

Heb. 5.

Luke 23.

Compatiens.

Chriſt full of compaſſion.

It followeth in the former Letter, Eſt Pontifex appellatus a Deo. He is a Biſhop, and ſo named of God: he is the very Biſhop. He offered up the very Sacrifice, the Sacrifice of his own moſt bleſſed Body and Blood, whereby the ſin of the World was put away. Every Biſhop of the World is not named a Biſhop by God. For ſome come into that Office not by the Holy Ghoſt, nor elect of God (as John ſaith) not entring in ovile ovium per oſtium, ſed aſcendens aliunde. Some there are that enter into the fold of the Sheep of God not by the door. Some there be that enter in, having charge and cure of ſoul, not by God, but by worldly means, by worldly labour, by importune ſutes and interceſſions of friends, or by their own unlawful labour, by ſymony, and ſuch other ways. Such are named Biſhops by God. Such enter not by the door, not by him that ſaith, Ego ſum oſtium, Ego ſum via, veritas & vita, I am the door, I am the way, I am the life, I am the Truth, I am Paſtor Bonus, the very true and good Biſhop that entred by God. And all that enter otherwiſe than by God, Chriſt calleth them Fures & Latrones, Thieves, Spoylers, Raveners, Devourers, and Deceivers of the Sheep. Their living ſhall declare the ſame. For ſuch as ſo wilfully do enter, do ſtudy their own profits and commodities. Such receive the fruits, and do nothing for them, ſuch ſuffer their ſheep to periſh for lack of bodily and ghoſtly food and ſuſtenance, for lack of preaching, for lack of giving good counſel, for lack of good living, for lack of good enſample. And ſuch for the moſt part, live naughtily, carnally, fleſhly, viciouſly, pompouſly, worldly, and not Biſhoply nor Prieſtly. For they came not in by God, nor by grace. Chriſt ſaith, Qui intrat per me ſalvabitur, & ingredietur, & egredietur, & paſcua inveniet. He that entreth by me ſhall be ſaved. Et ingredietur, & egredietur. And he ſhall go in, and he ſhall go out. What is that to ſay, He ſhall go in, and he ſhall go out? I think and ſuppoſe he meaneth thereby going in, that he ſhall have grace to enter ſtudiouſly into the holy Scripture, daily and nightly to meditate, to ſtudy, and to profit in the Laws of God. Et egredietur. And he ſhall explain and truly interpret and publiſh it unto the people. Et paſcua inveniet. And he ſhall find there plenty of ſpiritual food for himſelf and for his people, to edifie their ſouls, to inſtruct and call them to the knowledge of God, to feed them plentifully, that they ſhall not lack neceſſaries to their ſouls. Let us therefore ſo live, that we may be called Pontifices appellati a Deo.

Pontifex appellatus.

John 10.

All Biſhops be not called of God.

John 10.

John 14.

This our great Biſhop Chriſt is alſo Pontifex ſanctus, innocens, impollutus, ſegregatus a peccatoribus, excelſior cœlis, ſedens a dextris Dei, emundans conſcientias noſtras a peccatis, intrans ſancta ſanctorum per proprium ſanguinem. He is ſanctus, a holy Biſhop, and willeth us to be holy in our converſation, applying our ſelves unto godlineſs, to the ſervice of God, to live like Biſhops, like Prieſts, pure, clean, chaſte, devout, ſtudious, faithfully labouring

Heb. 7.

Sanctus.

ing in his Word, praying, doing Sacrifice, and ever to be godly and vertuously occupied.

Innocens. He is Innocens, an Innocent. He never sinned, he never offended in word, thought, nor deed. Innocens, annoying no creature, profiting all folks, meekly suffering adversities, opprobries, rages, rebukes, and reproaches, without grudge or contradiction. Innocens & simplex; simplex sine plica. An innocent, without pleit or wrinckle, Simplex. without error or doubleness, without hypocrisie or dissimulation, without flattering or glosing, without fraud or deceit; not serving the Body nor the World, but God. In this we ought also to follow our heavenly Bishop.

Impollutus. Impollutus, He was undefiled. He lived clean without spot or blot, without wem or stain. No immunditia in him, no uncleanness nor filthiness; but all pure and clean, chaste and immaculate, all bright and shining in grace and godliness; Insomuch that he was segregatus a peccatoribus, clean segregate from all kind of uncleanness, from Segregatus a peccatis. all manner of sins, and from all sinners. Segregate from them, not from their company; for as Matthew writeth, Publicans and Sinners came and eat and drank with him and his Disciples in the House of Levi. And he also came as a Physicion to heal the sinner. And yet he was segregate from them, Quantum ad participationem cum eis in peccato; as touching their ill livings, Matth. 9. not being participant with them in sin, but came only to heal them, and to rid them from sin and sore of the soul. He entred the Heavens, not with the blood of Kid nor Goat, but with his own proper blood. For which, and for holiness and perfectness, Excelsior cœlis factus est. Excelsior He is extolled and exalted above all Angels and beatitudes; above all the Heavens, sitting on the right hand of the Father. Whom all the heavenly Creatures do worship, honour, and do reverence unto. Where he prayeth for his people, and is Mediator in his manhood to his Father for us.

This our Bishop purgeth our conscience (as witnesseth the Apostle) he cleanseth our Souls, he maketh us inwardly beauteous and fair. The Bishop of Rome lacketh many of these notable vertues. He hath few or none of these properties, few or none of these qualities. He is (as we Magnus. all are sinners) a sinner. To whom this word Magnus, great, is not convenient, nor can be in him any ways verified. For he cannot forgive sin as our Bishop doth, nor justifie as he doth, neither enter in sancta sanctorum, with his own blood, as he did. How can he then be called a great Bishop, that is, (as we be all sinners) a sinner, a breaker of the Laws of God, and daily doth, or may fail and sin? And for that cause the Law commanded that every Bishop and Priest should first offer Hosts and Sacrifice for his own sins, and afterward for the sins of the people. How can he therefore be called a great Bishop or Priest?

Our Bishop we speak of is the very great Bishop. No dole, no fraud, no guile was ever found in his mouth. And when the Prince of the World, the Divel, came to him, he could find no point of sin in him. Wherefore Gabriel the Archangel shewing his Nativity unto Mary his Mother, said, Hic erit magnus, & Filius Altissimi vocabitur. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of Luke 1. God. And again it is written of him, Propheta magnus surrexit inter nos. A great Prophet is risen among us. Sin Luke 7. maketh a Man small and little; little in reputation before God and Man. Vertue maketh Man great and of high reputation. Shew me one place in Scripture where you have read, that a sinner was called great; I trow it shall not be found. Will you hear who were called great in No sinner called great in the Scripture. Vertue; It is written of Isaac, Quod proficiebat, & factus est magnus valde. He profited greatly in Vertue, Gen. 26. and was made great, great in reputation of the world. Moses was called Magnus, Great for his Vertue. Abraham and John Baptist likewise. Now Jesus our Bishop, is Exod. 11. Luk. 1. called Magnus Episcopus, magnus Sacerdos, And after him never Bishop called Magnus in all Scripture, neither in the reputation of Man, unless it be in comparison one of another (and so Saints and holy livers are called great in respect of sinners, or other meaner livers) But where Christ our Bishop cometh, there he, not in comparison of other, but simpliciter, by his own magnitude and greatness, and of himself, ever was and is great, of whom it is written, A summo cœlo egressio ejus; & Psal. 18. accursus ejus usque ad summum ejus. And as the Apostle also proveth in many places by expres word. But now there is no Bishop or Priest in this world that may worthily of himself be called great, nor ought to take this name Magnus upon him. {KING Hen. 8.}

This is he therefore of whom it is written, Magnus Sacerdos ex fratribus suis. The great Bishop above all Levit. 21. other. And as he is called, and in very deed is, Pastor pastorum, Pontifex pontificum, Propheta prophetarum, Sanctus sanctorum, Dominus dominantium, Rex regum; ita & Magnus magnorum est. And as he is called the Herdsman of Herdsmen, the Bishop of Bishops, the Prophet of Prophets, the Holy of Holiest, the Lord of Lords, the King of Kings; even so he is called, and verily is Episcopus magnus. Therefore the Prophet did add; Magnus Sacerdos ex fratribus suis, The great Bishop or Priest. Great of himself, great in vertue and power: great of himself, and great in comparison afore all other. And therefore the Apostle said, Habemus Pontificem magnum, qui penetravit cœlos, Jesum Filium Dei; We have a great Bishop which did penetrate the Heavens, Jesus the Son of God.

Here may ye now see, how the Bishop of Rome doth wrongfully incroach upon our great Bishop, Jesus Christ, to take from him not only this name Magnus; and is not with that name yet contented, but addeth more, viz. Maximus, Summus, Sanctissimus, Beatissimus, Universalis, and such other; The Greatest, the Highest, the Holiest, the Blessedst and Universal, in the superlative Degree, and yet there is no great Bishop but Christ only, no supreme Bishop but he only, none Holy, none Blessed, none Unisal Bishop but only he. The Bishop of Rome and all other Bishops are but Underlings and unworthy Suffragans unto this Bishop Christ.

This our Christ (as witnesseth the Apostle) is Pontifex The Pope incroacheth upon Christ. nostræ confessionis, The Bishop whom we do confess to be our Great Bishop, our High Bishop, our Supreme Bishop, our Holy Bishop, Blessed and Universal Bishop. Which names are reserved only unto Christ, and to no Earthly Bishop; Not to the Bishop of Rome, not to the Bishop of Jerusalem, not to the Bishop of Antioch, nor of Constantinople, nor to any other Bishop. No Earthly Bishop may presume to take upon him these high and holy Names, only to God appropriate.

God of thy goodness thou mayest, and I trust wilt once make this Vain-glorious Bishop of Rome first to know and acknowledge thy Son Christ to be the only Supreme and Universal Bishop of the World. Secondarily to know himself, his weakness, his frailty, and his presumption; To know his Office and bounden duty unto thee: To know his own Dioceis, and to usurp no further: Thirdly, to have a low, humble, meek heart and stomach, to fear thee God, and thy judgments, to knowledge his own faults and usurpations, and to redress the same.

Now to return unto our matter, it followeth in the Letter first taken; De quo edere non habent potestatem qui Tabernaculo deserviunt, &c. And thus much out of John Longlands Sermon against the Pope.

You heard before by the Kings Injunctions above expressed, and directed out Anno 1538, how all such Images and Pictures which were abused with Pilgrimage or offerings of any Idolatry were abolished: By vertue of which Injunctions, divers Idols, and specially the most notable Stocks of Idolatry, were taken down the same year, 1538 {Ann. 1538} as the Images of Walsingham, Ipswich, Worcester, the Lady Images and Pilgrimages destroyed in England. of Willesdon, Thomas Becket, with many more, having Engines to make their eies to open and roll about, and other parts of their body to stir, and many other false juglings, as the blood of Hayles, and such like, wherewith the simple People a long time had been deceived. All which were espied out, and destroyed.

Among divers other of these foul Idols, there went also The Idol of Darvel Gatheren in Wales. in the same reckoning a certain old Idolatrous Image in Wales, named Darvel Gatheren: which in the Month of May, in the year above mentioned, was brought up to London, and burned in Smithfield. With the which Idol also was burnt the same time and hanged for Treason, Frier Forrest, of whom some mention was partly touched before in the Story of Cardinal Wolsey.

Frier

{KING Hen. 8.}

Frier Forreſt.

Frier Forreſt executed for rebelling againſt the Kings Supremacy.

THis Forreſt was an obſervant Frier, and had ſecretly in Confeſſions declared to many of the Kings Subjects that the King was not ſupream Head; and being thereof accuſed and apprehended, he was examined how he could ſay that the King was not ſupream Head of the Church, when he himſelf had ſworn to the contrary? He anſwered, That he took his Oath with his outward man, but his inward man never conſented thereunto. And being further accuſed of divers damnable Articles, and thereupon convicted, he gladly ſubmitted himſelf to abide the puniſhment of the Church. Upon this ſubmiſſion, having more liberty than before he had to talk with whom he would, he became as far from his ſubmiſſion as ever he was. And when his Abjuration was ſent him to read, he utterly refuſed it, and obſtinately perſevered in his Errors: wherefore he was juſtly condemned, after hanged in Smithfield in Chains upon a Gallows quick, by the middle and armholes, and fire was made under him, and ſo was he conſumed and burnt to death.

Frier Forreſt burnt in Smithfield.

In the place of Execution, there was a Scaffold prepared for the Kings moſt honourable Council, and the Nobles of the Realm to ſit upon, to grant him Pardon, if he had any ſpark of Repentance in him. There was alſo a Pulpit prepared, where the right reverend Father, Hugh Latimer, Biſhop of Worceſter declared his Errors, and manifeſtly confuted them by the Scripture, with many godly Exhortations to move him to Repentance. But he was ſo forward, that he neither would hear, neither ſpeak. A little before, the foreſaid Image, called Darvell Gatheren, coming out of Wales, was brought to the Gallows, and there alſo with the foreſaid Frier, as is ſaid, was ſet on fire: whom the Welchmen much worſhipped, and had a Propheſie amongſt them, That this Image ſhould ſet a whole Forreſt on fire. Which Propheſie took effect; for he ſet this Frier Forreſt on fire, and conſumed him to nothing. The Frier, when he ſaw the fire come, and that preſent death was at hand, he caught hold upon the Ladder, and would not let it go, but ſo unpatiently took his death, as never any man that put his truſt in God, at any time ſo ungodly or unquietly ended his life.

The ruine and diſſolution of Abbeys and Monaſteries in England.

In the month of October and November the ſame year, ſhortly after the overthrow of theſe Images and Pilgrimages, followed alſo the ruine of the Abbeys and religious Houſes, which by the ſpecial motion of the Lord Cromwel (or rather and principally, by the ſingular bleſſing of Almighty God) were ſuppreſſed, being given a little before by Act of Parliament into the Kings hand; whereupon not only the Houſes were raſed, but their Poſſeſſions alſo diſparkled among the Nobility in ſuch ſort, as all Friers, Monks, Chanons, Nuns, and other Sects of Religion were then ſo rooted out of this Realm from the very foundation, that there ſeemeth, by Gods Grace, no poſſibility hereafter left for the Generation of thoſe ſtrange weeds to grow here any more, according to the true Verdict of our Lord and Saviour Chriſt in his Goſpel, ſaying, Every Plantation being not planted of my Father, ſhall be plucked up by the roots, &c.

Mat. 15.

The Hiſtory of the worthy Martyr of God John Lambert, otherwiſe named Nicolſon, with his Troubles, Examinations and Anſwers, as well before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Warham, and other Biſhops: as alſo before King Henry the Eighth, by whom at length he was condemned to death, and burned in Smithfield, in Anno 1538.

{Anno 1538.} IMmediately upon the ruine and deſtruction of the Monaſteries, the ſame year, and in the month of November, followed the trouble and condemnation of John Lambert, the faithful Servant of Jeſus Chriſt, and Martyr of bleſſed Memory. This Lambert being born and brought up in Norfolk, was firſt converted by Bilney, and ſtudied in the Univerſity of Cambridge. Where after that he had ſufficiently profited both in Latin and Greek, and had tranſlated out of both Tongues ſundry things into the Engliſh-Tongue, being inforced at laſt by violence of the time, he departed from thence to the parts beyond the Seas, to Tindall and Frith; and there remained the ſpace of a year and more, being Preacher and Chaplain to the Engliſh-Houſe at Antwerp, till he was diſturbed by Sir Thomas More, and by the Accuſation of one Barlow, was carried from Antwerp to London: where he was brought to Examination firſt at Lambeth, then at the Biſhops Houſe at Oxford, before Warham the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and other Adverſaries, having five and forty Articles miniſtred againſt him, whereunto he rendred Anſwer again by writing. The which Anſwers foraſmuch as they contain great learning, and may give ſome light to the better underſtanding of the common cauſes of Religion now in controverſie, I thought here to exemplifie the ſame, as they came right happily to our hands. The Copy both of the Articles, and alſo of his Anſwers, here in order followeth.

Anſwer to the firſt Article. UNto your firſt demand, wherein you do ask whether I was ſuſpect of infamed of Hereſie? I anſwer, That I am not certain what all perſons at all ſeaſons have deemed or ſuſpected of me, peradventure ſome better, ſome worſe, like as that opinion of the people was never one, but thought diverſly of all the famous Prophets, and of the Apoſtles, yea, and of Chriſt himſelf: as appeareth in Saint John, how when he came into Jeruſalem in the Feaſt called Scenopegia, anon there aroſe upon him a great noiſe, ſome ſaying that he was a very good man, other ſaid nay, and called him a Seducer, becauſe he led the people from the right ways of Moſes Law into Error. Seeing therefore that all men could not ſay well by Chriſt, which is the Author of Verity and Truth, yea the very Truth it ſelf, and likewiſe of his beſt Servants: what ſhould I need to regard, if at ſome time, ſome perſon for a like cauſe ſhould ſuſpect of me amiſs, and evil report of me. Saying, moreover it is ſaid in the Goſpel, Væ vobis cum laudaverint vos omnes homines, &c. Woe be to you when all men ſpeak well of you: for ſo did their Fathers to the falſe Prophets. If therefore at any ſeaſon ſuch infamy was put upon me, I am glad that I have ſo little regarded the ſame, that now I have forgotten it. And though I did remember any ſuch, yet were I more than twice a fool to ſhew you thereof: for it is written in your own Law, Nemo tenetur prodere ſeipſum, no man is bound to bewray himſelf. But this I cenſure you, I was never ſo charged with ſuſpicion or infamy of this crime, that I was therefore at any time convented and reproved afore any Judge afore that I was troubled for theſe cauſes, for which I was at the firſt put into your hands: and of them, ſeeing

No man bound to bewray himſelf.

KING Hen.8. seeing you could not prove me faulty, I wonder why you would never yet pronounce me quit and innocent, according as I have even lowly desired of you, and required full instantly the same. But letting those things pass, you have imagined new matters to charge me with, wherein I think certainly, that you could no more have proved me culpable, than you did in the first; that is to wit, no whit culpable in neither, had it not been, that by long imprisonment you inforced me to tell what I thought in them, which I have and will freely do; and that indifferently considered, I suppose shall not deserve any sore punishment, unless you will beard the truth, whereunto I hope it shall not disagree.

Answer to the second Article.

¶ To your second demand, where you do inquire whether ever I had any of Luthers Books, and namely, since they were condemned, and how long I kept them, and whether ever I have spent any study in them? I say that indeed I have had of them, and that both before they were condemned and also since, but I never will, ne can tell you, how long I kept them; but truth it is, that I have studied upon them, and I thank God that ever I so did: for by them hath God shewed unto me, and also to a huge multitude of other, such light, as the deceiveable darkness of them (I beseech God amend it) that name themselves, but amiss, to be the holy Church, cannot abide. And that appeareth evidently, for they dare not stand to any trial. He coveteth above all things, as all his Adversaries do well know, that all his writings, and the writings of all his Adversaries, might be translated into all Languages, to the intent that all people might see and know, what is said of every part, whereby men should the better judge what the truth is. And in this me thinketh he requireth nothing but equity; for the Law would have no man condemned, ne justified, until his cause were heard and known.

Christians bidden to try spirits. 1 *Joh.*4.

2 Joh. 1.

But the contrary part, I mean our over-rich Prelacy, which is so drowned in voluptuous living that they cannot attend to study Gods Scripture, ne preach the same, which should be the principal part of their Office, abhor this fashion (albeit it is right indifferent and full equity) no less than they do abhor death. And no marvel, for doubtless, if it so could be obtained, that the Writings of all Parties might openly be seen and conferred, we should soon see their sleight dealing and facing Doctrine, with all other cloked abusion, lightly overthrown, as appeareth well in Almaine: for there be the Books of every Party seen openly, and translated in the Vulgar Language, that all people may see and read upon them; and so upon the sight of the Books, they lightly follow the true light of Gods Word, refusing the horrour of darkness and false Doctrine, whereby before they have been seduced from the right teaching and way shewed in the Bible. And this is done, not of an hundred, ne of a thousand, but generally of whole Cities and Countries, both high and low, few or none except.

Over-rich Prelates.

Popish doctrine will abide no trial.

The facing Doctrine of the Papists.

Trial and reading of Books free in Germany.

But our Prelates seeing this, and that their dealing should, if this light were set up, soon be detect and, discovered, have sent out Commandments, that if any person should adventure to keep any such Books, they shall be in so doing Excommunicate from God, and all his Saints, and cursed as black a Pitch, whether the Books be in Latin, English, French, Dutch, or any other Tongue; as indeed men seeing the fruit contained in them have set them forth in all Languages. But this ought not Christian men to think any newelty; for so did their Forefathers the Prelates in Christs time, and after to the Apostles; yea, and if it were well tried, I think it should be soon found out, that they have so dealt ever since unto this day. For when Christ went about preaching, the Scribes and Pharisees, which were Bishops then and Prelates, gave a general Commandment, That whosoever confessed him to be Christ, should be accursed, and put out of the Synagogue, that we call the Church, and so they were.

Why Luthers Books be restrained of Popish Prelates.

The time of Popish Prelates, and of the Pharisees resembled and compared together.

Look in the Acts of the Apostles, and you shall find how they were in like manner served; yea, look in the Old Testament, and you shall find (as I remember) how they procured of one that was a Temporal Ruler at that season, to have the Prophesie of Jeremy (for he of all other is most vehement against the dissimulation of Priests) to be burned: why then should we eschew them, or their works (unless we knew a better cause why) whom our Prelates reject and cast away, seeing they render no reasonable cause of their enterprize; but presuming of their power, without any due authority that I can find, granted unto them so to do, will; because they so command, so have all done, according to the tyrannical saying, as I trow, of Sardanapalus, Sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas; That is to say, So will I, so do I command, and that my will for reason stand.

But I would to God that such knew what spirit they have in them; for if they had indeed the Spirit which they claim and pretend to have, I mean the Spirit of Christ, I dare say it should soon alter thee from such haughty Language and doting, and cause them to turn a new leaf; for that Spirit is full of softness and lenity, lowliness and humility, patience and temperancy, void of wilfulness and tyranny, yea, it should cause them not to prevent, but easily to follow the Counsel and Doctrine of Christs Apostles and holy Saints that be their Interpreters. As Saint Paul, which writing unto the Thessalonians would have them all to prove all things, and to retain or hold that only which is good, refraining from all that hath semblance of evil. And Saint John would have Christian people to try the Spirits of them that should speak, whether they were of God or no. Also he writing in another Epistle unto a Noble woman, and unto her Children, saith, If any person shall come unto you, bringing with them the Doctrine that is not of Christ, receive him not into your house, ne make him any chear. So that in this he would have Women to know the Doctrine of Christ, and to love that, refusing to give Credence unto foreign Teaching, not favouring the same.

1 *Thes.*5.

In the first Epistle also to the Corinthians, Saint Paul writing in general to all the Inhabitants of that City, saith, Brethren, be ye not Children in wit and understanding, but as concerning maliciousness, be you Children. In wit I would have you perfect; and why? Verily for none other cause, but that we should (as he writeth unto the Hebrews) have discretion to judge the good from ill, and the ill from the good, and so to be like men differing from beasts, according unto the saying of the Prophet, See that ye be not like unto an Horse or a Mule which lack understanding. And we should pray with him in another Psalm, O Lord teach me the way that I should walk in, for I lift up my Soul unto thee.

Saint Chrysostome according unto this, in a certain Book of his Commentaries upon Matthew, the Book is called Opus imperfectum, writeth after this manner, so near as my remembrance doth serve, and certain I am that I shall not mis-report him, and in that I will be tried whensoever it shall please you to bring the Book. The Priests that were Pharisees in the time (saith he) of Christ, made an Ordinance, That whosoever should acknowledge Jesus to be Christ, should be accursed and Excommunicate. If then the Pharisees or Priests that now do occupy their rooms should make a like Ordinance, because they would not have Christs Doctrine to be professed for hindering of their lucre, should we therefore give in all points credence unto them, and leave off to seek after the knowledge of Christs Doctrine? Nay truly, Why (quoth he) shall we not be excused herein by ignorance, seeing we be forefended by the Rulers to have knowledge? He answereth, No verily; for if (saith he) when thou desirest to buy Cloth, thou wilt not be content to see one Merchants Ware, but go from the first to the second, from the second to the third, and so further, to know where is the best Cloth and best cheap; thou using such careful diligence for a Temporal profit, art well worthy great reproach, that wilt be more remiss and negligent for thy Souls health. Seek therefore about from one Doctor or Teacher unto another, that thou mayst know who doth most duly and truly teach Christ, and him follow, according to the saying of the Apostle, Prove all, and hold the good; and as it is said in the Gospel, that thou mayst know Qui sunt probati nummularii, & qui non; that is to wit, know who be true or lawful Changers or Coiners, and who be not.

*Mat.*25.

He also addeth another similitude or parable. When thou goest (quoth he) a journey, not knowing perfectly the way, thou wilt, lest thou shouldst fail of the right way, enquire of one man and after of another, and if thou shouldst chance to go somewhat wide, yet thou wilt wilt not ſo leave off thy Journey undone, but make inquiſition again to come where thou wouldſt reſt. So likewiſe (ſaith he) ought we to ſeek out intentively for the wealth of our Soul, Qui ſunt probi clavigeri, & qui non; that is to ſay, who are the right Key-bearers, and who not; meaning thereby the Key-bearers, Chriſts Apoſtles, and Bearers of his Teſtimony or Meſſage. Which ſaying although it were written of no authentical Author (howbeit it is written even of him whom I ſhewed you in the ſaid work) but uttered of one that were in little eſtimation, every indifferent perſon having wit and reaſon would aſſent, I doubt not, that it is full true.

Chrys. Ibid.

Pſegmata Chryſoſt. The ſame Author alſo, in an Epiſtle which you ſhall find in a work called Pſegmata Chryſoſtomi, ſheweth, as I remember, how certain men deemed ill of him, becauſe he did ſtudy Origens Work, which afore was condemned for an Heretick: But he maketh an Apology to the ſame, ſhewing, that Chriſtian men ought not to be reprehended for ſo doing. In which Apology he bringeth for his defence the ſaying of Paul above rehearſed, Prove all things, &c. Likewiſe did St. Hierome, I wote not well in what place of his Works, but you ſhall find it in a Treatiſe called Unio diſſidentium, where he entreateth De mandatis hominum. When it was objected againſt him that he retained by him the Works of Euſebius and of Origen, ſtudying upon them, he bringeth for him, that it was ſo lawful, the ſaid place of the Apoſtle, making therewith an anſwer worthy to be greatly noted.

Hierome.

The ſame is alſo reported in the Book called Eccleſiaſtica Hiſtoria, or elſe Hiſtoria Tripartita, I wote not now preciſely whether. So that theſe and other more Authorities of the Scripture, and ſemblable enſamples of holy Interpreters ſhall prove, that I and other may ſafely (no good Law inhibiting, unleſs Conſtitutions Phariſaical) read and ſearch the Works not only of Luther, but alſo of all other, be they never ſo ill or good; namely, ſeeing I am a Prieſt; whom the Biſhop of Norwich ought not to have admitted into Orders, unleſs he had ſeen me to have had judgment to diſcern good from ill, neither ought any of you to give Orders to any ſuch, in whom ye do not find like ability to judge the light from darkneſs, and the truth from falſehood: and therefore if for this you would puniſh me, I cannot ſee but you ſhall condemn your ſelves, judging rather of ſenſual pleaſure than of equity, which in men of your Order were a great ſhame, and much uncomely.

Anſwer to the third Article. Lambert made Prieſt in Norwich.

¶ Unto your third Demand, wherein you do ask whether I was Conſtitute a Prieſt, and in what Dioceſs, and of what Biſhop; I ſay that I was made a Prieſt in Norwich, and of the Biſhops Suffragan of the ſame Dioceſs.

Anſwer to the fourth Article. Marriage of Prieſts, whether it be lawful and expedient.

¶ Unto the fourth, wherein you do demand whether it be lawful for a Prieſt to marry a Wife, and whether a Prieſt in ſome caſe be bound by the Law of God to marry a Wife; I ſay that it is lawful, yea, and neceſſary for all men that have not given to them of God the gift of Chaſtity, to marry a Wife, and that ſheweth both Chriſt and Saint Paul. In the nineteenth of Matthew Chriſt ſpeaking unto the Phariſees that came to tempt him, in the concluſion, ſaith in this wiſe, Whoſoever ſhall forſake his Wife except it be for Fornication, and marrieth another, Mat. 19. committeth Adultery, and whoſoever marrieth her ſo forſaken, doth alſo commit Adultery.

With that ſpeak his Diſciples, if thus the caſe ſtand betwixt a Man and his Wife, it ſhall be hurtful and not expedient to contract Matrimony. He made anſwer, Mat. 19. Every man cannot away with that ſaying, but they unto whom it is given of God; meaning, that every man could not abide ſingle or unmarried, but ſuch unto whom was given of God a ſpecial Grace ſo to continue. And if with your better adviſe I might be ſomewhat herein bold, I would ſuppoſe that whereas he doth ſay, Non omnes ſunt capaces hujus dicti (Every man cannot away with that ſaying) this word Non omnes ought to be here taken as it is in many other places of Scripture, as where in the Pſalm it is ſaid, Non judicabitur in conſpectu tuo omnis vivens; It is meant that no perſon living ſhall be juſtified afore God. And in the Epiſtle to the Galathians, and to the Romans, where it is ſaid, Ex operibus Legis Gal. 2. Rom. 9.

Non omnes taken univerſally in Scripture.

non juſtificabitur omnis caro; (By the Works of the Law no Fleſh ſhall be juſtified in his ſight) it is meant thereby Nulla caro: ſo that, Non omnis, after the rule of equipollence, ſhould be taken for as much as nullus, and then the ſenſe ſhould be thus, Nulli ſunt capaces hujus dicti niſi hi quibus datum ſit. No man can be capable of this ſaying, or can ſo paſs their life without marriage, except thoſe which have it given them by a ſingular Grace of God to live chaſt.

KING Hen. 8.

Chaſtity is a gift only of God.

Then he proceeded further, ſaying, There be gelded men which ſo were born from their Mothers Womb, and there be ſome gelded men, which have been ſo made by men, and there be gelded men that have ſo made themſelves for love of the Kingdom of Heaven. In concluſion he ſaith, Who that receiveth this ſaying, thinketh that it ſhould be unexpedient for him to marry, and that he may live chaſt through the gift given him of God, let him take it, and ſo live. So he leaveth ſingle life to all mens election, without any compelling them thereto.

Mat. 19.

Gelded men three ways to be ta'n in Scripture.

Singleneſs ought not to be compelled.

Hereunto aſſenteth Saint Paul, when that by many reaſons he had perſwaded the Corinthians to ſingle life; finally, he concludeth thus, This (quoth he) ſay I unto you, willing that which ſhould be for your profit, but not to bring you into bondage. And a little afore, I would (quoth he) that all men were even as my ſelf am. But every one hath a ſeveral Gift from God, one one wiſe, another another wiſe: ſhewing thereby, that unto ſome it is given of God to live continent, and to other to engender and procreate Children, and therefore his will cannot come to effect. Which thing you may eaſily perceive in this, that after he had ſhewed forth his good wiſh and deſire, ſaying, Velim omnes homines, &c. I would that all men were even as I am, he putteth a Conjunction adverſative, that declareth an obſtacle or ſtop, ſaying, Sed unuſquiſque proprium donum habet, &c. But every man hath his proper Gift of God. Upon this he proceedeth further, whereby you may apertly ſee, that he would have all men, none except, to marry, wanting the gift of continency. This (quoth he) I ſay to the unmarried and Widows; expedient it were for them to remain as I do; but if they cannot live continent, let them contract marriage, for better is it to marry than to burn. This proveth well, that all Prieſts, wanting continency of heart, had need to marry to avoid burning luſt, unleſs they be inobedient to the mind of Chriſt that ſpake in Paul, in obſerving the Traditions of men. In the beginning of the ſame Chapter alſo he ſaith, It is good that a man ſhould not deal with a woman; notwithſtanding for avoiding Fornication (quoth he) let every man have his wife, and every woman have her husband. He ſaith here, Quiſque & quæque, every man and every woman. And not quidam nec quædam, ſome man nor ſome woman; he excepteth neither Prieſt nor Nun, but every one both man and woman is bound, for avoiding of burning and Fornication, to marry, not having the gift given of Chaſtity.

I Cor. 7.

Marriage neceſſary for all men, whoſoever lack continency of heart.

Quiſque, quæque, not quidam quædam.

The ſame alſo confirmeth your own Law, Diſtinct. 29. where it is written thus, Si quis diſcernit Presbyterum conjugatum, tanquam occaſione nuptiarum, quod offerre non debeat, anathema ſit. If any man do hold that a Prieſt being married, in that reſpect that he is married, ought not to miniſter in his Function, be he accurſed. And in the 31. Diſt. Si quis vituperat nuptias, & dormientem cum viro ſuo fidelem, ac religioſam deteſtatur, aut culpabilem æſtimat, velut quæ Regnum Dei introire non poſſit, anathema ſit. If any man ſhall find fault with Matrimony, and deteſt a faithful and devout woman lying with her husband, and think her culpable, as one that could not therefore enter into the Kingdom of God, be he accurſed. And every where elſe ſuch like are to be ſeen.

Diſt. 29.

Diſt. 31.

Marriage left free by the Pope's Law.

Moreover, in Hiſtoria tripartita it is written, that a noble Martyr of Chriſt called Paphnutius, in the Nicene Council, when all other Biſhops were purpoſed to have enacted there, that Prieſts ſhould live unmarried, this holy man reſiſted them ſo mightily both with Reaſons, and alſo with Authority of Scripture, that then their purpoſe altered, and their firſt deviſe could not paſs. And one Authority I remember was this, which he borrowed of Paul in the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy. Your deviſe (quoth he) may have a ſemblance of Holineſs, but indeed it ſhall be the deſtruction and undoing of the ſame.

Paphnutius.

Marriage permitted free by the Council of Nice.

{KING Hen.8.} Les illuſtrations de Gaules.

Moreover, in one of the principal Hiſtories of France, called Les illuſtrations de Gaulles, Whoſoever pleaſe may there read it, as it ſtandeth, with ſix leaves afore the end of the ſame; how the Author with deep ſorrow lamenteth the Ordinance that decreed firſt, Prieſts to live unmarried, ſhewing and that amply, the miſeries that have enſued in France thereby, imputing it unto Calixt the Pope, of whom he maketh a doleful mention in meter, whereof the firſt I yet remember, and it is thus, O Sancte Calixte, totus mundus odit te, &c. O holy Calixte, all the world hateth thee. Which followeth in writing to all that luſt to behold therein. But what need I to make longer Treatiſe hereof, forſomuch as you do daily both hear and ſee, what foul abomination ariſeth in every corner, of this pitious Law made of men that would preſume to be wiſer than God, thinking (as we ever do) that either he would not, or elſe for lack of wiſdom he could not ſhew us a ſufficient Law or way, to direct our life and converſation, to come to the joy and reſting place of him promiſed, and ſo of us longed and looked for. Whereby we both be far unreaſonable in ſo deeming of him after our unwiſe wit, and he much diſhonoured. The which I beſeech him to help. Amen.

Men will be wiſer than God.

Anſwer to the fifth Article. Free will to deſerve, joy or pain.

¶ Unto the fifth, where ye do ask, whether I believe that whatſoever is done of man, whether it be good or ill, cometh of neceſſity; that is (as you conſtrue) to wit, whether man hath free will ſo that he may deſerve joy or pain? I ſay (as I ſaid at the beginning) that unto the firſt part of your Riddle, I neither can, ne will give any definitive anſwer, forſomuch as it ſurmounteth my capacity, truſting that God ſhall ſend hereafter other that ſhall be of better learning and wit than I, to indite it. As concerning the ſecond part, whereas you do interpret; that is to ſay, whether man hath free will or no, ſo that he may deſerve joy or pain; as for our deſerving ſpecially of joy, I think it very little or none, even when we do the very Commandments and Law of God, and that am I taught by our Saviour in St. Luke, where he ſaith thus, Which of you, quoth he, having a Servant that hath eared your Land, or fed your Beaſts, will ſay unto him when he cometh home out of the field, go thy way quickly, and ſit down to thy meat; and rather will not ſay unto him, make ready my Supper, ſerving me thereat till I have made an end thereof, and afterward take thy ſelf meat and drink. Think you that he is bound to thank his Servant which thus ſhall do his Commandment? I trow (ſaith he) nay. Even ſo you, ſaith he, when you have done all things to you commanded, ſay yet you be unprofitable Servants, and have done that which you were bound to do.

Merits not to be eſteemed.

In which words you may clearly ſee, that he would not have us greatly eſteem our merits, when we have done that is commanded by God, but rather reckoning our ſelves to be but Servants unprofitable to God, forſomuch as he hath no need of our well-doing for his own advancement, but only that he loveth to ſee us do well for our own behoof: and moreover, that when we have done his bidding, we ought not ſo to magnifie, neither our ſelf, ne our own free will, but laud him with a meek heart, through whoſe benefit we have done (if at any time we do it) his liking and pleaſure; not regarding our merit, but his Grace and Benefit; Whereby only is done all that in any wiſe is to him acceptable. And thus if we ought not to attend our merits in doing the Commandment of God, much leſs ſhould we look for merit, for obſerving of our own inventions or traditions of men, unto which there is no benefit in all Scripture, which Paul calleth the word of Truth and of Faith, promiſed.

Obſerving of Gods works worketh in us no merit. Ergo, much leſs the obſerving of mens traditions.

But here may be objected againſt me, that the Reward is promiſed in many places to them that do obſerve the Precepts of God. That I affirm to be very ſooth. Notwithſtanding ſuch Reward ſhall never be attained of us, except by the Grace and Benefit of him which worketh all things in all Creatures. And this affirmeth well Saint Auguſtine, Saint Ambroſe, Fulgentius, with other, as ye may ſee every where in their Works, and eſpecially in the Treatiſe called Unio diſſidentium, wherein he entreateth de gratia & meritis. And of St. Auguſtine I remember two or three right notable Sentences concerning the ſame. One is in the ninth Book of his Confeſſions, in this form, Væ etiam laudabili vitæ hominum, ſi remota miſericordia diſcutias eam. Quia vere non exquiris delicta vehementer, fiduciali ter ſperamus aliquem locum apud te invenire indulgentiæ. Quiſquis autem tibi enumerat vera merita ſua, quid tibi enumerat niſi munera tua? O ſi cognoſcerent ſe omnes, & qui gloriatur in domino gloriaretur; Woe be to the life of men, be they never ſo holy, if thou ſhalt examine them, ſetting thy mercy aſide. Becauſe thou doſt not exactly examine the faults of men, therefore we have a vehement hope and truſt to find ſome place of mercy with thee. And whoſoever recounteth unto thee his merits, what other thing doth he recount but thy benefits? O would to God all men would ſee and know themſelves, and that he which glorieth, would glory in the Lord. Again, in the firſt Book he ſaith thus unto God: Nunquid inops es & gaudes lucris? Nunquid avarus & uſuras exigis? Supererogatur tibi ut debeas? & quis habet quicquam non tuum? Reddis debita nulli debens, donas debita nihil perdens. Doth any man give that he oweth not unto thee, that thou ſhouldſt be in his debt? and hath any man ought that is not thine? Thou rendreſt debt, and yet oweſt to no man. Thou forgiveſt debt, and yet loſeſt nothing. And therefore his uſual prayer was this, Domine da quod jubes, & jube quod vis, Lord give that thou commandeſt, and command what thou wilt.

Reward how it is promiſed to works. Auguſt. lib. Confeſſio. 9.

Confeſſ. lib. 1

Alſo in the Book called Manuale Auguſtini, or de contemplatione Chriſti, he ſaith in this wiſe, Tota ſpes mea eſt in morte Domini. Mors ejus meritum meum, refugium meum, ſalus mea, & reſurrectio mea. Meritum meum, miſeratio Domini. Non ſum meriti inops quamdiu ille miſerationum Dominus non defuerit. Et ſi miſericordiæ Domini multæ, multus ego ſum in meritis. All my hope is in the Lords death. His death is my merit, my refuge, my health, and my reſurrection. My merit is the mercy of the Lord. I am not without merit, ſo long as the Lord of mercy ſhall continue. And if the mercies of the Lord be great and rich, then am I alſo great and rich in merits.

Good works how they be Gods, and how they be ours.

And to conclude, they be Chriſts own Merits and good Works (as ſaith Saint Ambroſe well nigh every where) that he worketh in us, which he doth reward and crown, and not ours, if one ſhould look narrowly upon the thing, and ſpeak properly. Howbeit, they yet nevertheleſs are ours by him, forſomuch as his merciful bounty imputeth his goods to be ours. So that in this, I wot not how other do mean, which luſt to ſell their Merits unto their Neighbours that happily have ſcarce enough for themſelves: but I do wholly deem and believe, according as the Scripture with theſe holy Doctors and ſuch other do teach, wiſhing that men ever for good doing ſhould not ſo much (as the common people doth) regard their merit or reward, for that it is not the thing that ingendreth the love of God in us, but rather maketh men to honour God in a ſervile faſhion, and for the love of themſelves, in doing works for love of reward, or for dread of pain, more then becauſe it ſo pleaſeth God, and liketh him: whereas if we regarded firſt, yea and altogether, that it is our duty to do well (which is the keeping of his Commandments) and that ſo we ſhould content his pleaſure, reward ſhould undoubtedly enſue good deeds, although we minded no whit the ſame, as heat followeth evermore the fire unſeparate there from. And thus we ſhould ſerve God with hearty love as Children, and not for meed or dread, as unloving thrals and ſervants.

To walk with God after a ſervile faſhion, is to vvork for merit.

Reward followeth good vvorks but yet good vvorks be not done for revvard.

Concerning free-will, I mean altogether as doth Saint Auguſtine, that of our ſelves we have no liberty ne hability to do the Will of God, but are ſubject unto ſin and thrals of the ſame, Concluſi ſub peccato, & venundati ſub eodem; Shut up and ſold under ſin, as witneſſeth both Eſay and alſo Paul: but by the Grace of God we are rid and ſet at liberty, according to the portion that every man hath taken of the ſame, ſome more, ſome leſs.

No ability in man to do the Will of God.

Rom. 7. 11.

Anſvver to the fifth Article. The Sacrament of the body and blood of the Lord.

¶ Whereas in your ſixth demand, you do enquire whether the Sacrament of the Altar be a Sacrament neceſſary unto Salvation, and whether after the conſecration of the Bread and Wine done by the Prieſt, as by the Miniſter of God, there is the very Body and Blood of Chriſt in likeneſs of Bread and Wine, neither can ne will anſwer one word, otherwiſe than I have told ſince I was delivered into your hands. Neither would I have anſwered one whit thereunto, knowing ſo much at the firſt as now I do, till you had brought forth ſome that that would have have accuſed me to have treſpaſſed in the ſame, which I am certain you cannot do, bringing any that is honeſt and credible.

¶ As concerning the other ſix Sacraments, I make you that ſame anſwer that I have done to the Sacrament of the Altar, and none other. That is, I will ſay nothing until ſome men appear to accuſe me in the ſame, unleſs I know a more reaſonable cauſe than I have yet heard, why I ſo ought to do. But as touching the form and faſhion, I ſhall anſwer willingly ſo far forth as my rudeneſs will ſerve; I hold well that ſuch as be duly elect Miniſters in the Church ought to baptize, except neceſſity require otherwiſe: and that the form uſed in the Church is in mine opinion not uncommendable. Nevertheleſs it ſhould edifie much more, if it were uttered in the vulgar Language, and cauſe people in the Baptiſm of Children more effectuouſly to thank God for his Inſtitution and high benefit thereby reſprented.

Baptiſm to be in the Vulgar Tongue.

Anſwer to the eighth Article.

In like condition do I alſo deem of miniſtration in all the other, that it ſhould be expedient to have them miniſtred openly in the vulgar Language, for the edifying of the people. As concerning the form uſed in Matrimony, I like it right well, and think it commendable, ſaving in all Countries lightly Judas hath ſet in his foot over far, and taken in hand to ſell his Maſter, accompanied with Simon Magus, ſaying, What will you give me if I deliver unto you Chriſt? This is the ſaying of all them that require, without any lawful authority, in ſome places twelve pence, in ſome ſix pence, in ſome more, in ſome leſs, but in every place lightly ſome money when a couple ſhould be married: and this they call The Churches Right. Moreover, that they will not ſuffer Marriage to be ſolemnized at all times of the year, I think it ſtandeth not with Chriſts Rule, but rather is againſt the ſame: and that they will not ſuffer the Banes upon all Holy-days to be proclaimed, unleſs a Diſpenſation for money be purchaſed therefore. All this God forbiddeth. Finally, like as no money ought to be given for this, no more ſhould any be taken for any other. But the contrary is ſeen, which is great pity, yea even at the receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar, Prieſts every where uſe to claim ſomewhat, and in ſome parts of the Weſt-Country, no leſs than two pence of every Pole.

Matrimony ought freely to be miniſtred, and without money.

Anſwer to the ninth Article.

As touching Prieſthood in the Primitive-Church, when vertue bare (as ancient Doctors do deem, and Scripture in mine opinion recordeth the ſame) moſt room, there were no more Officers in the Churches of God, than Biſhops and Deacons; that is to ſay, Miniſters, as witneſſeth beſide Scripture full apertly, Hierome in his Commentaries upon the Epiſtles of Paul, whereas he ſaith, That thoſe whom we call Prieſts were all one and none other but Biſhops, and the Biſhops none other but Prieſts, men ancient both in age and learning, ſo near as they could be choſen. Neither were they inſtituted and choſen as they be now adays, with ſmall regard of a Biſhop or his Officer, only apposing them if they can conſtrue a Collect; but they were choſen not only of the Biſhop, but alſo with the conſent of the people among whom they ſhould have their living, as ſheweth Saint Cyprian; and the people (as he ſaith) ought to have power to chooſe Prieſts that be men of good Learning, of good and honeſt report: but alack for pity, ſuch Elections are now baniſhed, and new faſhions brought in. Which if we ſhould confer with the form of the Election ſhewed of Chriſt by his Apoſtle Paul, we ſhould find no ſmall diverſity, but all turned upſide down. To conclude, I ſay, the order or ſtate of Prieſts and Deacons was ordained by God, but Subdeacons and Conjurers, otherwiſe called Exorciſtæ and Accolitæ, which we call Benet and Collect, were inſtituted by the invention of men. And this you may find in the Law, Diſt. 21. and other places where it is written, Subdiaconatus tempore Apoſtolorum non fuit ſacer, Subdeaconſhip in the time of the Apoſtles was no holy Order.

Biſhops and Prieſts, all one in the old time.

Anſwer to the tenth Article.

¶ As touching ear-Confeſſion, I ſay, that the common faſhion now-uſed was never ordained by Chriſts Law, that is, written in the Bible, neither can you prove by any authority of the ſame, that we ought to confeſs all our offences particularly, with the circumſtances of all and of every ſuch, to any man. Again, for the maintenance of this which I have ſaid, you ſhall know that Chryſoſtome ſtandeth ſtiffly with me, in his Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, in an Homily alſo that he maketh upon the Pſalm Miſerere, and moreover in a Sermon that he maketh, De Pœnitentia, beſide many other Treatiſes, wherein he continueth ever one, teſtifying in ſemblable wiſe.

Auricular Confeſſion not ordained by God.

KING Hen. 8.

Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. ad Heb.

In Pſal. Miſerere Serm. de pœnitentia.

In like manner doth one of your principal Doctors, writing upon your Canon-Law, named Panormitanus, teſtifie that it is made by the Law of man, and not of God, in cap. Omnis utriuſque ſexus. In the Book alſo called Hiſtoria tripartita, you ſhall find how it was firſt inſtitute (as I remember) and after undone again, becauſe of a huge Villany committed with a Woman by a Miniſter of the Church, thorow Confeſſion.

Panormitanus Abbas in cap. omnis utriuſque ſexus.

Hiſtoria tripartita.

Alſo it is mentioned in the end of the firſt Diſt. de Pœnitentia, how the Greek-Church, whom I think you do not note to be Hereticks, will not yet hitherto allow it. There are alſo many reaſons brought forth, both to prove that Confeſſion made to a Prieſt ſhould not be neceſſary, and alſo that Confeſſion made unto God ſhould ſuffice, concluding in this wiſe, Quibus authoritatibus, &c. I could bring forth other that be yet living, men of ſurmounting and excellent literature, which exactly by many and mighty, both authorities and reaſons, do ſhew and confirm this my ſaying to be juſt: but I keep ſilence, and will not name them, leſt I ſhould bring them in hatred. Notwithſtanding I never ſaid, ne will ſay, but that men feeling themſelves agrieved in Conſcience with ſome great temptation, had need to go unto ſuch whom they know and truſt to be of ſtedfaſt Credence, and to have good skill in the Law of God, opening their grief unto them, to the intent they may know, thorow counſel, ſome eaſe and remedy thereof.

Diſt. de Pœnitentia.

The Greek Church allowed no confeſſion auriculat.

But in this I mean not that they ought to go unto their Curate, or to any other Prieſt, whoſe Credence they deem not all truſty, or their counſel not ſage, but to any other whatſoever he be, whom they know moſt ſufficient in properties above-ſhewed, when their Curate doth lack them. And this thing is moſt behoveable, when men needing counſel be ſo void of knowledge in Chriſts Law, that they cannot find therein remedy themſelves. For the Doctrine of Chriſt, if it were well known, containeth remedies for all infirmities and maladies of the mind, ſo that men by ſpiritual knowledge might eaſe themſelves.

Aſking counſel in the Church is good, but not tied to any perſon.

The ſecond part of the queſtion, whether a Prieſt looſeth a Sinner. Chriſt, and not the Prieſt, looſeth the Sinner.

To the other part of your queſtion, where you do ask whether a Prieſt in caſes unto him limited may looſe a Sinner confeſſed and contrite for his ſin, injoyning him wholeſome penance? I ſay that only Chriſt looſeth a Sinner which is contrite, by his word and promiſe, and the Prieſt doth nothing but ſhew and declare the word: Neither doth declaration or miniſtry of the Prieſt any whit avail for to looſe any perſon, unleſs he that ſhould be looſed give Credence unto the Word miniſtred and ſhewed by the Prieſt, which word or promiſe of Chriſt is called The word of Reconciliation or Atonement making betwixt God and man. And this teſtified St. Paul in the ſecond to the Corinthians, where he ſaith in this wiſe, God hath reconciled us unto him through Jeſus Chriſt. See how it is God that looſeth us from ſin, which is to make Reconciliation or Atonement betwixt us and him, and that through Chriſt whom he cauſed to die for the ſame purpoſe. And he (quoth St. Paul) hath ordained us Miniſters of the ſaid Atonement. See how Chriſts Apoſtles called not themſelves the Authors of binding and looſing, but Miniſters; For he (that is to wit God) reconciled the World unto him, forgiving their ſins. Where you may know what reconciling is. And hath committed (ſaith Paul) unto us to be Meſſengers of the ſame Word, or tydings of atonement or reconciling.

2 Cor. 5.

Chriſt only looſeth us from ſin. The Apoſtles not the Authors of binding and looſing, but Miniſters.

Alſo that the Power, whereby men are looſed from ſin, is not the Prieſts power, you may know by the vulgar ſaying, which is right true; yea and with leiſure, I doubt not but that I can ſhew the ſame in the Decrees, which is thus, Solus Deus remittit peccata, Only God forgiveth and pardoneth us of our ſins. And this was preached at Pauls Croſs the Sunday next after the Epiphany laſt, the Biſhop of London ſitting by, the Preacher ſpeaking after this form, treating of this Text, Ecce agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi, Behold the Lamb of

This ſaying is taken out of Peter Lombard, and cited in the Decrees.

God

KING Hen. 8. God which taketh away the ſins of the World. In that, ſaid the Preacher, teſtimony is given of Chriſt to be a Lamb, it is ſhewed that he was an innocent man. But in that it is ſaid, That he taketh away the ſins of the World, is ſhewed that he was God, alledging there for the confirmation of this part of his purpoſe, the vulgar ſaying above ſaid by me, Solus Deus remittit peccata. And the ſame Propoſition, or another equal with the ſame, uſeth Saint Chriſoſtome in an Homily that is made upon this Text of St. Matthew, Vocabitur nomen ejus Jeſus, &c. His Name ſhall be Mat. 1. called Jeſus, for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. Alſo Saint Chryſoſtome, In opere imperfecto, upon Mat. 23. this Text, Væ vobis Scribæ & Phariſæi, qui clauditis Regnum Cœlorum, &c. Wo be unto you Scribes and Phariſees, becauſe ye ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, &c. As near as my remembrance doth ſerve me, or elſe in ſome other place, but in the ſame Book (as I ſuppoſe) he affirmeth that the Keys of Heaven are the Word and Doctrine of God. This witneſſeth moreover Saint Gregory, I trow, in his Book called Paſtoralia, or elſe it is an Epiſtle that he writeth ad Epiſcopum Conſtantinopolitanum, in theſe words, Clavis apertionis eſt ſermo correctoris, qui increpando culpam detegit, quam ſæpe neſcit qui perpetravit. The Key of looſing is the word of the corrector, who rebuking doth diſcloſe the fault, which many times he knoweth not that committeth the ſame.

The keys of binding and looſing is the word of God. Greg. in paſtor.

Ambroſe. Saint Ambroſe, agreeing to the ſame, ſaith, Verbum Dei dimittit peccata. The Word of God forgiveth ſin. But ſhall we then ſay, that Gods Miniſters do not bind and looſe? I ſay no, not as the authors of ſo doing, but they do looſe and bind in like manner, Acts 26. as it is ſaid of Paul in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where our Saviour ſpake unto him in this manner: I ſhall (ſaid our Saviour) deliver thee from the People and Nations, unto whom I ſend thee, that thou ſhouldeſt open their eyes, that they may be converted from darkneſs to light. Here Paul is ſaid to open the eyes of mens hearts, albeit to ſpeak properly, it is God that ſo doth; and therefore David prayeth unto him, Re- Pſal. 119. vela oculos meos. Open mine eyes, O Lord. And in like manner it is ſpoken of John Baptiſt in the firſt Luke 1. of Luke, That he ſhould go before Chriſt in the ſpirit and power of Helias, and turn the hearts of the fathers to their Children, and the unbelievers to the wiſdom of the righteous. Albeit to turn mens hearts, and to work in them belongeth to God. But ſo uſe we to ſpeak, Metonymice. As if your Lordſhip had defined me to be excommunicate, and thereupon ſhould ſend a commandment to the Parſon of Knoll to declare the ſame, the people would ſay that the Parſon of Knoll proclaiming your commandment, had accurſed me; but yet doth he not properly curſe me, but you rather, when he in pronouncing the ſame, doth your act and commandment, rather than his own.

How Miniſters bind and looſe.

Metonymia, is a figure, when the name that properly belongeth to one, is improperly transferred to another thing.

Touching caſes limited to Prieſts and Miniſters, for looſing from ſin or binding in the ſame, I do know no ſuch things ſhewed in Scripture, which is the perfect way of our life. Neither can any man, I ſuppoſe, ſhew by authority thereof, that one ſhould have more or leſs limited him than another. And if you can or will thereby teach it me, I ſhall thank you for your doing, and pray God to requite you.

Power in binding and looſing, limitted no more to one miniſter than another.

Injoyning of Penance.

Concerning enjoyning of Penance, I know of none that men need to admit, nor you to put or enjoyn the ſame, except it be renovation of living in caſting apart old vice, and taking them unto new vertue, which every true penitent intendeth, or ought to intend verily by the grace and aſſiſtance of our Saviour Chriſt, to ſhew and perform.

Anſwer to the 11th Article.

¶ Unto the eleventh Article I ſay, That grace is given unto them that duly receive the Sacraments of Chriſt and his Church, but whether by them or no, that I cannot define; for God ſendeth his grace where he pleaſeth, either with them, or without them, and when he pleaſeth: ſo that it is at his arbitrement, and how and when. Moreover, many a lewd perſon receiveth the Sacraments, that are deſtitute of grace, to their confuſion. So that I cannot affirm that the Sacraments give grace; yet in due receit of the Sacraments, I ſuppoſe and think that God giveth unto them grace that ſo take them, as he doth unto all good, even without them alſo.

Sacraments, Whether they give grace or no.

¶ Whereas in your twelfth Article you do ask, Whether all things neceſſary unto ſalvation are put in holy Scripture, and whether things only there put be ſufficient, and whether ſome things upon neceſſity of ſalvation, are to be believed and obſerved, which are not expreſſed in Scripture: This is the queſtion, as great learned men have ſhewed me, whom I do count my friends, ſith the time I appeared at your Lordſhips aſſignment before M. Dr. Leſſe, and M. Melling, with other, in your Chappel of Lambeth, when theſe queſtions were firſt propounded, this I ſay is the queſtion which (as they told me) is the head and whole content of all other objected againſt me. Yea, this is both the helm and ſtern of all together, and that which they contended right ſore to impugn: but love of the truth (wherewith in this point I reckoned me well fenced) would not ſuffer me to apply and yield to their will, thinking quod Sanctum eſt veritatem præferre amicitiæ, that the truth ought to be preferred before all friendſhip and amity; and alſo, Si dextra manus ſcandalizet, deberet præſcindi & abjici, If thy right hand offend, it ought to be cut off and caſt away.

Truth to be preferred before friendſhip.

But touching an anſwer unto this queſtion, I ſuppoſe verily, that if I had Saint Cyril's Works by me, I ſhould not need to ſhew any other anſwer in this, than he hath ſhewed aforetime, writing upon this ſaying of Saint John, Sunt & alia multa quæ fecit Je- John 21. ſus, There are many things more which Jeſus did. Notwithſtanding, forſomuch as every man at all ſeaſons cannot have what he would, and therefore muſt make other ſhift, ſuch as he may: I ſay, as I ſuppoſe the firſt part of your queſtion to be very true, and therefore to be affirmed, that is to wit, that all things needful for mans ſalvation be mentioned and ſhewed in holy Scripture, and that the things only there put be ſufficient for the regiment of ſpiritual living, and mans ſouls health. And in this ſhall you find both the ancient Doctors ſtanding with me; and moreover, the ſuffrage of holy Writ, whoſe authority is of moſt ſovereign and infallible ſtedfaſtneſs.

Cyrillus in Johannem.

All things neceſſary to ſalvation, contained in Scripture.

Look what S. Jerome ſaith upon this Verſe, Do- Hieronie. minus narrabit in ſcripturis populorum, The Lord ſhall Pſal. 87. rehearſe it, when he writeth up the people. S. Am- Ambroſ. lib. de Paradiſo. broſe alſo in a Treatiſe, De Paradiſo, doth ſhew likewiſe, where he bringeth this Text of Paul, written in the 2d to the Corinthians, I am afraid leſt it may by ſome means be brought to paſs, that as the Serpent deceived Eve through wilineſs, ſo your minds may be corrupt from the ſimple verity that is in Chriſt. And alſo in his Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, upon this Text, In Chriſt Jeſus is all treaſure of wiſdom, and in divers other places of the ſame work.

Saint Chryſoſtome alſo in his Commentaries upon Paul 2 Tim. 3. declaring this ſaying, Omnis ſcriptura divinitus inſpirata, &c. The whole Scripture given by inſpiration of Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. Pauli & in opere imperfecto. God, &c. And in his Book called Opus imperfectum, I wot not preciſely upon what Text, but there you ſhall find, that he would have a true Preacher of Gods Law not ſwarving therefro, neither on the right hand, neither on the left, but keeping thereafter, according to the teaching of Solomon: for he that ſhould thereunto add or withdraw, ſhould enterpriſe, as ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, to be wiſer than God. Theſe or elſe ſuch like words doth he ſay. I will be deemed by the Book brought forth, becauſe my remembrance cannot retain perfectly all ſuch things.

The Preacher muſt not ſwarve either on the right hand or left, from the expreſs word of God.

Saint Cyprian maintaineth well the ſame in an Epiſtle that he writeth ad Cecilium fratrem, which I would to God were in Engliſh, that all men might learn the devout goodneſs in it contained. In the ſame he teacheth clearly, how we ought to hear Chriſt only, and his learning, not regarding ne attending to the traditions of men, like as he doth alſo in many other places. And this agreeth well with Scripture, which is called the word of ſalvation, the adminiſtration of righteouſneſs, the word of truth, yea and the truth it ſelf, the rod of direction, our ſpiritual food, the ſpiritual ſword that we ought to fight with againſt all temptations and aſſaults of our ghoſtly enemies, the ſeed of God, the Kingdom of Heaven, and Keys of the ſame, the power of God, the light of the World, which whoſo followeth ſhall not be overcome with darkneſs; the law of God, his wiſdom and teſtament. Of which words, and ſuch like, every one will give matter of ſubſtantial Argument, that we following the ſame Doctrine only, ſhall have ſufficient ſafe conduct to come unto the inheritance promiſed, albeit none other ways or means were annexed with the ſame. And certain I am that in this bleſſed Doctrine of Chriſt is taught how we ought to do truth and mercy, which is all that we need to do, as teſtifieth the Pſalm, in theſe words, Univerſæ viæ domini miſericordia & veritas, &c. All the ways of the Lord are mercy and truth. And again, the Prophet willing us to do as he did, ſaith in this manner, Adhæſi teſtimoniis tuis Domine, noli me confundere: I have cleaved to thy teſtimonies, O Lord, confound me not. In like manner the ſaid whole Pſalm warneth us; yea, all the Scripture biddeth us ſtick faſt to the ſteady and true Word of God, ſaying, that he is verax, & viæ ejus veritas: omnis autem homo vanitas & mendax: For he is true, and all his ways are truth, but all men are vain and lyers. For that is the ſure foundation which cannot fail them that ground thereupon, as reporteth Chriſt; Every one, ſaith he, that heareth my words, and doth them, is like to a wiſe man that buildeth upon a ſure foundation. And there ought to be none other foundation to Chriſtian men, but only the undoubted truth of Jeſus to build our faith upon, and direct our living thereafter, as ſheweth Saint Paul, ſaying Fundamentum aliud nemo, &c. Other Foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt. And likewiſe in the Epiſtle unto the Epheſians, where he ſaith, Jam non eſtis hoſpites & advenæ, ſed concives ſanctorum, & domeſtici Dei, &c. Now ye are no more ſtrangers and foreiners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the Houſhold of God.

The Word ſufficient for all our direction.

Pſal. 25.

Pſa. 118.

1 Cor. 3.

Ephe. 2, Ephe. 4.

And in the ſame Epiſtle, Saint Paul, dilating of Chriſts beneficence, ſheweth how that he ordained in the Church divers Officers, to the edifying of Chriſtian people, that he calleth Chriſts body, until all we may come unto the unity of Faith, which cometh by following of one Doctrine which is Chriſts, whereby we may grow to be perfect men, and that we ſhould not be here like to children, carried about with every wind of Doctrine, by deceit and wilineſs of men that ſtudy to deceive us.

Heb. 13. The inconſtancy and variableneſs of mens conſtitutions.

The Popes lavvs vvere never vvholly received of all men.

Heb. 13.

In like form doth he warn us in his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, that we ſhould not be carried about as the wind with divers and ſtrange Doctrines, but continue in that which ever continueth like and all one, agreeable for all men in all parts, and that at all times; not being changeable as mens Conſtitutions be, whereof look what one doth counſel, or ordain to be of effect, another annulls the ſame, according as mens minds do alway alter and are full unſteady. Neither do ſuch pertain unto all men; for the Greeks, with other (whom the Pope, ne none of his people will yet deny to be of Chriſts Church) will in no condition admit ſuch, neither for men to live after them, nor to believe them as pertaining to their faith. But they allow well the Doctrine that perſevereth every one, and is immutable, as ſheweth Saint Paul, ſaying, Jeſus Chriſt yeſterday and to day is all one, and ſo ever ſhall be. He is white Bread, without any ſower leven of Phariſaical Traditions; verity without guile, light without any darkneſs, the very ſtraight way that hath neither hook ne crook. From this ought we not to turn, neither upon one hand ne other unleſs we will go from him that is our felicity and anchor of ſafety.

But what ſhould I more intreat of this, except I would recite all Scriptures, which in every part is full of admonitions, exhorting and warning us to cleave faſt unto this way, which is the Doctrine of the Goſpel? which God I beſeech him grant us all both to know and love, taking heed that in no wiſe we be ſeduced therefrom by Laws and Doctrines of men. Look alſo into Coloſſians, Chap. 2. and in the Epiſtle to Timothy and Titus. So that I conclude, In holy Scripture to be contained ſufficiently enough of Doctrine, for the regiment and ſalvation of our ſouls; and this, becauſe learned men do call the head Article laid againſt me, I would that all men ſhould well note it, and record my ſaying therein hereafter, whatſoever ſhall betide of me; for the truth is ſo indeed, that hereupon hangeth the ſumm of all. Therefore I ſhall recite it once again; I ſay, That in holy Scripture the Doctrine there only contained, is ſufficient for the ſalvation of Chriſtian mens ſouls; God give us grace we may know it, to build our faith ſtedfaſtly upon the ſame, in working thereafter.

The chief Article objected againſt John Lambert.

Doctrine of the holy Scripture ſufficient to ſalvation of Chriſtian mens ſouls.

Unwritten verities.

As touching the later part of your queſtion, I ſay, That there are many things both to be obſerved, and to be believed, that are not expreſſed in Scripture; as the Civil Laws of Princes and Commonalties, ordained for civil regiment of the body, and all other, ſo that they be not hurtful to faith or charity, but helpful to the ſame, I reckon that we ought to keep them, not only for fear of puniſhment, but alſo for Conſcience ſake, although ſuch ordinances be not expreſly and particularly in Scripture expreſſed, for they are generally therein contained and ſpoken of.

Moreover, if you mean by this word expreſſed, that which in Scripture is clearly ſhewed out, and appeareth evidently to every Reader or hearer that hath but a mean underſtanding, ſo do I affirm that there are ſome things which a man ought to believe, although they be not of him expreſly underſtood: As I have ever believed that the Virgin Mary was and is a perpetual Virgin, and that the ſame might be gathered by the Scripture. But if by this word expreſſed, you mean comprehended or contained (as methinks the mind of him that wrote the demand ſhould be) ſo that he meaneth by this queſtion thus: whether any thing ought to be obſerved and believed, which is not contained in Scripture, and that upon neceſſity of ſalvatioc; then I ſay, that there is nothing either to be obſerved, or to be believed upon neceſſity of ſalvation, which is not contained in Scripture, and mentioned in the ſame, either generally or ſpecially. Yet do I not deny but other things are to be believed, as I believed that Doctor Warham was Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ere ever I ſaw your Lordſhip, and I believe verily who was my Father and Mother, albeit I had none intelligence when they begot me, and ſuch like; and yet in ſuch points, although a man have not ſtedfaſt belief he may be ſaved.

2 Tim. 2. The Purgatory of Chriſtians.

¶ To the thirteenth Article, where you do ask whether I believe that Purgatory is, and whether that ſouls departed be therein tormented and purged? I ſay that there is a Purgatory in this world, and that doth the Scripture, and alſo the holy Doctors call the fire of tribulation, through which all Chriſtians ſhall paſs, as teſtifieth Saint Paul in the ſecond Chapter of the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, whoſe teſtimony is full notable and true, albeit that few do know it, and fewer peradventure, will believe it. Mark you the words, good people, and know, that they be his, and not mine. They be thus, All that will live godly in Jeſus Chriſt, ſhall ſuffer perſecution. In this Purgatory do I now reckon my ſelf to ſtand; God ſend me well to perſevere unto his honour. Of this ſpeaketh alſo Saint Peter in theſe words which pertain to the inſtruction of all Chriſtian people; Virtute Dei cuſtodimini per fidem ad ſalutem, quæ in hoc parata eſt ut pateſiat in tempore ſupremo, in quo exultatis nunc, ad breve tempus afflicti in variis experimentis ſi opus ſit, quo exploratio fidei veſtræ multo pretioſior auro quod perit, & tamen per ignem probatur, reperiatur in glo- riam & honorem. Te (quoth he) are preserved through the power of God by faith unto salvation, which is prepared to be revealed in the last time, wherein ye now rejoice, though for a season (if need require) ye are sundry ways afflicted and tormented, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto laud, glory and honour, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, &c. Other Purgatory know I none, that you can prove by Scripture, unless it be by one place of the same, which well examined, I trow, shall make but little against me, for the maintenance of any other than I have shewed.

But whatsoever they brought against me, I trust that holy Doctors shall by their interpretation sustain the part, the which I do take upon me, making answer for me sufficient, so that you shall say, it is no new thing which I have or shall speak; yet that you should see even now somewhat written of ancient Doctors concerning the same, I shall shew you what I have read in Saint Augustine; first in a Sermon that he maketh De Ebrietate, in this wise saying, Nemo se decipiat fratres; duo enim loca sunt, & tertius non est visus. Qui cum Christo regnare non meruit, cum Diabolo absque ulla dubitatione peribit. That is to say, Brethren, let no man deceive himself, for there be two places, and the third is not known. He that with Christ hath not deserved to reign, shall without doubt perish with the Devil. In another also that he maketh, De vanitate hujus seculi, it is said thus: Scitote vos, quod cum anima a corpore avellitur, statim in Paradiso pro meritis bonis collocatur, aut certe pro peccatis, in inferni tartara præcipitatur. Eligite modo quod vultis, aut perpetualiter gaudere cum Sanctis, aut sine fine cruciari cum impiis. Which is thus to say, Know you that when the soul is departed from the body, it is incontinent, for his good deeds, put in Paradise, or else thrown headlong into the Dungeon of Hell for his sins. Choose ye now which ye list, and purpose while ye be here in this life, either to joy perpetually with the Saints, or else to be tormented without end among wicked sinners. Thus saith holy Augustine.

No third place by St. Augustine.

What our deserving is S. Augustine declareth before in the fifth article. Fol. 1005. No Purgatory.

To make an end, I hope surely, that by the aid of our Saviour, I shall come to Heaven, and reign with Christ, ere that I shall feel any Purgatory, beside that I have and shall sustain in this life. And he that believeth not stedfastly any other to be, shall yet be saved as well (and God woteth whether better or no, but I think no whit less) as such as teach the people, or suffer them to be taught, that in going from this station to that, from one Altar to another, they shall cause souls to be delivered: yea, and as well as such as say, that a man, being buried in a Gray Friers Frock, shall so have remission of the third part of his sins, as is granted in a Bull unto the said Religion, and such like. For Saint Augustine shall make with me in his Book called Enchiridion, after he hath confuted the opinion of some that in the Church of Christ living in mischief, ungraciously, taking thereof no repentance, did yet falsly deem that they should be saved through the cleansing of Purgatory, where he concludeth thus: Such a thing after this life to be, saith he, is not incredible, but whether it be so or no, doubt may be thereof moved, or a question demanded. The same words doth he again recite in a Book called, Quæstiones ad Dulcium, or Dulcitium, I wot not whethether it is called, and there he entreateth the same more copiously; and would I might see the place once again.

The 3d part of sins forgiven them that be buried in a Gray Friers Weed. Aug. in Enchiridion.

To this agreeth Saint Paul, writing thus to the Corinthians, Omnes nos manifestari oportet coram Tribunali Christi, ut reportet quisque ea quæ fiunt per corpus, juxta id quod fecit, sive bonum, sive malum. For we must all appear before the Judgment Seat of Christ, that every man may receive the things which are done in his body, according to that he hath done, Heb. 13.

whether it be good or evil. And again, where he writeth unto the Hebrews, I trow it be said in this wise, Memores sitis vinctorum, tanquam una cum illis vincti: eorum qui affliguntur veluti ipsi quoque versantes in corpore. Remember them that are in bonds, even as though you were bound with them: be mindful of them which are in affliction, as if ye were also afflicted in the body.

Answer to the 14th Article.

¶ To the fourteenth Article, where you ask whether holy Martyrs, Apostles and Confessors departed from this world, ought to be honoured, called upon, and prayed unto? I answer, as touching the honouring of them, with the very words of Saint Augustine, in his Book, De vera Religione, in his last leaf, where he saith thus: Non sit nobis religio cultus hominum mortuorum: quia si pie vixerunt, non sic habentur, ut tales quærant honores, sed illum a nobis coli volunt, quo illuminante lætantur meriti sui nos esse consortes; honorandi sunt ergo propter imitationem non adorandi proper religionem. Si autem male vixerunt, ubicunque sunt, non sunt colendi. Again, a little after the same, he saith, Nam id ipsum actum est temporali dispensatione ad salutem nostram, ut naturam humanam ipsa Dei virtus, & Dei sapientia incommutabilis, & consubstantialis patri & coæternus susciperе dignaretur, per quam nos doceret, id esse homini colendum, quod ab omni creatura intellectuali & rationali colendum est: hoc est, ipsos optimos Angelos, & excellentissima Dei ministeria velle credamus, ut unum cum ipsis colamus Deum, cujus contemplatione beati sunt; neque enim & nos videndo Angelum beati sumus, sed videndo veritatem, qua ipsos etiam diligimus Angelos & his congratulamur.

Praying to Saints.

Id est, ejusdem meriti cujus ipsi sunt participes.

Nec invidemus quod ea paratiores, vel nullis molestiis interpedientibus perfruuntur, sed magis eos diligimus, quoniam & nos tale aliquid sperare a communi Domino jussi sumus. Quare honoramus eos charitate, non servitute; nec eis templa construimus. Nolunt enim se sic honorari a nobis, quia nos ipsi cum boni sumus, Templa summi Dei esse noverunt. Recte itaque scribitur, hominem ab Angelo prohibitum ne se adoraret, sed unum Deum, sub quo ille esset & conservus. This saith S. Augustine, handling the same matter a little after more at large.

Angels would have no Temples builded to them.

The content of this unto you I expound, that know no Latine, for I covet that all persons should know both my thought in this, and all manner of doing, to the intent that all persons I would have true report and testimony, whatsoever shall betide me. Saint Augustine in these words would have, that we should worship no men departed, be they never so good and holy, for they seek no such honour, but would have us to worship God alone; no, nor yet no Angel, ne honour the same, but only in the imitation of them, following their good acts in our living, as they followed our most merciful God while they were alive, not building Churches in the name or honour of them, for they would have no such honour done unto them; it is to them no pleasure, but contrariwise. No, the Angels will not that we should build any Churches in reverence of them; but would that with them we should honour the original, maker, and performer of all. They refuse all honour, saving that which is called honor charitatis, which is nothing else, but to be loved. Thus saith Saint Augustine. Which love we shall testifie in following their good acts, by helping the poor or helpless with alms and mercy, and dealing truly in word and deed, according to our state and calling, both towards God and Man; which is no light matter to them that do consider the thing well. But whosoever shall truly and duly follow that trade, shall feel it (I dare say) as the burthen of Christs Cross was unto him, right weighty and grievous when he bare it to Calvary; saving that we need not to fear, for he hath promised to be with us in tribulation, to rid us from the same. For the Prophet David saith, Cum ceciderit Justus non collidetur, quia Dominus supponit manum Psal. 35.

Men departed are not to be worshipped.

The best worshipping of Saints, is in following their good acts.

ſuam. That is, to wit, When a juſt perſon beginneth to fall, he ſhall not be born flat down to be broken, for the Lord ſhall put his hand under him to rear him up again. And in the Goſpel he biddeth, Venite ad me omnes qui laboratis & onerati eſtis, & ego reficiam vos. That is to ſay, Come you unto me all that do travel and are ſore charged, and I ſhall comfort or refreſh you. Take my yoke upon you, learning of me that am ſoft and meek minded, and you ſhall find eaſe thereby in your ſouls, for my yoke is eaſie, and my burthen is light. See you here how he is ever ready to ſupport them that for truth ſhall ſuſtain the chargeable and ſore vexations put upon them of the World, which cannot endure the truth to prevail, and the untruth to be diſcloſed.

Mat. 11.

Invocation.

As touching Invocation, That is, to wit, a calling upon them, we have in Scripture, how we ſhould call upon Almighty God in all neceſſities and tribulations. As in the Pſalms every where, as in this, Call upon me in time of your tribulation, and I ſhall deliver you. Mark how he ſaith here, call upon me, appointing neither Saint Thomas, ne Maſter John Shorn. And alſo in another place, The Lord is nigh unto them that call upon him, that call upon him truly, and with that he ſheweth who calleth truly upon him, ſaying thus, He ſhall do the will or deſire of them that reverence him, and ſhall hear graciouſly their prayer, and make them ſafe, for the Lord loveth all that love him, and all ſinners ſhall be deſtroyed.

Pſal. 50.

God only to be invoked. What it is to call truly upon God.

Pſal. 145.

And thus uſed the holy Prophets, Patriarchs, Apoſtles, and other good faithful people in old time, in all tribulation and anguiſh, to reſort unto the head Fountain, which is of grace infinite, as is ſhewed in other places in this wiſe; In my trouble I called upon the Lord (ſaith David) and he heard me graciouſly: when I was troubled, I cried unto the Lord, and he mercifully heard me. Alſo I lift mine eyes unto the Mountains; but from whence ſhall help come unto me? Mine help (quoth he) ſhall come from the Lord that made both Heaven and Earth. I read the firſt of theſe Verſes in form of interrogation, following Saint Auguſtine, which (as I remember) interpreteth it in this wiſe. If I recite not authorities in all places in the moſt perfect form, I would pray you ſomewhat to pardon me, for you know that I want Books, and have not them lying by me. Notwithſtanding, I am certain, I ſhall not decline much from him. The Hills toward the which David did lift up his eyes, were Saints and holy men, of whom when he could not have his mind ſatisfied, he turned another way, ſaying, From whence ſhall help come unto me? Anon he remembring himſelf better, ſued unto God himſelf, of whom incontinent he obtained the accompliſhment of his wiſh, and ſo witneſſed the ſame for our inſtruction ſaying, Mine help is of the Lord, or cometh from the Lord, which made Heaven and Earth. This interpretation (as near as I remember) is after the mind of Saint Auguſtine; And I ſuppoſe verily, that it is not contrary unto the mind of God, ne diſagreeing with the ſequel of Scripture.

Pſal. 4. 18. 127.

God only is the giver of help, and not Saints.

Alſo in this wiſe it is reported in the New Teſtament by authority deduced out of the Old, where it is written, Every one that calleth upon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved. And mark how, cum energia, it is ſaid, upon the name of the Lord, without any ſending of us, either to Saint Chriſtopher, (though he be painted never ſo ſtout) either to Saint Patrick's Purgatory in Ireland, or to Saint James in Galicia, in the year of Grace, or yet to any other Saint or place; but he would have us that we ſhould call upon Almighty God, and upon his name, for the love that he beareth to Chriſt, who is alway our Advocate before our Father, to purchaſe mercy for our ſins; and not for our ſins only, quoth Saint John (who is the Writer of this ſaying and teſtimony) but alſo for the ſins of all the World. Saint Auguſtine upon the ſame noteth, that Saint John in that place ſaith, We have an Advocate, and that Chriſt is Advocate for him like as he is for all other to purchaſe mercy for him, like as he doth for all other that ſhall be ſaved; and that Saint John will not be known for our Advocate, but that Chriſt ſhould be taken for Advocate of all.

KING Hen. 8. 1 Joh. 3. Aug. in Joh. Chriſt is Advocate as well for Saints and Apoſtles, as for us.

Saint Bede (as I remember) upon the ſame, maketh as much for this purpoſe, as doth Saint Auguſtine, or well more; ſo that by courſe of Scripture we are taught to reſort for all aid and relief (as I have ſaid) unto the head Spring and Fountain of all comfort and mercy, as Saint Paul calleth him, the Father of all mercies, and of all comfort, which is ready to comfort us in all tribulation: Which (as the Pſalm reporteth) healeth all our infirmities, and taketh mercy upon all our iniquities. For he is ſweet (as is ſaid in another place) and gentle, and many mercies are laid up for all thoſe that call upon him. Yet he ſheweth us no where, I trow, of benefits that we ſhall purchaſe by praying unto Saints departed; and if any perſon can or will vouchſafe to teach me that, by ſome authority of Scripture, I would think my ſelf highly beholding to him, whatſoever he were, either great or ſmall, young or old; but I ween it cannot be.

Bede and St. John.

I have made truly long ſearch, yet could I never find any ſuch ſubſtantial teaching; howbeit, I offer my ſelf ever to learn, and know that my rude wit, fooliſh youth, unexpert experience, and feeble diſcretion had need of good inſtruction as much as any other. Howbeit I ſee (thanked be God) that ſometime he ſheweth ſome ſparkle of light and wiſdom to children, hiding the ſame from other that are reputed of higher prudence; ſo that the World thereby many times is brought into admiration, ſeeing ſuch facts done by God before their face, and laugh thereat ſometime with indignation, as the Phariſees did at the blind man whom Chriſt had reſtored to ſight, where they ſaid to him, Thou Caitiff waſt born blind for thy ſins, and wilt thou teach us that are a great multitude of high officers of the Temple, and Doctors to teach the Law? As who would ſay, It becometh thee full ill. Yet we ought not to marvel greatly at ſuch doing, for ſo much as Saint Paul, in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, Chapter 1. ſheweth of the like practice done in his time, and that he writeth for the inſtruction of all Ages after enſuing, ſo that it appertaineth (like as all the holy Scripture doth) as well to our time, as it did to that it was firſt written in. The Doctrine of Chriſts Croſs, that is, to wit, of the New Teſtament, is to them that periſh, folly, (ſaith he) but to us that obtain thereby ſalvation, (meaning thereby to ſuch as believe) it is the might or power of God; for it is written (ſaith he) by the Prophet Eſay, That God aforetime, ſaid, he would deſtroy the wiſdom of the wiſe, and the underſtanding or learning of the learned would he throw away and deſpiſe.

John 9.

1 Cor. 1.

This

KING H. 8.

This Prophecy alledged, Paul thought to be authority sufficient to dissuade the Corinthians from the foolish affiance, vain-glory, or opinion that they had in men, whom they peradventure over-highly esteemed for their offices or solemn titles. So that he proceedeth forth in the same; Where are ye now (quoth he) the worldly wise, the Scribes, that is to say, Doctors, and such other like Officers, Hath not God shewed the wisdom of the world to be foolish and unsavoury? For after that by the wisdom of God (which is shewed in Scripture, I suppose) the world hath not studied to know God, by wisdom it hath pleased God now to save them that believe through the foolishness of preaching. He calleth the Word of God foolish preaching, not because it was foolish, for afore he called it godly wisdom, but he spake after the opinion of them that set little or nought thereby, esteeming it as Esop's Cock did the precious stone, and as Swine do Pearls.

The wisdom of this World confounded. Why the Gospel is called foolish preaching.

After long process in the same matter, he concludes thus: Brethren (saith he) you see your calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh are called to the belief of the Gospel, nor many mighty men, ne many of noble Parentage, but those that be fools after the estimation of the world, hath God chosen to confound the wise, &c.

Therefore I say (as I said afore) that thanks be to God, albeit I am (as I shewed before) void of such great prudency that other be well endued with, yet I see partly now their great reasons be not very substantial, whereby they contend by the treaty of reason, when authority faileth them, to shew that we ought to pray to Saints departed, to be Mediators for us to Christ. And amongst other, this is one that they lean much upon, bringing it forth so usually, that common people well nigh altogether harp upon the same; some favouring it, other contrariwise esteeming it of no value.

Objection to prove invocation of Saints taken out of reason.

The reason is this; If when one should desire to come to the speech of our Sovereign to obtain some boon of him, need it were, first to purchase the favour of his Chamberlains, or some other like Officers to bring him to the Kings presence, for else he may wait long in vain, until he be full a cold, ere that he shall speak with his Grace, and much less is he like to obtain his petition. In like wise it fareth (as they say) betwixt God and us; of whom, if we would purchase any benefit, we must first break unto the Saints departed, making them our friends to go betwixt God and us, as Mediators, and intercessors. But such (with their leave I would speak it) I think are deceived, in that they resemble God and the King together. For though the King be a full gracious Prince (as I hear by common report he is) yet is he not in graciousness to be conferred with God; and though he were as gracious as might be, yet hath he not the knowledge that is in God, for God knew of all things before the beginning of the World, and is every where, to see not only our outward dealing, but also all secret thoughts of all mens hearts; so that he needeth no Mediators to inform him of our desires, as the King doth need. And he is full of infinite mercy, that I may as lightly, or as soon obtain of him that which is for my behoof, as I should win by praying holy Saints to be intercessors to him for me.

Answer to the objection wherein is declared that God and an earthly King are not to be confessed.

No comparison between God and an earthly King.

Therefore I passing such apparent reasons, take me to the ensample of Antiquity, I mean of the Patriarchs, Prophets, and the Apostles, and authority of Scripture, which teach that we need not to fear, but may boldly resort unto Christ himself, and his holy Father, forasmuch as he bids us in these words and other like, so to do, saying, Come unto me all ye that travel, are vexed and sore charged, and I will refresh and ease you. Mark how he biddeth us to resort unto himself, and that without fear. For he and his Father, which are all one, giveth abundantly of all goodness unto all men, and upbraideth no man for their unworthiness. But if we intend to obtain of him, we must, all doubtfulness (as I said before) put apart, with a sure confidence of his mercy, ask of him that we would have; so that I leave unto other what they list to do, praying Jesus that we all may lust for that is most pleasing to him.

Mat. 11. The Lord only to be sought unto with prayer.

But I think concerning my self, that according to Christs own commandment I may without any doubt casting, resort in all incumbrances, to seek ease thereof, even unto himself and to his blessed Father. Therefore he biddeth us when we should pray, to say after this fashion, Our Father which, &c. For there is no creature, ne creatures, that ever were or be, that have more, nor so much, neither of might, whereby cometh ability to give help; ne of mercy and tenderness, which should make them willing in proportion agreeable with ability; ne of knowledge, that should teach to minister both the other, as is our Lord God, which not only is Almighty, all-merciful, and all-wise, but also infinite in all these glorious properties, so that undoubtedly he can, will, and best knoweth how to relieve and succour us in all necessity and anguish. To whom be honour without end for ever, Amen.

God in might, mercy and knowledge incomparable.

Might, mercy, knowledge, how, when, and whom to help.

One thing yet I will shew you in this case; of which I was once advertised by a great learned man, who (as I suppose) is now living. I will not name him, lest I should perhaps cause any displeasure to be conceived against him through my relation. The thing was this, I will (quoth he) pray unto Saints, but that shall be when I think that God either cannot, or will not give me my petition. But that (as I shewed in the Convocation-house) shall never be I hope. And therefore it is to me needless to seek any further about, standing in such trust and belief, as I hope I have found upon Gods sure promise.

The saying of a learned man.

Saints are to be prayed to when God is not able or will not hear us.

¶ To the fifteenth Article, where you demand whether the Saints in Heaven, as Mediators, pray for us? I say, That I believe Saints in Heaven do pray for us; for I suppose they know that all men generally living upon earth, be wrapped in manifold miseries, like as they also were, their souls being imprisoned within their bodies, being mortal. Albeit I think they know not what particular miseries men upon earth be intangled and clogged with, as sheweth Augustine, or else some other (as I think rather) under his name, in a certain work, saying, in this wise, Ibi sunt spiritus defunctorum, ubi non vident quæcunque aguntur aut eveniunt in ista vita hominum. Quomodo ergo vident tumulos suos, aut corpora sua, utrum abjecta jaceant an sepulta? Quomodo intersunt miseriæ vivorum? cum vel sua ipsi mala patiantur, si talia merita contraxerunt, vel in pace requiescant, ubi mala nulla nec patiendo nec compatiendo sustineant, liberati ab omnibus malis quæ patiendo & compatiendo cum hic viverent, sustinebant. The summ hereof is, That souls departed feel, nor know of no particular miseries sustained of men living in this World, whereby they should need to take either patience, or else compassion after their decease. Yet, forsomuch as they know in general, that all men living are clad with frailty, and their charity is not minished after they be hence departed, but increased; therefore I believe verily, that they do pray for us as petitioners, but not as Mediators, so far forth as I can see. For Scripture useth to speak but of one Mediator, which I think signifieth a maker of peace, or atonement betwixt God the Father and Man. Record I take of Paul, which in the Epistle to Timothy, Chapter 2. saith, Unus est Deus, Unus est & Mediator Dei & Hominum, Homo Christus Iesus, qui dedit semetipsum redemptionem pro omnibus. Erasmus translateth it, conciliator Dei & hominum, That is to say, There is one God and one Mediator or Peacemaker betwixt God and Man, the Man called Christ Jesus, which gave himself for the redemption of all.

Answer to the 15th Article.

Saints know no particular miseries on earth.

Saints in Heaven whether they pray for us.

One Mediator, and what a Mediator is.

1 Tim. 2.

1 Tim. 2.

Thus I say, I believe Saints in Heaven do pray for us as Petitioners, but not as Mediators. Yea, all the Saints, I ween, do pray, and long that the Day of Judgment may soon come, according to the saying of St. Paul, Solicita creaturæ expectatio revelationem filiorum Dei expectat, The fervent desire of the creature waiteth when the Sons of God shall be revealed. And again, Omnis creatura congemiscit, & nobiscum parturit usque ad hoc tempus, Every creature groaneth with us, and travelleth in pain together unto this present; which shall be for the accomplishment of glory, both to them and all other elect of God, to be his Children and Co-inheritors with Christ.

Rom. 8.

Anſwer to the 16th Article.

℄ In the ſixteenth Article, where you demand, whether I believe that Oblations and Pilgrimages may be devoutly and meritoriouſly done to the Sepulchres and Relicks of Saints? I ſay, That what they may be I cannot perfectly tell; for God can ſo work, that unto thoſe whom he hath choſen to be inheritors with him, all things ſhall turn to a good concluſion, as ſaith Saint Paul to the Romans, in this wiſe, Unto thoſe that love God all things ſhall well ſucceed and work together for their furtherance in goodneſs: Of whom it is written in the Pſalm, Bleſſed is that Nation that hath the Lord for their God, the people whom he hath choſen to be his inheritors: Yea, their evil deeds ſhall not hurt them, but come well to paſs for the increaſe of vertue. For as it is ſaid in the Epiſtle, Cui minus remittitur, minus diligit. To whom leſs is forgiven, he loveth leſs. And again, it hurted not Oneſimus, that he ran away from his Maſter Philemon, but God wrought, that by occaſion thereof he met with Paul, which converted him to the faith of the Goſpel, who before was without belief. Therefore, whether they may be done meritoriouſly or no, I will not define, God woteth. But this I ſay, That God did never inſtitute any ſuch thing in the New Teſtament, which is the verity and rule of all Chriſtian people to follow and believe. Yea, that only is of perfect ſurety, and none other, but as it is agreeable and hath ground of the ſame. And like as we have no certain Doctrine inſtitute of Chriſt, ne his Diſciples, teaching us thus to do; no more is there any merit appointed of him therefore, as I ſhewed afore, where I told my mind of our merits.

Pilgrimages and Oblations.

Luke 7. All things work to the beſt to the godly.

Moreover, where ye put Pie, which I call devoutly, very true devotion (that is called in Latin Pietas) is that which hath annexed therewith divine promiſes for this preſent life, and for that which is to come, as witneſſeth Paul, 1 Tim. 4. which is nothing elſe but the obſervation of Chriſts Law, that in the Pſalm, for the pureneſs thereof is called Argentum igne examinatum, purgatum ſeptuplum, Silver fined often, and many times through the fire. It hath no chaff in it, as have Mens Traditions, but is pure and clean Wheat, as ſheweth Jeremy, writing in this wiſe, Quid paleis ad triticum? Propter hoc ego ad Prophetas, dicit Dominus, qui furantur verba mea unusquiſque a proximo ſuo, & ſeducunt populum meum in mendaciis ſuis, & in erroribus ſuis: What is the chaff to the Wheat? Therefore behold, I will come againſt the Prophets, ſaith the Lord, that ſteal my Word every one from his neighbour, and deceive my people in their lies and in theis errors. And this devotion is that which Saint James calleth the pure Religion of Chriſt, ſaying, Pure and immaculate Religion before God the Father is, to viſit fatherleſs Children and Widows in their vexation. Whereby he meaneth all needy people that are ſuccourleſs and helpleſs, with our counſel and other alms, according to our ability, whenſoever we ſee them in need and diſtreſs.

Pie Pietas defined.

Jer. 23.

True devotion or pure Religion what it is.

James 1. Pure Religion.

The other part of this Religion ſhewed by St. James, is, That a man ſhould keep himſelf clean from the World; and that do they which be not affectionate ſo unto any thing therein, but that they have the things of the world, or occupy the ſame by true dealing, ſo that they can find in their heart to depart from them when God ſhall pleaſe or charity ſo requireth.

Thus doing, we ſhall follow the exhortation of bleſſed Paul, which writing to the Corinthians, ſaith thus, Brethren, the time is ſhort: this remaineth, that they which have Wives ſhould be as they had them not; and thoſe that weep ſhould be as they wept not; and thoſe that buy, as if they were without poſſeſſion; and they that occupy this world, as though they occupied it not; for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. And this meaneth none other thing, but that we ſhould not love ne dread any worldly thing, paſſing meaſure or inordinately, but God above all things, and all other things in him or for him; and he that thus doth, fulfils the commandment of Chriſt ſpoken to the rich man in the Goſpel, where he ſaith, Go and ſell all that ever thou haſt, and come follow me. For he hath ſold away all that ever he hath, that ſurely intendeth for the love of Chriſt to help the Poor with all that he may. Voluntas reputatur pro facto; The will is accepted for the deed, as is commonly ſaid. And this ſaying both of James, and alſo of the Evangeliſt, I think verily belongeth to all Chriſtian men that they ſhould perform it, none except, neither lay man, ne woman (as we uſe to ſay) but to them as well as to any whom we call religious.

Mat. 19. What it is to ſell away all for the Goſpel.

KING Hen. 8.

As concerning the Relicks and Tombs of Saints, I have ſaid to your Lordſhip afore, what I do think of the Milk of our Lady, the Bloud which they ſay is at Hails, Norwich, and other places, with ſuch other, whereof I truſt you do what ought to be done. And I beſeech God you may do therein as your office doth require, ſo ſhewing example to other Prelats to follow your Lordſhip in good doing, as is comely for a Primat to do; remembring alway, as Paul ſaith, the time is ſhort, and therefore it were good to ſet to hand in time.

Relicks and Tombs of Saints. Our Ladies Milk. The bloud of Hailes.

Finally, Holy Moſes when he died, would be ſo buried, that no man ſhould know which was his Grave, as it is witneſſed in the Book of Deuteronomy; and that (as the Expoſitors teſtifie) was, becauſe the Jews, which were prone to new fangled worſhipping, ſhould not fall into Idolatry, worſhipping him as God, for the great and manifold Miracles that were wrought by him while he was alive.

Moſes Tomb unknown.

To conclude, I ſay, It is no point of my belief, to think that Oblations and Pilgrimages at Saints Graves and Relicks, are meritorious works, ne yet, that there is any devotion in ſo doing. That is godly which is inſtitute by Scripture. If you think contrary, I would deſire to know for mine inſtruction, what part of Scripture ſhould make therefore againſt me.

To think Pilgrimage to be meritorious, is no point of our belief.

℄ In the ſeventeenth, where you do ask, Whether the Faſt in Lent, and other appointed by the Common Law, and received in common uſage of Chriſtian people (unleſs neceſſity otherwiſe requireth) are to be obſerved? I ſay, that in mine opinion they are to be obſerved, and faſting diſcreetly done is commendable, for ſo ſhall a man avoid ſloth, and be the more ready to ſerve God, and alſo his neighbours, and thereby tame the rebellion of carnal concupiſcence, according to the ſaying of the Poet, Sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus, without Wine and good fare, luſt waxeth cold. And as St. Hierome, Venter mero æſtuans ſpumat in libidinem, The body enflamed with Wine burſteth out into luſt.

The ſaying of Hierome.

Yet ſhall not the breaking of theſe Faſts make a man to do deadly ſin, except in his mind be ſome other malicious affection therewith annexed, as raſhneſs of mind, deſpight, or ſuch like, forſomuch as no poſitive law of man, made without foundation of Scripture, may bind any perſon, ſo that in breaking of ſuch, he ſhall therefore ſin deadly. And of this ſort made by man, is the Faſt of Lent, and other days ordained in your Laws without authority of Scripture, which willeth us to faſt perpetually, eating and drinking but when need requireth (not for any voluptuouſneſs, as many, that recount themſelves great faſters, I fear have done) yea, and that ſparely, foreſeeing always that our ſtomachs be never cloyed with drunkenneſs or ſurfetting, as is commanded by our Saviour in Luke; but contrariwiſe, after the faſhion rather of a certain Prince that is mentioned (I trow) in Valerius Maximus, that never roſe from his Meals meat with a full ſtomach, but rather ſomewhat empty, or hungry; which, as the ſtory teſtifieth, cauſed him to live ſo wonderful a long ſeaſon, that a man could unneath think it poſſible for ones life to be ſo prolonged, had not ſuch a notable Author reported it.

Faſt broken is of it ſelf no ſin.

No poſitive law without the foundation of Scripture bindeth to deadly ſin. How to faſt truly after the Scripture.

And (to tell the truth) I ſuppoſe the Prelats ſhould better have perſwaded the people to pure faſting by inſtant preaching of the Word of God, and fatherly exhortations, than by ordaining of ſo ſore a multitude of laws and conſtitutions; for the nature of man is well deſcribed by Horace, ſaying, Nitimur in vetitum ſemper, cupimuſque negata: Look what is forbid, that we moſt deſire, and always covet the things that be denied us. And in another Proverb, Funis plus æquo tenſus rumpitur, The Rope by overmuch ſtraining burſteth aſunder. According to this ſaid a good old Father in Cambridge. I remember his ſaying well yet. He was an old Doctor of Divinity; when a Legat came into England at a time, and he, with certain Biſhops, had ordained, that the dedication of all Churches through England (as I remember) ſhould be kept holy and ſolemnized upon one day, and Prieſts ſhould

Faſting rather to be perſwaded than enforced.

Church holy days ſolemnized in England.

{KING *Hen.*8.} ſhould have their Gowns made cloſe before, with ſuch other like Ordinances, he reſiſted, not condeſcending to have them put in execution, when his Dioceſan required him; declaring how this multitude of Laws pleaſed him not: For we had enough and abundantly before: adding this reaſon, Adam being in Paradiſe had but one Law to obſerve, and yet he brake it: What other thing then ſhall this multitude do (quoth he) but multiply tranſgreſſion? For when a Faggot is bound over-ſtrait, the bond muſt break.

Gowns ſowed before. Multitude of Lawes.

Multitude of Lawes unprofitable.

God therefore I beſeech him ſend us of the ſweet dew of his Heavenly Doctrine, to moiſten and ſupple the earthly ground of our hearts, that we may grow like faſhioned unto him, putting apart our old Adam, with all his diſſimulation and painted ſhew, that is much cauſed by humane Laws and Conſtitutions, and putting on Chriſt, that is the very truth, and the way directing men to the ſame, Amen.

Anſwer to the 18 Art. Againſt Images.

℣ Unto the eighteenth, where you ask, Whether it be laudable and profitable that worſhipful Images be ſet in Churches for the remembrance of Chriſt and his Saints? I ſay, that I know of no Images that ought to be worſhipped, ſpecially made by the hand of men: for the Pſalm ſaith, Confuſion or ſhame be upon them that worſhip and make obeyſance unto carved Images, and that glory in their pictures. Moreover, Saint Auguſtine in his Book, De Vera Religione, ſaith thus, Let us not have devotion in worſhipping the works of men. Or elſe thus, Let us not be bound to worſhip the works of men; for the workmen are more excellent than the things which they make, whom notwithſtanding we ought not to worſhip. The Latin is thus, Non ſit nobis Religio humanorum operum cultus, meliores enim ſunt ipſi artifices qui talia fabricantur; quos tamen colere non debemus.

Pſal. 97.

Images not to be worſhipped.

Lactantius alſo makes ſtrongly with the ſame; I cannot without Book recite his ſaying, for he teacheth largely of the ſame matter. Origen alſo, contra Celſum, (I trow) will likewiſe teſtifie; where (as I remember) he concludeth, ſaying, That he would have no Goldſmiths nor Gravers in a Communalty, for they do but little profit or none thereto.

Lactant. Origenes contra Celſum. Goldſmiths and Carvers needleſs in a Commonwealth.

And Saint Gregory that was chief, either inventor that Images ſhould be ſet in Churches, or elſe maintainer thereof, would not, as I have read, (I trow it is in an Epiſtle which he writeth ad Servum) have them worſhipped.

Gregor. ad Servum.

And as concerning the exciting of mens memory, I would ſuppoſe that if Chriſts Doctrine were ſo ſhewed and opened that people might clearly underſtand it (and that is the principal office of Prelates and Curates to do, by diligent teaching thereof) I think verily we ſhould have little need of any other Images, than that which ſhould by wholeſome Doctrine be ſhewed unto us by word of mouth and writing, Quoniam nihil tam efficax ad commonefaciendum Diſcipulos, quam viva vox: Nothing is ſo effectual to exerciſe the remembrance of Diſciples, as the lively voice of good teachers; as it is teſtified both by common report, and alſo by the ſentence of Learned men.

The Word and Doctrine ſerveth to put us in remembrance, and not Images.

So that I ſuppoſe if this lively Doctrine of God had aforetime been apertly and diligently opened unto the people, as Curates ought to have done, we ſhould have ſuch profit thereby, that we ſhould not need to contend for ſetting up or taking down of other dumb ſtocks, and liveleſs ſtones, carved or made by men; and if Prelates would begin to ſet up Chriſts word (which alas for pity is not looked upon, but rather trodden down and deſpiſed, ſo that many are not aſhamed to ſay, I will have no more learning in Chriſts Law than my Predeceſſors; for they that magnifie it muſt be ſore puniſhed, and taken for Hereticks, with ſuch other grievous words) if this Doctrine were yet ſet up in Churches, I ſay, and truly opened, that all men might have their judgment thereby reformed and made clear, I think we ſhould not greatly need the profit that cometh by Images made of men, to excite our remembrances to live Chriſtianly.

The true Image of God in his Word and his Works.

For that word which came from the breaſt of Chriſt himſelf, and was written of other that wrote and ſpake by the ſuggeſtion of his Spirit, the Holy Ghoſt, ſheweth full perfectly his bleſſed Will, which is the true and certain Image of his mind and device. If this therefore were diligently inculcate, I think we ſhould be transformed anew, according to the mind of Paul, which writing to the Coloſſians, ſaith thus, See that you live not one to another, after that now you have put off the old man with his works, and have put upon you the new man, which is transformed and renovate after the knowledg and image of him that made us. Yea, thus ſhould we all be Docti a Deo, taught of God, as is ſaid in John, and all ſhould know God both ſmall and great, according to the promiſe recited in the Hebrews; yea, thus ſhould we be reſtored to goodneſs, that we ſhould have the image of God carved in our hearts full expreſly. For every man is transformed into the faſhion of vertuous things, that he is accuſtomed to read and hear. And therefore it were a great grace, if we might have the word of God diligently and often ſpoken and ſung unto us in ſuch wiſe, that the people might underſtand it. Yea, then it ſhould come to paſs, that Craftsmen ſhould ſing Spiritual Pſalms ſitting at their works, and the Husbandman at his Plough, as wiſheth Saint Hierome.

Col. 3.

Joh. 6.

Heb. 8.

As a man readeth, ſo is he faſhioned.

Yea, this holy Image of Chriſt, I mean his bleſſed Doctrine, doth appoint us alſo to conſider the works made by the hand of God, ſuch as no man can make like, whereby, as ſaith Saint Paul, writing to the Romans, The Inviſible power and Divinity of God is known and ſeen by the creation of the World, of ſuch as will conſider his works that are therein by him made. Look in the Pſalm, Laudate Dominum de Cœlis, Cœli enarrant, &c. Praiſe ye the Lord from Heaven. The Heavens declare the Glory of God. With others. And theſe two Images, Gods Works and his Doctrine, have, e're any Images made by men were ſet up in Churches, well and ſufficiently inſtructed the Primitive Church, and ſhould yet inſtruct us well, if they were well conſidered; ſo that we ſhould not need ſo ſore to contend for ſetting up of other made by men. Whereby I have perceived much harm to ariſe, and no great profit; nor the Scripture maketh not for them but rather contrary. As concerning which matter, I would your Lordſhip would pleaſe to read the Epiſtle of Baruch once again, writing of the ſame matter.

Gods Works and his Word be the right Images of God.

Unto the nineteenth, where you ask, whether I believe that Prayers of men living do profit ſouls departed, and being in Purgatory? I made anſwer in the thirteenth Article.

Unto the twentieth, where you do ask, whether men merit and deſerve both by their faſting, and alſo by other deeds of Devotion? I have ſhewed what I do think thereof, in the fifth demand.

In the one and twentieth, where you do ask, whether I do believe that men prohibited of Biſhops to preach, as ſuſpect of Hereſie, ought to ceaſe from preaching and teaching, until they have purged themſelves of ſuſpition, afore an higher Judg? I ſay, that men may be wrongfully ſuſpected of Hereſie, either becauſe they never thought to believe ſuch Errors, as men by falſe ſuſpition do deem them to favour; or elſe, when men as well of high eſtate, as of low, by miniſter judgment may think that to be error, which is the very truth. And of this ſpeaketh Eſay, Wo be to them, quoth he, that call the light darkneſs, and the darkneſs light; the truth falſhood, and the falſhood truth. As the Biſhops and the Prieſts, with their Orator Tertullus, called Paul, ſaying thus before a Judg called Felix, unto whoſe Court they brought him to be condemned to death, We have, quoth they, gotten here a peſtilent fellow, a ſower of ſedition or diſcord among all the Jews of the world, and a bringer up of the Sect of the Nazarens, which was alſo minded to have polluted our Temple, &c. This is to call by perverſe judgment, truth falſhood. And thus did their Predeceſſors ſpeak of the Prophets, yea, and of Chriſt himſelf, calling him a ſeducer and preacher of Hereſie: which is written for our inſtruction. And men being thus ſuſpected (as I would none were) ought in no wiſe therefore to ceaſe neither from preaching, ne teaching.

Enſample of this we have in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where is ſhewed, that when Peter and John had done a miracle upon a man that had been lame from his nativity (whom by the power of Chriſt they healed, and cauſed caused to go where he pleased) the people hearing of this, came running about Peter and John. Peter seeing this, did exhort the people in a Sermon, that they should not think him and his fellow Saint John, to have done this wonderful thing by their own power or holiness, but by the vertue of Christ, whom they and their head-rulers had slain.

Act. 4. 5. 6.

While they were thus speaking with the people, there came upon them the Priests and Officers of the Temple, accompanied with the Sadducees, being sore displeased that they should enterprise to teach the people, and preach that men should arise from death by the Name of Christ, whom they had caused to be crucified, and therewith they laid hands upon them, and put them in ward until next day. The next day they sent for the Apostles before them, demanding by what power, and in whose name they did this miracle? Peter made answer, If you, quoth he, that are head rulers over the people, lust by examination to know by what means we did it, we would you should all know, that we did it through the Name of Christ Jesus of Nazareth, whom you did crucifie: but God did cause him to arise again. In the vertue of his Name doth this man, that afore was lame, now stand afore you here both whole and sound. For Christ is that head corner-stone, whom you cast away, which should have builded the peoples faith upon him, neither is there any Salvation without him.

Acts 4.

These great men seeing that Peter spake so freely, and that he, with his fellow John, were simple men, without any pompous apparel, or great guard of servants, being like idiots, and men unlearned, wondered thereat. At the last they did command them to depart out of their Council-house, whiles they should commune more largely of the matter. Afterward they called the Apostles afore them again, commanding them that they should no more preach, ne teach in the Name of Jesus. But the Apostles answered, saying, I beseech you judg better. Ought we to obey you more than God, or no? For certainly we must needs testifie of those things which we have both heard and seen. Then the head Priests threatening them sore, did give them strait charge not to break their Precept, and so did let them go, not knowing any cause why they might punish them; for they feared lest the people would have taken part with the Apostles, for the people gave glory unto God for the miracle shewed by them.

Peter and the Apostles prohibited by the Pharisees to preach Christ.

Act. 4.

Notwithstanding all these great threats, Peter wrought Miracles still amongst the people, doing them to know that glory therefore ought to be given to Jesus, by whose Power and Name they were done. Wherewith the hearts of the people melted for joy; so that they followed after the Apostles whithersoever they went.

Peter disobeyed the Precept of the Pharisees.

The Primate of the Priests hearing of this, and all that were about him repleat with indignation, laid hands upon the Apostles, putting them in the common Prison. But the Angel of God in the night opened the Prison-doors, and brought them out, saying, Go you into the Temple, and stand there preaching unto the people all the words of life. That is to say, Christs Doctrine; and so they did early in the morning. Then came forth the chief Priest, and they whom he used to have about him, and called a Council, in which were all the Priests of Israel, or Ancients of Israel. So they sent unto the Prison-house to have the Apostles brought forth before them. When their servants came to the Prison-house, and found the Apostles gone thence, they returned to their Masters, saying, We found the Prison fast shut round about in every part, and the keepers watching at the doors without full diligently. But when we had opened the Prison, we could find no body within.

Peter delivered out of prison.

Act. 5.

Then as the High Priests and Officers of the Temple heard this, they were in a great perplexity, doubting what would thereof come. Then came one unto them and shewed them, saying, Behold the men that ye put in Prison are standing in the Temple, preaching unto the people. Then went they thither, and brought the Apostles with them without any violence; but they were afraid lest the people would have beaten them down with stones.

Then they caused the Apostles to be brought into their Council-house, the High Priest beginning his Proposition against the Apostles in this form: Have we not straitly commanded you (said he) that you should not preach in the Name of Christ? And see, you have filled all Hierusalem with your Doctrine. Will you bring this mans blood upon us, that we should unrighteously have caused him to suffer death? Then answered Peter and the other Apostles, saying, We ought to obey God more than any man. The God of our Fathers hath raised Jesus from death, whom you did slay, hanging on a tree. Him notwithstanding hath God raised, and by his power advanced to be our King and Saviour: by whom shall be given to all Israel, that will take repentance, forgiveness of sin.

{KING Hen. 8.}

God to be obeyed more than men.

Act. 5.

These great Rulers hearing this, their hearts were therewith cloven asunder, and they consulted together to slay the Apostles. But one good man among their multitude advised them otherwise, whose advice they did approve. Then they called the Apostles again afore them, causing them to be scourged, and charged them no more to preach in the name of Jesus, and so did let them depart.

The Council of malice.

Then went they away out of the Council, rejoycing that God had made them worthy to suffer such rebukes for his Names sake. But yet they never ceased to teach and preach of Jesus Christ, every day in the Temple, and in all houses that they came into. This is written in the fourth, fifth, and sixth of the Acts of the Apostles, and for our instruction, doubt you not: for such practise is shewed in all ages. So that hereby you may see, when men be wrongfully suspected or infamed of Heresie, and so prohibited by Bishops to preach the Word of God, that they ought for no mans commandment to leave or stop, though they do never purge themselves afore them, for such will admit no just purgation many times, but judg in their own causes, and that as they lust, which methinks, is not at all comely. Therefore in the old Law the Priests and other Judges do sit together, hearing of matters that were in controversie.

Act. 4, 5, 6.

Wrongful prohibition ought not to stop the preaching of Gods Word

Popish Prelates judges in their own cause.

Yet this I think reasonable, that a man justly and not causeless suspect, and namely if he be so found faulty of Heresie, ought to cease from preaching, after he is inhibited, until he have made his Purgation before some Judge. But in my rude opinion, it were necessary and convenient that our heads should not be over ready of suspicion, and so inhibiting men approved, from preaching, especially in this season, when the people do suspect them to do it more for love of themselves, and maintaining of their private lucre, or honour, than to do it for love of God, or maintenance of his honour.

Svvftness of suspition reproved.

¶ In the two and twentieth, where you demand whether I believe that it is lawful for all Priests freely to preach the Word of God or no, and that in all places, at all places, and to all persons to whom they shall please, although they be not sent: I say, that Priests are called in Scripture by two distinct words, that is to wit, Presbyteri & Sacerdotes. The first is to say, ancient men, Seniors, or Elders, and by that word or vocable are the Secular Judges, or such like head Officers, sometime also signified, as we read in Daniel, that they were so called which defamed and wrongfully accused Susanna: that this is seldom, and nothing so customable as those to be called Presbyteri, which are set to be Prelates in the Church to guide the same by the word of God and his blessed Doctrine, that is the rod of direction, and the foundation of Christs Faith. And Priests thus called Presbyteri, in the Primitive Church (what time were but few traditions and ordinances to let us from the strait trade or institution made by Christ and his Apostles) were the very same and none other but Bishops, as I shewed you in the first part of mine answer, by the authority of St. Hierome.

Answer to the 22 Article.

Priests whether they ought to preach, tho' they be not sent.

Episcopi & Presbyteri all one.

Paul also recordeth the same right evidently in the first to Titus, in this form: I left thee Titus (quoth blessed Paul) behind me in Crete, that thou shouldest set in due order such things as lack, or be not else perfectly framed, and that thou shouldest set Priests in every Town, like as I did appoint thee, if any be without reproach, or blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not given to riot, or that be not unruly, for so ought a Bishop

Priests have two names in Scripture Presbyteri & Sacerdotes.

Titus 1.

KING Hen. 8. Description of a true Priest. Gainsayers of truth are to be reproved by Scriptures, and not by authority only, or traditions of men, made in General Councils.

Bishop to be, &c. These are not my words, but Saint Paul's in the Epistle to Titus. Where you may see that a Priest called Presbyter, should be the same that we call a Bishop, whom he requireth a little after, to be able by wholesom Doctrine of Gods Scripture, to exhort the good to follow the same Doctrine, and if any shall speak against it, to reprove them thereby. And mark ye how he would have a Bishop (otherwise called an ancient man or a Priest) to make exhortation by holy Scripture, and thereby to reprove them that shall speak against the truth, and not to condemn them by might or authority only, or else by traditions of men made in General Councils. And as many as are in this wise Priests, which are commonly called Presbyteri (otherwise Bishops) such as in the Church are set to take Cure of souls, and to be spiritual Pastors, ought to preach freely the Word of God in all places and times convenient, and to whomsoever it shall please them, if they suppose and see that their preaching should edifie and profit.

What Ministers be sent. Gregor. in Pastoral.

And whereas you add this Particle; Though they were not sent; I say, that all such are chosen to be Preachers, and therefore sent. For of this speaketh St. Gregory in his Pastorals, in this wise; Prædicationis quippe officium suscipit, quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit: Whosoever taketh Priesthood upon him, taketh also upon him the Office of preaching. Yea, your Law reporteth in like manner, Distinct. 43. where it is thus said, A Priest ought to be honest, that he may shew honesty both in words and conditions. Wherefore it is said in the Canticles, The cheeks of the Spouse, that is, to wit, of Preachers, are to be compared to a turtle Dove.

Dist. 43.

Where is moreover added, He must also have the gift of teaching, because (as saith S. Hierome) innocent conversation, without speech or preaching, how much it is available by example giving, so much doth it hurt again by silence keeping; for Wolves must be driven away by barking of Dogs, and by the Shepherds staff, which (as the Glos sheweth) signifieth preaching, and sharp words of the Priest. And [illegible] I understand of such as should be Priests elect both by God and Men, in Gods Church, whose office is to preach.

Multitude striveth for authority.

And though many of them which now do minister in the Church, and are elect by Bishops, otherwise than after the manner of Christs Institution, and the form of the Primitive Church, neither do, ne can preach; yet ought not the multitude of such to be laid for an authority against me, or other, that are compelled to shew the truth and right ordinances of the Apostles, that was used aforetime in the Primitive Church: God bring it in again. Neither ought we for the negligence of Bishops, which have chosen such an ignorant multitude, whereby the principal duty of Priests is grown out of knowledge, when we do shew you thereof, to be so enforced by a Book-Oath, and therefore noted as Hereticks, imprisoned and burned.

Sacerdotes.

Other be called Priests in the New Testament, by this word Sacerdotes, that is to say, I think, Sacrificers. And thus as Christ was called Rex & Sacerdos, King and Priest, so be all Christian men in the New Testament (as is testified Apoc. 1.) by Christ made Kings and Priests. The words in the Apocalyps be thus, To Jesus Christ which hath loved us, and washed us from our sins through his bloud, and made us Kings and Priests unto God, even his Father, unto him be glory and rule for ever and ever, Amen. Thus saith S. John, speaking of all Christian people. In like manner it is said, 1 Pet. 2. where he writeth unto all Christian men, You, quoth he, be a chosen Generation, a regal Priesthood, an holy People. S. Bede expounding the same (as my remembrance doth serve) shall testifie plainly with me. And S. Augustine, I wot well, in divers places recordeth that all Christian men be so called, Regale Sacerdotium. And likewise doth Faber, in his Commentaries upon the same place. Whosoever looketh upon the Treatise called Unio dissidentium, shall find a multitude of ancient Fathers sayings, declaring the same.

Apoc. 1.

1 Pet. 2. Bede upon the Epistle of S. Peter.

How all men are Priests.

But this may yet seem a strange thing and a new, that all persons should be called Priests, and that in Scripture, which cannot lie. Truth it is indeed, it may seem strange to divers, as it did to me and many other, when we read it first; because we never read ne heard of the same before; and so did Christs Doctrine and his Apostles seem new to his Audience, when he himself preached.

Albeit he yet proved his doings and sayings by authority of the Law and Prophets, as is shewed in the first of the Romans, where Paul reporteth, That he was chosen apart to be a Minister of the Gospel that was promised before by the Prophets. And our Saviour testifieth the same in St. John, saying to the Jews, Think you not, quoth he, that I shall accuse you before my Father. There is one to accuse you, which is Moses, in whom ye do trust. But if you believed Moses, you should certainly believe me, for he writeth of me, &c. Likewise a little above, he biddeth them search the Scriptures, for they make report of him.

Rom. 1.

Joh. 5.

But although these sayings do seem new, for lack that we have not had old familiarity with Scripture, and usage in reading the same (God amend and help it, when it shall please him) yet truly so standeth it written as I have said, and so it is interpreted by the Doctors above named; and so was it preached of a certain Doctor also of Divinity in London, the second day of Advent last past, in this sentence. I wote not whether these were the self words or no. The Church, quoth the Doctor, is nothing else but the Congregation of faithful people: and you all, quoth he to the people, are of the Church, as well as I, or any other, if you be of God. And likewise we and all men are Priests, but yet are not all alike ordained Ministers, said he, to consecrate the Body of Christ in the Church. Thus said the Preacher: whom when I see opportunity, I dare be bold to name. And these I say ought not all to preach openly in general Conventions or Assemblies, neither can they, but they rather should come to learn: yet privately are they bound for instruction of their servants, children, kinsfolk, and such like, to speak that should be for the destruction of vice, and increase or upholding of vertue, whensoever time and place requireth, as sheweth St. Paul, saying in this wise, You that are Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath or anger, but bring them up in the Doctrine and Discipline of the Lord.

The saying of a Doctor preaching at Pauls. All be Priests, but not all Ministers publick.

Every man Minister of good instruction in his own house.

Ephes. 6.

In the three and twentieth, where you do ask, whether I believe that it is lawful for lay-men of both kinds, that is to wit, both men and women to sacrifice and preach the Word of God? I say, that it is meet for none, in mine opinion to preach openly the Word of God, except they be chosen and elect to the same, either by God, or solemnly by men, or else by both, and therefore St. Paul calleth himself in all his Epistles, an Apostle of God, that is to wit, a messenger of God. And to the Galathians he writeth thus, Paul an Apostle, not sent of men, nor by man, but by Jesus Christ. Also to the Romans, How shall men preach truly, quoth he, except they be sent?

Answer to the three and twentieth Article. No man to preach openly, except he be chosen.

Gal. 1.

Rom. 5.

Notwithstanding, I say this, both by supportation of Gods Law, and also of Laws written in the Decrees, that in time of great necessity lay-people may preach, and that of both kinds, both men and women, as you may see in the Epistle to the Corinthians, where he saith, That it is a shame for a woman to speak in a multitude or congregation. Yet in another place he saith, That every woman praying or prophecying, having nothing upon her head doth dishonour her head.

In time of great necessity, lay-people, man or woman, may preach.

1 Cor. 14.

1 Cor. 11

To this accords the Prophesie of Joel recited Act. 2. where in the person of God it is said thus, I shall pour out of my spirit upon all flesh, and both your sons and your daughters shall prophesie. Thus did Anna the Propheteſs, daughter of Phanuel, give praise unto Christ in the Temple, and spake of him to all men of Jerusalem, that looked after the redemptioon of Israel.

Joel 2. Act. 2. Luk. 2.

Women that Prophesied in the Scripture.

This also doth yet speak unto us in the Scripture the Virgin Mary, by the Song which she made, that is daily recited in the Church, called Magnificat. Yea Stephen also being no Priest, but a Deacon, made a wonderful good Sermon, Act. 7. This also willeth your Decrees, Dist. 9. de Conse. where it is thus said, A woman although she is learned and holy, may not presume to teach men in the Congregation, ne Baptize, except necessity requireth. So that where need is, I shall add this, but not without the mind of him that wrote the Law, like as a woman may baptize, so may she teach the Word of God, or preach, as is declared more plainly, Cap. 16. Quest. 1. & in Glossa. 11. Cap. adjicimus. Distinct. 18. And I beseech God, that for lack of true and well learned Officers such necessity do not come now upon us, that such shall need to take upon them to preach.

Act. 7. Distin. 9. de Consecrat.

Cap. 16. Q. 1. Dist. 18. cap. adjicimus.

There

He meaneth the Dialogue of Erasmus, Intituled, Abbas & Erudita.

There is a learned man, which in a Dialogue that he maketh betwixt a rude Abbot and a Gentlewoman having skill in learning, jesteth, but with pretty earnest (as his manner is) and giveth a watch-word touching somewhat my purpose. It is in the end of the Dialogue. The Gentlewoman answering the Abbot, for that he had partly checked her, because she was quick in utterance of learning: Sir, quoth she, if you continue therein so dull as you have done, and daily do, the world perceiving it (as they begin fast to grow quick in sight) it is to be feared, lest they will set you beside the Saddle, and put us in your rooms.

Sacrifice doing. Sacrifice in offering our bodies.

As concerning Sacrifice-doing, (so do I understand by the word which you do use, Libare, not knowing else what it should mean) I say, that it is lawful for all men and women to do Sacrifice, of what sort soever they be: but I mean not by Sacrifice doing, to say Mass, as Priests used to do, thereunto appointed: but like as Christian people be Sacerdotes, that is to say, Sacrificers, as is shewed afore, so ought they to offer, and do offer Spiritual sacrifices, as writeth Saint Paul to the Romans, saying, I beseech you brethren, for the love of Gods mercy, that you will give your body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, being a reasonable worshipping. In that he saith our body should be a sacrifice, he would have it slain: for that was the manner, that all beasts that were wont to be sacrificed, should be first slain. But he joyneth therewith, Living; saying, Give your body to be a living sacrifice. So that he would we should continue to live in this body to Gods pleasure, but fleeing the evil lusts and appetites thereof, and so shall our worshipping be reasonable, if we do die, give unto our reason overmuch of the Brinot whereby it may run at riot, in following fleshly concupiscence, and wicked vanity or arrogancy, as when men will take in hand to devise, by their own wit, a more godly way of living than is institute by Christ (which is the wisdom of his Heavenly Father) saying that his is not sufficient enough for us to follow. Of whom it is said by the Prophet Esay in these words, This people approach near unto me, and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me: but they do worship me in vain, teaching Doctrines that are laws or precepts of men.

Sacrifice true and lively.

Rom. 12

Esay 29.

Rom. 12

Then Paul proceedeth shewing of this Christian sacrifice, saying, And apply not your selves unto the fashion of this world, but be you transformed by renovation of your mind, that you may know what is the will of God, what is good, acceptable, and rightful before him. See how he would have us do this sacrifice, and mortifie our lusts, in refusing the corrupt fashion and behaviour of the world, altering our minds by a new way, by knowing the Will of God, and following after the same.

Sacrifice of praise. Vituli labiorum.

Ose. 14.

Heb. 13.

Another manner of sacrifice which he requireth, is, that we should alway offer unto God the sacrifice of praise, that is to wit, the fruits of our lips, that Osee calleth Vitulos Labiorum, giving laud unto his name; and that we should not forget to do good, and to be beneficial to our neighbours: For in such sacrifice (saith he) God hath delight.

Thus I say, that by plain suffrage of your Law in the Decrees, and also of Scripture, lay-persons in necessity and in time of need may lawfully preach or shew the Word of God, and also do sacrifice; but I think, except great need require, they ought not so to do.

Thus have you herein my mind: which if it be not firm and substantial, I will yet reform it when any better is shewed, as I will also do in all other things; for I am not in this yet fully certified. Albeit methink the Decrees do pass evidently with me.

To the 24 Article.

℣ In the twenty 4th where you do ask, Whether Excommunication, denounced by the Pope against all Hereticks, do oblige and bind them before God? I say, That it bindeth them before God, if it be lawfully denounced, that is, if they be in very deed, as they be named, and if he denounceth them so to be out of his own proper head or affection only, but with the consent of other gathered with him in Christs name, for the behoof of Christs Church: For so used Saint Paul, when he did Excommunicate the man of Corinth, which had full horribly defiled his mother-in-law, as appeareth 1 Cor. 5.

Excommunication. Excommunication requireth consent of other.

1 Cor. 5.

Mat. 18.

℣ And the same form declareth the Gospel, Mat. 18. in these words, If thy brother hath trespassed against thee, go and reprove him betwixt thee and him alone. If he will hear thee thou hast so won thy brother. If he will not hear thee, take one or two with thee, that in the report of two or three every thing may be assured. If he will not hear them, shew it unto the congregation. If he will not follow the mind of the congregation, let him be unto thee as a Paynim, or a notable sinner. For verily I say unto you, whatsoever you shall bind upon earth, shall be bound in Heaven. So that such Excommunication ought to be done (as me thinketh) by the Congregation assembled together with their Pastor, whose advice they ought principally to esteem and follow, if it be vertuous and godly.

{KING Hen. 8.}

And thus is it convenient to be done. For the Pope is made of flesh as well as other men, and therefore he may sometime judg awry, curse the blessed, and blessing the cursed. And likewise may other Prelates; judging the Christian to be Hereticks, and Hereticks Christian. Of whom it is also written in the Prophesie of Ezechiel, Mortificabant animas quæ non moriuntur, & vivificabant animas quæ non vivunt: They slew the souls of them that should not die, and gave life to the souls that should not live. As did the Pharisees when they did cast Christ out of the Vineyard, which signifieth the Church, Mat. 21. And as our Saviour prophesied in the nineteenth of John, saying unto his Disciples, There shall be (quoth he) some that shall Excommunicate you: yea, and the time shall come, that whosoever shall slay you, shall think to do honour to God; and this shall they do unto you, because they do neither know my Father nor me. These words be written in the Gospel of Joh. 19. Whereby you see, that for lack of knowldg of God, which is taught and seen by the light of Scripture, Christ prophecied how lewd men should lewdly Excommunicate the good, yea and slay his true servants, thinking through such facts to please God, and to do him good service.

The P[illegible] may err.

Ezek. 13.

Mat. 21.

Joh. 19.

Wherefore send, O Lord, I beseech thee, the knowledg of thee to be dilated upon earth, which Osee bewaileth sore, seeing it absent, whereby m[illegible] judgments may be rectified, and so do accordingly to the leading of the same.

Ose. 4.

To the 25 Article.

℣ In the five and twentieth, where you do ask whether every Priest is bound to say daily his Mattens and Evening-song, according as it is ordained by the Church, or whether he may leave them unsaid, without offence or deadly sin? I say that Prayer in Scripture is much commended, and many great and unmeasurable benefits are shewed to ensue thereupon, that men should the more lustily give themselves thereto. With prayer doth Saint Paul bid us to fight in divers places, continuing in the same against our ghostly enemies. A figure of this is read in Exodus, when the Israelites fought in battel against a Nation of Infidels; I trow their Captain was called Amalek. Moses stood upon a mountain to behold what should be the conclusion, and lifting up his hands prayed that it might well succeed with the Israelites, but in long holding them up, at last his fervor began to grow cold and faint, and his hands sagged downward, and ever as his hands grew heavy (which signifieth that his affection in praying abated and waxed cold) the Infields prevailed, but as he kept them heaved upward (whereby was meant intentive prayer of a devout mind) he purchased victory to the Israelites. Aaron and Hur, which indited the Law to the people, and were thereof the Interpreters, stood with Moses; which always, as they did see his arms to faint, did uphold them, so that finally the victory came unto Israel.

Exod. 17.

The vertue of Prayer.

By Moses is signified, as shew great Clerks, Devotion: By Aaron and Hur, the knowledg of Gods Doctrine. Which two things (Devotion I mean, and Knowledg) all men had need to have present with them: for Devotion doth elevate the mind to God; but knowledg doth sustain or uphold the same, that it may with courage continue not falling down, but so alway doth incense and kindle it, that it mounteth up into the presence of our Heavenly Father, where they savour together far more sweetly than any fumigation either of Juniper, Incense, or whatsoever else, be they never so pleasant, do savour in any mans nose.

Devotion and knowledg to be joyned together.

There-

KING Hen. 8.

Therefore Saint Paul seeing how necessary the knot of these two, Devotion and Knowledg of Gods Will, was, which is shewed in Scripture (as teacheth Saint Cyprian in these words, The Will of God, saith he, is that which Christ hath taught and wrought) Paul, I say, seeing this wished to be excommunicate and separate from God, to have the Jews come to the knowledg of Christs Church, which is the only right way to salvation, for whom he prayed right studiously, as appeareth a little after, in the tenth Chapter to the Romans, saying, I bear them record, that they have a zeal and devotion to God, but not according to the knowledg of Christs Doctrine, &c. Where you may clearly see how the Jews (as St. Paul, which is no lyer, recordeth here) had a zeal and devotion to God, but they lacked knowledg therewith. Moses was amongst them, but Aaron was away: whose absence pained Paul so sore, that he ravished with exceeding charity, wished no small harm unto himself upon condition that the multitude of them might be holpen, and have better judgment, even to be separated from God.

Moses not to be without Aaron.

Devotion without knowledg hurtful.

It must needs be then greatly hurtful, albeit men have devotion, to be without the knowledg of God and his Law, signified by Aaron.

Saint Paul also before that he came to knowledg had such like devotion himself, as he reporteth, Acts the six and twentieth. In these words, All the Jews, quoth he, have known my living, that I have lead since I entred into mans age (which time, as I remember, is accounted from the sixteenth or eighteenth year of a mans life, in Latin he calleth it adolescentia) which from the beginning thereof, was, saith he, at Jerusalem among mine own Nation, that did know me afore also from the beginning, if they would say the truth, and that I lived after the most strait Order or Sect of our Religion, being a Pharisee. And I, quoth Paul a little after, thought to do many things in fighting against the Name of Jesus Christ, yea and did also being at Jerusalem, and I thrust many Saints or holy men into prison, having power given me thereto of the High Priests, and when they should be put to death I gave sentence, and I, quoth he, was commonly in all Synagogues punishing them, and compelling them to blaspheny (as men are fain now a days, when the Bishops make them to abjure and to deny the truth of the Gospel) yea moreover did I, quoth Paul, rage against them, pursuing after them into strange lands.

Act. 26.

The zeal of Saul without devotion.

Zeal without knowledg.

See what zeal Paul had to God, afore he was instructed in the Doctrine of Christ. He thought to have pleased God highly in persecuting his servants, of whom one was St. Stephen. He was then sore blinded through ignorance, and wanted the assistance of Aaron: but anon, as Christ which is the true Aaron, had appeared unto him, asking him, and saying, in a lamentable form, O Saul, Saul, why doest thou thou persecute me, in troubling and striking my servants the members of mine own body? Of whom it is said, He that smiteth you, shall smite the tender ball of mine eye: His heart fell (I dare say) so low as his body, that is, even down to the earth, repenting himself full sore, being ready to amend and follow after a new way, as appeareth by his answer, where he saith, O Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? as though one would say, Now I see all that I thought to have done afore of good intention, and good purpose or devotion, hath deceived me. I find it otherwise. That which I esteemed good, in very deed is and was naught.

Act. 9.

Zach. 2.

Teach me therefore, good Lord, quoth he, a better way, and amend my judgment, that mine own will or intention forsaken, I may now follow thine, to please thee, and to do thy will. And so he came to Ananias, by the assignment of Christ; the thick filthiness of his old wayward judgment fell away, as appeareth by the dross or rubbish that came from his eyes, even like scales, as the Scripture maketh relation, and he put upon him a new judgment, which is directed after the straight rule of the Gospel. Whereby you may see that mens devotion may oft beguile and seduce them, except knowledg do assist the same, to sustain and direct it: which knit together shall much strengthen men in all trouble and temptations.

Devotion a deceivable thing.

Erasmus in Enchiridion. Saying Mattens.

So that it is much expedient for all men, as nigh as they may, to have prayer annexed with knowledg: and that sheweth full notably Erasmus, in the second passage of Enchiridion, where he testifieth but of easie liking, that he hath in saying of Mattens, yea rather contrariwise he sheweth disliking, and so he doth also in his Exposition of Psal. 1. Beatus vir, where the Text maketh agreeably for the same: it is written in this wise, Blessed is the man that hath not gone after the counsel of the wicked, and hath not stood in the way of sinners, ne sit in the chair of pestilence, but hath his will in the Law of God, and shall muse or be occupied in it both day and night.

Psal. 1.

See how the Prophet (which I doubt not but he knew as perfectly that Will and pleasure of God, as ever did any Pope or general Council, or whatsoever they were beside, that ordained long service to be said of Priests) testifieth them to be blessed, that study and are exercised in the Law of God both day and night, that is, to wit, always. A great promise put of God to such blessed exercise, which we may call right devotion, or true godliness. For Paul defining godliness, saith thus, Pietas ad omnia utilis est, ut quæ promissiones habeat præsentis vitæ & futuræ. That is, to wit, Godliness is profitable unto all things, for that hath annexed thereto promises of this life present, and of the life to come.

What is true Godliness, or Piety.

1 Tim. 4.

But no such promise is made of God, I am certain, to them that say daily Mattens. Neither are we certain by the Word of God, that we shall therefore be blessed of him, no more than we are certain, that for saying over the fifteen Ooes, every day once through an whole year, we shall apertly see our Lady to aid us afore our death, as it is testified in the Scripture of the Primer, but not by Scripture of the Bible; or that we shall have a like benefit for saying of her Psalter upon the ten Beads that cometh from the crossed Friers, or upon the five Beads hallowed at the Charter-house, or fasting the Ladies fast, as men call it; ne for fasting on the Wednesday, as is shewed by a Book that is allowed to be printed and read of all men that lusteth, for it is neither the New Testament ne the old.

No promise of God for saying of Mattens.

The 15 Ooes.

Our Ladies Psalter.

Fasting our Ladies Fast.

They are condemned you wot well, and I perhaps shall have a little less favour because I tell the truth freely, for such things are called offensive. But would God, that all persons so thinking, would remember what answer Christ made unto his Disciples in the 15th of Matthew, when they came to him, and warned him to beware, saying, You know that the Pharisees are offended, hearing such words spoken. I will leave out Christs answer, lest I should be thought over free and plain in taxing or uttering of abusions, and speak no further.

Mat. 15.

A like demand, with answer thereunto annexed, shall you find in the eleventh of Luke, where Christ would not refrain to speak any deal more easily. Therefore I beseech them that deem me (God wotteth whether righteously or no) slanderously, to revise the said places, and then counsel me to do that shall be most expedient to follow, if their charity will so require. Yet would I that all people should know that I do not reprove that saying of the fifteen Ooes, which (so far forth as my remembrance doth serve) is a very good prayer, or such like prayers; ne would I that any person should think me to disallow any secret fastings; for such, not only present with you, but even from hence absent, have I commended in earnest speaking, and so intend to do by the assistance of Gods grace. Nevertheless such vain promises I do abhor, as be with them annexed, with the upholders of the same. For such do cause vain confidence in the people, withdrawing and seducing them from the right belief of the Gospel (which Christian men ought only to build their faith upon) unto new inventions of vanity. S. Paul calleth such, old womens tales, where he writeth unto Timothy, bidding him to beware of them, and to throw them away.

Luk. 11.

Fasting commended.

The Prophet David likewise doth accord thereunto, saying, Beatus vir cujus est nomen Domini spes ejus, & non respexit in vanitates & insanias falsas: Blessed, quoth he, is the man that hath in the Name of God his affiance or hope, and hath not looked back to vanities and false dotages or madness. And this I say again, That the Mattens-saying hath no more promise of God made to the sayers, than hath the other above named, for they were institute by the fantasie or mind of men, and not by the rule of Scripture. Neither do I think the Priests which will truly follow the rule of God written in the Bible, ought so to be charged or incumbred with saying of them, that they thereby should be hindred from the study of that, which know belongeth principally both to their own souls salvation,

Psal. 40.

vation, and alſo to the diſcharge of their duty, and which God moſt highly of Prieſts doth require (I mean the ſtudy of his Goſpel) whereby they themſelves ſhould be ſpiritually nouriſhed, and thereafter ſhould feed Chriſts flock, the Congregation of his people, according to the ſaying
Joh. 10. of our Saviour in John: I, (quoth he) am the door, whoſoever ſhall come in by me, ſhall both come in, and go out, and find good paſture or feeding: that is to ſay, Whoſoever ſhall enter to be a Paſtor or Miniſter in Chriſts Church or Congregation by Chriſt, ſhall both enter into contemplation of Gods glory, declared abundantly in Scripture, and after go forth and ſhew the ſame abroad to other for their wealth and edifying.

To this accordeth that is written in Luke, whereas our Saviour ſpeaketh to all his Church ſignified in the perſon
Luk. 22. of St. Peter. Peter, quoth he, I have prayed that thy faith ſhould not fail, and thou being converted, go then about to confirm thy brethren. So that he would have Peter eſtabliſhed firſt in faith of his ſure Doctrine, and then to go forth as he did, to teach other to be grounded in the ſame likewiſe. And thus ought all Prieſts to be called Presbyteri, which will be Miniſters in the Church; for ſo biddeth St. Peter in his firſt Epiſtle, in the laſt Chapter, 1 Pet. 5. ſaying thus, I beſeech the Prieſts, quoth he, that are among you, I my ſelf being a Prieſt and a witneſs bearer of Chriſts afflictions, and alſo a partaker of the glory which ſhall be revealed, ſee that you with all diligence do feed the flock of Chriſt, taking care of the ſame, not as inforced thereto, but willingly; not deſiring filthy lucre, but with a loving mind; neither as men exerciſing dominion over the children or inheritors of God, but ſo that you be patterns or enſample-givers to the flock. See how he requireth of Prieſts, that they ſhould ſpend all their diligence to feed Chriſts flock, and to ſhew good enſample of living, making no mention of long Mattens-ſaying, which then were not mentioned nor ſpoken of.

Ignorance mother of Error.

According to this, it is written in your Decrees after this form; ignorance, ſaith the Law (mark it well I beſeech you all) is the mother of all errors. Which ought to be eſchewed eſpecially of Prieſts, that among the people of God have taken upon them the office of preaching: Prieſts are commanded to read holy Scriptures, as ſaith Paul the 2 Tim. 4 Apoſtle to Timothy, Give heed to reading, exhortation, and teaching, and continue always in the ſame. Let Prieſts therefore know Holy Scripture, and let all their labour be in preaching and teaching, and let them edifie all men both in knowledg of Faith, and in Diſcipline of good works.
Diſt. 38. Theſe be the words of the Law in the Decrees, Diſt. 38. Wherefore you ſee how the Law lamenteth ignorance in all perſons, for it is the original of all errors. God ſend us therefore the knowledg of his true Goſpel. It biddeth that ignorance ſhould be utterly eſchewed, and principally of Prieſts, and labour and diligence ſhould be beſtowed all in reading of Scripture, and preaching the ſame, bringing in for the ſame purpoſe the ſaying of the Apoſtle, which willeth it in like manner.

Prieſts to give themſelves rather to ſtudy than to ſaying of Mattens.

What Prieſts ought to ſtudy.

Moreover, it requireth that Prieſts ſhould give all their ſtudy to edifie other in faith and vertuous living. Whereof I do gather both by the ſaying of the Prophet, that willeth us to be ſtudious in the Law of God day and night, and by the ſaying of the Apoſtle, which would have Timothy to be occupied ever in reading and teaching, and by the report of your own Law, which ſaith likewiſe, That a Prieſt ought to beſtow all his labour in reading and preaching: ſo that a Prieſt ſet thus truly to ſtudy, that he may ſtabliſh himſelf in the faith of Chriſts Doctrine, intending after to help other with true preaching of the ſame, or doing other like deeds of charity, aſſigned in the Law of God, ſhall not offend deadly, if ſo ſpending his time, he omitteth to ſay Mattens, which is an Ordinance of men.

Negligence of Biſhops in making Prieſts noted.

Nevertheleſs, concerning the huge multitude of ſuch as be now made Prieſts by negligent admiſſion of Biſhops, and their own preſumption, that labour to be made Prieſts before they be any Clerks, and e're ever they know what is the very office of a Prieſt, do not fear to take upon them, if they may attain thereto, to be a Curate, they recke not of how many, ſo they may get a good lump of money, never minding after that the ſtudy of Scripture, after they are come to Dominus vobiſcum: for ſuch I do think long Mattens to be needful, to reſtrain them from other enormities that they ſhould elſe run into. Of which you may be weary to ſee the experience thereof daily ariſing. Yea, and if ſuch would be content to admit it, I would every one Mattens were as long to them as five, except they could beſtow their time better.

{KING Hen. 8.}

¶ In the ſix and twentieth where you do ask, whether I believe that the Heads or Rulers by neceſſity of ſalvation are bound to give unto the people Holy Scripture in their Mother-language? I ſay that I think they are bound to ſee that the people may truly know Holy Scripture, and I do not know how that may be done ſo well, as by giving it to them truly tranſlated in the Mother-tongue, that they may have it by them at all times to paſs the time godly, whenſoever they have leiſure thereto, like as they have in France under the French Kings priviledg, and alſo the priviledg of the Emperor, and ſo do I know that they have had it theſe fifty four years in France at the leaſt, and it was tranſlated at the requeſt of a King called, I trow, Lewis, as appeareth by the priviledg put in the beginning of the Book.

To the 26 Article.

Scripture in the vulgar Tongue.

The French Bible tranſlated into the French Tongue, with the Kings priviledg, about fifty years before Lamberts time.

In like manner have they it in Flanders, Printed with the priviledg of the Emperor. In Almain alſo and Italy, and I ſuppoſe through all Nations of Chriſtendom. Likewiſe hath it been in England, as you may find it in the Engliſh ſtory called Polychronicon. There it is ſhewed, how when the Saxons did inhabit the Land, the King at that time, which was a Saxon, did himſelf tranſlate the Pſalter into the Language that then was generally uſed. Yea I have ſeen a Book at Crowland-Abbey, which is kept there for a Relick, the Book is called Saint Guthlakes Pſalter, and I weene verily it is a Copy of the ſame that the King did tranſlate, for it is neither Engliſh, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, nor Dutch, but ſomewhat ſounding to our Engliſh, and as I have perceived ſince the time I was laſt there, being at Antwerp, the Saxon Tongue doth ſound likewiſe after our, and it is to ours partly agreeable. In the ſame ſtory of Polychronicon is alſo ſhewed, how that Saint Bede did tranſlate the Goſpel of John into Engliſh, and the Author of the ſame Book promiſed that he would tranſlate into Engliſh all the Bible, yea and perhaps he did ſo, but (I wot not how it cometh to paſs) all ſuch things be kept away. They may not come to light, for there are ſome walking privily in darkneſs, that will not have their doings known. It is no lye that is ſpoken in the Goſpel of John, Omnis qui male agit, odit lucem: All that do Joh. 3. naughtily hateth the light, and will not have their doings known. And therefore they keep down the light ſtrongly; for that opened and generally known, all wrongful conveyance ſhould anon be diſcloſed and reproved, yea and all men ſhould ſee anon, whether thoſe that hold againſt unrighteouſneſs, being therefore ſometime horribly infamed and ſlandered, named Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, were in deed as they be called or not.

S. Guthlake Pſalter.

Bede tranſlated the Goſpel of St. John into Engliſh.

The cauſes why the Scripture is not ſuffered to come to light.

Yea moreover, I did once ſee a Book of the New Teſtament, which was not unwritten by my eſtimation this hundred years, and in my mind right well tranſlated after the example of that which is read in the Church in Latin. But he that ſhewed it me ſaid, he durſt not be known to have it by him, for many had been puniſhed aforetime for keeping of ſuch, and were convict therefore of Hereſie.

Divers ſuch Teſtaments are yet to be ſeen in divers places of a long continuance.

Moreover, I was at Pauls Croſs, when the New Teſtament Imprinted of late beyond the Sea, was firſt forefended, and truly my heart lamented greatly, to hear a great man preaching againſt it, which ſhewed forth certain things that he noted for hideous errors to be in it, that I, yea, and not I, but likewiſe did many other think verily to be none. But (alack for pity) malice cannot ſay well. God help us all, and amend it.

Errors found in the tranſlated Teſtament where none was. Malice never ſaith well.

So that to conclude, I think verily it were profitable and expedient, that the Holy Scriptures were delivered, by authority of the Head-rulers, unto the people, truly tranſlated in the vulgar Tongue, in like manner as it is in all other Countries. And whereas you add, whether they be bound by neceſſity of ſalvation to deliver it to the people, I will not ſo narrowly touch that point now; but I ſay that they are bound by right and equity to cauſe it to be delivered unto the people in the vulgar Tongue, for their edifying, and conſolation which the people by Gods grace ſhould gather thereof, that now it is like they want, and are deſtitute of.

KING Hen. 8. To the 27th Article.

℣ In the seven and twentieth, where you do demand, Whether it be lawful for the Rulers, for some cause, upon their reasonable advisement, to ordain that the Scripture should not be delivered unto the people in the vulgar language? All men may here see, that whosoever devised these questions, thought not contrary (whatsoever they will yet say) but that it is good for the people to have the Scripture in the vulgar tongue, and that they thought that I so saying could not be well reproved; and therefore are layed out all these additions, as it were to snare and trap me in: Whether the heads be bound, and that by necessity of salvation, to deliver it to the People: and whether, for opportunity of time, they may ordain to restrain it for some cause, and by some reasonable advisement of them taken. Sed frustra jacitur rete ante oculos pennatorum; But without cause you spread the Net before the eyes of the Birds or Fouls. I shew you plainly, that notwithstanding all these things, in mine opinion it was not well done to inhibit it, and worse, that the Bishops have not sith amended it, if so be they could, that the People might have it to use and occupy vertuously.

Whether for any cause the Scripture may be restrained from the people.

Prov. 1.

And here I will add one reason. The Scripture is the spiritual food and sustenance of mans soul. This is shewed to be true in many places of Scripture; like as other corporal meat is the food of the body. Then if he be an unkind Father that keepeth bodily meat away the space of a week or a month from his children; it should seem that our Bishops be no gentle Pastors or Fathers, that keep away the food of mens souls from them (specially when other do offer the same) both months, years, and ages. Neither do I see any opportunity of time or reasonable advisements that should cause it to be withdrawn and taken away, but the contrary rather, for it is reasonable, convenient, and needful for men to eat their meat ever when they are right hungry, and blessed are they that hunger and thirst after the word of God, which teacheth to know him and to do his pleasure at all times; for that we do crave every day in our Pater Noster, saying, Give us Lord our heavenly bread.

A perfect reason why Scripture ought not to be withdrawn from the people at any time.

Matth. 5.

To the 28 Article.

℣ In the eight and twentieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe that Consecrations, Hallowings and blessings used in the Church are to be praised? I say that I know not of all, and therefore I will not dispraise them, neither can I therefore over much speak of them all, seeing I know them not; such as are the hallowing of Bells, the hallowing of Pilgrims when they should go to Rome, the hallowing of Beads, and such like: But those which I am advised of, and do remember, be in mine opinion good; such as is this: When the Priest hath consecrated holy Bread, he saith, Lord bless this creature of bread, as thou didst bless the five loaves in desert, that all persons tasting thereof may receive health, &c. Which I would every man might say in English when he should go to meat, I like it so well.

Hallowings and blessings some allowed and some not. Hallowing of Bread.

Also this is a right good one, that is said over him that shall read the Gospel; the Lord be in your heart, and in your mind and mouth, to pronounce and shew forth his blessed Gospel. Which is also spoken over a Preacher taking Benediction when he shall go into a Pulpit. And such good things I like very well, and think them commendable, wishing therefore that all people might know what they mean, that they with joy of heart might pray joyfully with us, and delight in all goodness; which should be, if they were uttered in English, according to the mind of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 9. where he wisheth, rather to speak five words in the Church heartily with understanding, whereby other might have instruction, than ten thousand words in a tongue unknown. Yea, to say truth, and truth it is indeed that I shall say; a good thing, the further the vertue thereof spreadeth, and rooteth in mens hearts and remembrance. God send therefore the blind to see, and the ignorant to have knowledge of all good things.

Blessing of him that goeth to read the Gospel.

1 Cor. 9.

Thus I conclude; That consecrations, hallowings, and blessings used in the Church (so far forth as I remember and know) be commendable. Of other I can give no sentence, wishing even as I trust men shall once see it come to pass, that all good things may be sung and spoken in our vulgar tongue.

℣ In the nine and twentieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe that the Pope may make Laws and Statutes to bind all Christian men to the observance of the same, under the pain of deadly sin, so that such Laws and Statutes be not contrary to the Law of God? I say, that if it be true that is written in the Decrees, that is to wit, Laws be never confirmed until they be approved by common manners of them that shall use them, then cannot the Popes Laws bind all Christian men, for the Greeks and the Bohemians will (as you do know full well) never admit them, but do refuse them utterly; so that I do not find that his Laws may bind all Christian men.

Laws and observances of the Pope whether they bind to deadly sin. The Popes not received of all men.

Finally, I cannot see that he hath authority to make Laws, binding men to the observance of them under pain of deadly sin, more than hath the King or the Emperor: And to say sooth, I say, (as I have said afore) I think verily that the Church was more full of vertue before the Decrees or Decretals were made (which is not very long ago, but in the time of Constantine, if it be true that is reported in the Decrees, Dist. 15. Cap. Canones generalium) than it hath been since; God repair it, and restore it again to the antient purity and perfection.

The Pope hath no power to make laws binding under deadly sin, more than hath the King or Emperor.

℣ In the thirtieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe that the Pope and other Prelats, and their deputies in spiritual things, have power to Excommunicate Priests, and Lay people that are inobedient and sturdy from entering into the Church, and to suspend or lett them from ministration of the Sacraments of the same: I think that the Pope and other Prelats have power to Excommunicate both Priests and Lay men, such as be rebellious against the Ordinance of God, and disobedient to his Law: For such are sundred from God, afore the Prelats do give sentence, by reason of their sin and contumacy, according as it is said in Esaiah by Almighty God: Your sins, quoth he, do make division betwixt you and me. And the Prelats by right judgment, should pronounce of sinners as they do find them, as that is to pronounce such to be Excommunicate of God, and unworthy to Minister any Sacraments, or to be conservant with Christian folk that will not amend. For thus biddeth Paul, 1 Cor. 5. If any amongst you called a brother, shall be a Whoremonger, a Covetous person, or a worshipper of Images or Idols, or a Rayler, or a Drunkard, or an Extortioner, see that with such you eat no meat. Such ought to be put out of the Church, and not be suffered to come within it.

To the 30 Article. The power of the Pope and Prelats to Excommunicate.

Esai. 59.

1 Cor. 5

I am not certain that Prelats have any such power: And though they had, I doubt whether charity should permit them to shew it forth and execute it without singular discretion. For in Churches ought the word of God to be declared and preached, through the which the sturdy coming thither and hearing it, might soon be smitten with Compunction and Repentance, and thereupon come to amendment. This confirmeth well a Law made in the Council of Carthage, which is this: A Bishop ought to prohibit no person to come into the Church, and to hear the Word of God, whether he be Gentile or Jew, or Heretick, until the Mass time of them that are called Catechumeni. De Conse. distinct. 1.

A doubt whether Prelats have any such power to exclude any from the Church. Distin. 1. de Consecra.

Moreover, where you speak of Prelats Deputies, I think such be but little behoovable to Christs flock. It were necessary and right, that as the Prelats themselves will have the Revenues, Tithes, and Oblations of their Benefices, they themselves should labour and teach diligently the word of God therefore, and not to shift the labour from one unto another till all be left (pity it is) undone. Such doth S. John call Fures & latrones. Thieves and Murtherers, althoug they make never so goodly a worldly shew outward, and bear a stout port.

Bishops Deputies not behooveable.

This I say, that the Pope and other Prelats have power to Excommunicate rebels against Gods Ordinance, and to suspend them from receiving or ministring the Sacrament: But I am not sure, that they have power to forefend them from out of Churches, especially when Gods Word is there preached, unless the sinners be so sore desperate, that they scorn the same. And I would that every Prelate receiving his living of Benefices, should himself work in the same; specially in true preaching of Christs Doctrine, without winding his own neck out of the yoak, and charging therewith other called Deputies or Vicars, Curates, and such like. For God would have every man to get his living by ſweat of his own face, that is to ſay, by his labour, according to his Eſtate and calling. And like as every workman is worthy his meat: Contrariwſe, they that labour not, unleſs they be let by impotency, are worthy to have no meat, and ſuch leſs to take of thoſe, to whom they do no ſervice, Fifty or Fourty pound a year, for waiting after none other thing than the Moon ſhining in the water. The Canon Law maketh clearly with the ſame. Look in the Decrees, Cap. 21. quæſt. 2. cap. Præcip. and you ſhall find plainly as I ſay.

℄ In the one and thirtieth, where you ask, Whether Faith only, without good works, may ſuffice unto a man faln into ſin after his Baptiſm, for his Salvation and juſtifing? I ſay, that it is the uſage of Scripture to ſay, Faith only doth juſtifie, and works Salvation, afore a man do any other good works; and that is ſhewed by many authorities both of Scripture, and alſo of many holy Fathers, in a Treatiſe called, Unio diſſidentium, which I would to Chriſt, as it is in French, and other Languages, we had it truly tranſlated into Engliſh. And truly I do think in this matter (like as is ſhewed by many authorities of holy Fathers) that a man fallen into ſin after Baptiſm ſhall be ſaved through Faith, and have forgiveneſs by Chriſts Paſſion, although he doth no more good deeds thereafter: As when a man having ſhort life, lacketh leiſure to exerciſe other deeds of mercy. Notwithſtanding, true Faith is of ſuch vertue and nature, that when opportunity cometh, it cannot but work plenteouſly deeds of charity, which are a teſtimony and witneſs bearer of mans true Faith. This declareth Saint Auguſtin upon John; I trow it is where he expoundeth this Text: Si diligitis me, præcepta mea ſervate: If ye love me keep my commandments. Whereas within a little after he ſpeaketh in this wiſe, Opera bona non faciunt juſtum, ſed juſtificatus facit bona opera. That is to ſay, good works make not a juſt or a righteous man, but a man once juſtified doth good works.

℄ In the two and thirtieth, where you ask, Whether a Prieſt marrying a Wife, and that without the Diſpenſation of the Pope, begetting alſo Children of her without ſlander giving, do ſin deadly? I ſay, that he doth not ſo much offend as thoſe which in Wales (as I have heard ſay) and alſo in many parts beyond the Sea, or rather in all places, do give openly diſpenſations, for money to Prieſts to take Concubines: Neither doth he offend ſo much as the purchaſers of ſuch Diſpenſations: For they on every hand do clearly commit Fornication and Adultery, utterly forbidden by Gods Law; and the Prieſt of whom ſpeaketh your demand, offendeth but mans Law, if he do that. For in the Decrees it is written, I ween it be in a Gloſs, and certainly I wot not whether it be in the Text or no, I can lightly turn to it having a Book. The ſentence is thus; Presbyter fornicans eſt plus puniendus quam uxorem ducens. That is to ſay, A Prieſt doing Fornication ought to be puniſhed more than one which hath married a Wife. Finally, I think ſuch a Prieſt as before is named in your demand, ſinneth not deadly.

A Prieſt fornicating is more to be puniſhed than a Prieſt marrying, by the Popes own Laws.

I ſay that a Latine Prieſt and a Greek Prieſt is all one before God, if they follow both one rule of Chriſt, left to us in holy Scripture; neither doth Chriſt put any ſuch difference, but the one hath by that rule the ſame liberty that another, and no more nor leſs, for there is the ſame God in Greece, that is here, and hath left one way for us to live after, both here and there. And therefore, I cannot ſee by his Law, but that a Latine Prieſt may marry, as well as they do. And if the Greeks ſhould not follow Chriſts Law in believing the ſame, and living there after, you would call them Hereticks. But that will not the Pope have done. Wherefore ſeeing they do let Prieſts marry, affirming it may ſo be done by the Law of God, and yet are not reputed Hereticks, why ſhould other men that ſay the ſame be called Hereticks, or be therefore burned? Therefore following the Law of God, I make the ſame anſwer of a Latine Prieſt, that I made before of all Prieſts, that a Prieſt, not having the gift of chaſtity, is bound to marry, for avoiding Fornication.

Marriage of Prieſts as well Latine as Greek, permitted alike in the Scripture.

I ſay, that I never prayed for any of them, ſo far forth as I can remember. And though I had, it followeth not, that in ſo doing I ſhould be an Heretick. For you wot well, that there is a mighty great Country called Bohemia, which yet do follow (as men ſay) that ſame Doctrine, which John Hus, and Hierom of Prague taught their Anceſtors, whom (as I trow) neither the Pope nor you do recount Hereticks and Infidels.

And whereas you ſay, they were condemned of Hereſie in the Council of Conſtance: If ſo the Council did right, God ſhall allow it, I doubt not, and that ſhall ſuffice to have commendation of him; So that it is not need to ask of me whether the Acts of the ſame are commendable or no? Neither can I give any direct anſwer thereto; for I do not verily know them. And though I did, yet am not I verily perſwaded, that I, becauſe the Council hath condemned them, muſt therefore believe them to be damned: For a Council, as I ween, may ſometime ſlip beſide the right truth; but what that Council did in condemning them, I cannot preciſely ſay; God woteth. Yea, and that one ſingular perſon may judge more rightly, than a great multitude aſſembled in a Council, appeareth by Gods Law, and by the Law of man. Experience hereof may you ſee by the Council that is ſpoken of in the eleventh of John, where is ſhewed, that after our Saviour had reſtored Lazarus to life, the Biſhops and Phariſees then were gathered together in a Council, ſaying; What ſhall we do? Truth it is that this man Jeſus doth many Miracles, and if we ſuffer him thus, all the world will believe him; whereupon the Romans will come, and put us out of Jeruſalem, our dwelling place, and deſtroy our Nation. At which time Caiaphas did ariſe, ſhewing forth his ſentence, which the whole Council did admit.

Joh. 11.

In like wiſe is ſhewed, Acts the fifth, where in a Council of the Biſhops and Prieſts aſſembled, to know what puniſhment ſhould be done unto Chriſts Apoſtles, becauſe they preached in the name of Chriſt, contrary to the precept of them (for they before had commanded the Apoſtles no more to ſpeak in Chriſts name) there among a ſhrewd multitude of them gathered together, did riſe a certain man, called Gamaliel (a pitiful thing verily to ſee but one good man in ſuch a great Convocation or Council of Prieſts, that ſhould be the lights of vertue to all the people) which Gamaliel was a Doctor of the Law, and had in good reputation among the people; much like he was, as ſeemed to me, to Doctor Collet, ſometime Dean of Pauls in London, while he lived. I may come no nearer to name ſome other of our time, left I ſhould be thought offenſive. This Gamaliel did bid the Apoſtles go aſide for a while out of the Council, or Convocation Houſe; and ſo he ſpake unto the other Prieſts or Biſhops in the Council thus; You men of Iſrael (quoth he) take heed to your ſelves what ye ſhall do unto theſe men the Apoſtles: for afore this time have riſen one called Theudas, and after another named Judas of Galilee, which have turned the people after them, and in concluſion they periſhed, and all they that followed after them vainſhed away. And now, quoth he, I ſay unto you, refrain from hurting theſe men the Apoſtles, and let them alone, or ſuffer them. For if the enterpiſe and work that they have made be of men, undoubtly it ſhall periſh, and be fore done: but if, quoth he, it be of God, you cannot cannot foredo it. And this I tell you, said Gamaliel, lest you should be found to strive and fight against God.

Councils go not always right.

Unto this sentence of Gamaliel, did all the other of the Convocation or Parliament agree, so that they called the Apostles of Christ afore them, causing them to be scourged and charging them, no more after to preach of Christs name, and so did let them depart. This was undoubtedly done in the name of our Saviour and his Apostles, and caused to be written for our comfort and learning; for the Holy Ghost knew afore, that like practice should come in the later time of the world, which we are in. Whereby you may clearly see, that Councils do not always decern with Christ, but sometime they may do against him. And therefore said David, Non sedi cum concilio vanitatis, & cum inique agentibus non introibo: Odi Ecclesiam malignantium, & cum impiis non sedebo; sed lavabo inter innocentes manus meas, &c. I did not (quoth David) sit with the Assembly or Council of vain doers, or lyers, and will not go in amongst them that work iniquity: For I hate the Convocation of them that are malicious or maligners, and amongst the wicked will not I sit: But I will wash my hands among innocents, &c.

Councils may and do err.

Psal. 26.

Also in another Psalm he writeth thus; Dominus dissipat concilia gentium, reprobat concilia populorum, & concilia Principum: Concilium autem Domini in æternum manet, &c. The Lord, quoth he, doth destroy or annihilate the Councils of the Gentiles, he reproveth the Councils of the People and of Rulers. But the Counsel or device of the Lord endureth ever, and the purpose of his mind abideth unto the World of Worlds, For that purpose doth S. Peter in the Acts of the Apostles alledge this verse out of the Psalm; Quare fremuerunt Gentes, &c. Why did the Gentiles rage, and the people imagin vain things, &c. Like unto this is written, Esaiah the first. Also you may see in the Councils of the Pharisees above shewed, that one singular person may sometime perceive a thing more than a generality or a multitude: For only Gamaliel did see better what was behooveable, than could all the other there congregate.

Psalm 2.
Esaiah 1.

Some one man sometime may see more than a whole Council.

Agreeable unto this we find in the Decrees, Distinct. 31. where it is written, that the Council of Nice, willing to correct or amend the life of men of the Church, ordained Laws called Canons or Rules. And as they treated upon such Ordinances, some thought it expedient to bring in a Law that Bishops, Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons, should not lie with their Wives whom they had married afore they were consecrate into the order. With that arose Paphnutius a confessor of Christ, and gainsaid it, testifying that marriage was an honourable thing; saying also, that it is chastity for a man to lie with his own proper Wife. And so he perswaded the Council, that they should constitute no such Law: affirming, that it was a sore matter that they were minded to do, which should be either to the Priests, or else to their Wives an occasion of Fornication: And this was Paphnutius reason. The words of the Canon proceed thus.

Distin. 31. cap. Nicena.

The Story of Paphnutius in Nicen Council.

Chastity standeth not by singleness of life, but pureness of Matrimony.

This declared Paphnutius, he never being married, nor having experience of Marriage, and the Council commended his sentence, making no Statute in this matter, but put it to every mans Freewill and liberty, without any enforcement or necessity. These words stand, as I have recited them unto you, written in the Decrees, albeit they are somewhat otherwise rehearsed in Historia tripartita, as I have shewed before in the fourth Article. Upon this, that Paphnutius did thus resist and prevail against all the other Council, doth the Gloss note in the same Law; that one singular person may gainsay or speak against an universal generality, having a reasonable cause on his side. Suffrage also of the same have we in Abbot Panormitane, where he saith thus: I would (quoth he) rather believe one lay person, bringing in for him authority of Scripture, than an universal Council, that ordaineth or defineth a thing without Scripture.

One man having Scripture with him, is more to be believed than a whole Council without Scripture.

Finally, I say, that I never recounted them neither Saints nor Devils, but resigned the judgment thereof to God; neither have I in earnest reported them the one or the other; neither have done unto them particular worship, so far forth as I can remember.

Answer to the 36 Article.

In the six and thirtieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe, hold, and affirm that every General Council, and the Council of Constance also do represent the Universal Congregation or Church? I say, that what such Councils do represent I cannot certainly tell, and therefore believe neither yea nor nay; neither can I therefore make any affirmation, pro or contra, with this demand or against it: and no marvel: For I know of no Scripture to certifie me of the same, nor yet any sufficient reason. And me thinketh this (under correction I speak) that Councils might represent (albeit I know not whether they do or no) the Universal Church, not being yet the same, as I wote well they neither are nor were. For the Church I do take to be all those that God hath chosen or predestinate to be inheritors of eternal Bliss and Salvation, whether they be Temporal or Spiritual, King or Subject, Bishop or Deacon, Father or Child, Grecian or Roman. And this Church spreadeth through the Universal World, whereas any do call for help truly upon the name of Christ: and there do they ever most grow and assemble commonly, whereas his blessed Word is purely and openly preached and declared; for that is the relief of mans soul, whereunto all men, loving their souls health, lust to resort and seek (as all things do naturally seek after that which should nourish and prolong their life) for in it is shewed that righteousness, which whosoever doth thirst after, and is an hungred for, shall come in the Kingdom of Heaven. Of this may well the Proverb in the Gospel (although it be applyed to the judgment of God when he shall appear in the general doom) be verified, Wheresoever is a dead Carrion, thither will soon be assembled Eagles: That is to wit, wheresoever is declared, by the course of Scripture, the benefits and commodities granted to us by Christs death, thither will men seek and flie, to know how they may enjoy and attain them, which I beseech him to grant us, Amen.

Whether every General Council representeth the Universal Church.

What is the Church.

He meaneth here the Church invisible.

Luke 7.

¶ In the seven and thirtieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe that the same thing which the Council of Constance, representing the Universal Church, hath approved, and doth approve for the maintenance of Faith and souls health, is to be approved and holden of all Christian people; and that which the same Council hath condemned and doth condemn to be contrary to Faith and good Manners, ought of the same Christian people to be believed and affirmed for a thing condemned? I say, that whatsoever the same Council or any other have approved, being approbation or allowance worthy, is of all Christian people to be likewise approved, holden and allowed. And again, whatsoever the same or any other hath condemned, being reproof and condemnation worthy, because it is hurtful to Faith or good living, I say, the same ought of all Christian people to be condemned and reproved. But this surmounteth my knowledge, to discern in what wise their judgment passed; whether with right or unright, because I did never look upon their Acts, neither do I greatly covet to do: Wherefore I refer the determination to them that have better advised their doings, and thereby have more skill in them than I.

Touching the authority of the Council of Constance.

¶ In the eighth and thirtieth you demand, Whether the condemnations of John Wickliff, John Hus, and Hierom of Pague, done upon their Persons, Books and Documents, by the Holy General Council of Constance, were duly and rightfully done, and so for such, of every Catholike person, whether they are to be holden and surely to be affirmed? I answer, That it passeth my knowledge, and I cannot tell; thinking surely, that though I am ignorant of the same, so that I cannot discuss the thing determinately, yet my Christendom shall be therefore nevertheless, and I and all Christian men may well suspend our sentence, being thereof ignorant, affirming neither the one nor the other, neither yea nor nay.

I say that I know not determinately whether they be Hereticks or no, nor whether their Books be erroneous or no, nor whether they ought to be called Hereticks or no.

℣ In the Forty firſt, where you ask, Whether I believe that it is lawful at the commandment of a Judge, to make an Oath to ſay the truth, or any other Oath in a caſe convenient, and that alſo for purgation of Infamy? I anſwer, that I never ſaid the contrary, but that I think and have thought it lawful to give an Oath afore a Judge, to ſay the truth, if the Judge ſo require, and that by requeſt lawful and convenient. As when a thing is in Controverſie betwixt two perſons, and thereupon they ſue unto a Judge for ſentence; when the Judge can none otherwiſe bolt out the truth, he may require an Oath. As when the two Women which contended before Solomon, to avoid the crime of Murther, which the one had committed in oppreſſing her Child to death, and would have put the ſame upon the other, if Solomon could not by his wiſdom otherwiſe have inveſtigated the truth, he might, I ſuppoſe, to come by the more certain information of the thing, have cauſed one of them, or both, ſeeing it expedient for him, to ſwear; wherein the Women had been bound to obey him: But Judges have need to be ſpare in requiring of Oaths. For in cuſtomable, or oft Juſtices, creepeth in alway betwixt times ſome perjury, as ſheweth Chriſoſtom in words ſemblable to theſe, and thing pretious, through oft haunt or occupying, loſe their eſtimation. And ſo reverent Oaths, unadviſedly required for every triſle uſually, do cauſe men to regard little for making of them, yea, and I fear to break them.

An Oath before a Judge in a cauſe convenient is lawful.

How an Oath ought to be required of a Judge, and how it may be given before a Judge.

Overmuch uſe of Oaths in Courts reprehended.

Judges muſt be ſpare and wary in requiring Oaths.

Where many Oaths be, there is ſome perjury.

Therefore in Almain, they have made of late (as I have heard ſay by credible perſons, which have come from thence) many notable Ordinances for the Commonwealth within a while, and amongſt other this is one: If a man be ſet for to enter Plea againſt another in any Town, the Peers thereof afore whom all Actions are uſed to be debated, hearing ſuch a Plea entred, ſhall call the parties privately together, before they come into an open Court. And the matter examined, they ſhall exhort them to let the Plea ceaſe without further proceſs, ſhewing them the great dammage both godly and worldly, coming of waging the Law, and the great eaſe and commodity that is in agreement and concord. Which exhortation they uſe to ſhew with ſo great gravity, and fatherly love (ſuch wonders are wrought where the Goſpel hath free paſſage) that very few will Commence Plea. And though any Plea be Commenced, through ſuch ſage admonition it falleth lightly to Sequeſtration and Arbitrement of Neighbours, who do ſet their ſuters at unity, ere the matter do come to diſcuſſion in open Court.

The Uſe and manner of the Germans in cauſes judicial.

Fruit of the Goſpel in Germany.

In Germany few controverſies come to the open Court, but commonly are compounded at home.

Notwithſtanding, if ſome be ſo waywardly minded (as in a multitude all are not one mans Children, and therefore unlike of intent) that they will needs proceed and follow the Law, they ſhall be heard to ſpeak their matters in open Court, and taught how the matter is moſt like to proceed, and Counſelled with new exhortation to ſtop their proceſs. If they will not be perſwaded, and then the Judges ſeeing the matter ſo ambiguous, that they cannot give perfect ſentence therein, except by vertue of an Oath made by one of the parties, they be firſt better certified: Then will they ſhew the ſame before the ſuters, declaring what a chargeful thing it is to give a ſolemn Oath for love of winning ſome worldly profit: And how (unleſs ſuch as ſhall make it, be the better ware to eſchew the ſame) they ſhall (beſide an evil example giving to a multitude) work themſelves happily ſhame or diſhonеſty.

Cuſtom among the Germans of taking Oaths.

Upon this, they ſhall give a reſpite until a certain day appointed. So that in the mean while the ſuters may take deliberation thereof, what is beſt to be done. If after this they will not thus reſt, at the day appointed ſhall they come forth into a common place, and the great Bell of the City cauſed to be rung, whereby the people ſhall be warned, what they are about to do: and the people aſſembled, the Judges ſhall in full chargeable and lamentable wiſe charge the parties, under the vertue of their Oath, to make true relation of that ſhall be demanded. So that by reaſon of ſoberly and fatherly exhortations made of the Judges or Peers of the Town, and perſwalion of Neighbours, and for avoiding Gods diſpleaſure, and ſhame of men, there is little ſutes in Courts; and if at any time any be made, they be lightly ſtopped. So that Jury and Swearing is well excluded, and need not much to be required.

{KING} {Hen. 8.} Jury and Swearing well excluded out of Germany.

This I have ſhewed, becauſe it pitieth me to hear and ſee the contrary uſed in ſome of our Nation, and ſuch alſo as name themſelves ſpiritual men, and ſhould be head Miniſters of the Church; who incontinent as any man cometh before them, anon they call for a Book, and do move him to ſwear, without any longer reſpite, yea, and they will charge him by verture of the contents in the Evangely, to make true relation of all that they ſhall demand him, he not knowing what they will demand, neither whether it be lawful to ſhew them the truth of their demands, or no; for ſuch things there be that are not lawful to be ſhewed. As if I were accuſed of Fornication, and none could be found in me: Or if they ſhould require me to ſwear to bewray any other that I have known to offend in that vice, I ſuppoſe it were expedient to hold me ſtill, and not to follow their will; for it ſhould be contrary to charity, if I ſhould ſo aſſent to bewray them that I need not, and to whom, perhaps, though I have known them to offend, yet truſting of their amendment, I have promiſed before to keep their fault ſecret without any diſcloſing of the ſame. Yea, moreover, if ſuch Judges ſometime, not knowing by any due proof that ſuch as have to do afore them are culpable, will inforce them by an Oath, to detect themſelves in opening before them their hearts; in this ſo doing, I cannot ſee that men need to condeſcend to their requeſts. For it is in the Law (but I wot not certainly the place) thus: Nemo tenetur prodere ſemetipſum, that is to ſay, No may is bound to bewray himſelf. Alſo in another place of the Law it is written, Cogitationis pœnam nemo patiatur, no man ſhould ſuffer puniſhment of men for his thought. To this agreeth the common proverb, that is thus: Cogitationes liberæ ſunt a vectigalibus. That is to ſay, Thoughts be free, and need to pay no Toll. So that to conclude, I think it lawful at the commandment of a Judge, to make an Oath to ſay the truth, ſpecially if a Judge requireth an Oath duly, and in lawful wiſe, or to make an Oath in any other cauſe convenient, and that alſo for purgation of infamy, when any infamy is lawfully laid againſt a man.

A man is not bound to detect another mans fault before a Judge.

Law compelleth no man to bewray himſelf.

Law puniſheth no man for thought.

Thoughts be free, and need to pay no toll.

No man is bound to bewray himſelf by the Law.

In the three and fortieth, where you ask, whether I believe that Saint Peter was Chriſts Vicar, having power on Earth to bind and looſe? I ſay, that I do not perceive clearly what you mean by this term Vicar; for Chriſt never called Peter nor none other ſo in Scripture. If you mean thereby, that after the departing hence of Chriſt, when he was riſen from death in his immortal body, and ſo ſtied into Heaven, whereas he remaineth ſitting upon the right hand of his Father, that he ſo being away from hence, Saint Peter occupied his room; then, I ſay, it is not untrue but Peter in a manner (which I ſhall ſhew hereunder) was his Vicar; and like as Peter was his Vicar, even ſo was Paul and the other Apoſtles, and the one on leſs than the other, if it be true that Saint Cyprian doth write, which is alſo conſenting to Scripture, he ſaith thus; That Chriſt ſpake unto Peter ſaying: I ſay, quoth our Saviour, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock of Stone ſhall I build my congregation, and the gates of Hell ſhall not overcome it. To thee will I give the Keys of Heaven, and what things thou ſhalt bind upon Earth, the ſame ſhall be bound alſo in Heaven: And whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe upon Earth, ſhall be looſed alſo in Heaven. And to him after his reſurrection doth Chriſt ſay, Feed my Sheep.

they shall be remitted. Nevertheless, because he would declare unity, he ordained by his authority, the original of the same unity beginning of one. The other Apostles truly were the same that Peter was, indued with equal parting both of honour, and authority or power, but the beginning cometh of one, that the Congregation should be shewed to be one. Those are the words of Saint Cyprian, in a Treatise that is called, De simplicitate Prælatorum; wherein you may see that Christ made all the Apostles of equal honour and like authority. Notwithstanding, because he would testifie the unity of his Church or Congregation, he spake, as it were, only unto Peter, when he said, Feed my sheep. And, I shall give thee, Peter, the Keys of Heaven: But in so saying, though the words seem spoken to Peter only, yet they were spoken unto him, in that he sustained the general person of all the Church, being, as it were, a common Speaker for the same. So that in speaking to him, Christ spake unto all other the Apostles unto whom also he gave all the same authority that he gave unto Peter; as you may see both in these words of Cyprian, and also the same is clearly shewed out of Saint Augustin in divers places, but no where more plainly in a few words, than in a Treatise called De Agone Christiano.

The Only person of Peter declareth the unity of the Church. Peter beareth the person of the whole Church.

Gal. 2.

To this accordeth well that which was written of Paul, Gal. 2. Ab his qui videbantur aliquid esse; quales aliquando fuerunt, nihil mea refert, &c. Of those Apostles (quoth Paul) which seemed to be of authority I was not taught (what they were in time passed it skilleth me nothing; God regardeth not the exterior appearance of man) nevertheless, they which appeared to be of price shewed me no learning, nor gave me no Counsel. But contrary, when they had seen that the Gospel of Uncircumcision was committed unto me, like as the Evangely of Circumcision was unto Peter; for he that was mighty in Peter concerning the Apostleship toward the Jews was mighty also in me toward the Gentiles. Therefore when James, Peter and John, which appeared to be as Pillars, knew the Grace given me; they gave unto me and Barnabe their right hands in signs of fellowship to be their partners, so that we should exercise the Office of Apostles among the Gentiles, as they did among the Jews. Wherein you may clearly see, that Paul took no instruction of them, which seemed to be in high authority, and that Peter, James, and John, which were noted Principals, took Paul and Barnabas to be their Mates and Fellows; which they would not have done (as I suppose) if they had known that God had granted unto them a Prerogative singular, to excel Paul, and to be his Sovereign: But according to the Prerogative of God granted, they might have safely shewed it, and enjoyed the same; like as they did rejoyce in other benefits granted to them of God, to be Ministers in his Church for the edifying of the same. And as Saint John calleth himself the Disciple loved of his Master Jesus, and testifieth; how that unto him, Christ hanging upon the Cross, did commit his blessed Mother.

Apostles Mates and Fellows together.

Moreover, If these three Apostles, James, Peter, and John, should have by humility left out to make mention of their Prerogative, when they took Paul and Barnabas into their fellowship, yet it is to be thought that Paul, which never useth any inordinate Arrogancy, writing the words above said for the magnifying of his own priviledge and authority given him of God, would not have supressed and passed over their Primacy unspoken of, with whom he maketh here comparison: For then it might be thought he were envious, to pick away authority from other to himself unlawful; that cannot so be. Moreover, he saith a little after the words afore rehearsed, that he reproved Saint Peter even before his face. Whereupon Saint Hierom expounding the same Epistle, saith (as I remember) that Paul would not have been bold so to do, except he had known himself equal to Peter.

Objection discussed.

Hierom.

Paul equal to Peter.

In the words also of Paul above written this might be noted, as serving to my purpose, that Peter had no preheminence or primacy above the other, for James is named afore him: Which Paul would not have done (I think) knowing Peter to be James superior. Therefore he making no such variety in order, put James afore, saying, And James, Peter and John, that appeared the Principals, quoth he, gave unto me and to Barnabe their right hands in sign of fellowship. Yet notwithstanding Paul loved good order, I suppose, as well as any that now are, which contend so sore for superior Rooms and preheminency, claiming to be the Apostles Successors. I would it were so much for the Commonwealth of Christian people, as it is suspect that they do it for vainglory and worldly lucre. According to this you shall find, Acts the Eleventh, where is shewed, that after Peter by instinct of the Holy Ghost, had gone unto one of the Gentiles, called Cornelius, a petty Captain, having the governance of an hundred men, teaching him the ways and Doctrine of Christ, and Baptising him and other with him assembled, being, like as he afore was, Pagans; the Apostles and other Christian brethren that were in Jewry, hearing thereof, when Peter came to Jerusalem, they which held upon Circumcision made none obeysance unto him, (albeit I think verily he had more holiness than ever had any Pope) as the Emperor is fain to do to the Pope at his Coronation, falling down to kiss the Popes feet, or to hold the Popes Stirrop while he mounteth upon his Horses back, according to the form of Law written: I am not certain, whether in the Decrees, or else the Decretals, or in both rather (for such Ordinances are inviolable, and worthy to be principally Recorded) but they reasoned sore, and disputed both against Saint Peter and also his doings, saying; You have gone amongst them that you ought not have had to do with, nor to have meddled among them, that are men unclean, because they are uncircumcised, yea, and that is more, you have eat and drunk with them. Peter mildly and coldly made answer again, rehearsing all the manner of his doing in order; shewing that he was so instructed to do by mighty and clear Revelations of God, and not by his own fantasie and pleasure.

James named before Peter.

Contention about superiority whence it proceedeth.

Acts. 11.

Emperors give more observance to the Pope, than ever did the Apostles unto Peter.

Difference between Peter and the Pope.

The Pope requireth his feet to be kissed of Emperors. Peter was content to be charged of the brethren.

Which answer being heard, the other that afore had made sore objections against him, (which were both of the Apostles, and other Christian brethren) were content, holding their peace without any more complaining, and gave glory therefore to God, saying; Then God hath granted also unto the Gentiles to take repentance, and so to come to eternal life. Wherein you may see, that the other Apostles were as bold with Peter, as before is shewed of Paul, to dispute against him. Neither were they therefore by Peter, reproved of inobedience. He did not alledge any preheminency or authority to rebuke them for their complaining: As one would say, why should you that are my Sheep control me, that am the Head of the Church and your Pastor, or Christs General Vicar, having both jurisdiction Temporal and Spiritual; with such other like? But shewed them it was the Will of God, that he had done, going to the Gentiles to tell them of eternal life, which God pleased to give to them as well as to the Jews. In token whereof the Holy Ghost did sensibly come among them, and so were they baptized.

Thus may you see, that if Peter were the Vicar of Christ, even so likewise was Paul, and all the other Apostles. And I do not think contrary, but that Peter, and all other of the Apostles, were Christs Vicars, if you mean by this word Vicar, a Deputy, or such like, for to preach his Evangely, (which is an Office of all other most Sovereign) to Minister Sacraments, and to do other such divine service in Gods Church. And thus were they worthy to be called (as the Scripture nameth them) Christs true Apostles, Bishop, Priests, Legats, or any such like. Which authority was given them by Christ after his resurrection, when he said unto them these words, Peace be amongst you. Like as my Father hath sent me, so do I send you. Take you the Holy Ghost: Whose sins soever you shall forgive, are forgiven them; and whose sins soever you shall retain, are retained: And the same authority did they receive, when Christ spake unto all the Church, after the mind of Saint Augustin and other, in Peter, saying, Peter, Feed my Sheep.

Peter Vicar of Christ no more than other Apostles. Vicar of Christ.

Succeſſor of Peter

How the Pope may be a Succeſſor of Peter.

The Pope may ſucceed in Saint Peters ſtead or Office, and do the ſame duly and diligently feeding Chriſts flock, and ſhewing vertuous example of living to the ſame, and ſo doing, he may and ought to be thought and named a true ſucceſſor of Saint Peter. And thus is your Lordſhip Saint Peters ſucceſſor, preforming the conditions aforeſaid, with other like properties requiſite to your order and duty; yea, and as many other as do truly their duty, and duly the Office of a Biſhop. And otherwiſe may not the Pope be called the Succeſſor of Peter, becauſe he is entred into Saint Peters Office, not regarding to that is requiſite for the ſame, nor following the trace of vertue, but the contrary. And then he is wrongfully named, if at any time ſuch be, which is not unpoſſible. For what ſhould men call Peters Succeſſors, that play the Pagans, and follow with the Conditions of Caiaphas, Simon Magus, or Judas? Such verily, if any be, cannot rightly claim to be Peters Succeſſors, no more than the night may claim to be Succeſſor of the day; for Peter was never ſo minded, nor taught them ſo. Yea, they ought rather to be called Peters Adverſaries, for ſo much as they do not his will that is ſhewed by his own Acts and writing, but work againſt the ſame. Of ſuch may be ſaid, Non ſanctorum filii ſunt, qui tenent loca ſanctorum, ſed qui exercent opera eorum, That is to ſay, they are not all Saints children, that occupy the rooms of Saints, but they are their children that exerciſe their works. Yea, of ſuch may be ſaid, that which is written of Saint Hierom: All Biſhops (quoth he) are not Biſhops; mark you well Peter, but mark alſo Judas: Behold Stephen, but behold Nicholas: Eccleſiaſtical dignity maketh not a Chriſtian man. Cornelius the Centurion, being yet a Pagan, was made clean through the benefit of the Holy Ghoſt. Contariwiſe, Daniel being a Child, condemneth Prieſts or antient men. It is no eaſie thing, ſaith he, to ſtand in the room of Peter and Paul, and to keep the ſeat of them now Reigning with Chriſt: For unſavory ſalt is nought worth elſe, but to be thrown out of the doors, and troden down of Hogs. This ſaith Saint Hierom.

Every good Biſhop may be Succeſſor of Peter.

The Pope rather may be Peters adverſary than his Succeſſor.

Whereunto agreeth well S. Auguſtin. Every one (quoth he) that ſaith unto you, Pax vobis, ought not to be heard, or to be believed a Dove. Crows be fed of dead Carrion, and ſo is not a Dove, but ſhe liveth by the fruits of the Earth. Her living is pure, innocent, and hurtleſs. Whereby you may ſee, that ill Biſhops are no Biſhops, and that they which follow not Saints in vertuous living, are not the Succeſſors of Saints, but unſavory ſalt, that is, neither of the Church, nor ſhall come in Heaven to reign there with Peter and Paul, but be thrown out with great contempt. For God knoweth a Dove from a Crow, and an innocent liver from a devourer of Carrion. But ſuch as declare and ſhew good deeds as the Saints did, be their Children and Succeſſors, and ſhall with them reign in Heaven.

Let us mark not how the bird ſpeaketh, but how he feedeth. The Crow feedeth upon carrion, the Dove not ſo.

How the Pope is Succeſſor of Peter, and how not.

So that to conclude, I ſay, That the Pope ordinately choſen is the Succeſſor of S. Peter, following Saint Peters godly living. And elſe, except he ſtudy to do diligently, that he may be ſo called worthily, it ſhall be but a vain name. For rather may he elſe be reputed an Image of a Pope, or of a Biſhop, according as ſuch be called of the Prophet; O Paſtor & Idolum; O Idol Shepheards.

Zech. 11.

To the laſt Article.

In the five and fortieth, where you ask, Whether ever I have promiſed at any time by my Oath, or made any confederacy or league with any perſon or perſons, that I would alway hold and defend certain concluſions or Articles ſeeming to me and to my Complices right and Conſonant unto the Faith? And will that I ſhould certifie you of the courſe and form of the ſaid opinions and concluſions by row, and of the Names and Sirnames of them that were to me adherent, and promiſed to be adherent in this behalf; I ſay, that I do not remember that ever I made pact or confederacy with any perſon or perſons, nor made any promiſe by Oath, that I would alway hold and defend any concluſions or Articles, ſeeming to me and other right and Conſonant to the Faith, unleſs it hath chanced me to ſay in this form; That I would never with the aid of God forſake, neither decline from the truth, neither for fear, nor yet for love of man or men.

John Lambert required to detect his fellows.

Thus I have perhaps ſaid in ſome time, or ſome place, becauſe I have indeed ſo intended, and do intend, Gods grace aſſiſting me. But I cannot yet tell you, whether I have ſo ſaid or no, nor to what perſons, nor at what time, neither in what place: neither do I reckon me to have any complices, but ſuch as do love me, and I them, for God and in God. And thoſe do I reckon all them that are or will be truly Chriſtian, in calling upon Chriſts name. And concerning opinions or concluſions, I can tell you of none other than I have ſhewed: The ſum whereof I reckon and think utterly to be concluded in two propoſitions, which both are written in the New Teſtament.

{KING Hen. 8.}

All the opinions of John Lambert ingroſſed in two propoſitions.

The firſt, The Acts of Apoſtles in this wiſe: Chriſtus eſt caput anguli, nec eſt in alio quoquam ſalus. Non enim aliud nomen ſub cœlo datum eſt inter homines, in quo oporteat nos ſalvos fieri; That is to ſay, CHRIST is the Head Corner ſtone of our faith, whereupon it ſhould be ſet and grounded, neither is ſalvation in any other, for there is no other name under Heaven given amongſt men wherein we may be ſaved. This is one of the propoſitions, wherein is ingroſſed or comprehended my ſaying, which Saint Paul doth thus otherwiſe explicate; CHRIST is made of God our wiſdom, our righteouſneſs, our pareneſs, our ſatisfaction, and our redemption. And in another place; There is no other foundation, that any man may put, except that which is already put, that is CHRIST JESUS.

The firſt Propoſition. Acts 4.

1 Cor. 1.

The other propoſition is written of the Prophet Eſaiah, and recited of our Saviour in the Evangely of Matthew, in theſe words; Men do worſhip me in vain, teaching Doctrines and precepts or Laws human. Of this writeth Paul very largely in divers places, and every where well nigh. Amongſt other, Coloſſians the ſecond, where he warneth the Coloſſians to take heed that no man do ſpoil them, to ſteal them away by Philoſophy or vain deception, according to the conſtitutions of men, and Ordinances of this world.

The ſecond Propoſitio. Eſai. 29. Col. 2.

Thus I do certifie you of all the opinions and concluſions which I intend or have intended to ſuſtain, being contained in the two propoſitions above written. Other hold I none, but ſuch as are mentioned in the Creed, both that is ſung at Maſs, and alſo in the other Creed that all people ſay every day. Finally, that you require to know of the names and Sirnames in order particularly of them, that be to me adherents, or that have promiſed me to be adherent in this part; I ſay, that I know of none particular that I remember, without I ſhould note unto you a great multitude, which you may know and hear of (I ſuppoſe) through all Regions and Realms of Chriſtendom, that do think likewiſe, as I have ſhewed. I ween the multitude mounteth nigh unto the one half of Chriſtendom; and more ſhould do likewiſe, by a great ſort within a while, I doubt not, but that our Ghoſtly enemy laboureth amain to have knowledge of the truth ſuppreſſed, and letteth that it cannot come abroad to be ſeen. I ſay therefore again, I know of no particular adherents, nor of any that hath ſo promiſed me to be in theſe matters. And though I did; I would not (except I know not that charity ſo required, which I do not find yet hitherto) detect, nor bewray any one of them, for no mans pleaſure: For I am bound to obey God above men. Who be with us, and grant the Truth to be known. Amen.

D. Cranmer Embaſſador to the Biſhop of Rome.

Cranmer offered diſputations before the Pope and Emperor in the Kings cauſe.

Theſe anſwers of John Lambert, to the five and forty Articles above expreſſed, were directed and delivered to Doctor Warham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as it appeareth, about the year of our Lord 1532, at what time the ſaid Lambert was in cuſtody in the Archbiſhops houſe at Oxford, being there deſtitute of all help and furniture of Books, as by his own word is to be gathered. But, ſo the providence of God wrought for Lambert, that within ſhort ſpace after, Anno 1533, the ſaid Archbiſhop Warham died: Whereby it ſeemeth that Lambert, for that time was delivered. In this mean while Doctor Cranmer was ſent over in Embaſſage, with the Earl of Wiltſhire, Doctor Stokeſly, Doctor Kern, Doctor Benet, and other learned men, to the Biſhop of Rome lying then at Bonony, to diſpute the matter of the Kings Marriage, openly, firſt in the Court of Rome, then in the Court of the Emperor. Where after ſundry promiſes, and appoinments made, yet when the time came, no man there appeared to diſpute with them, in theſe two Propoſitions: Firſt, That no Man, Jure Divino, could or ought to Marry his Brothers Wife. Secondly, That the Biſhop of Rome by no means ought to diſpence to the contrary. But of this more copiouſly we will intreat (the Lords Grace permiting) in the ſequel of our Story, coming to Doctor Cranmer's life.

D. Cranmer. made Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Lambert delivered out of cuſtody. Lambert taught Children about the Stocks.

After the death of William Warham, ſucceeded in that See the ſaid Doctor Cranmer. Lambert in the mean ſeaſon being delivered, partly by the death of this Archbiſhop, partly by the coming in of Queen Ann, returned unto London, and there exerciſed himſelf about the Stocks, in teaching Children both in the Greek and Latin Tongue. And forſomuch as Prieſts in thoſe days could not be permitted to have Wives, he left his Prieſthood, and applied himſelf to that Function of Teaching, intending ſhortly after alſo to be free of the Grocers and to be married. But God, who diſpoſeth all Mens purpoſes after the ſecret pleaſure of his own Will, did both intercept his Marriage, and alſo his Freedom, and Married him to his Son Chriſt Jeſus, as now conſequently followeth to be declared.

Anno 1538. D. Taylor Biſhop of Lincoln, who after was deprived in Queen Maries time and died 1554.

Thus then after that John Lambert now had continued in this Vocation of Teaching, with great commendation, and no leſs commodity to the Youth; it happened this preſent year 1538, he was preſent at a Sermon, in St. Peters Church at* London. He that preached, was named Doctor Tailor, a Man in thoſe days not far diſagreeing from the Goſpel, and afterward in the time of King Edward was made Biſhop of Lincoln, and at laſt in the time of Queen Mary was deprived from the ſame, and ſo ended his life, among the Confeſſors of Jeſus Chriſt.

Lambert ſeeketh conference with the preacher. The firſt occaſion of Lamberts troubles.

When the Sermon was done, Lambert, having gotten opportunity, went gently unto the preacher to talk with him, and uttered divers Arguments wherein he deſired to be ſatisfied. All the whole matter or controverſie was concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Tailor, excuſing himſelf at that preſent for other buſineſs, willed him to write his mind and to come again at more leiſure.

Lambert was contented, and ſo departed. Who within a while after, when he had written his mind, came again unto him. The ſum of his Arguments were ten, which he comprehended in writing, approving the truth of the cauſe, partly by the Scriptures, and partly by good Reaſon, and by the Doctors. The which Arguments, although they came not all unto our hands, yet ſuch Men as were preſent at thoſe Affairs reported them to be of great force and authority. And of a few which were born away in memory, the firſt reaſon was this which followeth, gathered upon Chriſts Words, where it is ſaid in the Goſpel, This Cup is the New Teſtament:

Lamberts Arguments.

The words of Conſecration change not the Cup: ergo, neither do the words change the Bread corporally into the Body. One Body cannot fill many places at once naturally.

And if, ſaith he, theſe words do not change neither the Cup, neither the Wine corporally into the New Teſtament, by like reaſon it is not agreeable that the words ſpoken of the Bread ſhould turn the Bread corporally into the Body of Chriſt.

Another Reaſon was this: That it is not agreeable to a Natural Body to be in two places or more at one time: wherefore it muſt follow of neceſſity that either Chriſt had not a natural Body, or elſe truly, according to the common nature of a Body, it cannot be preſent in two places at once, and much leſs in many, that is to ſay in Heaven and in Earth, on the right hand of his Father, and in the Sacrament.

The forms cannot be without the ſubject.

Moreover, a Natural Body cannot be without his form and ſhape, conditions and accidents, like as the accidents and conditions alſo cannot be without their ſubject or ſubſtance. Then foraſmuch as in the Sacrament there is no quality, quantity, or condition of the Body of Chriſt, and finally no appearance at all of Fleſh; who doth not very plainly perceive that there is no tranſubſtantiate Body of his in the Sacrament? And to reaſon by the contrary; all the proper conditions, ſigns and accidents whatſoever they be, pertaining to Bread, we do ſee to be preſent in the Sacrament, which cannot be there without the ſubject; therefore we muſt of neceſſity confeſs the Bread to be there. He added alſo many other allegations out of the Doctors. But to be ſhort, this Tailor the preacher, whom I ſpeak of before, willing and deſiring, as is ſuppoſed, of a good mind to ſatisfie Lambert in this matter, amongſt other whom he took to Counſel, he alſo conferred with Doctor Barns. Which Barns, although he did otherwiſe favour the Goſpel, and was an earneſt preacher; notwithſtanding ſeemed not greatly to favour this Cauſe, fearing peradventure that it would breed ſome let or hinderance, among the people, to the preaching of the Goſpel, which was now in a good forwardneſs, if ſuch Sacramentaries ſhould be ſuffered: he perſwaded Tailor by and by to put up the matter to Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And hereby we may ſee it truly verified, which William Tyndal, before writing to John Frith, did note in Doctor Barns, ſaying, That Dr. Barns will be hot againſt you, &c. Dr. Barns.

Upon theſe Originals Lambert's quarrel firſt began, and was brought unto this point, That through the ſiniſter doing of many it began of a private talk to be a publick and common matter. For he was ſent for by the Archbiſhop, and brought into the open Court, and forced to defend his Cauſe openly: for the Archbiſhop had not yet favoured the Doctrine of the Sacrament, whereof afterward he was an earneſt profeſſor. In that diſputation it is ſaid, That Lambert did Appeal from the Biſhops to the Kings Majeſty. But howſoever the matter was, the rumor of that Diſputation was by and by ſpread throughout the whole Court.

I told you before, how that King Henry for two years paſt, ſhewing the part of an hard Husband, had beheaded Queen Ann his Wife. Which Deed did not only greatly diſpleaſe the German Princes (who for that only cauſe had broken off the League with him, Anno 1536.) but alſo many other good Men in England.

Moreover, how that within a while after Abbies began to be ſubverted, and all their goods to be confiſcate and given abroad. For which Cauſes, but eſpecially for the late aboliſhing of the Biſhop of Rome, the Commons had conceived a very evil Opinion of him, inſomuch as the ſeditious ſort rebelled againſt him.

S. Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter.

At that time Stephen Gardiner then Biſhop of Wincheſter was in Authority amongſt the Kings Counſellors, who as he was of a cruel nature, ſo was he no leſs of a ſubtil and crafty wit, ever gaping for ſome occaſion how to let and hinder the Goſpel; albeit a long time he was not ſo greatly eſteemed with the King, that he could much prevail to atchieve his conceived purpoſe: But at length, upon this matter adviſing himſelf, he thought he had apt occaſion and opportunity to accompliſh his deſire. Neither did he foreſlack the occaſion miniſtred, but went ſtraight unto the King, privily admoniſhing him, and with fare flattering words giving him moſt pernicious counſel; declaring how great hatred and ſuſpition was raiſed upon him almoſt in all places.

The pernitious Counſel of the Biſhop of Wincheſters.

Firſt, for aboliſhing the Biſhop of Romes Authority, then for ſubverſion of the Monaſteries, and alſo for that the Divorce of Queen Katherine, was yet freſh in Mens minds: and now the time ſerved if he would take it, eaſily to remedy all theſe matters, and pacifie the minds of them which were diſpleaſed and offended with him, if only in this matter of John Lambert he would manifeſt unto the People how ſtoutly he would reſiſt Hereticks; and by this new rumor he would bring to paſs, not only to extinguiſh all other former rumors, and as it were with one Nail to drive out another, but alſo ſhould diſcharge himſelf of all ſuſpition, in that he now began to be reported to be a favourer of new Sects and Opinions.

The King giving ear more willingly, than prudently or godlily, to this Syrene, immediately received the wicked counſel of the Biſhop, and by and by ſent out a General Commiſſion, commanding all the Nobles and Biſhops of his Realm to come with all ſpeed to London, to aſſiſt the King againſt Hereticks and Hereſies, which the King himſelf would ſit in Judgment upon.

The Nobles and Biſhops aſſembled to Lamberts Diſputation.

Theſe preparations made, a day was ſet for Lambert, where a great Aſſembly of the Nobles was gathered from all parts of the Realm, not without much wonder and expectation in this ſo ſtrange a caſe. All the Seats and Places were full of Men round about the Scaffold.

Lambert brought before the King to Diſpute.

By and by the godly Servant of Chriſt, John Lambert, was brought from the Priſon with a Guard of Armed Men, even as a Lamb to Fight with many Lyons, and placed right over againſt where the Kings Royal Seat was,

ſo

ſo that now they tarried but for the Kings coming to that place.

At the laſt the King himſelf did come as Judge of that great controverſie, with a great guard, clothed all in White, and covering by that colour and diſſembling ſeverity of all bloody Judgment.

On his right hand ſate the Biſhops, and behind them the famous Lawyers, clothed all in Purple, according to the manner. On the left hand ſate the Peers of the Realm, Juſtices, and other Nobles in their order; behind whom ſate the Gentlemen of the Kings Privy Chamber. And this was the manner and form of the Judgment, which albeit it was terrible enough of it ſelf to abaſh any innocent, yet the Kings look, his cruel countenance, and his brows bent unto ſeverity, did not a little augment this terror, plainly declaring a mind full of indignation far unworthy ſuch a Prince, eſpecially in ſuch a matter, and againſt ſo humble and obedient a ſubject.

The Kings ſtern look againſt Lambert.

When the King was ſet in his Throne he beheld Lambert with a ſtern countenance, and then turning himſelf unto his Counſellors, he called forth Doctor Day, Biſhop of Chicheſter, commanding him to declare unto the People the cauſes of this preſent Aſſembly and Judgment.

The Oration of Doctor Day.

The whole effect of his Oration tended in a manner to this purpoſe: That the King in this Seſſion would have all States, Degrees, Biſhops, and all other to be admoniſhed of his will and Pleaſure, that no Man ſhould conceive any ſiniſter Opinion of him, that now the Authority and Name of the Biſhop of Rome being utterly aboliſhed, he would alſo extinguiſh all Religion, or give liberty unto Hereticks to perturbe and trouble the Churches of England, without puniſhment, whereof he is the Head. And moreover, that they ſhould not think that they were Aſſembled at that preſent, to make any Diſputation upon the Heretical Doctrine; but only for this purpoſe, that by the induſtry of him and other Biſhops, the Hereſies of this Man here preſent (meaning Lambert) and the Hereſies of all ſuch like ſhould be refuted or openly condemned in the preſence of them all.

When he had made an end of his Oration, the King ſtanding up upon his Feet, leaning upon a Cuſhion of White Cloth of Tiſſiue, turning himſelf toward Lambert, with his Brows bent, as it were threatning ſome grievous thing to him, ſaid theſe words: Ho, good Fellow what is thy name? Then the humble Lamb of Chriſt humbly kneeling down upon his Knee, ſaid, My name is John Nicholſon, although of many I be called Lambert.

The Kings words to Lambert.

What (ſaid the King) have you two names? I would not truſt you, having two names, although you were my Brother.

Lambert. O moſt noble Prince, your Biſhops forced me of neceſſity to change my name. And after divers Prefaces and much talk had in this manner, the King commanded him to go unto the matter, and to declare his Mind and Opinion, what he thought as touching the Sacrament of the Altar.

Lambert's Oration to the King.

Then Lambert, beginning to ſpeak for himſelf, gave God thanks, which had ſo inclined the heart of the King, that he himſelf would not diſdain to hear and underſtand the controverſies of Religion; for that it happeneth oftentimes, through the cruelty of the Biſhops, that many good and innocent Men in many places are privily Murthered and put to Death without the Kings knowledge.

The cruelty of Biſhops noted.

But now forſomuch as that High and Eternal King of kings, in whoſe hands are the hearts of all Princes, hath inſpired and ſtirred up the Kings mind, that he himſelf will be preſent to underſtand the cauſes of his Subjects, ſpecially whom God of his Divine goodneſs hath ſo abundantly endued with ſo great gifts of judgment and knowledge, he doth not miſtruſt but that God will bring ſome great thing to paſs through him, to the ſetting forth of the Glory of his Name.

Then the King, with an angry voice, interrupting his Oration; I came not hither, ſaid he, to hear mine own praiſes thus painted out in my preſence, but briefly go to the matter, without any more circumſtance. Thus he ſpake in Latin.

But Lambert being abaſhed at the Kings angry words, contrary to all Mens expectation, ſtayed a while, conſidering whether he might turn himſelf in theſe great ſtraights and extremities. {KING H. 8.}

But the King being haſty, with anger and vehemency ſaid, Why ſtandeſt thou ſtill? Anſwer as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, whether doſt thou ſay, That it is the Body of Chriſt, or wilt deny it? And with that word the King lifted up his Cap.

The King fierce upon Lambert.

Lambert. I anſwer with St. Auguſtine, That it is the Body of Chriſt, after a certain manner.

The King. Anſwer me neither out of St. Auguſtine, neither by the authority of any other, but tell me plainly, whether thou ſaiſt it is the Body of Chriſt or no? Theſe words the King ſpake again in Latin.

Lambert. Then I do deny it to be the Body of Chriſt.

The King. Mark well, for now thou ſhalt be condemned even by Chriſts own words, Hoc eſt corpus meum.

The Archbiſhops Reaſons.

Then he commanded Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury to refute his aſſertion: who, firſt making a ſhort Preface unto the Hearers, began his Diſputation with Lambert, very modeſtly, ſaying, Brother Lambert, let this matter be handled between us indifferently, that if I do convince this your Argument to be falſe by the Scriptures, you will willingly refuſe the ſame; but if you ſhall prove it true by the manifeſt Teſtimonies of the Scripture, I do promiſe, I will willingly embrace the ſame.

The Archbiſhops Argument.

The Argument was this, taken out of that place of the Acts of the Apoſtles, where as Chriſt appeared unto St. Paul by the way: diſputing out of that place, that it is not diſagreeable to the Word of God, that the Body of Chriſt may be in two places at once, which being in Heaven was ſeen of St. Paul the ſame time upon Earth; and if it may be in two places, why by the like reaſon may it not be in many places?

In this manner the Archbiſhop began to refute the ſecond Argument of Lambert, which, as we have before ſaid, was written and delivered by the ſaid Lambert unto the Preacher: for the King had firſt Diſputed againſt his firſt Reaſon.

Lambert's Anſwer to Cranmers Objection.

Lambert anſwered unto this Argument, ſaying, That the Minor was not thereby proved, that Chriſts Body was diſperſed in two places, or more, but remained rather ſtill in one place, as touching the manner of his Body. For the Scripture doth not ſay, that Chriſt being upon the Earth did ſpeak unto Paul: But that ſuddainly a light from Heaven did ſhine round about him, and he falling to the ground heard a voice, ſaying unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt, &c. Here this place doth nothing let but that Chriſt, ſitting in Heaven, might ſpeak unto Paul, and be heard upon Earth: for they which were with Paul verily heard the voice, but did ſee no Body. Acts 9.

The Archbiſhops reply.

The Archbiſhop on the contrary part ſaid, Paul himſelf doth witneſs, Acts the ſix and twentieth, that Chriſt did appear unto him in the ſame Viſion.

Anſwer to the reply.

But Lambert again ſaid, that Chriſt did witneſs in the ſame place, That he would again appear unto him, and deliver him out of the hands of the Gentiles: Notwithſtanding we read in no place that Chriſt did corporally appear unto him.

The haſty impudency of the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Thus, when they had contended about the Converſion of St. Paul, and Lambert ſo anſwering for himſelf, that the King ſeemed greatly to be moved therewith, and the Biſhop himſelf that diſputed, to be intangled, and all the Audience amaſed, then the Biſhop of Wincheſter, which was appointed the ſixth place of the Diſputation, fearing leſt the Argument ſhould be taken out of his mouth, or rather being drowned with malice againſt the poor Man, without the Kings commandment, obſerving no order, before the Archbiſhop had made an end, unſhamefacedly kneeling down to take in hand the Diſputation, alledged a place out of the twelfth Chapter of the Corinthians, where St. Paul ſaith, Have I not ſeen Jeſus? And again in the fifteenth Chapter: He appeared unto Cephas: and afterwards unto James, then to all the Apoſtles, but laſt of all he appeared unto me as one born out of due time. The reaſon of St. Win. 1 Cor. 15

Hereunto

{KING Hen. 8.} 1

Winchester. replieth.

Hereunto Lambert answered, he did nothing doubt but that Christ was seen, and did appear, but he did deny that he was in two or in divers places, according to the manner of his body.

2 Cor. 5.

Then Winchester again, abusing the Authority of Paul, repeated the place out of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, and the Fifth Chapter, And if so be we have known Christ after the flesh, now henceforth know we him so no more, &c.

Lambert answereth to Winchester.

Lambert answered, That this knowledge is not to be understood according to the sense of the body, and that it so appeared sufficiently by St. Paul, which speaking of his own Revelation, saith thus: I know one, whether in the body or without the body, God knoweth, which was rapt into the third Heaven, and I know not whether in the body or without, God knoweth. Whereby, even by the testimony of St. Paul, a Man shall easily gather, that in this Revelation he was taken up in spirit into the Heavens, and did see those things, rather than that Christ came down corporally from Heaven, to shew them unto him: especially, for that it was said of the Angel, That even as he ascended into Heaven, so he should come again. And St. Peter saith, Whom it behoved to dwell in the Heavens. And moreover appointing the measure of time he addeth, Even until that all things be restored, &c. Here again, Lambert, being taunted and rebuked, could not be suffered to prosecute his purpose.

Tonstal Bishop of Duresme against Lambert.

After the Bishop of Winchester had done, Tonstal Bishop of Duresme took his course, and after a long Preface, wherein he spake much of Gods Omnipotency, at the last he came to this point, saying, That if Christ could perform that which he spake, touching the converting of his Body into Bread, without doubt he would speak nothing, but that he would perform.

The answer of Lambert to Tonstal. The figurative Phrase of the Scripture to be marked.

Lambert answered, That there was no evident place of Scripture, wherein Christ doth at any time say, That he would change the Bread into his Body: and moreover, that there is no necessity why he should so do. But this is a Figurative speech, every where used in the Scripture, when as the name and appellation of the thing signified is attributed unto the sign. By which Figure of speech, Circumcision is called The Covenant, the Lamb the Passover, beside six hundred such other.

Now it remaineth to be marked, whether we shall judge all these, after the words pronounced, to be straightway changed into another nature. Then again began they to rage afresh against Lambert, so that if he could not be overcome with Arguments, he should be vanquished with rebukes and taunts. What should he do? he might well hold his peace like a Lamb, but bite or bark again he could not.

The wicked boast of Stokesley.

Next orderly stepped forth the valiant Champion Stokesley Bishop of London, who afterward, lying at the point of death, rejoyced, boasting, that in his life time he had burned fifty Hereticks. This Man amongst the residue, intending to fight for his Belly, with a long protestation promised to prove, That it was not only a Miracle of Divine Work, but also that it did nothing at all abhor from Nature. For it is nothing dissonant from Nature, the substance of like things (saith he) to be often times changed one into another. So that nevertheless the accidents do remain, albeit the substance it self, and the matter subject be changed. Then he declared it by the example of Water boyling so long upon the Fire until all the substance thereof be evaporate. Now (saith he) it is the Doctrine of the Philosophers, that a substance cannot be changed but into a substance: wherefore we do affirm the substance of the Water to pass into the substance of the Air; notwithstanding the quality of the Water, which is moistness, remaineth after the substance is changed; for the Air is moist even as the Water is.

The watrish cold Argument of Stokesley. One substance may be changed unto another, but then the accidents change with it.

The Bishops triumph before the victory.

When this Argument was heard, the Bishops greatly rejoyced, and suddainly their countenance changed, as it were assuring themselves of a certain triumph and victory by this Philosophical transmutation of Elements, and like as it had been of more force than Chrisippus argument, which passed all manner of solution.

Lambert's answer to Stokesley.

Lambert's answer was long looked for here of all Men. Who as soon as he had obtained silence, and liberty to speak, first of all denied the Bishops assumpt, that the moisture of the Water did remain after the substance was altered. For albeit (saith he) that we do grant with the Philosophers, the Air to be naturally moist; notwithstanding it hath one proper and a divers degree of moisture, and the Water another. Wherefore, when as the Water is converted into the Air, there remaineth moisture, as you do say, but that is not the moisture of Water, but the proper and natural moisture of the Air. Whereupon there is another Doctrine amongst the Philosophers, as a perpetual rule, That it can by no means be, that the qualities and accidents in natural things should remain in their own proper nature, without their proper subject.

Taunts and raging against Lambert.

Then again the King and the Bishops raged against Lambert, insomuch that he was not only forced to silence, but also might have been driven into a rage, if his Ears had not been acquainted with such taunts afore. After this the other Bishops, every one in his order, as they were appointed, supplied their places of disputation.

Ten Disputers against Lambert.

There were appointed ten in number; for the performing of this Tragedy, for his ten Arguments, which (as before we have declared) were delivered unto Taylor the Preacher. It were too long in this place to repeat the Reasons and Arguments of every Bishop; and no less superfluous were it so to do, especially forsomuch as they were all but common reasons, and nothing forceable and such as by the long use of disputation have been beaten, and had little in them either worthy the hearer or the reader.

Lambert in great perplexity.

Lambert in the mean time being compassed in with so many and great perplexities, vexed on the one side with checks and taunts, and pressed on the other side with the authority and threats of the personages; and partly being amazed with the Majesty of the place in the presence of the King, and especially being wearied with long standing, which continued no less than five hours, from twelve of the Clock, until five at night, being brought in despair, that he should nothing profit in this purpose, and seeing no hope at all in speaking, was at this point, that he chose rather to hold his peace.

Lambert keepeth silence when speaking would do no good.

Whereby it came to pass that these Bishops, which last of all disputed with him, spake what they listed without interruption, save only that Lambert would now and then alledge somewhat out of St. Augustine for the defence of his cause; in which Author he seemed to be very prompt and ready. But for the most part (as I said) being overcome with weariness and other griefs, he held his peace, defending himself rather with silence than with Arguments, which he saw would nothing at all prevail.

The Kings words to Lambert.

At the last, when the day was passed, and Torches began to be lighted, the King minding to break up this pretensed disputation, said unto Lambert in this wise, What saist thou now (quoth he) after all these great labours which thou hast taken upon thee, and all the Reasons and Instructions of these learned Men; Art thou not yet satisfied? Wilt thou live or die? What saist thou? Thou hast yet free choice.

Lambert answered; I yield and submit my self wholly unto the Will of your Majesty. Then, said the King, commit thy self unto the hands of God, and not unto mine.

The King condemneth the Martyr of Christ J. Lambert to Lord Cromwel commanded by the King to read the Sentence.

Lambert. I commend my Soul unto the hands of God, but my body I wholly yield and submit unto your Clemency. Then said the King, if you do commit your self unto my Judgment, you must die, for I will not be a Patron unto Hereticks; and by and by turning himself unto Cromwel, he said, Cromwel, read the Sentence of Condemnation against him. This Cromwel was at that time the chief friend of the Gospellers. And here it is much to be marvelled at, to see how unfortunately it came to pass in this matter, that through the pestiferous and crafty counsel of this one Bishop of Winchester, Satan (which oftentimes doth raise up one Brother to the destruction of another) did here perform the Condemnation of this Lambert by no other Ministers, than Gospellers themselves, Taylor, Barns, Cranmer and Cromwel, who afterwards, in a manner, all suffered the like for the Gospels sake; of whom (God willing) we will speak more hereafter.

This

The crafty fetch, of Ste. Wint.

This undoubtedly was the malicious and crafty ſubtilty of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, which deſired rather that the ſentence might be read by Cromwel, than by any other; ſo that if he refuſed to do it, he ſhould likewiſe have incurred the like danger. But to be ſhort, Cromwel, at the Kings commandment taking the Schedule of Condemnation in hand, read the ſame: Wherein was contained the burning of Hereticks, which either ſpake or wrote any thing, or had any Books by them, repugnant or diſagreeing from their the Papiſtical Church and tradition touching the Sacrament of the Altar: alſo a Decree that the ſame ſhould be ſet upon the Church-Porches, and be read four times every year in every Church throughout the Realm, whereby the worſhipping of the Bread ſhould be the more firmly fixed in the hearts of the People. And in this manner was the condemnation of John Lambert. Wherein great pity it was and much to be lamented, to ſee the Kings Highneſs that day ſo to oppoſe and ſet his power and ſtrength ſo fiercely and vehemently; in aſſiſting ſo many proud and furious adverſaries againſt that one poor ſilly Soul, to be devoured; whom his Majeſty with more honour might rather have aided and ſupported, being ſo on every ſide oppreſſed and compaſſed about without help or refuge, among ſo many Wolves and Vultures, eſpecially in ſuch a cauſe tending to no derogation to him nor his Realms, but rather to the neceſſary reformation of ſincere Truth and Doctrine decayed. For therein eſpecially, conſiſteth the honour of Princes, to pity the miſerable, to relieve the oppreſſed, to reſcue the wrongs of the poor, and to tender and reſpect the weaker part, eſpecially where right and truth ſtandeth with him: which if the King had done that day, it had been, in my mind, not ſo much for the comfort of that poor perſecuted Creature, as it would have redounded to the immortal renown of his Princely eſtate to all poſterity.

The ſentence againſt John Lambert.

The part of a good Prince what to do.

But thus was John Lambert, in this bloody Seſſion, by the King judged and condemned to death; whoſe judgment now remaineth with the Lord againſt that day, when as before the Tribunal Seat of that great Judge both Princes and Subjects ſhall ſtand and appear, not to judge, but to be judged, according as they have done and deſerved. Ex teſtimonio cujuſdam αὐτηπτου, A. G.

{KING Hen.8.}

And thus much hitherto of Lambert's Articles, Anſwers, Diſputations, and his condemnation alſo. Now to proceed further to the Story of his Death.

Lambert going to death.

Upon the day that was appointed for this holy Martyr of God to ſuffer, he was brought out of the Priſon at Eight of the Clock in the morning unto the Houſe of the Lord Cromwel, and ſo carried into his inward Chamber, whereas it is reported of many, that Cromwel deſired of him forgiveneſs, for that he had done. There at the laſt, Lambert being admoniſhed that the hour of his death was at hand, he was greatly comforted and cheered, and being brought out of the Chamber into the Hall, he ſaluted the Gentlemen, and ſate down to breakfaſt with them, ſhewing no manner of ſadneſs or fear. When as the breakfaſt was ended, he was carried ſtraightway to the place of Execution, where he ſhould offer himſelf unto the Lord a Sacrifice of ſweet ſavour, who is bleſſed in his Saints, for ever and ever, Amen.

Lord Cromwel deſired of Lambert forgiveneſs.

As touching the terrible manner and faſhion of the burning of this bleſſed Martyr, here is to be noted, that of all other which have been burned and offered up at Smithfield, there was yet none ſo cruelly and piteouſly handled as he. For after that his Legs were conſumed and burned up to the ſtumps, and that the wretched Tormentors and enemies of God had withdrawn the Fire from him, ſo that but a ſmall Fire and Coles were left under him, then two that ſtood on each ſide of him, with their Halberds pitched him upon their Pikes, as far as the Chain would reach, after the manner and form as is deſcribed in the Picture hereunder following. Then he lifting up ſuch Hands as he had, and his Fingers ends flaming with Fire, cried unto the People in theſe words, None but Chriſt, none but Chriſt; and ſo being let down again from their Halberds, fell into the Fire, and there ended his life.

The words which he ſpake at his death.

The order and manner of the burning of the conſtant Martyr of Chriſt, John Lambert.

Thus ye have heard by what craft and ſubtilty this good Man was entrapped, and with what cruelty he was oppreſſed; ſo that now remaineth nothing but only his puniſhment and death, which the drunken rage of the Biſhops thought ſhould not be long protracted.

During the time that he was in the Archbiſhops Ward at Lambeth, which was a little before his Diſputation before the King, he wrote an excellent Confeſſion or Defence of his Cauſe to King Henry.

Wherein he firſt mollifying the Kings Mind and Ears with a modeſt and ſober Preface, declared how he had a double hope of Solace laid up, the one in the moſt high and mighty Prince of Princes, God; the other next unto God, in his Majeſty, which ſhould repreſent the Office and Miniſtry {KING Hen. 8.} Miniſtry of that moſt High Prince in governing here upon Earth; after that, proceeding in gentle words, he declared the cauſe which moved him to that which he had done.

The Apology of John Lambert unto the King.

And albeit he was not ignorant how odious this Doctrine would be unto the People, yet notwithſtanding becauſe he was not alſo ignorant how deſirous the Kings mind was to ſearch out the Truth, he thought no time unmeet to perform his Duty, eſpecially forſomuch as he would not utter thoſe things unto the ignorant multitude, for avoiding of offence, but only unto the Prince himſelf unto whom he might ſafely declare his mind.

The Preface of his Apology.

After this Preface made, he entring into the Book confirmed his Doctrine touching the Sacrament by divers Teſtimonies of the Scriptures; by the which Scriptures he proved the Body of Chriſt, whether it riſeth, or aſcendeth, or ſitteth, or be converſant here, to be always in one place.

Then he, gathering together the minds of the Ancient Doctors, did prove and declare by ſufficient Demonſtration, the Sacrament to be a Myſtical matter. Albeit he ſo ruled himſelf in ſuch temperance and moderation, that he did not deny, but that the Holy Sacrament was the very Natural Body of our Saviour, and the Wine his Natural Blood; and that moreover his Natural Body and Blood were in thoſe Myſteries, but after a certain manner, as all the Ancient Doctors in a manner do interpret it.

After this Proteſtation thus made, he inferreth the Sentence of his Confeſſion, as here followeth:

A Treatiſe of John Lambert to the King.

A Treatiſe of John Lambert upon the Sacrament to the King.

CHriſt is ſo aſcended Bodily into Heaven, and his Holy Manhood thither ſo aſſumpt, where it doth ſit upon the right hand of the Father; that is to ſay, is with the Father there remanent and reſident in Glory, that by the infallible Promiſe of God, it ſhall not or cannot from thence return before the general Doom, which ſhall be in the end of the World. And as he is no more corporally in the World, ſo can I not ſee how he can be corporally in the Sacrament, or his Holy Supper. And yet notwithſtanding do I knowledge and confeſs, that the Holy Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood is the very Body and Blood in a certain manner, which ſhall be ſhewed hereafter with your Graces favour and permiſſion, according to the words of our Saviour, Inſtituting the ſame Holy Sacrament, and ſaying, This is my body which is given for you. Mat. 26. And again, This is my blood which is of the New Teſtament, which is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins.

But now for approving of the firſt part, that Chriſt is ſo bodily aſcended into Heaven, and his Holy manhood ſo thither aſſumpt, &c. that by the infallible Promiſe of God he ſhall not, or cannot any more from thence bodily return before the general Doom, I ſhall for this alledge firſt the Scriptures, following the Authorities of old Holy Doctors, with one conſent teſtifying with me. Beſides this, I need not to tell, that the ſame is no other thing, but that we have taught to us in theſe Three Articles of our Creed, He aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty, from thence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead. For Chriſt did aſcend bodily, the Godhead which is infinite, uncircumſcriptible, repleniſhing both Heaven and Earth, being immutable, and unmovable, ſo that properly it can neither aſcend nor deſcend.

Scriptures affirming the ſame.

The Scriptures which I promiſed to alledge for the confirmation of my ſaid Sentence, be theſe: He was lifted up into Heaven in their ſight, and a cloud received him from their eyes: and when they were looking up into Heaven, they ſaw two men, &c. Acts 1. Here it is evidently ſhewed, That Chriſt departed and aſcended in a viſible and circumſcript Body. That this departing was viſible and in a viſible Body, theſe words do teſtifie: And when they were looking up: Why ſtand you here looking up into Heaven? And, even as ye have ſeen him, &c. That Secondly it was in Body, I have afore proved; and moreover the Deity is not ſeen, but is inviſible, as appeareth: To God only inviſible, &c. And, He dwelleth in the inacceſſible light which no man ſeeth nor may ſee, &c. Therefore the Manhood and Natural Body was aſſumpt, or did aſcend. That Thirdly it was in a circumſcript Body, appeareth manifeſtly in this: Firſt, That his Aſcenſion and Bodily departing cauſed them to look up. And 2dly, That he was lift up; that is to wit, from beneath or from alow. And Thirdly, That a Cloud received him, whereas no Cloud nor Clouds can receive or embrace the Deity, &c. 1 Tim. 1. 1 Tim. 6.

I am fain to leave out other evident Arguments for the ſame purpoſe, leſt I ſhould be over prolix and tedious. It doth there alſo follow in like form, how the Angels made anſwer to the Diſciples, ſaying; Ye men of Galilee, Why ſtand ye gazing into Heaven? This Jeſus which is taken up from you into Heaven, ſhall ſo come again, as you have ſeen him going up into Heaven. Here we ſee again, that Jeſus is aſſumpt, or taken away into Heaven. And then it muſt be from out of the World, according to that we read, John 16. I went forth from the Father, and I came into the World. I leave the World again, and I go unto the Father: That is not elſe, but as he came from the Father of Heaven into this World, in that he was Incarnate and made Man, for his Godhead was never abſent, either from Heaven, or yet from Earth; even ſo ſhould his Manhood leave the World again, to go to Heaven. Moreover, in that it is ſaid, So ſhall he come, is plainly teſtified, that he is alway, and now corporally abſent. John 16

Finally, It is ſhewed further, after what manner he ſhall come again, by theſe words, Even as you have ſeen him going up into Heaven. Which is not elſe, but as you did viſibly ſee him aſcend or go away to Heaven, a Cloud embracing him and taking him from among you: even ſo ſhall you viſibly ſee him to come again in the Clouds; as we read, Matth. 26. You ſhall ſee the Son of Man to come in the Clouds of Heaven. And again, Matth. 24. And they ſhall ſee the Son of man. Such other Texts have we full many, declaring my Sentence to be Catholick and True. Of which I here ſhall briefly note ſome places, and paſs over them, knowing that a little rehearſal is ſufficient to your noble wiſdom. The places be, Mark 16. Luke 24. John 13, 14, 16, and 17. Rom. 8. Epheſ. 1, and 2. and 2 Cor. 6. Heb. 8, 9, 10, and 12. and 1 Theſſ. 4. and 1 Pet. 2. Which all do teſtifie, that Chriſt hath Bodily forſaken the World, departed from it unto his Father, aſcending into Heaven, ſitting ſtill upon the right hand of the Father above all Dominion, Power and Principality, where he is preſent Advocate and Interceſſor before his Father, and that he ſhall ſo Bodily come again, like as he was ſeen to depart from hence. Mat. 26. Mat. 24.

Nothing can better or more clearly teſtifie and declare, what is contained in the Sacrament of Chriſts Holy Body and Blood, than do the words of the Scripture, whereby it was Inſtitute. Mark doth agree with Matthew, ſo that in a manner he reciteth his very words. And no marvel it is. For as the Doctors do ſay, The Goſpel of Mark is a very Epitome or Abridgment of Matthew. I ſhall therefore write the relations of them touching the Inſtitution of this Sacrament together. The Relation or Teſtimony of Matthew is this: As they were eating, Jeſus took Bread, and when he had given thanks he brake and gave to his Diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body. And taking the Cup, and giving thanks, he gave it to them, ſaying, Drink ye all of this, for this is my Blood of the New Teſtament which is ſhed for many, for the remiſſion of ſins. And I ſay unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the Vine, until that day, that I drink it new with you in the Kingdom of my Father. The Goſpel of Mark is an abridgment of Matthew. Mat. 26.

The Teſtimony or Relation of Mark, is this, And as they did eat, Jeſus took the Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it and gave it to them, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body. And he took the Cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them, and they all drank of it, and he ſaid unto them, This is my Blood of the New Teſtament which is ſhed for many. Verily, I ſay unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the Vine unto that day that I drink it new in the Kingdom of God. Mark 14.

Luke being the Companion of Paul, as appeareth in the Acts, and 2 Tim. 4. doth next agree with him in making relation of his Supper, and Holy Inſtitution of the 2 Tim. 4.

Sacra-

Luke 22. Sacrament. His relation or report is this: When he had taken Bread, and given thanks, he brake it, and gave to them, ſaying, This is my Body which is given for you, do this in remembrance of me. Likewiſe alſo after Supper he took the Cup, ſaying, This Cup is the New Teſtament in my Blood which is ſhed for you.

1 Cor. 11 Paul's Teſtimony doth follow next, agreeable to Luke, and it is thus: For I have received of the Lord that which I alſo have delivered to you; That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the ſame night in which he was betrayed, took Bread, and when he had given thanks he brake it, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body which is broken for you: this do ye in remembrance of me. After the ſame manner he alſo took the Cup when he had Supped, ſaying, This Cup is the New Teſtament in my Blood, this do as oft as ye drink it, in the remembrance of me: for as often as ye ſhal eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye ſhall ſhew the Lords death till he come. By theſe Teſtimonies ſhall I declare my Sentence to your Grace, which I conceive of the Holy Sacrament of Chriſts Bleſſed Body and Blood, and in all points of difficulty ſhall I annex the very interpretation of the old holy Doctors and Fathers, to ſhew that I do not ground any thing upon my ſelf. Thereafter ſhall I add certain Arguments which I truſt ſhall clearly prove and juſtifie my Sentence to be True, Catholick, and according both with God and his Laws, and alſo with the mind of holy Doctors.

My Sentence is this: That Chriſt aſcended into Heaven, and ſo hath forſaken the World, and there ſhall abide, ſitting on the right hand of his Father, without returning hither again, until the general Doom; at which time he ſhall come from thence, to Judge the dead and the living. This all do I believe done in his Natural Body, which he took of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary his Mother, in the which he alſo ſuffered Paſſion for our ſafety and redemption upon a Croſs; which died for us, and was buried: in which he alſo did riſe again to life Immortal. That Chriſt is thus aſcended in his Manhood and Natural Body, and ſo aſſumpt into Heaven, we may ſoon prove; forſomuch as the Godhead of him is never out of Heaven, but ever repleniſhing both Heaven and Earth; and beſides that, is infinite and interminable or uncircumſcriptible, ſo that it neither can properly either aſcend or deſcend, being without all alteration, and unmutable, or unmovable.

So that now his Natural Body being aſſumpt from among us, and departed out of the World, the ſame can no more return from thence unto the end of the World. Acts 3. For as Peter witneſſeth, Acts the third; Whom the heavens muſt contain until the time that all things be reſtored which God had ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets ſince the World began. And the ſame doth the Article of our Creed teach us, which is, From thence (i. from Heaven) ſhall he come, to judge the quick and the dead. Which time Paul calleth the appearing of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 6. 1 Tim. 6.

Seeing then this Natural Body of our Saviour, that was born of his Mother Mary being a Virgin, is all whole aſſumpt into Heaven, and departed out of this World; and ſo as ſaith St. Peter, He muſt remain in Heaven until the end of the World, which he calleth, the time when all things muſt be reſtored; This I ſay, ſeen and believed according to our Creed and the Scriptures, I cannot perceive how the Natural Body of him can contrariwiſe be in the World, and ſo in the Sacrament. And yet notwithſtanding is this true, That the Holy Sacrament is Chriſts Body and Blood, as after ſhall be declared.

Doctors affirming the ſame.

Teſtimonies out of the Doctors. BUT firſt for the eſtabliſhing of my former purpoſe, That the Natural Body of our Saviour is ſo abſent from this World, and aſcended into Heaven, that it can be here no more preſent unto the general Doom; I would beſeech your Grace to conſider the mind and ſentence of the old holy Doctors, in this purpoſe or matter, how agreeable they teſtifie with that which is before ſhewed. Auguſt. ad Dardanum. Amongſt whom we have firſt St. Auguſtine, writing thus to Dardanus: Proinde quod ad verbum attinet, Creator eſt Chriſtus; omnia enim per ipſum facta ſunt. Quod vero ad hominem, &c. Therefore as concerning the Word, Chriſt is the Creator, all things are made by him. But as touching Man, Chriſt is a Creature made of the ſeed of David, according to the Fleſh, and ordained according to the ſimilitude of Men. Alſo becauſe Man conſiſteth of two things, the Soul and the Fleſh; in that he had a Soul, as was penſive and ſorrowful unto death; in that he had Fleſh, he ſuffered death. Neither when we call the Son of God Chriſt, we do ſeparate his Manhood, nor when we call the ſame Chriſt the Son of Man, we do ſeparate his Godhead from him. In that he was Man, he was converſant upon the Earth, (and not in Heaven, where he now is) when he ſaid; No Man aſcendeth up into Heaven, but he which deſcended from Heaven, the Son of Man which is in Heaven. Although in that reſpect that he was the Son of God he was in Heaven, and in that he was the Son of Man, he was yet in the Earth, and as yet was not aſcended into Heaven: likewiſe, in that he is the Son of God, he is the Lord of Glory; and in that he is the Son of Man he was Crucified. And yet notwithſtanding the Apoſtle ſaith, And if they had known the Lord of Glory, they would never have Crucified him. And by this, both the Son of Man was in Heaven, and the Son of God, in that he was Man, was Crucified upon Earth. Therefore as he might well be called the Lord of Glory, being Crucified, when as yet that ſuffering did only pertain unto the Fleſh; ſo it might well be ſaid, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe, when according to the humility of his Manhood in his Fleſh, he lay in the Grave; and according to his Soul he was in the bottom of Hell that ſame day. According to his Divine immutability, he never departed from Paradiſe, becauſe he by his Godhead is always every where. Doubt you not therefore that there is Chriſt Jeſus according to his Manhood, from whence he ſhall come. Remember it well, and keep faithfully thy Chriſtian Confeſſion: for he roſe from the dead, he aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of the Father: neither will he come from any other place, but from thence to judge the quick and the dead. And he ſhall come as the voice of the Angel beareth witneſs, as he was ſeen to go into Heaven; that is to ſay, in the ſelf-ſame form and ſubſtance of Fleſh, whereunto undoubtedly he gave Immortality, but he did not take away the nature thereof: according to this form of his Fleſh he is not to be thought to be every where. And we muſt take heed that we do not ſo affirm the Divinity of his Manhood, that we thereby take away the truth of his Body. For it is not a good conſequence, that that thing which is in Chriſt ſhould ſo be in every place as God. For the Scripture ſaith very truly of us, That in Him we live, move and have our being; and yet notwithſtanding, we are not in every place as he is; but that Man is otherwiſe in God, becauſe that God is otherwiſe in Man, by a certain proper and ſingular manner of being: for God and Man is one Perſon, and only Jeſus Chriſt is both. In that he is God, he is in every place; but in that he is Man, he is in Heaven.

{KING Hen. 8.}

Acts 7. He meaneth Chriſt.

By which words of holy Auguſtine, your Grace may evidently ſee, that he teſtifieth and teacheth the Bleſſed Body or Fleſh of Chriſt to be no where elſe than in Heaven. For to it being aſſumpt or aſcended into Heaven, God, as he ſaith, hath given Immortality, but not taken away Nature. So that by the Nature of that Holy Fleſh or Body, it muſt occupy one place. Wherefore it followeth, According to this form; that is to wit, of his Fleſh, Chriſt is not be thought to be in every place, For if Chriſt ſhould in his Humanity be every where diffuſed or ſpread abroad, ſo ſhould his Bodily Nature, or Natural Body be taken from him: And therefore he ſaith, For we muſt beware that we do not ſo affirm the Divinity of Man, that we do take away the Humanity of his Body. But in that he is God, ſo is he every where, according to my words before-written; and in that he is Man, ſo is he in Heaven. And therefore it is ſaid, For God and Man is one Perſon, and only Jeſus Chriſt is both. He, in that he is every where, is God: but in that he is Man, he is in Heaven.

Chriſts Body occupieth one place.

KING Hen. 8.

And yet do we read agreeable to the ſame matter, more largely in the ſame Epiſtle, by theſe words, Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum unigenitum Dei Filium, æqualem patri, eundemque hominis Filium, quo major eſt Pater, ut ubique totum præſentem eſſe non dubites tanquam Deum, & in eodem Templo Dei eſſe tanquam inhabitantem, &c. Thou ſhalt not doubt Chriſt our Lord, the only Son of God, equal with his Father, and the ſame being the Son of Man, whereby the Father is greater, is preſent every where as God, and is in one and the ſame Temple of God as God, and alſo in ſome place of Heaven as concerning the true ſhape of body.

Thus find we clearly, that for the meaſure of his very body he muſt be in one place, and that in Heaven, as concerning his manhood, and yet every where preſent in that he is the eternal Son of God and equal to his Father. Like teſtimony doth he give in the thirtieth Treatiſe that he maketh upon the Evangely of John. Theſe be his words there written, Donec ſæculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus, ſed etiam hic eſt veritas Domini, &c. Until the world be at an end, the Lord is above, but here is the truth of the Lord alſo; for the Body of our Lord in which he roſe muſt be in one place, but his truth is abroad in every place. The firſt parcel, that is, until the worlds end, is ſo put, that it may joyn with the ſentence going before, or elſe to theſe words following, The Lord is above, &c. And ſo ſhould it well accord to my ſentence before ſhewed, which is, the Lord is ſo bodily aſcended, that in his natural body he cannot again return from Heaven until the general Doom.

Auguſt. in Joan. tract. 30.

But howſoever the ſaid clauſe or parcel be applied, it ſhall not greatly skill; for my ſentence notwithſtanding remaineth full ſtedfaſt: Inſomuch as the Scripture doth mention but of two advents or comings of Chriſt, of which the firſt is performed in his bleſſed Incarnation, and the ſecond is the coming at the general Doom. And furthermore, in this Article of our Creed, From thence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead, is not only ſhewed wherefore he ſhall come again, but alſo when he ſhall come again: So that in the mean while, as the other Article of our Creed witneſſeth, He ſitteth at the right hand of God his Father, that is nothing elſe to ſay, than he remaineth in glory with the Father. Furthermore, even as I have before rehearſed the foreſaid authority of Auſten, ſo have I read in his Quinquagenes upon a Pſalm, of which I cannot now preciſely note or name the number. And the ſame words doth he alſo write in the Epiſtle to Saint Hierom. So that we may know he had good liking in it, that he ſo commonly doth uſe it, as his uſual Proverb, or By-word.

The real preſence againſt the Article of our Creed.

The Body of Chriſt can be but in one place at once.

In the ſame is alſo teſtified that this bleſſed Body can be but in one place, ſo that it being now, according to the Scripture and Article of our Belief or Creed, in Heaven, it cannot be in Earth: and much leſs can it be in ſo innumerable places of the Earth, as we may perceive that the Sacrament is. Thus although the Body of our Saviour muſt be in one place, as he writeth agreeably to the ſaying of Peter, Whom the Heavens muſt receive until the time of the reſtitution of all things; Yet as the words following make mention, Veritas autem ejus ubique diffuſa eſt, But his verity is ſcattered every where. This verity of Chriſt, or of his Body, I do take to be that he in other places doth call Virtus Sacramenti, the Vertue of the Sacrament. As in the five and twentieth Treatiſe upon John we find thus written, Aliud eſt Sacramentum, aliud virtus Sacramenti. The Sacrament is one thing, and the vertue of the Sacrament is another thing. And again, Si quis manducaverit ex ipſo, non moritur, ſed qui pertinet ad virtutem Sacramenti, non qui pertinet ad viſible Sacramentum, &c. If any man eat of him, he dieth not, but he meaneth of him, which doth appertain to the vertue of the Sacrament, and not of him which pertaineth to the viſible Sacrament. And to declare what is the vertue of the Sacrament, that I count to be the truth of the Lord or of his body, he ſaith, Qui manducat intus, non foris, qui manducat in corde, non qui premit dente; He which eateth inwardly in Spirit, not outwardly; he that eateth in heart, and not he which cheweth with teeth.

The verity of Chriſt. the vertue of the Sacrament.

The verity of the Lord or of his Body expounded.

So that finally, this truth of the Lord or his Body, which is diſperſed every where abroad, is the ſpiritual profit, fruit and comfort, that is opened to be received every where of all Men by Faith in the verity of the Lord, that is to wit, in the very and true promiſe or teſtament made to us in the Lords Body that was crucified and ſuffered death for us, and roſe again aſcending immortal into Heaven, where he ſitteth, that is, abideth on the right hand of his Father, from thence not to return until the general Doom or Judgment. This bodily abſence of our Saviour is likewiſe clearly ſhewed in the fiftieth Treatiſe that he maketh upon John; where he doth expound this Text, Ye have the poor always with you, but ye ſhall not always have me with you, to my purpoſe, that thereby I count and hold mine opinion to be rather Catholick, than theirs that hold the contrary. Finally, the ſame doth he confirm in his Sermons of the ſecond and third Feries of Eaſter; and ſo many places beſides, as here cannot be recited, the number of them is ſo paſſing great.

Aug. in Jo. Tract. 50.

With him conſenteth full plainly Fulgentius in his ſecond Book to Thraſimundus, writing in this wiſe, Unus idemque homo localis ex homine, qui eſt Deus immenſus ex patre. Unus idemque ſecudum humanam ſubſtantiam, abſens Cœlo cum eſſet in terra, &c. One and the ſame man being local in that he is man, which is God Almighty of the Father. One and the ſame according to human ſubſtance, being abſent from Heaven when he was in the earth, and leaving the earth when he aſcended up into Heaven. But according to his divine and Almighty ſubſtance, neither departing from Heaven when he deſcended from Heaven, neither leaving the earth, when he aſcended into Heaven. The which may well be known by the undoubtful ſaying of our Lord himſelf: which that he might the better ſhew his humanity occupying a place, ſaid unto his Diſciples; I aſcend up unto my Father and your Father, unto my God and your God. Alſo when he had ſaid of Lazarus; Lazarus is dead, he adjoyned, ſaying; And I am glad for your ſakes, that you may believe, becauſe I was not there. But ſhewing the greatneſs of his Divinity, he ſaid to his Diſciples; Behold I am with you unto the end of the World. For how did he aſcend into Heaven, but becauſe he is local and true man? And how is he preſent to his faithful, but becauſe he is Almighty and true God, &c. In this manner doth he proceed forth, ſpeaking much, full agreeable to my ſentence, which is now over-long here to write. But what can be ſaid more plainly in ſo few words making for me?

Fulgentius ad Thraſimundum lib. 2.

Chriſt in his human ſubſtance is local.

Firſt he ſaith, that Chriſt being a Man, is as concerning his manhood local, that is to ſay, contained in one place. And to expreſs that more clearly, he addeth to it, ſaying, He is one and the ſame according to his human ſubſtance, abſent from Heaven when he was in Earth, and leaving the Earth when he aſcended into Heaven. Whereas he hath a contrary Antitheſis for the godly nature, to ſhew forth the firſt point the more effectually. The Antitheſis is thus; But according to his divine and incomparable ſubſtance, neither leaving Heaven when he deſcended from Heaven, neither forſaking the Earth when he aſcended into Heaven. Whereby is alſo confirmed that I ſaid; Chriſt did deſcend and aſcend, as touching his humanity, but not in his Deity, which is immutable and unmoveable; as we may perceive by that he here doth call it Almighty ſubſtance. Furthermore, to ſhew that Chriſt (as touching his human and natural body, is local) and in one place, he alledgeth, and that right juſtly, two Texts of Scripture: The firſt is; I aſcend to my Father, &c. And the ſecond is of Lazarus; I am glad for your ſakes, &c.

Antitheſis, that is to ſay, contrary poſition or relation.

Finally, he maketh this demand; But how did he aſcend into Heaven, but becauſe he is a local and very man? Whereby we may ſee, that by this ſentence Chriſt could not aſcend, except he had been local, that is, contained in one place, and ſo very man. And that is according to Saint Auguſtine, writing as is above ſhewed; And he ſhall ſo come (as the Angel witneſſeth) even as you have ſeen him go up into Heaven, that is to ſay, in the ſame form and ſubſtance of his fleſh. According to this form he is not ſpread abroad in every place: for we muſt beware that we do not ſo eſteem his Divinity, that we thereby do take away the verity of his body. So that they both do teſtifie, and that very plainly, that Chriſt could not have aſcended, except he had been local, that is to wit, contained in one place, and very man, and that if he were not local, he could not be a man. Wherefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith further, Ad Dardanum, Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, & nuſquam erunt, & quia nuſquam erunt, nec erunt; That is to wit, Take away locality, or occupying of place from bodies, and they ſhall be no where: and becauſe they ſhall be no where, they ſhall have no being at all.

Auguſtine.

We muſt not ſo defend Chriſts divinity, that we muſt deſtroy his humanity. Aug. ad Dard.

We therefore coveting to find Chriſt or his natural Body, ſhould ſeek for him in Heaven, where his natural manhood is ſitting on the right hand of his Father. So willeth us Saint Ambroſe, in the tenth Book which he writeth upon Luke, ſpeaking of Chriſts humanity aſſumpt in this wiſe; Ergo, non ſupra terram, nec in terra, nec ſecundum carnem te quærere debemus, ſi volumus te invenire, &c. Therefore we ought not to ſeek thee upon the earth, nor in the earth, neither according to the fleſh, if we will find thee: for now according to the fleſh we do not know Chriſt. Furthermore, Stephen did not ſeek thee upon the Earth, when that he did ſee thee ſtanding on the right Hand of God the Father. But Mary, which ſought thee upon the Earth, could not touch thee. Stephen touched thee becauſe he ſought thee in Heaven. Stephen amongſt the Jews ſaw thee being abſent, &c.

Bodies cannot be without limitation of place.

Amb. in Luc.

Thus we muſt ſeek for the natural Body of Chriſt, not upon the Earth, but in Heaven, if we will not be deceived. And that doth he more largely ſhew in the ſame Treatiſe, ſpeaking thus of the verity of Chriſts Body; Quomodo non corpus quieſceret, in quo manebant inſignia vulnerum, veſtigia cicatricum, quæ Dominus palpanda obtulit? &c. How could it come to paſs that the body could not reſt in the Sepulcher, in which the tokens of the wounds and ſkars did appear, which the Lord himſelf did offer to be touched (in which doing he did not only ſtabliſh the Faith, but alſo augmented devotion;) Becauſe he would rather carry up into Heaven the wounds received for us, and would not put them away, that he might preſent to God the Father the price of our liberty: ſuch a one the Father doth place at his right hand, embracing the triumph and victory of our ſalvation, &c.

Gregory alſo in an Homily of Pentecoſt, ſaith, agreeable to the other in theſe words, Quando non maneret apud eos, qui aſcenſurus cœlos, promittit dicens: Ecce ego vobiſcum ſum omnibus diebus uſque ad conſummationem ſæculi, &c. When was it that he did not tarry with them, which aſcending up to Heaven, promiſeth, ſaying, Behold, I am here with you continually until the end of the World? But the word Incarnate tarrieth and alſo goeth away. It departeth in body, and tarrieth in Divinity. And therefore he ſaith, that he tarried with them: even he which was ever preſent with them by his inviſible power, and now departed by his corporal viſion. In like wiſe doth he teſtifie in the Homily of Eaſter-day.

Gregorius in hom. in Pent.

With theſe doth Bede accord in an Homily of Eaſter in which he declareth this Text, John 16. A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: and again, a little while and ye ſhall ſee me. And alſo in an Homily of the Vigil of Pentecoſt. And who can otherwiſe ſay or think knowing the Scripture and our Belief, but that the natural Body of Chriſt is ſo aſſumpt into Heaven all whole, that it muſt there abide without returning, until the general judgment? Notwithſtanding, ſeeing this is the chief point whereupon I ſeek to eſtabliſh my ſentence in this matter of the holy Sacrament, that Chriſts holy and natural Body is ſo aſſumpt into Heaven, that there it muſt remain all whole without returning until the general Doom; I will yet, with the permiſſion of your grace, add one or two Arguments deduced out of the Scriptures, to declare further my ſentence to be faithful and Catholick.

Bede in hom. c. 16. Joan.

Arguments out of Scripture.

Chriſt is his manhood not in many places at once.

1. AS Chriſt was encloſed and ſo born about in the Womb of his Mother, being a Virgin undefiled, and after was born into this World, and put in a Manger, and ſo he growing in age, did abide in divers places, but in one after another, ſometime in Galilee, ſometime in Samaria, ſometime in Jury, ſometime beyond, ſometime on this ſide of Jordan, and conſequently he was Crucified at Jeruſalem, there being incloſed and buried in a grave, from whence he did ariſe, ſo that the Angels teſtified of him, He is riſen, and is not here, Matthew 28. and as at the time appointed, after his reſurrection, he was aſſumpt, or lifted up into Heaven from the top of the Mount of Olivet, in the ſight of his Diſciples, a cloud compaſſing him about: Even ſo ſhall he come from the ſame Celeſtial place corporally, as they did ſee him to depart out of the one place corporally, according to the teſtimony of the Angels, Acts 1. So that in this we may undoubtedly find that Chriſt, as touching his manhood cannot be corporally in many and divers places at once, and ſo to be corporally in his natural Body in Heaven, and alſo in Earth, and that it is moreover in ſo many parts of the World, as Men have affirmed.

Matth. 28.

Acts 1.

Neither doth the Scripture require that we ſhould ſpoil Chriſt of the property of Mans nature, which is to be in one place, whom the ſame Scripture doth perpetually witneſs and teach to be Man, and ſo to confound the condition of his bodily nature with the nature divine. Paul doth teach, that Chriſt in his manhood was made in all points like unto his Brethren, ſin excepted: how then can his body be in more places at once, unlike unto the natural property of the bodies of us his Brethren? But here do ſome witty Philoſophers, yea, rather Sophiſters than Divines, bring in to the annulling of Chriſts humanity, a ſimilitude of Mans ſoul, which being one, is yet ſo all whole in all our whole body, that it is ſaid to be all whole in every part of the body. But ſuch ſhould remember, that it is no convenient ſimilitude which is made of things different and diverſe in nature, ſuch as be the ſoul and body of Man, to prove them to have like properties. This is as if they would prove Chriſts Body to be of one nature and property with his ſoul, and that things naturally corporal were not moſt diverſe from Creatures naturally ſpiritual.

The propelty of man nature not to be ſequeſtred from Chriſt.

Things corporal and things ſpiritual not be compared.

Furthermore, if ſo it might be, that the body or fleſh of Chriſt were meerly ſpiritual, and full like unto the ſubſtance of Angels, yet it could not in this wiſe follow, that his body could be every where, or in divers places at once. Wherefore ſuch ſubtilties are to be omitted, and the trade of Scripture ſhould well like us, by which the old Doctors do define, that the Body of Jeſus, exalted or aſſumpt into Heaven, muſt be local, circumſcript, and in one place, notwithſtanding that the verity, ſpiritual grace, and fruit that cometh of it, is diffuſed and ſpread abroad in all places, or every where. How could Chriſt corporally depart out of this World, and leave the Earth, if he in the kinds of Bread and Wine be not only corporally contained and received, but alſo there reſerved, kept and encloſed? What other thing elſe do theſe words teſtifie, John the thirteenth? But Jeſus knowing that his hour was come, that he ſhould paſs out of this World to his Father, &c. And in like form, Luke the four and twentieth, And it came to paſs, that as he bleſſed them, he departed from them, and was carried up into Heaven: What do they ſignifie, if Chriſt went not verily out of this world, his natural Body being ſurely aſſumpt into Heaven?

The Body of Chriſt is local and in one place.

John 13.

Luke 24.

They do therefore undoubtedly declare, that Chriſt, being very God and very Man, did verily depart out of this world in his natural body, his humanity being aſſumpt into Heaven, where he remaineth ſitting in Glory with the Father: Whereas yet his Deity did not leave the world, ne depart out from the earth. Paul doth ſay, Philippians the ſecond, that of two things he wiſt not which he might rather chuſe, that is to wit, to abide in the fleſh for preaching the Goſpel, or elſe to be diſſolved from the fleſh, ſeeing that to abide with Chriſt is much and far better. By the which Paul doth manifeſtly prove, that they be not preſently with Chriſt, which yet do abide mortal in the fleſh. Yet they be with Chriſt in ſuch wiſe, as the Scripture doth ſay, that the believing be the Temple of Chriſt. And as Paul doth ſay, 2 Cor. 13. Do you not know your ſelves that Jeſus Chriſt is in you? In which ſenſe he alſo promiſed to be with us unto the end of the world. Chriſt therefore muſt be otherwiſe in that place, in which the Apoſtle deſired to be with him, being diſſolved, and departed from his body, than he doth abide either in the Supper, or elſe in any other places of the Churches. He therefore doth undoubtedly mean Heaven, which is the Paradiſe of perfect bliſs and glory: whereas Phil. 2.

KING 2 Edw. 8.

whereas Christ being a Victor, Triumpher, and Conqueror over death, sin and Hell, and over all creatures, doth reign and remain corporally. Thus do I trust that your Grace doth see my sentence thus far forth to be right, Catholick, Christian, and faithful, according to holy Scripture, to holy Fathers, and the Articles of our Christian Belief. Which sentence is this; Christs natural Body is so assumpt into Heaven, where it sitteth or remaineth in glory of the Father, that it can no more come from thence, that is to wit, from Heaven return, until the end of the World; and therefore cannot the same natural Body natural be here in the World, or in the Sacrament: for then should it be departed or gone out of the world, and yet be still remaining in the world. It should then be both to come; and already come, which is a contradiction, and variant from the nature of his manhood.

The natural Body of Christ cannot be both in heaven and earth locally.

The second part of this matter.

The 2d part how the natural Body of Christ is in the Sacrament.

NOw my sentence in the second part of this matter is this (if so be your Grace shall please to know it, as I your poor and unworthy, but full true subject would with all submission and instance beseech you to know it) I grant the holy Sacrament to be the very and natural Body of our Saviour, and his very natural Blood, and that the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour is in the Sacrament after a certain wise, as after shall appear: for so do the words of the supper testifie, Take, eat, this is my body which is given for you. And again, Drink ye all of this; this is my blood which is of the New Testament which is shed for many for the remission of sins. Of which words, seeing on them dependeth a great trial and proof of this matter, and that for the interpretation of them is and hath been all the controversie of this matter, I therefore shall shew the interpretation, that holy Doctors have made of them, that, as to me seemeth, be full worthy credit.

Tertul. contra Marcion. l. 2.

First, we find in the second Book of Tertullian, which he writeth against Marcion, Ipse Christus nec panem reprobavit, Christ did not reprove the bread, because it doth represent his body. This Marcion, against whom Tertullian doth thus write, did erroneously reprove all creatures as evil. Which thing Tertullian doth improve by the Sacrament, saying as is above written, Christ did not reprove the bread, which representeth his body. As who would say; if Christ had judged the Bread evil, then would he not have left it for a sign or Sacrament to represent his blessed Body. Agreeable to the same doth he also say in the fourth Book made against the said Marcion in these words, Christus acceptum panem & distributum Discipulis, corpus suum illud fecit, &c. Christ made the same bread which he took and distributed to his Disciples, his body, saying: This is my body, that is to say, the figure of my body. But it could not have been a figure, unless it were the body of a very true thing indeed. Furthermore, a void thing, which is a phantasie, could not receive a figure or a form. This Marcion had an erroneous opinion, that Christ had no natural Body, but a Body phantastical. Which Error or Heresie, this famous Doctor Tertullian doth improve by the holy Sacrament, saying, as afore is written, That the Sacrament is a figure of Christs body: Ergo, Christ had a very and true body. For a thing which is vain and phantastical can receive no figure. So that in both places we may clearly perceive his interpretation of these words, This is my body: which interpretation is not new, but authentick, or full antient, like as is the writer. And this interpretation do I the rather allow, because none of the old Doctors, which followed him, did ever reprove him therefore, but rather have followed it, as appeareth by holy Augustine. In the Preface upon the third Psalm, doth the said Augustine highly commend the wonderful sufferance of Christ, which so long did suffer and forbear Judas, as if he had been a good and an honest Man: whereas notwithstanding he did know his Trayterous thoughts, when he received him to the Feast or Supper, in which he did commend and deliver to his Disciples the figure of his body and blood. The words of Austen in Latin be these: In Historia novi Testamenti, ipsâ Domini nostri tanta & tam admiranda patientia erat, quod enim tamdiu pertulit tanquam bonum, &c. In the History of the New Testament, the patience of our Lord was so great, and so to be marvelled at, because he suffered Judas so long as a good man, when he knew his thoughts when he received him to the Feast, in the which he did commend and deliver the figure of his body and blood to his Disciples.

The bread representeth the Body of Christ.

Tertul. contra Marcion. l. 4.

Bread beareth a figure of Christs Body.

This is my body expounded.

The patience of Christ in suffering Judas.

Augustine. The Sacrament a figure of the Lords body.

The same holy Doctor also writing against Adamantius, saith thus, Non enim dubitavit Dominus dicere, hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui; For the Lord did not doubt to say, This is my body, when he gave a sign of his body. And for a further declaration, in the same Chapter, he saith, Sic enim sanguis est anima, quomodo petra erat Christus, &c. For the blood is so the soul, as the rock was Christ. Notwithstanding he doth not say, that the rock did signifie Christ: but he doth say, that the rock was Christ.

Aug. contra Adamantium.

Expresly doth Augustine here call the sign of Christs Body, his Body, plainly interpreting these words, This is my body, as both he and Tertullian did before.

Moreover, he taketh these three sentences, This is my body, the soul is the blood, and Christ was the stone, to be of one Phrase, and to be like speeches, or to be expounded after one fashion. And this Text, The rock was Christ, doth he commonly thus expound: The rock did signifie Christ, as appeareth, Lib. 18. de Civitate Dei. Cap. 48. Also in the Book of Questions upon Genesis, and in the Book of Questions upon Leviticus, handling the 18*th* Chapter of John; and in his Sermon of the Annuntiation of our Lady.

The phrase of Scripture.

Aug. de civit. lib. 18. cap. 48.

In like manner also Saint Jerom expoundeth it in the small Scholies, written upon the first Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and all other Writers with one consent, so far as I can read; and so doth the Text require it to be expounded. For Christ was not a natural stone, as all men may well perceive, and yet was he the very true stone figuratively, as Lyra saith, Solet res quæ significat nomine rei quam significat, nominari: The thing which signifieth is wont to be called by the name of the thing which it doth signifie. And so is the stone signifying Christ, called Christ, which thereby is signified. And as he doth approve this Text, The stone was Christ, likewise doth he expound, The blood is the soul, with the which he doth knit this Text, This is my body, to be figuratively expounded, as they be. According to this doth the holy Doctor write, Psalm. 50, Nisi quis manducaverit carnem meam, non videbit vitam æternam, &c. Unless a man do eat my flesh, he shall not see eternal life. They understood that very foolishly, and conceived the same carnally; and that our Lord would cut away lumps or pieces of his body, and give to them. And they said; This is an hard saying. But they were hard of belief, and not the saying. For if they had not been hard, but meek, they would have said to themselves: He speaketh not this without a cause, but because there is some hid Sacrament or mystery therein. They should have aboden with him, easie of belief, and not hard, and then should they have learned of him that which other learned, that tarried after they were gone away.

Hierom. in 1. Cor. c. 1.

Lyranus.

This is my body a figurative speech. Aug. Psal. 50.

In this we may see, that our Saviour willeth his pretious flesh to be eaten. But for the manner of eating, there is, and hath been much controversie. The Jews of Capernaum were offened with Christ, when he said, he would have his flesh eaten: and except a man should eat his flesh, he could not come to life eternal. They supposed grossly, and understood him (if a man might so plainly speak it) butcherly, that he would cut out lumps and pieces out of his body, as the Butcher doth out of dead beasts, and so give it them to eat of, as Augustine doth here say. And upon this gross, or (as holy Augustine doth here call it) foolish and fleshly understanding, they were offended, and said to him; This is a sore or hard saying. They did shoot forth their bolt, and unwise saying over soon, and were offended before they had cause. They took that for hard and sore, which would have been passing pleasant and profitable to them, if they would have heard the thing declared throughly to the end.

The gross Capernaites.

And even so now that which in this matter may appear at the first blush, a sore, strange, and intolerable sentence, for as much as we have not heard of it before, but the contrary hath of a long time been beaten into our heads, and perſwaded to our minds, yet by deliberation and indifference, and abiding a trial of that which at the firſt may appear ſore and intolerable, ſhall (I truſt) be found a ſweet truth, to ſuch ſpecially as your Grace is, loving to hear and to know all troth. But the Capernaites were hard, as here ſaith Auſtine, and not the Word. For if they had not been hard, but ſoft and patient to hear, they would have ſaid in themſelves, Chriſt ſaith not this without a cauſe, and there is ſome hidden myſtery therein: and ſo by patient tarriance they ſhould have known the troth, that they could not attain to ſor perverſe haſtineſs or haſte, which is a great ſtop and let of true judgment. But the Diſciples tarried patiently to hear further, and ſo did they know this ſpeech of Chriſt to be the words life, that to the other, over readily departing from Chriſt, were words of death: For they took them literally and groſly; and the Letter (as Paul ſaith) ſlayeth.

Haſtineſs a great hinderance of true judgment. 2 Cor. 3.

But to ſhew what the Diſciples remaining with Chriſt did learn, Saint Auguſtine doth conſequently ſhew, by the words of the Goſpel, ſaying, thus: Ille autem inſtruxit eos, & ait illis; Spiritus eſt qui vivificat, caro nihil prodeſt, &c. But he inſtructed them, and ſaid unto them, The Spirit is that which giveth life, the fleſh profiteth nothing. The words that I have ſpoken unto you are ſpirit and life. Underſtand you that which I have ſpoken ſpiritually. You ſhall not eat this body which you ſee, neither ſhall you drink that ſame blood which they ſhall ſhed forth that ſhall crucifie me. I have ſet forth to you a certain Sacrament or myſtery, which, being ſpiritually underſtood, ſhall give you life. And although it be requiſite that this be celebrated viſibly, yet it ought to be underſtood inviſibly. In this do we ſee, that both Chriſt and Auguſtine would have Chriſts Words to be underſtood ſpiritually, and not carnally; figuratively, and not literally; and therefore doth he ſay, You ſhall not eat this body which you ſee, neither ſhall you drink that ſame blood which they ſhall ſhed forth that ſhall crucifie me. And what elſe is this, but that Chriſt would his Body to be eaten, and his Blood to be drunken? But he would not his Body to be carnally eaten, which was materially ſeen of them to whom he ſpake; nor his material or natural Blood to be carnally drunken, which his crucifiers ſhould cauſe to iſſue from his natural Body crucified, as ſaith Auguſtine; but he ordained and willed his Body and Blood to be ſpiritually eaten and drunken, in faith and belief that his Body was crucified for us, and that his Blood was ſhed for remiſſion of our ſins.

The words of the Sacrament are to be underſtood ſpiritually.

The Body of Chriſt is not to be eaten carnally.

This eating and drinking is nothing but ſuch true faith and belief as is ſhewed. Wherefore as Chriſt ſaith, He that eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood, hath life everlaſting. Even ſo doth he ſay, He that believeth in me hath life everlaſting. And Saint Auguſtine agreeable to the ſame, treating upon John, doth ſay, At quid paras dentem & ventrem? Crede, & manducaſti, &c. Why doſt thou prepare thy teeth and belly? Believe, and thou haſt eaten. I do know that Chriſt ordaineth his Sacrament to be received and eaten, which is in a certain wiſe called his body, as after ſhall be more largely opened: but that ſame doth not feed the mind of them, except it be taken ſpiritually, and not corporally. Hebrews the thirteenth, It is good to eſtabliſh the heart with grace, and not with meat.

Aug. in Joan.

And Saint Auguſtine aſſenting to the ſame, doth ſay in a Sermon, that he maketh upon theſe words, in the Goſpel of Saint Luke; Lord teach us to pray, Panem dixit, ſed Epiouſion, hoc eſt, ſuperſubſtantialem, &c. He ſaid Bread, but ſuperſubſtantial Bread. This is not the Bread, which goeth into the Body; but that Bread which doth ſatisfie the ſubſtance of our Soul. Our ſouls therefore, into whom nothing corporal can corporally enter, do not carnally receive the Body and Blood of our Saviour, neither did he ordain his bleſſed Body and Blood ſo to be eaten and drunken: Although our ſouls cannot live, except they be ſpiritually fed with the bleſſed Body and Blood of him, ſpiritually eating and drinking them, in taking alſo at times convenient the bleſſed Sacrament, which is truly called his Body and Blood; Not that it is ſo really, but as is ſhewed by the interpretation both of Tertullian and Auguſtine, becauſe it is a ſign or figure of Chriſts Body and Blood. And the ſigns or Sacraments do commonly, as ſaith Saint Auguſtine, both Ad Bonifacium, and in his Work, De Civitate Dei, take their denomination of the things by them repreſented and ſignified.

Aug. in Serm. de verbis Luc.

The Sacrament truly called the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

But forſomuch as ſome will object that Auguſtine in the words afore rehearſed doth not ſpeak of eating the Sacrament; for the Text of the Scripture, upon the which he doth ground, is not ſpoken by eating the Sacrament, which Text is this, Unleſs a man may eat my fleſh, &c. I anſwer, that true it is, he began of ſpiritual eating, and thereto ſerveth the Text recited. Nevertheleſs, he meaneth that Chriſt is not ordained to be eaten, either without the Sacrament, or in the Sacrament, but ſpiritually of the faithful: as more evidently doth appear by theſe words there following: Sacramentum aliquod vobis commendavi, quod ſpiritualiter intellectum vivificabit vos, &c. I have commended unto you a Sacrament, which being underſtood of you ſpiritually ſhall quicken you. Although it were neceſſary that the ſame ſhould be celebrated viſibly, yet notwithſtanding it ought to be underſtood inviſibly.

Sacraments take their denomination of the things which they repreſent.

Objection anſwered.

Here doth he ſhew that he meaneth of eating, not without the Sacrament only, but alſo in the Sacrament, and therefore he doth not only ſay, I have commended unto you a certain Sacrament, &c. But he addeth moreover, Although it is requiſite the ſame to be celebrate viſibly. How therefore can the eating of Chriſt, and the Sacrament thereof be viſibly celebrate, but in the Maundy, or in his Supper? Which is celebrate viſibly in viſible things of Bread and Wine: which cannot quicken or relieve us and our ſouls, except they be underſtood and ſo received ſpiritually.

This is my body expounded by Auguſtine, Aug. de Bonif.

Furthermore, as concerning the expoſition of theſe words of the Supper, This is my body, &c. St. Auguſtine, writing to Bonifacius, ſaith thus. Sæpe ita loquimur, ut Paſcha appropinquante, craſtinam vel perendinam Dominii paſſionem dicamus, &c. We uſe oftentimes this manner of phraſe, that when Eaſter doth approach, we name the day that cometh after, or the next day after that, the paſſion of the Lord, when as he notwithſtanding had ſuffered before that many years; neither that paſſion was done but once for all. So truly do we ſay upon the Lords day: This day the Lord hath riſen, when ſo many years are paſt ſince he roſe. Wherefore no man is ſo fond, that he will reprove us as liers, for this manner of ſpeaking, becauſe we call theſe days according to the ſimilitude of thoſe, in which theſe things were done: ſo that it is called the ſame day which is not the ſame, but by courſe of time of the year coming about, is like unto it: And alſo becauſe that thing is ſaid to be done that day through the celebration of the Sacrament, which was not done that day, but long before that time. Was not Chriſt once offered up in himſelf? And yet notwithſtanding, he is not only offered up in the Sacrament, in the ſolemn Feaſt of Eaſter, but every day myſtically for the people. Neither doth he make a lie, which being demanded, anſwereth, that Chriſt is offered up. For, if the Sacraments had not a certain ſimilitude of thoſe things whereof they are Sacraments, then ſhould they be no Sacraments at all. By reaſon of this ſimilitude or likeneſs, Sacraments oftentimes do receive the names of the ſelf ſame things whereof they are Sacraments,

How the Sacrament of the Body is the Body of Chriſt after a certain manner.

Therefore, as after a certain manner, the Sacrament of Chriſts Body is the Body of Chriſt, and the Sacrament of Chriſts Blood is the Blood of Chriſt: even likewiſe the Sacrament of Faith is Faith. For to believe, is none other thing, than to have Faith. And by this it is anſwered, that the very Infants have Faith, becauſe of the Sacrament of Faith, and convert themſelves unto God, becauſe of the Sacrament of Converſion: for the very anſwer it ſelf doth appertain unto the celebration of the Sacrament: as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Baptiſm. For he ſaith, We are buried by Baptiſm into his death: He ſaith not, we have ſignified a burying, but he plainly ſaith, we are buried. Therefore he named the Sacrament of ſo weighty a matter of thing by no other name, but by the very name of the thing it ſelf.

Nothing can be more plainly ſpoken, nor more agreeable to the natural underſtanding of the Texts of the Supper, and to the expoſition aforeſhewed of Tertullian and of himſelf. For ſeeing that Chriſt is bodily in Heaven, and ſo abſent from the Earth, it is needful to know, how the holy Sacrament, which he doth call his Body and Blood, ſhould be his Body and Blood.

This holy Doctor Auguſtine therefore, doth this matter mani-manifeſtly and ſincerely declare by other like ſpeeches, and firſt by common ſpeeches, and ſecondly by ſpeeches of Scripture. The common ſpeech is: we do, ſaith he, uſe often to ſay, that when Eaſter doth approach or draw nigh, to morrow or the next day is the Lords paſſion, whereas he did ſuffer afore many years paſt, and that paſſion was never but once done.

{KING Hen. 8.}

By Analogy of the Scripture ſpeeches muſt be expounded, one ſpeech by another.

The ſecond common ſpeech is; and of that Sunday we ſay, That this day the Lord did riſe from death, whereas ſo many years be yet paſt ſince the time he aroſe, Wherefore to conclude, he ſaith, No man is ſo fooliſh, that he will reprove us for ſo ſaying, or to ſay that we have lived, becauſe we do call theſe days after the ſimilitude of thoſe in which theſe things were done. So that it is called the ſame day, not for that it is the ſelf ſame, but by revolution of time like unto it. And the Reſurrection is ſaid to be done in the ſame day, throught the celebrating of the Sacrament of that, which is not done that day, but long time afore paſt.

The third ſpeech; Was not Chriſt offered up once for all in his own perſon? Yet is he nevertheleſs offered in the Sacrament myſtically for the people, not only every year at the Feaſt of Eaſter, but alſo every day. Neither doth he lie, which when he is demanded, ſhall anſwer, that he offered or ſacrificed. For if the Sacraments had not a certain ſimilitude of thoſe things of which they be Sacraments, then ſhould they be no Sacraments at all. By reaſon of which ſimilitude they do for the moſt part receive the denomination or name of thoſe things ſignified. And therefore after a certain manner the Sacrament of Chriſts Body is the Body of Chriſt, and the Sacrament of Chriſts Blood is the Blood of Chriſt, and ſo alſo be the Sacraments of Faith called Faith.

Chriſt is offered in the Sacrament myſtically, that is in remembrance of his oblation.

Quodammodo, is after a certain manner.

This doth he yet prove by another example of ſpeech, which is this; It is none other thing to believe, than to have Faith. And therefore when anſwer is made that the Infants have Faith, which indeed have it not in full working, it is anſwered, That ſuch have Faith for the Sacrament of Faith, and that they do convert themſelves unto Faith for the Sacrament of Converſion. For the very anſwer it ſelf doth pertain to the celebration of the Sacrament, &c. Thus doth it ſufficiently appear, that as we uſe truly to call that Good-Friday, or the day of Chriſts paſſion, which is not indeed the day of Chriſts paſſion, but only a memorial thereof once done for ever: and as we uſe to call the next Eaſter day the day of Chriſts Reſurrection, not becauſe that Chriſt in the ſame day ſhall ariſe, but only for a memorial of his reſurrection once done for ever, and that of long time paſſed.

The celebration of the Sacrament repreſenteth the oblation of Chriſts Body.

And Chriſt, being offered up once for all in his own proper perſon, is yet ſaid to be offered up not only every year at Eaſter, but alſo every day in the celebration of the Sacrament, becauſe his oblation, once for ever made, is thereby repreſented; Even ſo (ſaith Auguſtine) is the Sacrament of Chriſts Body the Body of Chriſt, and the Sacrament of Chriſts Blood the Blood of Chriſt in a certain wiſe or faſhion. Not that the Sacrament is his natural Body or Blood indeed, but that it is a memorial or repreſentation thereof, as the days before ſhewed be of his very and natural Body crucified for us, and of his precious Blood ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins. And thus be the holy ſigns or Sacraments truly called by the names of the very things in them ſignified. But why ſo? For they (ſaith Auguſtine) have a certain ſimilitude of thoſe things whereof they be ſigns or Sacraments; for elſe they ſhould be no Sacraments at all: and therefore do they commonly, and for the moſt part receive the denomination of the things whereof they be Sacraments.

The Sacrament of Chriſts Body is not Chriſts Body indeed, but in memorial or repreſentation.

A fallax in logick, a ſecundum quid ad ſimpliciter.

So that we may manifeſtly perceive that he calleth not the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood the very Body and Blood of Chriſt, but as he ſaid before. But yet he ſaith in a certain manner or wiſe; Not that the Sacrament abſolutely and plainly is his natural Body and Blood. For this is a falſe argument of Sophiſtry, which they call Secundum quid ad ſimpliciter; that is to ſay, that the Sacrament of Chriſts Body is in a certain wiſe the Body of Chriſt: Ergo, it is alſo plainly and expreſly the natural Body of Chriſt. For ſuch another reaſon might this be alſo: Chriſt is after a certain manner a Lyon, a Lamb, and a Door; Ergo, Chriſt is a natural Lyon, and a Lamb, or material Door. But the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood is therefore called his Body and Blood, becauſe it is thereof a memorial, ſign, Sacrament, token, and repreſentation, ſpent once for our redemption. Which thing is further expounded by another ſpeech that he doth here conſequently alledge of Baptiſm; Sicut de ipſo baptiſmo Apoſtolus dicit, &c.

The Popes argument.

The Sacrament of Chriſts Body, is Chriſts Body: Ergo, the Sacrament is Chriſts Body really and ſubſtantially.

The Apoſtle, quoth Auguſtine, ſaith not, we have ſignified burying, but he ſaith utterly, we be buried with Chriſt. For elſe ſhould all falſe Chriſtians be buried with Chriſt from ſin, which yet do live in all ſin. And therefore ſaith Auguſtine immediately thereupon, he called therefore the Sacrament of ſo great thing, by none other name than of the thing it ſelf. Thus (O moſt gracious and godly Prince) do I confeſs and acknowledge, that the Bread of the Sacrament is truly Chriſts Body, and the Wine to be truly his Blood, according to the words of the inſtitution of the ſame Sacrament; but in a certain wiſe, that is to wit, figuratively, ſacramentally, or ſignificatively, according to the expoſition of the Doctors before recited, and hereafter following. And to this expoſition of the old Doctors am I inforced, both by the Articles of my Creed, and alſo by the circumſtances of the ſaid Scripture, as after ſhall more largely appear. But by the ſame can I not find the natural Body of our Saviour to be there naturally, but rather abſent, both from the Sacrament, and from all the world, collocate and remaining in Heaven, where he by promiſe muſt abide corporally, unto the end of the world.

The ſame holy Doctor, writing againſt one Fauſtus, ſaith in like manner, Si Machabæos cum ingenti admiratione præferimus, quia eſcas quibus nunc Chriſtiani licite utuntur, attingere noluerunt (quia pro tempore tunc Prophetico non licebat) quanto nunc magis pro Baptiſmo Chriſti, pro Euchariſtia Chriſti, pro ſigno Chriſti, &c. If we do prefer with great admiration the Machabees, becauſe they would not once touch the meats which Chriſtian men now lawfully uſe to eat of, for that it was not lawful for that time being then Prophetical, that is, in the time of the Old Teſtament: How much rather now ought a Chriſtian to be more ready to ſuffer all things for the Baptiſm of Chriſt, and for the Sacrament of thankſgiving, and for the ſign of Chriſt, ſeeing that thoſe of the Old Teſtament were the promiſes of the things to be compleat and fulfilled, and theſe Sacraments in the New Teſtament are the tokens of things compleat and finiſhed? In this do I note, that according to the expoſitions before ſhewed, he calleth the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood, otherwiſe properly named Euchariſtia ſignum Chriſti, and that in the ſingular number, for as much as they both do ſignifie well-nigh one thing. In both them is teſtified the death of our Saviour. And moreover, he calleth them Indicia rerum completarum, that is to wit, the tokens or benefits that we ſhall receive by the belief of Chriſt for us crucified. And he doth call uſually both the Sacraments ſignum Chriſti, in the ſingular number. And as the ſame Saint Auguſtine in his fiftieth Treatiſe upon the Goſpel of Saint John teacheth, where he ſaith thus; Si bonus es, ſi ad corpus Chriſti pertines, (quod ſignificat Petrus) habes Chriſtum, & in præſenti & in futuro. In præſenti per fidem, &c. If thou be good, if thou pertain to the Body of Chriſt, (which this word Petrus doth ſignifie) then haſt thou Chriſt both here preſent, and in time to come: here preſent through Faith; here preſent by the figure and ſign of Chriſt; here preſent by the Sacrament of Baptiſm; here preſent by the meat and drink of the Altar, &c.

The death of Robert Packington.

Robert Packington.

AMong other acts and matters paſſed and done this preſent year, which is of the Lord 1538, here is not to be ſilenced the unworthy and lamentable death of Robert Packington, Mercer of London, wrought and cauſed by the enemies of Gods Word and of all good proceedings. The Story is this; The ſaid Robert Packington, {Anno 1538.}

being a man of ſubſtance, and dwelling in Cheapſide, uſed every day at Five of the Clock, Winter and Summer, to go to pray at a Church then called Saint Thomas of Acres, but now named Mercers Chappel. And one morning amongſt all other, being a great myſty-morning, ſuch as hath ſeldom been ſeen, even as he was croſſing the ſtreet from his houſe to the Church, he was ſuddenly murthered with a Gun, which of the Neighbours was plainly heard, and by a great number of Labourers ſtanding at Soper-Lane end, he was both ſeen to go forth of his houſe, and the clap of the Gun was heard, but the deed-doer was a great while uneſpied and unknown. Although many in the mean time were ſuſpected, yet none could be found faulty therein, the Murtherer ſo covertly was conveyed, till at length by the confeſſion of Doctor Incent Dean of Pauls, in his death-bed, it was known, and by him confeſſed, that he himſelf was the Author thereof, by hiring an Italian, for forty Crowns or thereabout, to do the feat. For the teſtimony whereof, and alſo for the repentant words of the ſaid Incent, the names both of them which heard him confeſs it, and of them which heard the witneſſes report it, remain yet in memory, to be produced, if need required.

Doct. Incent Dean of Pauls, murderer of Packington.

The cauſe why he was ſo little favoured with the Clergy, was this, For that he was known to be a man of great courage, and one that could both ſpeak, and alſo would be heard: for at the ſame time he was one of the Burgeſſes of the Parliament for the City of London, and had talked ſomewhat againſt the covetouſneſs and cruelty of the Clergy, wherefore he was had in contempt with them, and was thought alſo to have ſome talk with the King, for the which he was the more had in diſdain with them; and murthered by the ſaid Doctor Incent, for his labour, as hath been above declared.

And thus much of Robert Packington, which was the Brother of Auguſtine Packington above mentioned, who deceived Biſhop Tonſtall, in buying the new tranſlated Teſtament of Tindall. Whoſe pitious murther although it was privy and ſudden, yet hath it ſo pleaſed the Lord not to keep it in darkneſs, but to bring it at length to light.

The burning of one Collins at London.

Collins with his Dog burned

NEither is here to be omitted the burning of one Collins, ſometime a Lawyer and a Gentleman, which ſuffered the fire this year alſo in Smithfield, Anno 1538. Whom although I do not here recite as in the number of Gods profeſſed Martyrs, yet neither do I think him to be clean ſequeſtred from the company of the Lords ſaved Flock and Family, notwithſtanding that the Biſhop of Romes Church did condemn and burn him for an Heretick: but rather do recount him therefore as one belonging to the holy company of Saints. At leaſtwiſe this caſe of him and of his end may be thought to be ſuch, as may well reprove and condemn their cruelty and madneſs, in burning ſo without all diſcretion this man, being mad and diſtract of his perfect wits, as he then was, by this occaſion as here followeth.

This Gentleman had a Wife of exceeding beauty and comelineſs, but notwithſtanding of ſo light behaviour and unchaſt conditions (nothing correſpondent to the grace of her beauty) that ſhe forſaking her Husband, which loved her intirely, betook her ſelf unto another Paramour. Which when he underſtood, he took it very grievouſly and heavily, more than reaſon would. At the laſt being overcome with exceeding dolour and heavineſs, he fell mad, being at that time a Student of the Law in London. When he was thus raviſhed of his wits, by chance he came into a Church, where a Prieſt was ſaying Maſs, and was come to the place where they uſe to hold up and ſhew the Sacrament.

Collins being beſide his wits, ſeeing the Prieſt holding up the Hoſt over his head, and ſhewing it to the people; he in like manner counterfeiting the Prieſt, took up a little Dog by the legs and held him over his head, ſhewing him unto the people. And for this he was by and by brought to Examination, and condemned to the fire, and was burned, and the Dog with him, the ſame year of our Lord, in the which John Lambert was burned, 1538.

{KING Hen. 8.}

Collins burned for holding up a Dog at Maſs.

The burning of Cowbridge at Oxford, Anno 1538.

Cowbridge burnt at Oxford.

WIth this foreſaid Collins may alſo be adjoyned the burning of Cowbridge, who likewiſe being mad and beſide his right ſenſes, was either the ſame or the next year following condemned by Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, and committed to the fire by him to be burnt at Oxford. What his Opinions and Articles were wherewith he was charged, it needeth not here to rehearſe. For as he was then a man mad, and deſtitute of ſenſe and reaſon, ſo his words and ſayings could not be found. Yea rather, what wiſe man would ever collect Articles againſt him, which ſaid, He could not tell what. And if his Articles were ſo horrible and mad as Cope in his Dialogues doth declare them, then was he in my judgment a man more fit to be ſent to Bedlem, than to be had to the fire in Smithfield to be burned. For what reaſon is it to require reaſon of a Creature mad or unreaſonable, or to make Hereſie of the words of a ſenſeleſs man, not knowing what he affirmed?

Cope in his Dialogues.

But this is the manner and property of this holy Mother-Church of Rome, that whatſoever cometh in their hands and inquiſition, to the fire it muſt. There is no other way; neither pity that will move, nor excuſe that will ſerve, nor age that they will ſpare, nor any reſpect almoſt that they conſider, as by theſe two miſerable Examples, both of Collins and Cowbridge it may appear. Who rather ſhould have been pitied, and all ways convenient ſought how to reduce the ſilly Wretches into their right minds again, according as the true Paſtors of Iſrael be commanded by the Spirit of God, to ſeek again the things that be loſt, and to bind up the things that be broken, &c. and not ſo extreamly to bruſt the things that be bruiſed before. But to end with this matter of Cowbridge, whatſoever his madneſs was before, or however erroneous his Articles were (which for the fond Phantacies of them I do not expreſs) yet as touching his end, this is certain, that in the midſt of the flame, he, lifting up his head to Heaven, ſoberly and diſcreetly called upon the Name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo departed.

The right confeſſion of Cowbridge, at his departing.

William Leiton and Puttedew, Martyrs.

ABout the ſame time and year, or not much before, when John Lambert ſuffered at London, there was one Puttedew alſo condemned to the fire, about the parts of Suffolk: who coming into the Church, and merrily telling the Prieſt, that after he had drunk up all the Wine alone, he afterward bleſſed the hungry people with the empty Chalice, was for the ſame immediately apprehended, and ſhortly after burned, leaving to us an experiment, Quam parum ſit tutum ludere cum Sanctis, as the old ſaying was then; but rather, as we may ſee now, Quam male tutum ſit ludere cum impiis.

Puttedew martyred.

Prover. Non eſt bonum ludere cum impiis.

To the other William Leiton, was a Monk of Aye in the County of Suffolk, and was burned at Norwich, for ſpeaking againſt a certain Idol which was accuſtomed to be carried about the Proceſſions at Aye; and alſo for holding that the Sacramental Supper ought to be adminiſtred in both kinds, about the year and time aforeſaid.

The burning of one Peke at Ipſwich.

N. Peke burned at Ipſwich, Martyr.

IN the burning of another Suffolk-man, named N. Peke, dwelling ſometime at Earleſtonham, and burnt at Ipſwich, ſomewhat before the burning of theſe aforeſaid, thus I find it recorded and teſtified; That when as he being faſt bound to a ſtake, and Furſe ſet on fire round about him, was ſo ſorched, that he was as black as any ſoot, one Doctor Reading there ſtanding before him, with Doctor Heyre and Doctor Springwell, having a long white Wand in his hand, did knock him upon the right ſhoulder, and ſaid Peke recant, and believe that the Sacrament of the Altar is the very Body of Chriſt, Fleſh, Blood, and Bone, after that the Prieſt hath ſpoken the words of Conſecration over it, and here have I in my hand to abſolve thee for thy misbelief that hath been in thee, having a Scrol of Paper in his hand. When he had ſpoken theſe words, Peke anſwered, and ſaid, I deſie it and thee alſo, and with a great violence he ſpit from him very blood, which came by reaſon that his Veins brake in his body for extream anguiſh. And when the ſaid Peke had ſo ſpoken, then Doctor Reading ſaid, To as many as ſhall caſt a ſtick to the burning of this Heretick, is granted forty days of pardon by my Lord Biſhop of Norwich.

Forty days of pardon proclaimed for caſting ſticks into Pekes fire.

Then Baron Curſon, Sir John Audley Knight, with many others of eſtimation being there preſent, did riſe from their Seats, and with their Swords did cut down boughs, and throw them into the fire, and ſo did all the multitude of the people.

Witneſs John Ramſey and others, who did ſee this act.

Of this Council of Mantua read before.

IN the year laſt before this, which was of the Lord, 1537. it was declared how Pope Paul the Third indicted a general Council, to be holden at Mantua. Whereunto the King of England, amongſt other Princes being called, refuſed either to come or to ſend at the Popes call, and for defence of himſelf directed out a publick Apology or Proteſtation, rendring juſt and ſufficient matter, why neither he would, nor was bound to obey the Popes Commandment. Which Proteſtation is before to be read. This Council appointed to begin the three and twentieth day of May, the year aforeſaid was then ſtopped by the Duke of Mantua, pretending that he would ſuffer no Council there, unleſs the Pope would fortifie the City with a ſufficient Army, &c. For which cauſe the Pope prorogued the ſaid Council, to be celebrate in the month of November following, appointing at the firſt no certain place. At length he named and determined the City of Vincence (lying within the Dominion of the Venetians) to be the place for the Council. Whereunto when the King (the year next following, which is this preſent year of our Lord, 1538.) was requeſted by the Emperor and other States, to reſort either himſelf, or to ſend; he again refuſing (as he did before) ſendeth this Proteſtation in way of defence and anſwer for himſelf, to the Emperor and other Chriſtian Princes; the Copy and effect whereof hereunder followeth; and is this.

Henry the Eighth by the Grace of God, King of England and France, &c. ſalluteth the Emperour, Chriſtian Princes, and all true Chriſtian men, deſiring Peace and Concord amongſt them.

WHereas not long ſince, a Book came forth in our and all our Councils Names, which contained many cauſes why we refuſed the Council, then by the Biſhop of Romes uſurped Power, firſt indicted at Mantua, {Ann. 1538.} to be kept the three and twentieth day of May, after prorogued to November, no place appointed where it ſhould be kept: And whereas the ſame Book doth ſufficiently prove, that our cauſe could take no hurt, neither with any thing done or decreed in ſuch a company of men addict to one Sect, nor in any other Council called by his uſurped Power; we think it nothing neceſſary, ſo oft to make new Proteſtations, as the Biſhop of Rome and his Courts, by ſubtility and craft, do invent ways to mock the World by new pretended general Councils. Yet notwithſtanding becauſe that ſome things now occurred, either upon occaſion given us by change of the place, or elſe through other conſiderations, which now being known to the World may do much good, we thought we ſhould do but even as that love enforceth us, which we owe unto Chriſts Faith and Religion, to add this Epiſtle. And yet we proteſt that we neither put forth that Book, neither yet we would this Epiſtle to be ſet before it, that thereby we ſhould ſeem leſs to deſire a general Council than any other Prince or Potentate, but rather to be more deſirous of it, ſo it were free for all parts, and univerſal. And further, we deſire all good Princes, Potentates, and people, to eſteem and think, that no Prince would more willingly be preſent at ſuch a Council

The Kings Letter to the Emperor.

Of this Book read before.

The Pope doth but mock the world with his pretended Councils.

General Councils are to be wiſhed, ſo they might be free univerſally for all parts.

Council than we; ſuch a one we mean, as we ſpeak of in our Proteſtation made concerning the Council of Mantua.

Nothing more pernicious to the Church than general Councils, if they be abuſed.

Truly as our fore-Fathers invented nothing more holy than General Councils, uſed as they ought to be, ſo there is almoſt nothing that may do more hurt to the Chriſtian Commonwealth, to the Faith, to our Religion, than General Councils, if they be abuſed to lucre, to gains, to the eſtabliſhment of Errors. They be called General, and even by their name do admoniſh us, that all Chriſtian men, which do diſſent in any opinion, may in them openly, frankly, and without fear of puniſhment or diſpleaſure ſay their mind. For ſeeing ſuch things as are decreed in General Councils, touch equally all men that give aſſent thereunto, it is meet that every man may boldly ſay there what he thinketh. And verily we ſuppoſe, that it ought not to be called a General Council, where only thoſe men are heard, which are determined for ever, in all points, to defend the Popiſh part, and to arm themſelves to fight in the Biſhop of Romes quarrel, though it were againſt God and his Scripture. It is no General Council, neither ought it to be called General, where the ſame men be both Advocates and Adverſaries: the ſame accuſed and judges: No it is againſt the Law of Nature, either that we ſhould condeſcend to ſo unreaſonable a Law againſt our ſelves, or that we ſhould ſuffer our ſelves to be left without all defence, and being oppreſſed with greateſt injuries, to have no Refuge to ſuccour our ſelves at. The Biſhop of Rome and his be our great Enemies, as we and all the World may well perceive by his doings.

The Popes Councils are not General Councils. The Pope in his Councils is the party accuſed and alſo the Judge.

Againſt all reaſon that he which is our Accuſer ſhould alſo be our Judge. The Popes honour firſt gotten by Superſtition, born by ignorance, nouriſhed by ambition, increaſed by violence, defended by falſe underſtanding and wreſting of Scriptures.

He deſireth nothing more than our hurt, and the deſtruction of our Realm: Do not we then violate the judgment of Nature, if we give him power and authority to be our Judge? His pretended Honour, firſt gotten by Superſtition, after increaſed by violence, and other ways as evil as that; his power ſet up by pretence of Religion, indeed both againſt Religion, and alſo contrary to the Word of God; his Primacy, born by the ignorance of the World, nouriſhed by the ambition of the Biſhops of Rome, defended by places of Scripture falſely underſtood: theſe three things, we ſay, which are fallen with us, and are like to fall in other Realms ſhortly, ſhall they not be eſtabliſhed again; if he may decide our cauſe as him luſteth? If he may at his pleaſure oppreſs a Cauſe moſt righteous, and ſet up his, moſt againſt truth? Certainly he is very blind that ſeeth not what end we may look for of our Controverſies, if ſuch our Enemy may give the Sentence.

Provision to be made againſt Popiſh ſubtilties.

We deſire, if it were in any wiſe poſſible, a Council, where ſome hope may be that thoſe things ſhall be reſtored, which now being depravate are like (if they be not amended) to be the utter ruine of Chriſtian Religion. And as we do deſire ſuch a Council, and think it meet that all men in all their prayers ſhould deſire and crave it of God, even ſo we think it appertaineth unto our Office, to provide both that theſe Popiſh ſubtilties hurt none of our Subjects, and alſo to admoniſh other Chriſtian Princes, that the Biſhop of Rome may not by their conſent abuſe the Authority of Kings, either by the extinguiſhing of the true preaching of Scripture, (that now beginneth to ſpring, to grow and ſpread abroad) or to the troubling of Princes Liberties, to the diminiſhing of Kings Authorities, and to the great blemiſh of their Princely Majeſty. We doubt nothing but a Reader not partial will ſoon approve ſuch things as we here write, not ſo much for our excuſe, as that the World may perceive both the ſundry deceits, crafts, and ſubtilties of the Papiſts, and alſo how much we deſire that Controverſies in matters of Religion may once be taken away.

This Council of Mantua which the Pope prorogued, he afterward tranſferred to Vincence. This was the year, 1537.

All that we ſaid there of Mantua, may here well be ſpoken of Vincence. They do almoſt agree in all Points. Neither is it like that there will be any more at this Council at Vincence, than were the laſt year at Mantua. Truly he is worthy to be deceived, that being twice mocked will not beware the third time. If any this laſt year made forth toward Mantua, and being half on their way, then perceived that they had taken upon them that Journey in vain, we do not think them ſo fooliſh, that they will hereafter ride far out of the Town to be mocked. The time alſo and the ſtate of things is ſuch, that matters of Religion may rather now be brought further in trouble (as other things are) than be commodiouſly entreated of and decided. For whereas in manner the whole World is after ſuch ſort troubled with Wars, ſo incumbred with the great Preparations that the Turk maketh, can there be any man ſo againſt the ſetling of Religion that he will think this time meet for a general Council? Undoubtely it is meet that ſuch Controverſies as we have with the Biſhop of Rome, be taken as they are, that is much greater, than that they may either be diſcuſſed in this ſo troubleſome a time, or elſe be committed unto Proctors, without our great jeopardy, albeit the time were never ſo quiet.

{KING Hen. 8.}

This time unmeet for a General Council, and why.

What other Princes will do, we cannot tell: but we will never leave our Realm at this time, neither will we truſt any Proctor with our Cauſe, wherein the whole ſtay and wealth of our Realm ſtandeth, but rather we will be at the handling thereof our ſelf. For except both another Judge be agreed upon for thoſe matters, and alſo a place more commodious be provided for the debating of our Cauſes; albeit all other things were as we would have them, yet may we lawfully refuſe to come or ſend any to this pretended Council. We will in no caſe make him our Arbitrer, which not many years paſt, our Cauſe not heard, gave Sentence againſt us. We will that ſuch Doctrine, as we following the Scripture do profeſs, be rightly examined, diſcuſſed, and brought to the Scripture, as to the only touchſtone of true Learning.

Neither the Judge, nor the place convenient for a general Council.

We will not ſuffer them to be aboliſhed, ere ever they be diſcuſſed, ne to be oppreſſed, before they be known; much leſs will we ſuffer them to be trodden down being ſo clearly true. No, as there is no jote in Scripture but we will defend it, though it were with jeopardy of our life, and peril of this our Realm: ſo is there nothing that doth oppreſs this Doctrine, or obſcure it, but we will be at continual War therewith. As we have abrogated all old Popiſh Traditions in this our Realm, which either did help his Tyranny, or increaſe his Pride: ſo if the Grace of God forſake us not, we will well foreſee, that no new naughty Traditions be made with our conſent, to bind us or our Realm.

Spoken like a King.

Would God the King here had kept promiſe when he made the ſix Articles.

If men will not be willingly blind, they ſhall eaſily ſee even by a due and evident proof in reaſon, though Grace doth not yet by the Word of Chriſt enter into them, how ſmall the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome is, by the lawful denial of the Duke of Mantua for the place. For if the Biſhop of Rome did earneſtly intend to keep a Council at Mantua, and hath power of the Law by God to call Princes to what place him liketh: why hath he not alſo Authority to chooſe what place him liſteth? The Biſhop choſe Mantua: the Duke kept him out of it. If Paul the Biſhop of Romes Authority be ſo great as he pretendeth, why could he not compel Fredericus the Duke of Mantua, that the Council might be kept there? The Duke would not ſuffer it. No he forbad him his Town.

The Duke of Mantua denieth the Pope his City for his Council.

How chanceth it, that here Excommunications flee not abroad? why doth he not puniſh this Duke? Why is his Power that was wont to be more than full, here empty? Wont to be more than all, here nothing? Doth he not call men in vain to a Council, if they that come at his calling be excluded the place to the which he calleth them? may not Kings juſtly refuſe to come at his call, when the Duke of Mantua may deny him the place that he chooſeth? If other Princes order him as the Duke of Mantua hath done, what place ſhall be left him, where he may keep his General Council?

If the Popes Authority may be ſtopped by a Duke, what Authority then hath he over Kings and Emperors.

Again, if Princes have given him this Authority to call a Council, is it not neceſſary that they give him alſo all thoſe things, without the which he cannot exerciſe that his Power? Shall he call men, and will ye let him to find no place to call them unto? Truly he is not wont to appoint one of his own Cities, a place to keep the Council in. No, the good man is ſo faithful and friendly toward other, that ſeldom he deſires Princes to be his Gueſts.

And admit he ſhould call us to one of his Cities, ſhould we ſafely walk within the Walls of ſuch our Enemies Town? were it meet for us there to diſcuſs Controverſies of Religion, or to keep us out of our Enemies traps? Meet to ſtudy for the defence of ſuch Doctrine as we profeſs, or rather how we might in ſuch a throng of perils perils be in ſafeguard of our life? Well, in this one Act the Biſhop of Rome hath declared that he hath none Authority upon places in other mens Dominions, and therefore if he promiſe a Council in any of thoſe, he promiſeth that, that is in another man to perform, and ſo may he deceive us again.

Dilemma againſt the Pope.

Now if he call us to one of his own Towns, we be afraid to be at ſuch an Hoſts Table. We ſay, better to riſe an hungred, than to go thence with our bellies full. But they ſay, the place is found, we need no more to ſeek where the Council ſhall be kept. As who ſaith, that what chanced at Mantua, may not alſo chance at Vincence: and as though it were very like that the Venetians, men of ſuch wiſdom, ſhould not both foreſee, and fear alſo that the wiſe Duke of Mantua ſeemed to fear. Certes, when we think upon the ſtate that the Venetians be in now, it ſeemeth no very likely thing, that they will either leave Vincence their City to ſo many Nations, without ſome great Garriſon of Souldiers, or elſe that they, being elſewhere ſo ſore charged already, will now nouriſh any Army there.

Vincence a City under the Dominion of the Venetians.

And if they would, doth not Paul himſelf grant it ſhould be an evil Prelident, and an evil example to have an armed Council?

Howſoever it ſhall be, we moſt heartily deſire you, that ye will vouchſafe to read thoſe things that we wrote this laſt year touching the Mantuan-Council. For we nothing doubt, but you, of your equity, will ſtand on our ſide againſt their ſubtilty and frauds, and judge (except we be deceived) that we in this buſineſs, neither gave ſo much to our affections, neither without great and moſt juſt cauſes refuſed their Councils, their Cenſures and Decrees.

Whether theſe our Writings pleaſe all men, or no, we think we ought not to paſs much. No, if that which indifferently is written of us, may pleaſe indifferent Readers, our deſire is accompliſhed. The falſe cenſure and miſtaking of things by men partial ſhall move us nothing, or elſe very little. If we have ſaid ought againſt the deceits of the Biſhop of Rome, that may ſeem ſpoken too ſharply, we pray you impute it to the hatred we bear unto his Vices, and not to any evil will that we bear him. No, that he and all his may perceive that we are rather at ſtrife with his Vices, than with him and his; our prayer is, that it may pleaſe God at the laſt to open their eyes, to make ſoft their hard hearts, and that they once may with us (their own glory ſet apart) ſtudy to ſet forth the everlaſting Glory of the ever-living God.

Thus, mighty Emperor, fare you moſt heartily well, and ye Chriſtian Princes, the Pillars and ſtate of Chriſtendom, fare ye heartily well. Alſo all ye, what people ſoever ye are, which do deſire that the Goſpel and Glory of Chriſt may flouriſh, fare ye heartily well.

As the Lord of his goodneſs had raiſed up Thomas Cromwel to be a Friend and Patron to the Goſpel; ſo on the contrary ſide Satan (which is Adverſary and Enemy to all good things) had his Organ alſo, which was Stephen Gardiner, by all wiles and ſubtil means to impeach and put back the ſame. Who after he had brought his purpoſe to paſs in burning good John Lambert (as ye have heard) proceeding ſtill in his crafts and wiles, and thinking under the name of Hereſies, Sects, Anabaptiſts, and Sacramentaries, to exterminate all good Books, and faithful Profeſſors of Gods Word out of England, ſo wrought with the King, that the next year following, which was of our Lord, 1539. he gave out theſe Injunctions, the Copy and Contents whereof I thought here alſo not to be pretermitted, and are theſe.

Certain other Injunctions ſet forth by the Authority of the King, againſt Engliſh Books, Sects, and Sacramentaries alſo, with putting down the Day of Thomas Becket.

{Anno 1539.}

FIrſt, That none, without ſpecial Licence of the King, tranſport or bring from outward Parts into England any manner of Engliſh Books, neither yet ſell, give, utter, or publiſh any ſuch, upon pain to forfeit all their Goods and Chattels, and their Bodies to be impriſoned, ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe the Kings Majeſty.

Item, That none ſhall print, or bring over any Engliſh Books with Annotations or Prologues, unleſs ſuch Books before be examined by the Kings Privy-Council, or others appointed by his Highneſs, and yet not to be put thereto theſe words, Cum Privilegio Regali, without adding, Ad imprimendum ſolum: Neither yet to imprint it, without the Kings Priviledge be printed therewith in the Engliſh-Tongue, that all men may read it. Neither ſhall they print any tranſlated Book, without the plain name of the Tranſlator be in it, or elſe the Printer to be made the Tranſlator, and to ſuffer the fine and puniſhment thereof at the Kings pleaſure.

No Books to be tranſlated without the name of the Tranſlator.

Item, That none of the Occupation of Printing ſhall within the Realm Print, Utter, Sell, or cauſe to be publiſhed any Engliſh Book of Scripture, unleſs the ſame be firſt viewed, examined, and admitted by the Kings Highneſs, or one of his Privy-Council, or one Biſhop within the Realm, whoſe name ſhall therein be expreſſed, upon pain of the Kings moſt high diſpleaſure, the loſs of their Goods and Chattels, and Impriſonment ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe the King.

Engliſh Books of Scripture forbidden to be printed.

Item, Thoſe that be in any Errors, as Sacramentaries, Anabaptiſts, or any other, that ſell Books having ſuch Opinions in them, being once known, both the Books and ſuch perſons ſhall be detected and diſcloſed immediately unto the Kings Majeſty, or one of his Privy-Council, to the intent to have it puniſhed without favour, even with the extremity of the Law.

Againſt Sacramentaries.

Item, That none of the Kings Subjects ſhall reaſon, diſpute, or argue upon the Sacrament of the Altar, upon pain of loſing their lives, goods, and chattels without all favour, only thoſe excepted that be learned in Divinity: they to have their liberty in their Schools and appointed places accuſtomed for ſuch matters.

No man to diſpute of the Sacrament.

Item, That the holy Bread and holy Water, Proceſſion, kneeling and creeping on Good-Friday to the Croſs, and Eaſter-day, ſetting up of Lights before the Corpus Chriſti, bearing of Candles on Candlemas-day, Purification of Women delivered of Child, offering of Criſomes, keeping of the four Offering-days, paying their Tythes, and ſuch like Ceremonies, muſt be obſerved and kept till it ſhall pleaſe the King to change or abrogate any of them. This Article was made for that the people was not quieted and contented (many of them) with the Ceremonies then uſed.

Holy Bread and holy Water, with other Rites of the Church eſtabliſhed.

Finally, All thoſe Prieſts that be married, and openly known to have their Wives, or that hereafter do intend to marry, ſhall be deprived of all Spiritual Promotion, and from doing any duty of a Prieſt, and ſhall have no manner of Office, Dignity, Cure, Priviledge, Profit, or Commodity in any thing appertaining to the Clergy, but from thenceforth ſhall be taken, had, and reputed as Lay-perſons, to all purpoſes and intents; and thoſe that ſhall after this Proclamation marry, ſhall run in his Graces Indignation, and ſuffer puniſhment and impriſonment at his Graces will and pleaſure.

Married Prieſts puniſhed.

Item, He chargeth all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Archdeacons, Deacons, Provoſts, Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and other Miniſters, and every of them in their own perſons, within their Cures diligently to preach, teach, open, and ſet forth to the people, the Glory of God, and truth of his Word, and alſo conſidering the abuſes and ſuperſtitions that have crept into the hearts and ſtomachs of many, by reaſon of their fond Ceremonies, he chargeth them upon pain of Impriſonment, at his Graces pleaſure, not only to preach and teach the Word of God accordingly, but alſo ſincerely and purely, declaring the difference between things commanded by God, and the Rites and Ceremonies in their Church then uſed, leſt the people thereby might grow into further ſuperſtition.

Difference to be taught between things commanded of God, and Ceremonies uncommanded.

Item, For as much as it appeareth now clearly that Thomas Becket, ſometime Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſtubbornly withſtanding the wholeſome Laws eſtabliſhed againſt the Enormities of the Clergy, by the Kings Highneſs Noble Progenitor King Henry the ſecond, for the Commonwealth, reſt and tranquillity of this Realm, of his froward mind fled the Realm into France, and Thomas Becket noted of ſtubbornneſs.

and to the Biſhop of Rome, maintainer of thoſe Enormities, to procure the abrogation of the ſaid Laws (whereby aroſe much trouble in this ſaid Realm) and that his death, which they untruly called Martyrdom, hapned upon a Reſcue made, and that (as it is written) he gave opprobrious words to the Gentlemen which then counſelled him to leave his ſtubbornneſs, and to avoid the commotion of the people, riſen up for that Reſcue, and he not only called the one of them Bawd, but alſo took Tracy by the boſom, and violently ſhook him, and plucked him in ſuch manner, that he had almoſt overthrown him to the pavement of the Church, ſo that upon this Fray, one of their company perceiving the ſame, ſtrake him, and ſo in the Throng Becket was ſlain: and further, that this Canonization was made only by the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe he had been both a Champion to maintain his uſurped Authority, and a bearer of the iniquity of the Clergy.

Tho. Becket a Rebel rather than a Saint.

For theſe, and for other great and urgent cauſes, long to recite, the Kings Majeſty, by the advice of his Council, hath thought expedient to declare to his loving Subjects, that notwithſtanding the ſaid Canonization, there appeareth nothing in his life and exterior converſation, whereby he ſhould be called a Saint, but rather eſteemed to have been a Rebel and Traytor to his Prince.

Therefore his Grace ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth, that from henceforth the ſaid Thomas Becket ſhall not be eſteemed, named, reputed, and called a Saint, but Biſhop Becket, and that his Images and Pictures thorow the whole Realm ſhall be plucked down and avoided out of all Churches, Chappels, and other places, and that from henceforth the days uſed to be feſtival in his name, ſhall not be obſerved, nor the Service, Office, Antiphons, Collects, and Prayers in his name read, but raſed and put out of all their Books; and that all their Feſtival-days already abrogated, ſhall be in no wiſe ſolemnized, but his Graces Ordinances and Injunctions thereupon obſerved, to the intent his Graces loving Subjects ſhall be no longer blindly led and abuſed to commit Idolatry, as they have done in times paſſed, upon pain of his Majeſties Indignation, and impriſonment at his Graces pleaſure.

The Canonization of Tho. Becket raſed.

Finally, his Grace ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth, that his Subjects do keep and obſerve all and ſingular his Injunctions made by his Majeſty, upon the pain therein contained.

Here followeth how Religion began to go backward.

The variable changes and mutations of Religion in King Henries days.

TO many which be yet alive, and can teſtifie theſe things, it is not unknown, how variable the ſtate of Religion ſtood in theſe days; how hardly and with what difficulty it came forth, what chances and changes it ſuffered. Even as the King was ruled and gave ear ſometime to one, ſometime to another, ſo one while it went forward, at another ſeaſon as much backward again, and ſometime clean altered and changed for a ſeaſon, according as they could prevail which were about the King. So long as Queen Anne lived, the Goſpel had indifferent ſucceſs.

After that ſhe, by ſiniſter inſtigation of ſome about the King, was made away, the courſe of the Goſpel began again to decline, but that the Lord then ſtirred up the Lord Cromwel, opportunely to help in that behalf. Who, no doubt, did much avail, for the increaſe of Gods true Religion, and much more had brought to perfection, if the peſtilent Adverſaries, maligning the proſperous glory of the Goſpel, by contrary practiſing had not craftily undermined him and ſupplanted his vertuous proceedings. By the means of which Adverſaries it came to paſs after the taking away of the ſaid Cromwel, that the ſtate of Religion more and more decayed, during all the reſidue of the Reign of King Henry.

The courſe of the Goſpel interrupted by malicious enemies.

The marriage of Queen Anne of Cleve.

Among theſe Adverſaries above mentioned, the chief Captain was Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter; who with his Confederates and Adherents, diſdaining at the ſtate of the Lord Cromwel, and at the late marriage of the Lady Anne of Cleve (who in the beginning of the year of our Lord, 1540, was married to the King) as alſo grieved partly at the diſſolution of the Monaſteries, and fearing the growing of the Goſpel, ſought all occaſions how to interrupt theſe happy beginnings, and to train the King to their own purpoſe. Now what occaſion this wily Wincheſter found out to work upon, ye ſhall hear in order as followeth.

KING Hen. 8.

It happened the ſame time, that the Lord Cromwel, for the better eſtabliſhing of ſincere Religion in this Realm, deviſed a Marriage for the King, to be concluded between him and the Lady Anne of Cleve, whoſe other Siſter was already married unto the Duke of Saxony. By this Marriage it was ſuppoſed that a perpetual League, Amity and Allie ſhould be nouriſhed between this Realm and the Princes of Germany, and ſo thereby godly Religion might be made more ſtrong on both parts againſt the Biſhop of Rome, and his tyrannical Religion. But the Devil, ever envying the Proſperity of the Goſpel, laid a ſtumbling-block in that clear way for the King to ſtumble at. For when the Parents of the Noble Lady were communed withall for the furtherance of the ſaid Marriage, among others of her Friends whoſe good will was required, the Duke of Saxony her Brother in law miſliked the Marriage, partly for that he would have had her beſtowed upon ſome Prince of Germany more nigh unto her Siſter; and partly for other cauſes, which he thought reaſonable. Whereupon it followeth that the ſlackneſs of the Duke in that behalf being eſpied, crafty Wincheſter, taking good hold-faſt thereon, ſo alienated the Kings mind from the Amity that ſeemed now to begin and grow between the Duke and the King, that by the occaſion thereof he brought the King at length clean out of credit with that Religion and Doctrine which the Duke had then maintained many years before.

The occaſions which Wincheſter did work by.

This Lady Anne of Cleve was married to the King, An. 1540.

The King brought out of credit with the Doctrine of the German Princes.

This wily Wincheſter with his crafty fetches partly upon this occaſion aforeſaid, and partly alſo by other peſtilent perſwaſions creeping into the Kings ears, ceaſed not to ſeek all means how to work his feat, and to overthrow Religion, firſt bringing him in hatred with the German Princes, then putting him in fear of the Emperor, of the French King, of the Pope, of the King of Scots, and other foreign Powers to riſe againſt him; but eſpecially of civil Tumults and Commotions here within this Realm, which above all things he moſt dreaded by reaſon of Innovation of Religion, and diſſolving of Abbeys, and for aboliſhing of Rites, and other cuſtoms of the Church, ſticking ſo faſt in the minds of the people, that it was to be feared leſt their hearts were or would be ſhortly ſtirred up againſt him, unleſs ſome ſpeedy remedy were to the contrary provided: declaring moreover what a dangerous matter in a Commonwealth it is, to attempt new alterations of any thing, but eſpecially of Religion. Which being ſo, he exhorted the King for his own ſafeguard, and publick quiet and tranquillity of his Realm, to ſee betime, how and by what policy theſe ſo manifold miſchiefs might be prevented. Againſt which no other way or ſhift could be better deviſed, than if he would ſhew himſelf ſharp and ſevere againſt the new Sectaries, Anabaptiſts, and Sacramentaries (as they called them) and would alſo ſet forth ſuch Articles, confirming the ancient and Catholick Faith, as whereby he might recover again his Credence with Chriſtian Princes, and whereby all the World beſides might ſee and judge him to be a right and perfect Catholick. By theſe and ſuch like crafty Suggeſtions the King being too much deduced and abuſed, began to withdraw his defence from the Reformation of true Religion, ſuppoſing thereby to procure to himſelf more ſafety both in his own Realm, and alſo to avoid ſuch dangers which otherwiſe might happen by other Princes, eſpecially ſeeing of late he had refuſed to come to the general Council at Vincence, being thereto invited both by the Emperor, and other foreign Potentates, as ye have heard before. And therefore, although he had rejected the Pope out of this Realm, yet becauſe he would declare himſelf nevertheleſs to be a good Catholick Son of the Mother-Church, and a Withſtander of new Innovations and Hereſies (as the blind opinion of the World then did eſteem them) firſt he ſtretched out his hand to the condemning and burning of Lambert, then after he he gave out thoſe Injunctions above prefixed; and now further to increaſe this opinion with all men, in the year next following, which was of the Lord, 1540. through the device and practiſe of certain of the Popes Factors about him, he ſummoned a ſolemn Parliament to be holden at Weſtminſter the eight and twentieth day of April, of all the States and Burgeſſes of the Realm: alſo a Synod or Convocation of all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other learned of the Clergy of this Realm, to be in like manner aſſembled.

The Act of the Six Articles.

The ſix Articles.

In which Parliament, Synod, or Convocation, certain Articles, Matters, and Queſtions, touching Religion, were decreed by certain Prelates, to the number eſpecially of ſix commonly called The ſix Articles (or The Whip with ſix ſtrings) to be had and received among the Kings Subjects in pretence of Unity. But what Unity thereof followed, the groaning hearts of a great number, and alſo the cruel death of divers both in the days of King Henry, and of Queen Mary, can ſo well declare, as I pray God never the like be felt hereafter.

The Doctrine of theſe wicked Articles in the bloody Act contained, although it be worthy of no memory amongſt Chriſtian men, but rather deſerveth to be buried in perpetual oblivion, yet for that the office of Hiſtory compelleth us thereunto, for the more light of Poſterity to come, faithfully and truly to compriſe things done in the Church, as well one as another: this ſhall be briefly to recapitulate the ſum and effect of the foreſaid ſix Articles, in order as they were given out, and hereunder do follow.

The firſt Article.

Tranſubſtantiation.

The firſt Article in this preſent Parliament accorded and agreed upon, was this, That in the moſt bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar by the ſtrength and efficacy of Chriſts mighty word (it being ſpoken by the Prieſt) is preſent really, under the form of Bread and Wine, the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and that after the Conſecration there remaineth no ſubſtance of Bread or Wine, or any other ſubſtance, but the ſubſtance of Chriſt, God and Man.

The ſecond Article.

The Sacrament in both kinds excluded.

Secondly, That the Communion in both kinds is not neceſſary ad ſalutem, by the Law of God, to all perſons: and that it is to be believed, and not doubted of, but that in the Fleſh, under form of Bread, is the very Blood, and with the Blood, under form of Wine, is the very Fleſh as well apart, as they were both together.

The third Article.

Thirdly, That Prieſts, after the Order of Prieſthood received as afore, may not marry by the Law of God.

The fourth Article.

Adviſedly, that is, made above the age of one and twenty years, Prieſts only excepted.

Fourthly, That the Vows of Chaſtity or Widowhood, by man or woman made to God adviſedly, ought to be obſerved by the Law of God; and that it exempteth them from other liberties of Chriſtian people, which without they might enjoy.

The fifth Article.

By theſe benefits of private Maſſes, is meant, the helping of Souls in Purgatory.

Fifthly, That it is meet and neceſſary, that private Maſſes be continued and admitted in this Engliſh-Church and Congregation; as whereby good Chriſtian people, ordering themſelves accordingly, do receive both godly and goodly Conſolations and Benefits; And it is agreeable alſo to Gods Law.

The ſixth Article.

The ſixth Article.

Sixthly, That Auricular Confeſſion is expedient and neceſſary to be retained and continued, uſed and frequented in the Church of God.

After theſe Articles were thus concluded and conſented upon, the Prelates of the Realm craftily perceiving that ſuch a foul and violent Act could not take place or prevail, unleſs ſtrait and bloody Penalties were ſet upon them, they cauſed through their accuſtomed practiſe to be ordained and enacted by the King and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in the ſaid Parliament, as followeth.

The Penalties upon the ſix Articles.

The penalties upon the ſix Articles.

That if any perſon or perſons within this Realm of England, or any other the Kings Dominions, after the twelfth day of July next coming, by word, writing, imprinting, cyphring, or any otherwiſe, ſhould publiſh, preach, teach, ſay, affirm, declare, diſpute, argue or hold any Opinion, that in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, under form of Bread and Wine (after the Conſecration thereof) there is not preſent really the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, conceived of the Virgin Mary, or that after the ſaid Conſecration there remaineth any ſubſtance of the Bread or Wine, or any other ſubſtance but the ſubſtance of Chriſt, God and man, or after the time above-ſaid, publiſh, preach, teach, ſay, affirm, declare, diſpute, argue or hold Opinion, That in the Fleſh, under the form of Bread is not the very Blood of Chriſt, or that with the Blood of Chriſt, under the form of Wine, is not the very Fleſh of Chriſt, as well apart, as though they were both together: or by any of the means above-ſaid, or otherwiſe, preach, teach, declare, or affirm the ſaid Sacrament to be other ſubſtance than is above-ſaid, or by any mean contemn, deprave, or deſpiſe the ſaid bleſſed Sacrament: that then every ſuch perſon ſo offending, their Aiders, Comforters, Counſellors, Conſenters and Abettors therein (being thereof convicted in form under written, by the Authority above ſaid) ſhould be deemed and adjudged Hereticks, and every ſuch offence ſhould be adjudged manifeſt Hereſie; and that every ſuch Offender and Offenders ſhould therefore have and ſuffer judgment, execution, pain and pains of death by way of burning, without any Abjuration, benefit of the Clergy, or Sanctuary, to be therefore permitted, had, allowed, or ſuffered; and alſo ſhould therefore forfeit and loſe to the Kings Highneſs, his Heirs and Succeſſors, all his or their Honors, Manors, Caſtles, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reverſions, Services, Poſſeſſions, and all other his or their Hereditaments, Goods and Chattels, Farms and Freeholds, whatſoever they were, through any ſuch offence or offences committed or done, or at any time after, as in any caſes of High Treaſon.

The Penalty of the laſt five Articles.

The penalties of the laſt five Articles.

And as touching the other five Articles following, the Penalty deviſed for them was this, That every ſuch perſon or perſons that do preach, teach, obſtinately affirm, uphold, maintain, or defend, after the twelfth of July the ſaid year, any thing contrary to the ſame: or if any being in Orders, or after a Vow adviſedly made, did marry, or make Marriage, or contract Matrimony, in ſo doing ſhould be adjudged as Felons, and loſe both life, and forfeit goods, as in caſe of Felony, without any benefit of the Clergy, or Priviledge of the Church or of the Sanctuary, &c.

Item, That every ſuch perſon or perſons, which after the day aforeſaid, by word, writing, printing, cyphring, or otherwiſe did publiſh, declare, or hold opinion contrary to the five Articles above expreſſed, being for any ſuch offence duly convicted or attainted, for the firſt time, beſides the forfeit of all his Goods and Chattels, and Poſſeſſions whatſoever, ſhould ſuffer impriſonment of his body at the Kings pleaſure: and for the ſecond time, being accuſed, preſented, and thereof convict ſhould ſuffer as in caſe aforeſaid of Felony.

Item, If any within Order of Prieſthood, before the time of the ſaid Parliament, had married or contracted Matrimony, or vowed Widowhood, the ſaid Matrimony ſhould ſtand utterly void and be diſſolved.

Item,

Item, That the ſame danger that belonged to Prieſts marrying their Wives, ſhould alſo redound to the Women married unto the Prieſts.

nquiſition pon the ix Articles.

Furthermore, for the more effectual execution of the premiſes, it was enacted by the ſaid Parliament, That full authority of Inquiſition of all ſuch Hereſies, Felonies, and Contempts, ſhould be committed and directed down into every Shire, to certain perſons ſpecially thereunto appointed; of which perſons three at the leaſt (provided always the Archbiſhop, or Biſhop, or his Chancellor, or his Commiſſary to be one) ſhould ſit four times at leaſt in the year, having full Power to take Information and Accuſation, by the depoſitions of any two lawful perſons at the leaſt, as well as by the Oaths of twelve men, to examine and enquire of all and ſingular the Hereſies, Felonies, and Contempts above remembred, having alſo as ample Power to make Proceſs againſt every perſon or perſons indicted, preſented, or accuſed before them; alſo to hear and determine the foreſaid Hereſies, Felonies, Contempts, and other Offences, as well as if the matter had been preſented before the Juſtices of Peace in their Seſſions. And alſo that the ſaid Juſtices in their Seſſions, and every Steward or Under-Stewatd, or his Deputy, in their Law-days, ſhould have power by the Oaths of twelve lawful men to enquire likewiſe of all and ſingular the Hereſies, Felonies, Contempts, and other Offences, and to hear and determine the ſame, to all effects of this preſent Act, &c. bloody Inquiſition.

Provided withall that no perſon nor perſons thereupon accuſed, indited or preſented, ſhould be admitted to challenge any that ſhould be empanelled for the trial of any matter of cauſe, other than for malice or envy; which challenge ſhould forthwith be tried in like manner, as in caſes of Felony, &c.

Provided moreover that every perſon that ſhould be named Commiſſioner in this Inquiſition, ſhould firſt take a corporal Oath, the tenor of which Oath here enſueth.

The Oath of the Commiſſioners.

he Oath iven to the ommiſſi- ners to in- uire upon me Chriſti- ns. ſtat. An. 31 Reg. Hen. 8.

YE ſhall ſwear, that ye to your cunning, wit and power, ſhall truly and indifferently execute the Authority to you given by the Kings Commiſſion, made for Correction of Hereticks and other Offenders mentioned in the ſame Commiſſion, without any favour, affection, corruption, dread or malice, to be born to any perſon or perſons, as God you help and all Saints.

And thus much briefly collected out of the Act and Originals, which more largely are to be ſeen in the Stat. Anno 31. Reg. Hen. 8. concerning the ſix Articles, which otherwiſe for the bloody cruelty thereof, are called The Whip with ſix ſtrings, ſet forth after the death of Queen Anne, and of good John Lambert, deviſed by the cruelty of the Biſhops, but ſpecially of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and at length alſo ſubſcribed by King Henry. But herein as in many other parts more, the crafty policy of the Biſhop appeared, who like a lurking Serpent, moſt ſlily watching his time, if he had not taken the King coming out upon a ſudden, there where it was (I ſpare here to report as I heard it) it was thought and affirmed by certain, which then were pertaining to the King, that Wincheſter had not obtained the matter eaſily to be ſubſcribed as he did.

Theſe ſix Articles above ſpecified, although they contained manifeſt Errors, Hereſies, and Abſurdities againſt all Scripture and Learning, (as all men having any judgment in Gods Word may plainly underſtand) yet ſuch was the miſerable adverſity of that time, and the power of darkneſs, that the ſimple cauſe of Truth and of Religion was utterly left deſolate, and forſaken of all Friends. For every man ſeeing the Kings mind ſo fully addict upon politick Reſpects, to have theſe Articles paſs forward, few or none in all that Parliament would appear, which either could perceive what was to be defended, or durſt defend what they underſtood to be true, ſave only Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who then being married (as is ſuppoſed) like a conſtant Patron of Gods cauſe, took upon him the earneſt defence of the Truth, oppreſſed in the Parliament, three days together diſputing againſt thoſe ſix wicked Articles, bringing forth ſuch Allegations and Authorities, as might eaſily have helped the cauſe, Niſi pars major viciſſet, ut ſæpe ſolet, meliorem. Who in the ſaid Diſputation, behaved himſelf with ſuch humble modeſty, and with ſuch obedience in words towards his Prince, proteſting the cauſe not to be his, but the Cauſe of Almighty God, that neither his Enterpriſe was miſliked of the King; and again, his Reaſons and Allegations were ſo ſtrong, that well they could not be refuted. Wherefore the King (who ever bare ſpecial favour unto him) well liking his zealous defence, only willed him to depart out of the Parliament-houſe into the Council-Chamber, for a time (for ſafeguard of his conſcience) till the Act ſhould paſs and be granted: which he, notwithſtanding, with humble proteſtation refuſed to do.

{KING Hen. 8.}

Cranmer willed to depart out of the Parliament-houſe for his conſcience.

Cranmer refuſed to go out of the Parliament againſt his conſcience.

After the Parliament was finiſhed, and that matter concluded, the King conſidering the conſtant zeal of the Archbiſhop, in defence of his cauſe, and partly alſo weighing the many Authorities and Reaſons whereby he had ſubſtantially confirmed the ſame; ſent the Lord Cromwel (which within few days after was apprehended) the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and all the Lords of the Parliament, to dine with him at Lambeth: where they ſignified unto him, that it was the Kings pleaſure, that they all ſhould, in his Highneſs behalf, cheriſh, comfort, and animate him, as one that for his travel in that Parliament, had declared himſelf, both greatly learned, and alſo a man diſcreet and wiſe; and therefore they willed him not to be diſcouraged in any thing that was paſſed in that Parliament contrary to his Allegations.

Cranmer comforted again by the King.

He moſt humbly thanked firſt the Kings Highneſs, for his ſingular good affection towards him, and them for all their pains; adding moreover, that he ſo hoped in God, that hereafter his Allegations and Authorities ſhould take place to the Glory of God, and Commodity of the Realm. Which Allegations and Authorities of his, I wiſh were among us extant to be ſeen and read. No doubt but they would ſtand, in time to come, in great good ſtead for the overthrow of the wicked and pernicious Articles aforeſaid.

Allegations againſt the ſix Articles.

IN the mean while, forſomuch as the ſaid heretical Articles are not ſo lightly to be paſſed over, whereby the rude and ignorant multitude hereafter may be deceived in the falſe and erroneous Doctrine of them any more, as they have been in times paſt, for lack of right inſtruction, and experience of the ancient ſtate and courſe of times in our fore-Elders days; I thought therefore (the Lord thereunto aſſiſting) ſo much as antiquity of ſtories may help to the reſtoring again of Truth and Doctrine decayed, to annex hereunto ſome Allegations out of ancient Records, which may give ſome light to the convincing of theſe new-fangled Articles and Hereſies above touched.

Allegations againſt the ſix Articles.

And firſt, as touching the Article of Tranſubſtantion, wherein this Parliament doth enact that the Sacrament of the Altar is the very natural Body of Chriſt, the ſelf ſame which was born of the Virgin Mary; and that in ſuch ſort as there remaineth no ſubſtance of Bread and Wine, after the Prieſts Conſecration, but only the Body and Blood of Chriſt, under the outward forms of Bread and Wine: Firſt here is to be noted, that this monſtrous Article of theirs, in that form of words as it ſtandeth, was never obtruded, received, or holden either in the Greek Church, or in the Latin-Church, univerſally for a Catholick, that is, for a general Opinion or Article of Doctrine, before the time of the Lateran-Council at Rome, under Pope Innocent the Third, Anno 1216.

The Article of Tranſubſtantiation.

And forſomuch as it hath been a common perſwaſion amongſt the moſt ſort of people, that this Article, in the form of words as here it ſtandeth, is and hath been ever ſince Chriſt his time a true Catholick and general Doctrine, commonly received and taught in the Church, being approved by the Scriptures and Doctors, and conſent of all Ages unto this preſent time; To the intent therefore that the contrary may appear, and the people may ſee how far they have herein been beguiled, we will here (Chriſt willing) make a little ſtay in our ſtory, and examine this foreſaid Article by true Antiquity and courſe of Hiſtories, to try whether it be a Doctrine Old or New.

Now

Anno 1219.

Now therefore for the better diſcuſſing of the matter, let us firſt orderly and diſtinctly adviſe the words of the Article. The contents of which Article conſiſts in two parts or members. In the firſt whereof is noted to us a preſence of a thing which there was not before. In the ſecond is noted a privation or abſence of a thing which there before was preſent.

The Article of the Sacrament conſiſteth in two parts.

The Preſence is noted by theſe words of the Articles, where it is ſaid, that in the bleſſed Sacrament, by the words pronounced, is preſent the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour under the forms of Bread and Wine: ſo that in theſe words, both the Sacrament and the natural Body is imported neceſſarily to be preſent. For elſe, how can the natural Body of Chriſt be preſent in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine, if the Sacrament there were not preſent it ſelf? or how can a thing be ſaid to be in that which is not there? wherefore by theſe words both the Sacrament, and alſo the Body muſt neceſſarily have their being and preſence, the one being in the other. And this preſence both of the Sacrament and of the Body may right well ſtand together; the Sacrament to the outward eyes and mouth of man, the Body of Chriſt to the inward eyes of faith and mouth of the Soul.

Two things preſent in the Sacrament: the thing that repreſenteth, and the thing repreſented.

And therefore touching theſe propoſitions in this Article (In) and (Under) if queſtion be asked in what is the Body of Chriſt, it may be well anſwered, in the Sacrament to the eyes of our Faith, like as the outward Sacrament is alſo preſent to the outward eyes of the Body. Again, if the queſtion be asked under what is the Body of Chriſt? It may be well anſwered, under the forms of Bread and Wine, ſo as the Doctors did take the forms to mean the outward Elements and Natures of the Sacrament, and not the Accidents.

(In) (Under) The pretence of the natural Body of Chriſt well expounded may be granted in the Sacrament.

Abſence of Bread in the Sacrament.

And thus, to the firſt part of the Article, being well expounded, we do aſſent and confeſs the ſame to have been the true Catholick Opinion approved by the ancient Doctors and conſent of all times, even from the firſt Inſtitution of this Sacrament.

The Article of the Sacrament agreeth not with it ſelf.

But as concerning the ſecond member or part of the Article, which taketh away all preſence and ſubſtance of Bread from the Sacrament; to that we ſay, that firſt it ſtandeth not with their own Article. Secondly, that it ſtandeth not with the Doctrine of Scripture. Thirdly, that it ſtandeth not with Antiquity, but is meerly a late invention.

And firſt, that it agreeth not with their own Article, it is manifeſt. For whereas in the former part of their Article they ſay, that the natural Body of Chriſt is preſent in the bleſſed Sacrament, under the forms of Bread and Wine, how can the natural Body of Chriſt be preſent in the Sacrament, if there remain no Sacrament? Or how can any of the Body remain, if there remain no ſubſtance of Bread which ſhould make the Sacrament? For how can the Body of Chriſt be in that thing, which is not? or how can the Sacrament of the Body have any being, where the ſubſtance of Bread hath no being? For firſt, that the Body it ſelf cannot be the Sacrament of the Body, evident of it ſelf.

The Body of Chriſt cannot be in the Sacrament of his Body.

The accidents of the Body cannot be in the Sacrament of Chriſts natural Body.

Secondly, that the accidents of Bread without the ſubſtance of Bread cannot be any Sacrament of Chriſts Body, certain it is, and demonſtrable by this Argument.

Argumentum à definitione.

Ca- A Sacrament is, that beareth a ſimilitude of that thing whereof it is a Sacrament.

meſt- Accidents bear no ſimilitude of that thing which is there ſignified.

res. Ergo, Accidents can in no wiſe be a Sacrament.

Sacraments, if they had no ſimilitude with the things which they repreſent, they were no Sacraments. Aug. ad Boif. Epiſt. 23.

Wherefore upon this Argument being thus concluded, upon the ſame this alſo muſt needs follow.

Argument.

Da- In the Sacrament of the Lords Body, the thing that repreſenteth muſt needs bear a ſimilitude of the thing repreſented.

ri- The ſubſtance of Bread in the Sacrament, is only that which beareth the ſimilitude of Chriſts Body.

i. Ergo, The ſubſtance of Bread muſt needs be in the Sacrament.

And therefore, by this demonſtration it is apparent, that theſe two parts in the Article aforeſaid are evil couched together, whereof the one muſt needs deſtroy the other. For if the firſt part of the Article be true, that the natural Body of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament, under the forms of Bread and Wine, and ſeeing the Sacrament wherein the Body of Chriſt is preſent, muſt needs be the ſubſtance of Bread, and not the accidents only of Bread, as is above proved, then the ſubſtance of Bread cannot be evacuated from the Sacrament, and ſo the ſecond member of the Article muſt needs be falſe.

The reſemblance between the Sacrament and the Body of Chriſt conſiſteth in this, that as the Bread and Wine give nouriſhment to our outward life, to the Body and Blood of Chriſt do nouriſh unto ſpiritual life.

Or if the ſecond part be true, that there is no ſubſtance of Bread remaining, and ſeeing there is nothing elſe to make the Sacrament of the natural Body of Chriſt, but only the ſubſtance of Bread, foraſmuch as the accidents of Bread can make no Sacrament of Chriſts Body, as is above ſhewed; then taking away the ſubſtance of Bread, the firſt part of the Article muſt needs be falſe, which ſaith, that the natural Body of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament, foraſmuch as the ſubſtance of Bread being evacuated, there remaineth no Sacrament, wherein the Body of Chriſt ſhould be preſent. Secondly, that it diſagreeth from the whole order and courſe of the Scriptures, it is ſufficiently explained before in the Treatiſe of John Lambert upon the Sacrament, as alſo in ſundry other places in this Volume beſides. Thirdly, that the ſaid Article of Tranſubſtantiation is no ancient or authentick Doctrine in the Church publickly received; but rather is a novelty lately invented, reaching not much above the age of three or four hundred years, or at moſt about the time of Lanfrancus, Anno 1070. it remains now to be proved.

The Popiſh preſence in the Sacrament and Tranſubſtantiation cannot ſtand together.

The Article of Tranſubſtantiation diſagreeth from the Scripture.

The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is but a late Opinion, and ſtandeth with no Antiquity.

Wherein firſt may be joyned this iſſue, that this monſtrous Paradox of Tranſubſtantiation was never induced or received publickly in the Church, before the time of the Lateran Council, under Pope Innocentius the third, An. 1216. or at moſt before the time of Lanfrancus, the Italian, Archbiſhop of Canterbury 1070.

Lanfrancus was an Italian and Biſhop of Canterbury about the year of our Lord 1070.

In which time of Lanfrancus, I deny not but that this queſtion of Tranſubſtantiation began to come in controverſie, and was reaſoned upon, amongſt certain Learned of the Clergy. But that this Article of Tranſubſtantiation was publickly determined or preſcribed in the Church for a general Law or Catholick Doctrine of all men, neceſſarily to be believed, before the time of the foreſaid Innocentius the third, it may be doubted, and alſo by Hiſtories of time proved to be falſe.

Innocentius the 3. was B. of Rome, An. 1215.

And though our Adverſaries ſeem to alledge out of the old Doctors certain ſpeeches and phraſes, which they wreſt and wring to their purpoſes; wherein they ſay, That the Bread is called, is believed, and is the Body of Chriſt, that of Bread is made the Body of Chriſt, and that the Bread is changed, altered or converted to the Body of Chriſt, or is made to be his Body, that the Creatures be converted into the ſubſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, that the Bread and Wine do paſs into the divine ſubſtance, with ſuch other like Sentences; and bear themſelves brag upon the ſame, as though this Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation ſtood upon the conſent of the whole Univerſal Church, of all Ages and Times, of Nations and People, and that the Judgment of the Church was never other than this: yet if the old Doctors Sayings be well weighed, and the diſcourſe of Times by this Hiſtory well examined, it will be found, that this prodigious Opinion of Tranſubſtantiation hath no ſuch ground of conſent and antiquity as they imagine; nor yet that any Hereſie or Treaſon was made of denying of Tranſubſtantiation before the time of Innocentius III, or at the furtheſt of Lanfrancus, as is aforeſaid, about the which time Satan the old Dragon was propheſied by the Apocalyps to be let looſe, to ſeduce the World.

Phraſes of the Doctors ſpeaking of the Sacrament.

The Papiſts falſly pretend antiquity for their Tranſubſtantiation.

For probation whereof, firſt I will begin with the time of Tertullian and of Auguſtine, which both do teach the Sacrament to be a figure, a ſign, a memorial, and repreſentation of the Lords Body, and knew no ſuch Tranſubſtantiation, and yet were no Traytors nor Hereticks.

Doctors againſt Tranſubſtantiation Tertullian, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Anno 408.

Neither was St. Ambroſe any Heretick or Traytor, where he writeth theſe words, Ut ſint quæ erant, & in aliud convertantur, &c. Which words Lanfrancus could not anſwer unto any other wiſe, but by denying them to be the words of Ambroſe. Gelaſius was Biſhop of Rome, and lived about five hundred years after Chriſt, and ſpeaketh of a tranſmutation of the Bread and Wine into Gelaſius, lib. contra Eutichen. Anno 500.

the Divine nature; but there expounding himſelf, he declareth what he meaneth by that mutation, ſo that he expreſly ſheweth the elements of Bread and Wine, notwithſtanding, to remain ſtill in their proper nature, with other words more, very plain to the ſame effect. Unto the which words Contarenus in the aſſembly of Ratisbone could not well anſwer, but ſtood aſtonied.

Theodoretus ſecund. Dial. contra Eutichen.

Theodoretus likewiſe, ſpeaking of the viſible Symbols, hath theſe words; μένει γὰρ ἐπὶ τῆς προτέρας οὐσίας, καὶ τῷ σχήματι καὶ τῷ εἴδει (i.) After the ſanctification they remain in their former Subſtance, figure, and form.

Ireneus.

Ireneus where he ſaith, That the Bread broken, and the Cup mixt, after the vocation of God, ceaſe to be common Bread any more, but are the Euchariſt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, : And Explicating his words more plainly, addeth moreover, That the Euchariſt conſiſteth in two things, one being earthly which is Bread and Wine; the other heavenly, which is the Body and Blood of Chriſt, &c. declareth in theſe words both his own Opinion plainly, and alſo teacheth us what was then the Doctrin of his time.

Heſichius lib. 20. in Levit. c. 8.

Heſichius alſo, who was five hundred years after Chriſt, where he ſpeakth of the ſaid myſtery, Quod ſimul panis, & caro eſt (i.) Which he ſaith to be both Fleſh and Bread; declareth thereby two Subſtances to be in the Sacrament. By the which we have to underſtand, that Tranſubſtantiation in his age was not crept into the Church; and yet neither Hereſie nor Treaſon therefore was ever laid to his charge for ſo ſaying.

Anno 500. Emiſſenus de conſecra. diſt 2. Quia corpus.

Emiſſenus, comparing a man converted unto Chriſt by regeneration, unto the holy myſteries converted into the Body and Blood of our Lord, expreſſeth plainly, Quod in exteriori nihil additum eſt, & totum in interiori mutatum eſt: That is; That outwardly nothing is changed, and that all the change is inward, &c. Wherein (no doubt) he ſpake againſt this Article, and yet no man in all that age did accuſe him therefore to be either Heretick or Traytor.

Here might be added the words of Fulgentius, Hic calix eſt novum Teſtamentum; (id eſt) hic calix quem vobis trado, novum Teſtamentum ſignificat. (i.) This Cup is the New Teſtament; That is, this Cup which I deliver unto you ſignifieth the New Teſtament.

Bede alſo, who lived about the year, 730. writing upon the one and twentieth Pſalm, hath theſe words; Edent pauperes, &c. pauperes, id eſt, mundi contemptores edent quidem realiter, ſi ad Sacramenta referantur, & ſaturabuntur æternalite, qui intelligent in pane & vino viſibiliter ſibi propoſito, inviſibile ſcilicet corpus verum, & ſanguinem verum Domini, quæ verus cibus & verus potus ſunt, quo non venter diſtenditur, ſed mens ſaginatur, &c. That is, Poor men, to wit, deſpiſers of the world, ſhall eat indeed really, if it be referred unto the Sacraments, and ſhall be filled eternally, becauſe they ſhall underſtand in Bread and in Wine, being viſibly ſet before them, a thing inviſible, to wit, the true Body and true Blood of the Lord, which are true meat and true drink, wherewith not the belly is filled, but the mind is nouriſhed.

And thus in theſe words of Bede likewiſe is to be underſtood, That no Tranſubſtantiation as yet in his time was received in the Church of England.

Long it were to ſtand upon all particulars; Briefly, to conclude; the farther the Church hath been from theſe our later days, the purer it was in all reſpects, and eſpecially touching this barbarous Article of Tranſubſtantiation. We will now draw more near our own time, coming to the age of Bertrame and of Haimo, who were about the year of our Lord, 810. under Carolus Magnus.

Haymo. Anno 810.

By whoſe writing it is evident, that the Church was infected as yet no ſuch fantaſie of Tranſubſtantiation, neither did any almoſt dream of taking away the Subſtance of Bread from the Sacrament. For although Haymo, Remigius, Rabanus, and other which lived in that age, do attribute to the Sacrament, that honourable name, and reverence (as we alſo do) of the Lords Body and Blood; they exclude not form thence all Subſtance of Meal and Bread, and leave the bare accidents, as our new-come Catholicks do, as by the words of Haymo do appear. Where he, following the words of Bede, ſheweth alſo the cauſe, why it is ſo called by the name of the Lords Body; Quia (ſaith he) panis corpus confirmat, ideo ille corpus Chriſti congruenter nuncupatur: Vinum autem quia ſanguinem operatur in carne, ideo ad ſanguinem Chriſti refertur. That is, becauſe Bread confirmeth the heart of man, therefore it is called conveniently the Body of Chriſt, and becauſe Wine worketh Blood in the fleſh of man, therefore it is referred to the Blood of Chriſt. What can be more effectually ſpoken to prove the Subſtance of Bread there to remain? For take away the Subſtance of Bread and Wine, what is in the accidents left, that can confirm mans heart, or ingender Blood in the fleſh? And therefore ſeeing there muſt needs ſomething remain, that muſt be referred to Chriſts Body and Blood in that Sacrament, it either muſt be the Subſtance of Bread and Wine, or elſe it can be no Sacrament. And furthermore, ſpeaking of the viſible things which are ſanctified, how and whereunto they be converted, he ſaith; that by the Holy Ghoſt they paſſed to a Sacrament of the Lords Body.

Anno 1129. Haymo de Sermonum proprietate lib. 5. c. 11.

And likewiſe the ſame Haymo in another place, ſpeaking of the fruits of the earth, that is, of Corn and Wine, declareth, how our Saviour maketh of them an apt myſtery, converteth them to a Sacrament of his Body and Blood, &c. Lib. 7. in Eccleſiaſt. Chap. 8. Haymo lib. 7. in eccle. cap. 8.

Bertramus likewiſe, as he lived in the ſame age, ſo in like ſort he ſhewed his opinion therein, to the like effect as Haymo did. For as Haymo writing in theſe words declareth, quia aliud eſt Sacramentum, aliud virtus ſacramenti: Sacramentum enim vero percipitur, virtute ſacramenti interior homo ſatiatur, That is, the Sacrament is one thing, and the vertue of the Sacrament is another thing: For the Sacrament is received with the mouth, but with the vertue of the Sacrament the inward man is ſatisfied. Haym. ibid.

Anno 810. Bertram. lib. de corpore & ſang. Domini.

So after like manner, Bertramus, according to the ſame, thus writeth, Ille panis, qui per Sacerdotis miniſterium Chriſti corpus efficitur, aliud exterius humanis ſenſibus oſtendit, & aliud interius fidelium mentibus clamat, &c. That is, the Bread, which by the miniſtry of the Prieſt is made the Body of Chriſt, doth import one thing outwardly to the ſenſes of man, and another thing it ſpeaketh to the minds of the faithful. Outwardly it is Bread, the ſame it was before, the ſame form is pretended, the colour appeareth, the ſame taſte remaineth. But inwardly there is another matter far more pretious, and more excellent, becauſe it is heavenly, which is the Body of Chriſt, that is ſeen, not with the outward eyes of the fleſh, but with the ſight of a faithful mind, &c.

Rabanus Maurus B. of Mentz. Anno 800. Rabanus de inſtitut. clericorum l. chap. 31.

We will not now proceed to the Teſtimony of Rabanus Maurus, Biſhop of Mentz, and Scholar ſometime to Alcuinus in Paris, an Engliſh man: who living alſo in the ſame age with Haymo and Bertram (which was eight hundred years after Chriſt) giveth the like Teſtimony of this Doctrine in his Book of Inſtitutions: where he asking why the Lord would give the myſteries of his Body and Blood then under ſuch things as might be kept and reſerved whole with great honour? thus he anſwereth again; The Lord (ſaith he) would rather that the Sacraments of his Body and Blood ſhould be received with the mouth of the faithful, and made to be their food, that by the viſible action the inviſible effect might be ſhewed: For like as material meat outwardly nouriſheth and quickneth the Body, ſo alſo the Word of God inwardly nouriſheth and ſtrengtheneth the Soul. For man liveth not only by Bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

And after followeth; For this Bread and drink ſignifieth the eternal Society of the Head and of the Members together.

And again; For the Sacraments is one thing, and the vertue of the Sacrament is another thing. The Sacrament is received with the mouth, with the vertue of the Sacrament the inward man is nouriſhed. For the Sacrament is turned to the nouriſhment of the Body, but by the vertue of the Sacrament, the dignity of eternal life is gotten.

Wherefore

Anno 1219.

Wherefore like as the ſame is tnrned into us when we eat of it; ſo alſo are we turned into the Body of Chriſt when we live obediently and godly, &c.

Who ſeeth not by theſe words of this Biſhop, what form of Doctrine was then in the Church received concerning this Article of the Sacrament, much diverſe from this our groſs opinion of Tranſubſtantiation?

Chriſtian. Druthmarus monachus ordin. Benev. in Mat.

With the ſame Rabanus alſo accordeth another of the like ſtanding and Doctrine alſo called Chriſtianus Druthmarus; who writing upon Matthew; The Wine (ſaith he) doth cheer and cheriſh the Blood, and therefore not inconveniently the Blood of Chriſt is figured thereby; for whatſoever proceedeth from him to us, it cheereth us with true gladneſs, and increaſeth all goodneſs unto us.

And a little before the ſaid Druthmarus ſaith, The Lord gave to his Diſciples the Sacrament of his Body to the remiſſion of ſins, and keeping of charity, that they always remembring his doing, might do that in figure which he ſhould do for them. This is my Body (ſaith he) that is, in Sacrament, This Druthmarus lived alſo in the time of Carolus Magnus, as witneſſeth Abbas Spanehemenſis.

Joan. Scotus.

Anno 880.

Joan. Scot. lib. de corpore & ſanguine Domini.

After Bertramus was Joannes Scotus, or elſe, as ſome call him Joannes Frigena, a man well accepted with Carolus Calvus, and afterward with Lodovicus Baldus, about the year of our Lord, 880. He wrote a Book, De corpore & ſanguine Domini, ſo affirming therein, and teaching as he knew that Bertramus had taught a little before in France. This Book the Pope cauſed to be condemned in Vercellenſi Sydono, Of the life and converſation of this J. Scotus, and alſo of his death, read before.

Anno 950.

In the year of our Lord, 950. lived Odo, Archbiſhop of Canterbury in whoſe time it appeareth, in the Catholicks own confeſſion, that many Prieſts then affirmed, that the Bread and Wine, after conſecration, did remain in their former Subſtance, and that the ſaid myſteries were only a figure of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as we find it witneſſed by Osberne himſelf, who did write the lives of Odo, Dunſtan and Elphege, at the bidding of Lanfrank Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as reporteth Edmerus, Anſelmus Chaplain. The words of Osberne be theſe: Hoc fere tempore, quidam Clerici, maligno errore ſeducti, aſſeverare conabantur, panem & vinum quæ in Altari ponuntur, poſt conſecrationem, in priori ſubſtantia manere & figuram tantummodo eſſe corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti, &c. That is, About this time (ſaith Oſberne, writing in the days of Lanfranke) certain of the Clergy, being ſeduced by wicked error, did hold and maintain that Bread and Wine, which are ſet upon the Altar, after the Conſecration do remain in their former Subſtance, and are but only a figure of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, &c. And no doubt but at that time the common opinion of moſt of the Clergy was ſo, that the Sacrament was the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and that the Subſtance of Bread and Wine, notwithſtanding, were not Tranſubſtantiate, as the Romiſh Catholicks do now teach. But this is the guiſe of theſe men, that in their Writings and Stories, ſtill they diminiſh the better number, whereby their Faction may ſeem ever to be the bigger, and therefore to extenuate the common Opinion then received in the Church, he inferreth mention of certain of the Clergy, &c.

The witneſs of Osberne.

Osbernus in vita Odonis.

A lying miracle to prove Tranſubſtantiation.

And as he faileth in the number of theſe Clergy men, which then held againſt Tranſubſtantiation, ſo he upholdeth the ſame with as lying a miracle. Which miracle he feigned to be wrought the ſame time, for the converſion of the ſaid Clergy men by the Blood dropping out of the Hoſt at Maſs, as Odo was breaking the Hoſt over the Chalice. At the ſight whereof, firſt Odo himſelf (ſaith he) wept for joy, ſeeing his petition accompliſhed which he ſo earneſtly prayed for.

Secondarily, all thoſe Clergy men (ſaith he) which before believed not this Tranſubſtantiation, by and by were converted, and bleſſed the Archbiſhop that ever he was born, deſiring him to pray again, that the Blood might return to his former ſhape, and ſtraight it was done. And this was the miracle; which ſeemeth as true as that which William Malmesbury writeth of the ſaid Odo, how by his prayers he cauſed a Sword to come flying from Heaven into Ethelſtanes Scabberd, when he had loſt his own, as he would fight againſt Analanus;

Ex Malmsb.

or elſe, as that miracle where the ſaid Odo is ſaid to cover and defend the Church of Canterbury, that no drop of rain could touch it ſo long as the roof thereof was in making. Ex Wil. Malm. vide ſupra.

Read afore.

In the which ſo miraculous a miracle many things are to be marvelled. Firſt, I marvel, that at this great miracle of the Archbiſhop in the Cathedral Church, amongſt ſo many ſinging men, we read of no Te Deum there to be ſung after the doing thereof.

Reaſons and proofs alledged againſt this miracle

Secondly, I marvel that thoſe Prieſts and Clerks which then denied Tranſubſtantiation, were ſuffered to be ſo near the Archbiſhop at his Maſs, and that they were not committed rather to ward like Hereticks and Traitors, if this Article of Tranſubſtantiation had been then ſuch a Catholick Doctrine, and ſo publickly received in the Church, as they ſay it was.

Thirdly, I marvel, ſeeing the time of miracles is expired, we having the Scriptures to guide us, why the Archbiſhop would ſeek to Miracles and Apparitions to convert men, rather than to the Law and Prophets, according as we are commanded, eſpecially having no ſuch examples of all the old Doctors, which in confutation of ſo many erroneous Opinions, yet never ſought to ſuch miracles or blind means.

The Authors of this fabulous miracle do not agree with themſelves.

Fourthly, I marvel much at the diſcrepance in telling this Tale, between Osberne and the other, which ſince have written Legends of Odo. For whereas Osberne, ſpeaking of certain Prieſts, nameth no place, but leaveth the matter at large; and ſpeaking abſolutely, quidam Clerici; all other which have ſince written the Legends of Odo, do tell this Tale againſt certain Prieſts of Canterbury; adding to the words of Osberne, quidam Clerici Cantuarienſes. But to convict the falſehood of them all, as well of Osberne as of the reſt, there is a Legend of the life of Odo, and of Oſwald together, more ancient than this of Osberne, written (as it may ſeem) in the time of Elfricus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Elphege then Biſhop of Wincheſter, wherein mention is made indeed of this miracle, but after another ſort than this of Osberne, and to another purpoſe than to diſſwade certain Prieſts, infected with that error, from the opinion before declared: Which is only brought to ſhew the holineſs of Odo, as commonly the manner of Legends is to do. So that in this old Legend it is thus reported, that when this Miracle was done, Odo diſcloſed the matter not to many Prieſts of England that were in that errour, as Osberne would, ſed vocat protinus fidelem Servum, qui cominus erat, & miraculum ſecretum demonſtrat, &c. That is, but called unto him a certain faithful Servant which was near about him, and ſhewed unto him the miracle ſecretly; whereupon the Prieſt (ſaith the Legend) much rejoyced at the holineſs of Odo, and deſired him to make his prayer to Almighty God, that the Body might return again to the former ſhape; &c. Out of this old lying Legend Oſberne, and other likewiſe that followed him, ſeemeth to have taken this Tale, ſo that out of the error of one (as the manner is) ſpringeth the errour of a number more.

Lying Legends.

But this much more I marvel, why this miracle is not ſtoried in Henry Huntington, which profeſſedly writeth of ſuch miracles, nor in Roger Hoveden, and ſuch other; but only in ſuch blind Legends, which commonly have no Subſtance of Verity, nor certainty of time, or writer, to know when and by whom they were written, and for the moſt part are ſtuffed with lying viſions, and prodigious fables.

Finally, if this miraculous fiction of Osberne were true, that for the converting of Prieſts of England, which would not believe Tranſubſtantiation, this Blood did drop out of the Hoſt (of which Blood peradventure came the Blood of Hales) and by the ſight thereof the Prieſts eſtſoon were all converted (as Osberne pretendeth) how then came it to paſs, that after the time of Odo, in the days of Elfricus, which was after him Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the third from Dunſtane, and fourth from Odo, not only the Prieſts of England, but alſo the Archbiſhop himſelf, were not yet brought to the belief of this Tranſubſtantiation, but taught the very ſame Doctrine of the Sacrament then, which we do now: as moſt clearly appeareth both by the Epiſtles and Homilies of the foreſaid Archbiſhop Elfricus, which hereunder, for the more evidence (Chriſt willing) we will annex.

Elfr. Arch. of Cant. Anno 996. Capgrave in vita Oswaldi, Ep. Wigorn.

This Elfricus, as saith Capgrave, in the life of Oswald Bishop of Worcester, was first Abbot of St. Albons, and after made Archbishop of Canterbury, about the year of our Lord 996. in the time of King Etheldred, and of Wulfsinus Bishop of Scyrburne. Elfricus also (as witnesseth William of Malmsbury, in vita Adelmi) was Abbot of Malmsbury. Furthermore the said William of Malmsbury, writing of Elfricus Archbishop of Canterbury, saith, that he was before Bishop of Wells, and after Bishop of Canterbury. So that Elfricus was Archbishop of Canterbury, it is out of all ambiguity. But now whether Elfricus which was Abbot (of whom we do here entreat) were the same Archbishop or not, by this diversity of Capgrave and Malmsbury, it may be doubtful. But whether he were or no, to this our present purpose is not greatly material, forsomuch as the said Elfricus and Elfricus, although they were divers persons, yet were they both in one Age, and lived in one time together.

The Writings of Elfricus authentick.

Furthermore, the same Elfricus of whom now we speak, of what Calling soever he was, yet notwithstanding he was of such estimation and good liking in those days amongst the most learned, that for his learning, authority and eloquence, his Writings were accepted and authorized among the Canons and Constitutions of the Church in that time, as hereby may appear. For whereas the Bishops and Priests before the coming of William the Conqueror had collected a certain Book of Canons and Ordinances to govern the Clergy, gathered out of general and particular Councils, out of the Book of Gildas, out of the penitential Books of Theodorus Archbishop of Canterbury, out of the Writings of Egbertus Archbishop of York, out of the Epistles of Alcuinus, as also out of the Writings of the old Fathers of the Primitive Church, &c. among the same Canons and Constitutions be placed these two Epistles of the said Elfricus hereunder following, whereof the one was sent to Wulfsinus Bishop of Scyrburne, the other to Wulfstane Archbishop of York, as yet are to be seen in two Books belonging to the Library of the Church of Worcester, the one written in the old Saxons Tongue, entituled Bewreost Cinothe, the other for the most part in Latin, with this Title, Admonitio spiritualis Doctrinæ. Which Book of Saxon Canons and Constitutions sometime belonging to Wulfstane Bishop of Worcester, was given by him, as for a great Jewel to the Church of Worcester, as by the same Book appeareth.

A Book of Canons in the Saxons Tongue. Ex Archivis Eccles. Wigorn.

Ex Archivis Eccles. Exon.

Moreover, besides this Book of Worcester above-touched, there is yet extant also another like Book of Canons belonging to the Church of Exeter, wherein the same two Epistles of Elfricus be contained in the old Saxon Tongue, and also in the Latin, and prescribed yearly to be read to the Clerks and Priests of the Church; which Book in like manner was given to the Church of Exeter by Leofricus the first and most famous Bishop of that See.

The Book of Sermons translated out of Latin into the Saxons Speech.

Of this Elfricus further is to be understood, that he translated two Books of fourscore Sermons out of Latin into the Saxon Speech, used then orderly to be read in Churches on Sundays and other Festival-days of the year, as by his own words may appear, in the end of one of the said Books of Sermons, whose words be these:

Fela Fægere godsell we forlætath on thisum dihte, tha mæg awendan se the wile; Ne durre we thas boc na micle swithor gelængan; thyles the heo ungemetegod sy. and mannum æthræt thurh hire micelnisse astirige;

We let pass (saith he) many good Gospels which he that list may translate. For we dare not enlarge this Book much further, lest it be over great, and so be a cause of lothsomness to men, through the bigness thereof, &c.

Also in another place he confesseth the same of himself; whose words in the Preface before his Grammar be these:

Ic Ælfric wolde thalistlan boc awendan to Engliscum gereorde of tham stæf cræfte the is gehaten Grammatica syththan ic twa bec awende on hund-cahtatigum spellum.

80 Sermons translated by Elfricus into the English or Saxon Tongue.

I Elfrick was desirous to turn into our English Tongue, from the Art of Letters called Grammar, this little Book, after that I had translated the two Books of 80 Sermons, &c.

Anno 1219.

Of his Epistles especially we read of four, which he wrote, one to the Monks of Egnesham, De consuetudine Monachorum. Another to Wulfstane Archbishop of York, wherein is touched the matter of the Sacrament. The third he wrote against Priests Marriage to one Sygebert, with whom there was a certain Anker abiding which defended the Marriage of Priests, affirming it to be lawful. The fourth he wrote to Wulffinus Bishop of Scyrburne, touching the matter of the Sacrament. In the which Epistle, he taking occasion by a certain abuse in his time, which was, that Priests on Easter-day filled their Housel-Box; and so kept it for the space of a whole year, till Easter came again, for sick persons, writeth upon that occasion in these words, as follow in their own Saxon Tongue.

4. Epistles written of Elfricus in the Saxon or English Tongue.

The Words of Ælfricus written to Wulfsine Bishop of Scyrburne, against Transubstantiation.

The same in English.

Men shall reserve more carefully that holy Housel and not reserve it too long, but hallow other of new for sick men always within a week or a fortnight, that it be not so much as hoary: for so holy is the Housel which to day is hallowed, as that which on Easter-day was hallowed. That Housel is Christs body not bodily, but ghostly. Not the Body which he suffered in, but of the Body of which he spake, when he blessed Bread and Wine to Housel the Night before his suffering, and said by the blessed Bread, This is my Body; and again by the holy Wine, This is my Blood which is shed for many in the forgiveness of sins. Understand now the Lord, who could turn that Bread before his Suffering to his Body, and that Wine to his Blood ghostly, that the self same Lord blesseth daily, thorow the Priests hands, Bread and Wine to his ghostly Body, and to his ghostly Blood.

An Epistle of Elfric to Wulfsine.

The Sacrament is the Lords Body, not bodily but ghostly.

After this Epistle above-prefixed, written to Wolffinus Bishop of Scyrburne, concerning the Sacramental Bread, how it is not Christs Body, lichamlice, that is bodily; or (as we term it now) really; and also how the same ought not to be over-long kept in the Pix: here followeth further another Epistle of the said Elfricus written to Wulfstane Archbishop of York, both reprehending the said abuse above-touched, and also containing matter more at large against the Bodily presence in the Sacramental Bread. The Copy of this Epistle, both in his own Saxon and our English, here followeth:

An Epiſtle of Elfrick to Wulfſtane, touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

SOme Prieſts fill their Box for Houſel on Eaſter-day, and ſo reſerve it a whole year for ſick men, as though that Houſel were more holy than another. But they do unadviſedly, becauſe it waxeth hoary or altogether rotten, by keeping it ſo long ſpace; and thus are they become guilty, as the Book witneſſeth to us. If any do keep the Houſel ſo long, or loſe it, or Mice or other Beaſts do eat it, ſee what the Penitential Book ſaith by this; So holy is altogether that Houſel which is hallowed to day, as that which is hallowed on Eaſter-day. Wherefore I beſeech you to keep the holy Body of Chriſt with more adviſement, for ſick men, from Sunday to Sunday, in a very clean Box, or at the moſt not to keep it above a fortnight, and then eat it, laying other in the place. We have an example hereof in Moſes Books, as God himſelf hath commanded in Moſes Law, how the Prieſts ſhould ſet every Saturday, twelve Loaves, all new baked, upon the Table, the which were called Panes propoſitionis: and thoſe ſhould ſtand there in Gods Tabernacle till the next Saturday, and then did the Prieſts themſelves eat them, and ſet other in the place. Some Prieſts will not eat the Houſel which they do hallow. But we will now declare unto you how the Book ſpeaketh by them: Preſbyter miſſam celebrans, et non audens ſumere ſacrificium, accuſante conſcientia, anathema eſt. The Prieſt that doth ſay Maſs, and dare not eat the Houſel, his Conſcience accuſing him, is accurſed. It is leſs danger to receive the Houſel, than to hallow it. He that doth twice hallow one Hoſt to Houſel, is like unto thoſe Hereticks who do Chriſten twice one Child. Chriſt himſelf bleſſed Houſel before his ſuffering; he bleſſed the Bread and brake it, thus ſpeaking to his Apoſtles, Eat this Bread, this is my Body. And again, he bleſſed one Chalice with Wine, and thus alſo ſpake unto them, Drink ye all of this, this is mine own Blood of the New Teſtament, which is ſhed for many for the forgiveneſs of ſins. The Lord which hallowed Houſel before his ſuffering, and ſaith, that the Bread was his own Body, and that the Wine was truly his Blood, halloweth daily by the hands of the Prieſt, Bread to his Body and Wine to his Blood, in ghoſtly myſtery, as we read in Books. And yet notwithſtanding that lively Bread is not * bodily ſo, not the ſelf ſame Body that Chriſt ſuffered in. nor that holy Wine is the Saviours Blood which was ſhed for us in bodily thing, but in ghoſtly underſtanding. Both be truly, that Bread is his Body, and that Wine alſo is his Blood, as was the heavenly Bread which we call Manna, that fed forty years Gods People. And the clear Water which did then run from the Stone in the Wilderneſs, was truly his Blood, as St. Paul wrote in one of his Epiſtles, Omnes patres noſtri eandem eſcam ſpiritualem manducaverunt, et omnes eundem potum ſpiritualem biberunt, &c. All our Fathers did eat in the Wilderneſs the ſame ghoſtly meat, and drink the ſame ghoſtly drink; they drank of that ghoſtly Stone, and the Stone was Chriſt. The Apoſtle hath ſaid, as you have heard, that they all did eat the ſame ghoſtly meat, and they all did drink the ſame ghoſtly drink. And he ſaith not bodily, but ghoſtly. And Chriſt was not yet born, nor his Blood ſhed when that the People of Iſrael did eat that Meat, & drank of that Stone. And the Stone was not bodily Chriſt, though he ſo ſaid. It was the ſame † myſtery in the old Law, and they did ghoſtly ſignifie that ghoſtly Houſel of our Saviours Body which we conſecrate now.

* Bodily preſence denied.

† That is, a myſtery of the ſame thing that was in the old Law.

Beſides theſe Epiſtles above prefixed of Elfricus to Wulfſinus and Wulfſtane, which fight directly againſt Tranſubſtantiation, mention was touched alſo before of certain Sermons, to the number of 80, tranſlated by the ſaid Elfricus out of Latin into the Saxon, that is, into our Engliſh Tongue, as ye partly have heard before. Of the which 80 Sermons, 24. were chiefly ſelected to be read, as inſtead of Homilies or Treatiſes unto the People: in ſuch order, as the firſt 12 Sermons or Treatiſes, intreating of general matters, (as, De initio Creaturæ, de auguriis, de die judicii, unius confeſſoris, de vaniloquio et negligentia, de avaritia, de falſis diis, &c.) were appointed to be read at pleaſure, and at the diſcretion of the Miniſter. The other 12 Sermons preſcribed of proper Feaſts, (as, De Annunc. beat. Mariæ, de Nativ. Dom. de Circumciſ. Dom. de Epiph. de Purif. S. Mariæ, Dom. 1a in Quadrageſima, Dom. Palm. die Paſchæ, &c.) Whereof this teſtimony remaineth in the ſame Book yet to be ſeen, both in the Saxon Tongue, and alſo in the Preface of the later 12 Sermons in Latin, in theſe words following, In hoc codicillo continentur ſerm. Anglicè, quos accepimus de libris quos Abbas Anglicè tranſtulit, &c.

80 Sermons tranſlated out of Latin into Saxon by Elfricus. A Book of 24 eſpecial Sermons ſelected out of the 80 Sermons tranſlated by Elfricus.

Furthermore, as touching theſe 80 Sermons aforeſaid, which Elfricus tranſlated into Engliſh, here is to be underſtood, that in the ſaid Sermons uſed then orderly to be recited to the People, there was one appointed to be read in die Sancto Paſchæ, that is, upon Eaſter-day: which Sermon being tranſlated by the ſaid Elfricus, we have here exhibited both in Saxon Speech and Engliſh, to the intent that the Chriſtian and indifferent Reader, peruſing the ſame, may judge thereby how the fantaſtical Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, in thoſe days of Elfricus, and before his time, was not yet received nor known in the Church of England; forſomuch as the ſaid Sermon, being in Latin before, doth leave unto us an evident Declaration, what was the common opinion of the Sacrament in the Church received, before that Elfricus did ever ſet hand to tranſlate the ſame out of the Latin.

The Latin Books written againſt Tranſubſtantiation, craftily by the Papiſts abolished.

And though the Latin Copies and Exemplars of theſe foreſaid Sermons are not remaining in our Libraries, let that be no marvel to thee, loving Reader, but underſtand thereby the crafty packing of the Popes Clergy, who in the time of Lanfrancus and Pope Innocent, ſtudying by all means how to prefer and further this their new-come Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, did aboliſh and raſe out of Libraries and Churches all ſuch Books which made to the contrary. And therefore becauſe Lanfrancus, and other * Italian Prieſts here in England, underſtood not the Saxon Books as they did the Latin, all that which they underſtood they made away. The Saxon Books, becauſe they knew them not, they let remain: and this is the cauſe why our Latin Copies are now to be found. Which to be true, by 3 Reaſons conjectural it may be probably ſuppoſed.

Three conjectures proving that the Papiſts have made away of purpoſe the old Latin Books againſt their Tranſubſtantiation.

Firſt, for that theſe Saxon Sermons being tranſlated out of the Latin (as ye have heard by the words of Elfricus already proved) only we ſee the Saxon Books reſerved; of the Latin none doth appear.

Secondly, there is yet remaining one certain piece or fragment of an Epiſtle of Elfricus in the Library of Worceſter. Wherein, ſo much as maketh againſt the matter of Tranſubſtantiation, we found in the middle of the ſaid Latin Epiſtle utterly raſed out, ſo that no Letter nor piece of a Letter doth there appear. The words cut out were theſe; Non eſt tamen hoc ſacrificium corpus ejus, in quo paſſus eſt pro nobis, neque ſanguis ejus quem pro nobis effudit: ſed ſpiritualiter corpus ejus efficitur & ſanguis, ſicut Manna quod de cœlo pluit, & aqua quæ de petra fluxit. Sicut Paulus, &c. i. e. Notwithſtanding this Sacrifice is not the ſame Body of his wherein he ſuffered for us, nor the ſame Blood of his which he ſhed for us; but ſpiritually it is made his Body and Blood; as that Manna which rained from Heaven, and the Water which did flow out of the Rock. As Paul, &c. Theſe words ſo raſed out are to be reſtored again by another Saxon Book found in Exceter. By the raſing of which one place it may eaſily be conjectured what theſe practiſers have likewiſe done in the reſt.

The words craftily raſed out by the Papiſts, and reſtored again by the Saxon Book of Exeter.

Thirdly, by one Italian trick of Polydore Virgil in our days, the properties and doings of all other Italian Papiſts of elder time may partly be conjectured: for ſo I am informed by ſuch as preciſely will affirm it to be true, that when Polydore, being licenſed by the King to view and ſearch all Libraries, had once accompliſhed his ſtory by the help of ſuch Books, as he had compiled out of Libraries; in the end, when he had taken out what he would, like a true Factor for the Popes own tooth, he piled his Books together and ſet them all on a light fire. For what cauſe he ſo did I cannot certainly pronounce; but whoſo conſidereth well his Religion may ſhrewdly ſuſpect him. For a probation whereof, this may ſerve for a ſufficient trial; that whereas of all other Writers of Hiſtories that have been in England, as of Fabian, Lanquet, Raſtal, More, Leland, Bale, Pall, and ſuch other, ſome of their Books which they then occupied yet remain in hands to be ſeen: only ſuch Books as Polydore uſed, and which paſt his hands, what Engliſh-man is he that hath ſeen or can ſhew me one? Whereby it may well be thought the foreſaid information to be true. As alſo by this one Italian trick of Polydore may other Italians likewiſe be ſuſpected, in making away ſuch Latin Books within this Land as made not for their purpoſe. But forſomuch as thoſe Latin Books be now aboliſhed, and cannot be had, let us return to our Saxon Tongue again, and ſee what this Saxon Sermon of Elfricus's Tranſlation doth ſay for Tranſubſtantiation: the Copy whereof here enſueth.

An Italian trick of Polydore Virgil, to burn his Books which he had gotten into his hands.

A Sermon on Eaſter-day in the old Saxon Tongue. tranſlated into Engliſh.

MEn beloved, it hath been often ſaid unto you about our Saviours Reſurrection, how he on this preſent day after his ſuffering mightily roſe from death. Now will we, open unto you, through Gods Grace, of the holy houſel, which ye ſhould now go unto, and inſtruct your underſtanding about this myſtery, both after the old Covenant, and alſo after the new, that no doubting may trouble you about this lively food. The Almighty God bad Moſes his Captain in the Land of Egypt to command the people of Iſrael to take to every Family a Lamb of one year old, the night they departed out of the Country to the Land of promiſe, and to offer that Lamb to God, and after to cut it, and to make the ſign of the Croſs with the Lambs Blood upon the ſide Poſts and the upper Poſts of their Door, and afterward to Eat the Lambs Fleſh, roſted, and unleavened Bread with wild Lettice. God ſaith unto Moſes, Eat of the Lamb nothing raw, nor ſodden in water, but roaſted at the fire. Eat the Head, the Feet, and the inwards, and let nothing of it be left until the Morning, if any thing thereof remain, that you ſhall burn with fire. Eat it in this wiſe. Gird your loyns, and do your ſhoos on your Feet, have your Staves in your Hands, and Eat it in haſt. The time is the Lords Paſſover. And there was ſlain on that night, in every Houſe throughout all Pharaohs Dominions, the firſt Born Child: and Gods people of Iſrael were delivered from that ſudden Death through the Lambs offering and his Bloods marking. Then ſaid God unto Moſes, Keep this day in your Remembrance, and hold it a great Feaſt in your Kindreds, with a perpetual obſervation, and Eat unleavened Bread always 7. days at this Feaſt. After this deed, God led the people of Iſrael over the Red Sea with dry Foot, and drowned therein Pharaoh and all his Army together with their Poſſeſſions, and fed afterward the Iſraelites forty years with heavenly food, and gave them water out of the hard Rock, until they came to the promiſed Land. Part of this Story we have treated of in another place, and part we ſhall now declare, to wit, that which belongeth to the holy Houſel; Chriſtian Men may not now keep that old Law Bodily, but it behoveth them to know what it ghoſtly ſignifieth. That Innocent Lamb which the old Iſraelites did then kill, had ſignification after ghoſtly underſtanding of Chriſts ſuffering, who unguilty ſhed his holy Blood for our redemption. Hereof ſing Gods Servants at every Maſs, Agnus dei qui tollis peccata mundi, miſerere nobis, That is in our ſpeech, Thou Lamb of God that takeſt away the ſins of the world, have mercy upon us. Thoſe Iſralites were delivered from that ſudden Death, and from Pharaohs Bondage by the Lambs offering, which ſignified Chriſts ſuffering; through which we be delivered from Everlaſting Death, and from the Devils cruel Reign, if we rightly believe in the true Redeemer of the whole world, Chriſt the Saviour. That Lamb was offered in the evening; and our Saviour ſuffered in the ſixth age of this world. This age of this corruptible world is reckoned unto the evening. They marked with the Lambs Blood upon the Doors and the upper Poſts, Thau, that is, the ſign of the Croſs, and were ſo defended from the Angels that killed the Egyptians firſt Born Child. And in like manner we ought to mark our Foreheads, and our Bodies with the token of Chriſts Rood, that we may be alſo delivered from deſtruction, when Christ reconciled both to God in one Body through his Cross.

when we shall be marked both on forehead, and also in heart with the Blood of our Lords suffering. Those Israelites did eat the Lambs Flesh at their Easter time, when they were delivered, and we receive ghostly Christs Body, and drink his Blood, when we receive with true belief that holy Housel. That time they kept with them at Easter seven days with great worship, when they were delivered from Pharaoh, and went from that Land. So also Christian Men keep Christs Resurrection at the time of Easter these seven days, because through his suffering and rising we be delivered and be made clean by going to this holy Housel, as Christ saith in his Gospel, Verily, verily I say unto you, ye have no life in you except ye Eat my Flesh, and Drink my Blood. He that Eateth my Flesh and drinketh my Blood, abideth in me, and I in him, and hath that everlasting life, and I shall raise him up in the last day. I am the lively Bread that came down from Heaven: not so as your Forefathers did Eat that Heavenly Bread in the Wilderness, and afterward died. He that Eateth this Bread liveth for ever, He blessed Bread before his suffering, and divided it to his Disciples, thus saying, Eat of this Bread, it is my Body, and do this in my Remembrance. Also he blessed Wine in one Cup and said, Drink ye all of this. This is my Blood that is shed for many, in forgiveness of Sins. The Apostles did as Christ commanded, that is, they blessed Bread and Wine to Housel again afterward in his remembrance. Even so also their Successours and all Priests by Christs Commandment do bless Bread and Wine to Housel in his name with the Apostolick blessing. Now men have often searched and do yet often search, how Bread that is gathered of Corn, and through fires heat baked, may be turned to Christs Body; or how Wine that is pressed out of many grapes is turned through one blessing to the Lords Blood. Now say we to such Men, some things be spoken of Christ by signification, and some be things certain. True this is and certain that Christ was born of a Maid, and suffered death of his own accord, and was buried, and on this day arose from Death. He is said to be Bread by signification, and a Lamb, and a Lyon, and a Mountain. He is called Bread, because he is our life, and Angels life. He is said to be a Lamb for his Innocency; and a Lyon for strength, wherewith he overcame the strong Devil. But Christ is not so notwithstanding after true nature, neither Bread, nor a Lamb, nor a Lion. Why is then the holy Housel called Christs Body, or his Blood, if it be not truly that it is called? Truly the Bread and the Wine which in the Supper by the Priest is hallowed, shew one thing without to human understanding, and another thing within to believing minds. Without they be seen Bread and Wine both in figure and in taste, and they be truly after their hallowing Christs Body and his Blood, through ghostly mystery. An heathen Child is Christened, yet he altereth not his shape without, though he be changed within. He is brought to the Fontstone sinful through Adams disobedience, howbeit he is washed from all sin within, though he hath not changed his shape without. Even so the Holy Font Water that is called the Welspring of life, is like in shape to other waters, and is subject to corruption, but the Holy Ghosts might cometh to the corruptible water through the Priests blessing, and it may after wash the Body and Soul from all sin, through ghostly might. Behold now we see two things in this one creature: after true nature, that water is corruptible moisture; and after ghostly mystery, hath wholesome vertue. So also if we behold the holy Housel after Bodily understanding, then we see that it is a creature corruptible and mutable. If we knowledg therein ghostly might, then understand we that life is therein, and that it giveth immortality to them that Eat with belief. Much is betwixt the invisible might of the holy Housel, and the visible shape of proper nature. It is naturally corruptible Bread, and corruptible Wine, and is by might of Gods Word truly Christs Body and Blood, not so notwithstanding bodily, but ghostly. Much is betwixt the Body of Christ which he suffered in, and the Body that is hallowed to Housel. The Body truly that Christ suffered in, was born of the Flesh of Mary, with Blood, and with bone, with skin and with sinews, in human limbs, with a reasonable Soul living: and his ghostly Body, which we call the Housel, is gathered of many Corns, without Blood and bone, without limb, without Soul, and therefore nothing is to be understood therein bodily, but all is ghostly to be understood. What soever is in that Housel, which giveth substance of life, that is of the ghostly might, and invisible doing. Therefore is that holy Housel called a mystery, because there is one thing in it seen, and another thing understood. That which is there seen, hath bodily shape: and that we do there understand hath ghostly might. Certainly Christs Body, which suffered Death and rose from Death, never dieth henceforth, but is eternal and unpassible. That Housel is temporal, not eternal, corruptible and dealed into sundry parts, chewed between the teeth, and sent into the Belly: howbeit, nevertheless after ghostly might it is all in every part. Many receive that holy Body, and yet notwithstanding it is so all in every part after ghostly mystery. Though some chew the less, yet is there no more might notwithstanding in the more part, than in the less, because it is whole in all men after the invisible might. This mystery is a pledge and a figure: Christs Body is truth it self. This pledge we do keep mystically, until that we be come to the truth it self, and then is this pledge ended. Truly it is, so as we before have said, Christs Body and his Blood; not bodily, but ghostly. But now hear the Apostles words about this mystery. Paul the Apostle speaketh of the old Israelites, thus writing in his Epistle to faithful Men. All our forefathers were Baptised in the cloud, and in the Sea, and all they did Eat the same ghostly meat, and drank the same ghostly drink. They drank truly of the stone that followed them, and that stone was Christ. Neither was that stone then from which the water ran, bodily Christ, but it signified Christ, that called thus to all believing and faithful Men. Whosoever thirsteth, let him come to me and drink, and from his bowels shall flow lively water. This he said of the holy Ghost, which they received who believed on him. The Apostle Paul saith, That the Israelites did eat the same ghostly meat, and drank the same ghostly drink, because that heavenly meat that fed them forty years, and that water which from the stone did flow, had signification of Christs Body, and his Blood, that now bee offered daily in Gods Church. It was the same which we now offer, not bodily, but ghostly.

We said unto you ere while, that Christ hallowed Bread and Wine to Housel before his suffering, and said, This is my Body and my Blood. Yet he had not then suffered; but so notwithstanding he turned through invisible might the Bread to his own Body, and that Wine to his Blood as hee before did in the Wilderness, before that he was born to be a Man, when he turned that heavenly meat to his flesh, and the flowing water from that stone to his own Blood. Very many did eat of that heavenly meat in the Wilderness, and drank the ghostly drink; and were nevertheless dead, as Christ said. And Christ meant not that death which none can escape, but that everlasting death which some of that folk deserved for their unbelief. Moses and Aaron, and many other of that people which pleased God, did Eat that heavenly Bread; and they dyed not the everlasting death, but though they dyed not the everlasting death, yet they dyed the common death. They saw that the heavenly meat was visible and corruptible, and they ghostly understood by that visible thing, and ghostly received it. The Saviour saith, He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, hath everlasting life. And he bad them not eat that Body wherewith hee was inclosed, nor to drink that Blood which was shed for us; but he meant with those words that holy Housel, which ghostly is his Body and his Blood, and he that tasteth it with believing heart, hath that eternal life. In the old Law faithful men offered to God divers Sacrifices, that had fore-signification of Christs Body, which for our sins he himself to his heavenly Father hath since offered to Sacrifice. Certainly this Housel which we do now hallow at Gods Altar, is a Remembrance of Christs Body which hee offered for us, and of his Blood which he shed for us. So he himself commanded, Do this in my remembrance. Once suffered Christ himself, but yet nevertheless his suffering is daily renewed at this Supper, through mystery of the holy Housel. Therefore we ought to consider diligently, how that this holy Housel is both Christs Body, and the Body of all faithful men, after ghostly ghoſtly myſtery. As wiſe Auguſtine ſaith of it, If ye will underſtand of Chriſts Body, hear the Apoſtle Paul thus ſpeaking, Ye truly be Chriſts Body and his Members. Now is your Myſtery ſet on Gods Table, and ye receive your Myſtery, which Myſtery ye your ſelves be. Be that which ye ſee on the Altar, and receive that which ye your ſelves be. Again, the Apoſtle Paul ſaith by it, We many be one Bread and one Body. Underſtand now and rejoyce, many be one Bread and one Body in Chriſt. He is our Head and we be his Limbs; and the Bread is not of one Corn, but of many; nor the Wine of one Grape, but of many. So alſo we all ſhould have one unity in our Lord, as it is written of the faithful Army, how that they were in ſo great an unity, as though all of them were one Soul and one Heart. Chriſt hallowed on his Table the Myſtery of our Peace and of our Unity. He that receiveth that myſtery of Unity, and keepeth not the bond of true Peace, receiveth no myſtery for himſelf, but a witneſs againſt himſelf. It is very good for Chriſtian men, that they go often to Houſel, if they bring with them to the Altar unguiltineſs and innocency of heart; if they be not oppreſſed with ſin. To an evil man it turneth to no good, but to deſtruction, if he receive unworthily that holy Houſel. Holy Books command that Water be mingled to that Wine which ſhall be for Houſel, becauſe the Water ſignifieth the People, and the Wine Chriſts Blood, and therefore ſhall neither the one without the other be offered at the holy Maſs, that Chriſt may be with us and we with Chriſt: the Head with the Limbs, and the Limbs with the Head. We ſhould before have intreated of the Lamb which the old Iſraelites offered at their Eaſter time, but that we deſired firſt to declare unto you of this myſtery, and after, how we ſhould receive it. That ſignifying Lamb was offered at the Eaſter. And the Apoſtle Paul ſaith in the Epiſtle of this preſent day, that Chriſt is our Eaſter, who was offered for us, and on this day roſe from death. The Iſraelites did eat the Lambs fleſh as God commanded, with unleavened Bread and wild Lettice; ſo we ſhould receive that holy Houſel of Chriſts Body and Blood without the Leaven of Sin and Iniquity. As Leaven turneth the Creatures from their nature; ſo doth ſin alſo change the nature of man from innocency to uncleanneſs. The Apoſtle hath taught how we ſhould feaſt, not in the Leaven of the evilneſs, but in the ſweet Dough of purity and truth. The Herb which they ſhould eat with the unleavened Bread is called Lettice, and is bitter in taſte; ſo we ſhould with bitterneſs of unfained Repentance purifie our mind, if we will eat Chriſts Body. Thoſe Iſraelites were not wont to eat raw fleſh, and therefore God bad them to eat it neither raw nor ſodden in Water, but roſted with fire. He ſhall receive the Body of God raw, that ſhall think without reaſon, that Chriſt was only Man like unto us, and was not God. And he that will after mans wiſdom ſearch the myſtery of Chriſts Incarnation, doth like unto him that doth ſeeth Lambs fleſh in Water, becauſe that Water in this ſame place ſignifieth mans Underſtanding: but we ſhould underſtand, that all the myſtery of Chriſts Humanity was ordered by the power of the Holy Ghoſt: and then eat we his Body roaſted with fire, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt came in fiery likeneſs to the Apoſtles in divers Tongues. The Iſraelites ſhould eat the Lambs head, and the feet, and the purtenance, and nothing thereof muſt be left over-night. If any thing thereof were left, they did burn that in the fire; and they brake not the bones. After ghoſtly underſtanding we do eat the Lambs head, when we take hold of Chriſt Divinity in our Belief. Again when we take hold of his Humanity with love, then eat we the Lambs feet, becauſe that Chriſt is the beginning and the end, God before all world, and Man in the end of this world. What be the Lambs purtenance, but Chriſts ſecret Precepts? And theſe we eat when we receive with greedineſs the Word of life. There muſt nothing of the Lamb be left unto the morning, becauſe that all Gods Sayings are to be ſearched with great carefulneſs; ſo that all his Precepts may be known in underſtanding and deed in the night of this preſent life, before that the laſt day of the univerſal Reſurrection do appear. If we cannot ſearch out throughly all the myſtery of Chriſts Incarnation, then ought we to betake the reſt unto the might of the Holy Ghoſt with true humility, and not to ſearch raſhly of that deep ſecretneſs above the meaſure of our underſtanding. They did eat the Lambs fleſh with their loyns girt. In the Loyns is the luſt of the Body, and he which will receive that Houſel ſhall cover or wrap in that concupiſcence, and take with chaſtity that holy receit. They were alſo ſhod. What be Shoes, but of the Hides of dead Beaſts? We be truly ſhod, if we match in our ſteps and deeds the life of men departed this life, which pleaſed God with keeping of his Commandments. They had Staves in their hands when they did eat. This Staff ſignifieth a carefulneſs and diligent overſeeing. And all they that beſt know and can, ſhould take care of other men, and ſtay them up with their help. It was enjoyned to the Eaters, that they ſhould eat the Lamb in haſte, for God abhorreth ſlothfulneſs in his Servants and thoſe that he loveth, that ſeek the joy of everlaſting life with quickneſs and haſte of mind. It is written, Prolong not to turn unto God, leſs the time paſs away through thy ſlow tarrying. The Eaters might not break the Lambs bones. No more might the Souldiers, that did hang Chriſt, break his holy Legs, as they did of the two Thieves that hanged on either ſide of him. And the Lord roſe from death ſound without all corruption: And at the laſt Judgment they ſhall ſee him, whom they did moſt cruelly wound on the Croſs. This time is called in the Hebrew Tongue, Paſcha, and in Latin, Tranſitus, and in Engliſh a Paſſover, becauſe that as on this day the People of Iſrael paſſed from the Land of Egypt over the Red Sea, from bondage to the Land of promiſe: ſo alſo did our Lord at this time depart, as ſaith John the Evangeliſt, from this world to his heavenly Father: Even ſo we ought to follow our Head, and to go from the Devil to Chriſt: from this unſtable world to his ſtable Kingdom. Howbeit we ſhould firſt in this preſent life depart from vice to holy vertue, from evil manners to good manners, if we will after this our Lent life go to the eternal life; and after our Reſurrection to Chriſt. He bring us to his everlaſting Father, who gave himſelf to death for our ſins, to him be honour and praiſe of well doing, world without end, Amen.

No Scripture inforceth the mixture of Water with the Wine.

The Wine ſignifieth Chriſts Blood.

Exod. 12.

Anno 1219.

And thus I ſuppoſe it ſtandeth clear and evidently proved by courſe of all theſe Ages afore-recited from the time of Tertullian and Auſtin, unto the days of this Elfricus above-mentioned, and after him, that this now miracle of Tranſubſtantiation was not yet crept into the heads of men, nor almoſt came in any queſtion amongſt learned men, nor was admitted for any Doctrine in the Church, at leaſt for any general Doctrine of all men to be received, till a 1000 years compleat after Chriſt, that is, till that Satan began to be ſet at large, Apoc. 20. For whoever heard in all the Primitive Church, or ever read in the Works of the old ancient Doctors this queſtion once to be asked or diſputed, whether any ſubſtance of Bread and Wine remained in the Lords Supper? Or what man was ever ſo doltiſh to believe any ſuch thing, or ever called Heretick for not believing the ſame, before the time of ſeduction, that is, before the 1000 years aforeſaid were expired.

Satan let at large.

The matter of Tranſubſtantiation never called in queſtion before the 1000 year after Chriſt.

Wherefore they that ſtand ſo much upon the antiquity of this Article, as a Doctrine which hath ever ſince Chriſts time been received in the Church, taught by the Apoſtles, believed of all Catholicks, and confirmed by conſent of all Ages, of Councils, of Nations and People unto this preſent day; theſe, I ſay, either ſhew themſelves very ignorant in Hiſtories and in all ſtate of Antiquity, or elſe moſt impudently they do abuſe the ſimple credulity of the People.

They that think Tranſubſtantiation to be otherwiſe than a new Doctrine, are ignorant of Hiſtories and Antiquity.

To proceed now further in this diſcuſſion of Antiquity, it followed, that after the time of Elfricus aforeſaid, this matter of Tranſubſtantiation began firſt to be talked of, and to come in queſtion among a few ſuperſtitious Monks; ſo that as blindneſs and ſuperſtition began more and more to increaſe, ſo the ſaid groſs Opinion ſtill more and more, both in number and authority prevailed, inſomuch that about the year of our Lord 1060. the denying of Tranſubſtantiation began to be counted Hereſie.

Tranſubſtantiation when it firſt came in queſtion.

And

Anno 1219.

And in this number first was one Berengarius a Frenchman and Archdeacon of Angeou, which of all Christian men, which we read of, was first called and counted an Heretick for denying of Transubstantiation, and troubled for the same, as ye shall hear.

This Berengarius lived in the time of Pope Leo the ninth, Victor and Nicho. the second, which was about the year of our Lord 1060. Albeit I do find our Writers here in some discrepance. For the most of them do hold, that he first recanted under Pope Leo the Ninth, in the Councel of Vercellense, and afterward again under Pope Nicholas the second, about the year, 1062. as it is to be gathered of Gratian, De consecrat. 2. Ego Berengarius, where he saith that Pope Nicholas did sent about to Bps. and Archbishps the Copy of his Recantation.

Vid. Bulling. De origine erroris, & Chronic. Biblia. Acta Concilij Romæ habiti contra Berengarium.

Again by the Acts of the Councel of Rome, it there appeared that the said Berengarius made this his said last Recantation under Pope Hildebran, called Gregory the seventh. But this difference of times is no great matter to stand upon. The Truth of the Story is this; that when Berengarius had professed the truth of the Sacrament, and had stood in the open confession thereof, according to the antient verity of the Doctrin received in the Church before, he was so handled with certain malignant and superstitious Monks, that what by evil intreaty, and what for fear of death death (such is the weak frailty of man) he began to shrink, and afterward did indeed recant the truth.

Lanfrank a persecutor of Berengarius.

Of these Malicious Enemies against Berengarius, the chiefest troubler was Lanfrank, Abbot of Codune, afterward Archb. of Canterbury; Guimund Monk, likewise first of the Abbey of Leufrede, and afterward Archb. of Aversane, Algerius also Monk of Corbein: Fulbertus also Monk and Bishop; and Hildebran somtime Monk of Cluniacke, and then Archdeacon of Turon, and afterward Bp. of Rome,

By these and such other Monks of the like Fraternity, the Error and Heresie of Transubstantiation began first to be defended, and parts pulickly in writing to be taken about the matter. Of the which sides and parts, the first that began to set up that Faction by writing seemeth to be Paschasius; who was a little before Berengarius about the time of Bertrame, and likewise Lanfrank the first that brought it into England.

Paschasius the first beginner of the faction of Transubstantiation.

On the contrary side again, the first that was openly impugned and troubled for denying Transubstantiation, was this Berengarius; with whom Lanfrank also was supposed at the first beginning to hold and take part, but afterward to clear himself he stood openly against him in the Councel, and wrote against him.

It followeth then in the Act of the Council, when the Synod of Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and other Prelates were together assembled, the greater number (saith the story) did hold that the Bread and Wine were turned substantially into the Body and Blood of Christ. Notwithstanding, saith he, divers there were in the said Councel which held the contrary with Berengarius, but at last were driven to give over. Berengarius among the rest, after he had long stood in the constant defence of the truth, at last relented to their wills, Confessing his Errour where none was, and desired pardon of the Councel. And this was (as seemeth to William Malmesbury) his first giving over. Who afterward returning to himself again after the death of Pope Leo, and prickt with the sting of Conscience, was driven again to recognize the truth, which he before had denied.

Ex W. Malms

The Pope (saith Malmesb.) perceiving this, would not leave him so, but sent into France, Hildebrand his Cardinal Chaplain (as meet a Mate for such a feat, as was in all Satans Court) and made him with a wany to come again Coram nobis; who so handled Berengarius, bringing him before the Face of the Councel holden at Turon, that hee made him to say, Erravi, once against; against whom stood up in that Councel Lanfrankus, and Guimundus aforesaid, impugning his assertion. And thus standeth the narration of W. Malmesbury. But by the Acts of Council of Rome appeareth another declaration, which is, that this later recantation of Berengarius should be at Rome under Hildebrand being then Pope, in the year of our Lord 1076. and in the Month of February, and that in the same Councel holden in Ecclesia Salvatoris,

The story and recantation of Berengarius declared by W. Malmesb. De gestis Anglorum. lib. 3.

this recantation of, Ego Berengarius, was made, and he enjoyned by the said Pope Hildebrand, upon his Oath, never hereafter to teach or dispute contrary to that faith of that Sacrament there holden, &c.

The order of his Recantation declared Ex actis Romani Concilii:

Again, Henry Bullinger in his Book, De Origine Erroris, following belick some other Author, expresseth the order of the aforesaid Recantation after this sort; and saith, that in the time of Leo the ninth, Anno 1051. there was a Roman Council, holden at Vercellense. In the which Councel Lanfrank being then present, the Book of John Scotus was openly read, and there condemned. Also Berengarius was sent for, who, seeing the prejudicial proceeding of that Councel, refused himself to come, but sent two Clerks, which openly there defended his cause and quarrel, and were for the same committed unto Prison. Such is the freedom of the Popes general Councels, with Prisons and violence to defend their Verities. Against the doings of this Councel notwithstanding the Frenchmen stood stiff, both at Angeou, and Turon, joyning and consenting with Berengarius.

The order of the said recantation reported out of Hen. Bulling De origine erroris cap. 10 Concilium Vercellense.

Not long after this died Pope Leo: and after him succeed Pope Victory, by whom another Synod was kept at Florence, where the Acts and doings of the foresaid Councel of Vercellense were confirmed, and a Legate also appointed to be sent to Turon in France. This Legat was Hildebrand above mentioned, who, calling the Clergie of France together in a Synod, fell there in hand with the cause of the Sacrament. Berengarius, not being ignorant of these Roman Councels, so kept himself, that in all his actions he would give none other answer, but that he believed and consented with the Faith of the Catholick Church; and so for that time did frustrate the purpose of the Councel, rather deluding the pretenses of his Enemies, than freely confessing the simple truth.

Concilium Florentinum

Concilium Turonense.

Again after Victory, came Pope Nicholas the second, who congregating another Councel at Rome, Anno, 1058. sent for Berengarius there to appear, who being present argued what he could for the justness of his cause, but all would not serve: In the Popes general Councels such a stroke and mastership beareth Authority above Verity. Berengarius being thus born drown on every side by might and superiority, when no remedy would serve, but he must needs recant again (for the Law of relapse was not yet in season) he desired to know what other Confession of the Sacrament the Pope would desire of him, besides that which he had there confessed. Then Pope Nicholas committed that charge to Humbert a Monk of Lotharing and after a Cardinal, that he should draw out in formable words the order of his Recantation, after the perscription of Rome, which he should read and publikely profess before the people. The form of which words is registred in the Decrees, De consecrat. Dist. 2. Ego Berengarius. The effect whereof is this, That he pretendeth with Heart and Mouth to profess, that he acknowledging the True, Catholick, and Apostolical Faith, doth execrate all Heresie, namely, that wherewith he hath lately been infamed, as holding that the Bread and Wine upon the Altar, after the consecration of the Priest remain only a Sacrament, and are not the very self Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, neither can be handled or broken with the Priests Hands, or chewed with the teeth of the faithful, otherwise than only by manner of a Sacrament: Consenting now to the holy and Apostolical Church of Rome he professed with Mouth and Heart to hold the same Faith touching the Sacrament of the Lords Mass, which the Lord Pope Nicholas with his Synod here present doth hold, and commandeth to be holden by his Evangelical and Apostolical Authority, that is, that the Bread and Wine upon the Altar after Consecration are not only a Sacrament, but also are the very true and self Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and are sensibly felt and broken with Hands, and chewed with teeth: swearing by the holy Evangelists, that whosoever shall hold or say unto the contrary, he shall hold them perpetually accursed, and if he himself shall hereafter presume to preach or teach against the same, hee shall be content to abide the severity and rigour of the Canons, &c.

The effect of Berengarius recantation.

This Cowardly Recantation of Berengarius, as it offended a great number of the godly sort; so it gave to the contrary part no little Triumph, whereby it ever since they they have taken the greater Courage to tread down the truth.

It happened ſhortly after this, that Hildebrand, the Popes grand Captain in the behalf of his Maſter Pope Nicholas, went in warfare againſt the Normans. Which warr being finiſhed, ſhortly after he ſet upon a new Voyage to fight for Pope Alexander, againſt Cadolus; which victory being alſo atchieved, it was not long, but he put the new Pope Alexander beſide the Cuſhion, and was made Pope himſelf: ſo that during the buſie ſtir of theſe warrs, the Popes Holineſs had no leiſure to attend the debating of this Controverſie of the Sacrament.

At length when all was quieted, and Pope Hildebrand now was where he would be, his reſtleſs brain could not be unoccupied, but eft-ſoon ſummoneth a new Councel at Rome in the Church of Lateran, to revive again the old diſceptaion of Berengarius about the year, as ſome hold, 1079.

Concilium Romanum 3.

Thus Berengarius, being toſſed by theſe Monks and Phariſees, was ſo confounded, and baited on every ſide, that partly for worldly fear ſtraining him on the one ſide, partly for ſhame and grief of Conſcience that he had now twiſe denied the truth on the other ſide, the man (as is of him reported) after theſe ſuch turbulent tragedies, forſaking his goods, his ſtudies, learning, and former ſtate of life, became a labourer, and wrought with his Hands for living, all the reſidue of his life.

The true opinion and judgment of Berengarius of the Sacrament. Ex lib. Lanfranci Archiepiſc. contra Bereng.

To the opinion which Berengarius maintained touching the Sacrament (as by his own words in Lanfranks Book may appear) was this: The Sacrifice of the Church conſiſteth of two things: The one viſible, the other inviſible, that is, of the Sacrament, and of the thing or matter of the Sacrament. Which thing (which is to mean, the Body of Chriſt) if it were here preſent before our eys, it were a thing viſible and to be ſeen: but being lift up into heaven, and ſitting on the Right Hand of his Father, to the time of reſtoring of all things (as St. Peter ſaith) it cannot be called down from thence. For the Perſon of Chriſt conſiſteth of God and Man; the Sacrament of the Lords Table, conſiſteth of Bread and Wine; which being conſecrate are not changed, but remain in their ſubſtances, having a certain reſemblance or ſimilitude of thoſe things, whereof they be Sacraments, &c. Ex lib. Lanfranci.

By theſe words of Berengarius Doctrin, all indifferent Readers may ſee and judge, that he affirmed nothing but what was agreeable to the holy Scripture, believing with Saint Auguſtine, and all other ancient Elders of the Church, that in the holy Supper all faithful believers be refreſhed ſpiritually with the Body and Blood of the Lord, unto everlaſting life. Wherefore moſt impudently they do miſ-report him (as they do many other beſides) which falſely lay to his charge, as though his teaching ſhould be, that in the ſacred Supper of the Lord nothing elſe were received of the faithful, beſides only the bear ſigns, which is the Bread and the Wine.

The Doctrin of Berengarius falſely ſlandered.

And now that you have ſeen the Doctrin of Berengarius, let us alſo take a view of the contrary teaching of Lanfrancus and his fellows, conferring and comparing together the inſtitution on the one ſide with the inſtitution of the other, to mark and conſider which of them ſoundeth nearer to the truth of the Scriptures. The words of Lanfrank be theſe.

The groſs opinion of Lanfrancus and the Papiſts, concerning the Sacrament.

I believe the earthly ſubſtances, which upon the Lords Table are divinely ſanctified through the miniſtration of the Prieſt, to be converted unſpeakably, incomprehenſibly, and miraculouſly by the operation of Gods mighty power, into the eſſence of the Lords Body, the outward forms onely of the things themſelves and certain qualities reſerved, and that for two reſpects: The one, leſt the ſight of the raw and Bloody Fleſh might otherwiſe make men to abhorr from eating thereof; the other, for that they which believe the thing they ſee not, might have the greater merit for their belief. The converſion of which earthly ſubſtances into the eſſence of the Lords Body notwithſtanding, yet is the ſelfe-ſame Body of the Lord in heaven, and there hath his eſſential being at the Right Hand of his Father immortal, inviolate, perfect, undiminiſhed, and uncorrupted: ſo that truly it may be affirmed, the ſelf-ſame Body both to be received of us, and yet not the ſelf-ſame. The ſelfe-ſame, I mean, as touching the eſſence, property, and vertue of his true nature: and yet not the ſelf-ſame as touching the forms of Bread and Wine, and other outward qualities incurring to our outward ſenſes, &c. And thus have ye the Confeſſion of Lanfrank Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Anno 1219.

From this Confeſſion of Lanfrank, the opinion and aſſertion alſo of Guimundus Archbiſhop of Averſan doth nothing differ in groſſeneſs and impiety, but rather paſſeth the ſame, thus affirming and defending, That the Body of Chriſt is preſſed, and torn with teeth, even like as it was felt and touched with the Hands of Thomas.

The impious and groſs opinion of Guimundus of Tranſubſtantiation.

And moreover, the ſaid Guimundus (if his Book be not rather counterfeited at Lovain) in the ſame place anſwering to an objection put out, that it is not lawful for Chriſt to be torn in pieces with teeth, doubteth not to pronounce that whether we take tearing for hard biting, or ſoft biting, it is not repugnant nor diſagreeing, but that (by the will of God agreeing thereunto) the Body of Chriſt may be touched with Hands, bitten with Mouth, cruſhed, yea, and divided in pieces, with hard or ſoft preſſing of the teeth: and that as he was bruiſed upon the Croſs, according to the Prophet, ſaying, He was bruiſed for our iniquities, &c. So the ſame Body, for the health of the faithful may devoutly be torn and rent with their teeth, any thing to the contrary notwithſtanding, &c. Guimund. lib. Sacrament. fol. 30. Judge now all good ſtudious Readers, what is to be thought of this kind of Doctrine, and how this opinion cohereth with the infallible voice of Gods Word, ſaying, Exod. And of him ye ſhall not break a bone, &c.

Eſay 53.

The great confirmation of this Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation was by miracles.

This rude and miſ-ſhapen Doctrin of theſe Monks concerning Tranſubſtantiation, as ye have heard when and by whom it began firſt to be broached: ſo if you would now know by what learning and Scriptures they did confirm and eſtabliſh the ſame, ye muſt here think and underſtand, how their chiefeſt ground and ſubſtance to perſwade the people, was at this time certain miracles by them forged, and publiſhed both in their writings and preachings; whereof one was the ſame of Odo above recited, which Osberne, or ſome other Monkiſh Legend invented of him, how he ſhould ſhew unto certain the Hoaſt turned into the likeneſs of Fleſh and Blood dropping into the Chalice for the converſion of thoſe Clerks, which before would not believe it.

A miracle to prove Tranſubſtantiation.

And another like Miracle is alſo told by the ſaid Osbern of Dunſtan in this order, how the ſaid Dunſtan appeared to a certain Lame Cripple in the night, willing him to reſort unto his tomb, to have his limbs again reſtored. Which Cripple, according as he was willed, after he had there continued praying for health a long time, and could not obtain, began to return home again after long tarrying, without all hope of recovery. To whom the ſaid Dunſtan appearing again by the way, asked from whence he came, and whither he would. The Cripple anſwering, declared how he came thither upon hope of health, where he had long tarried and becauſe he could find no recovery, therefore he now was returning home. To whom then ſaid Dunſtan; I am, ſaith he, Dunſtan the fellow ſervant of all Gods ſervants, and have been occupied with certain neceſſary buſineſs; for the which I could not be preſent there with my Children. For Elfrick, ſaid he, otherwiſe ſirnamed Bata, hath attempted to diſherit my Church, but I have ſo ſtopped him, that he could not prevail.

Ex Osberno, lib. 2. de vita Dunſtant.

Another miracle to prove Tranſubſtantiation.

By this it appeareth that Elfrik the tranſlator of the Saxon ſermon, was Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Many other fabulous miracles of the like ſtamp are rife in popiſh ſtories, counterfeited and forged under divers and ſundry names, ſome referred to Gregory, ſome, to Paſchaſius, and to other more, which to recite all would fill a whole Sea full of lies and fables. Among many, one is thus invented of Paſchaſius. There was a Prieſt of Almain, ſaith he, named Plegildus, who did ſee and handle with his Hands viſibly the ſhape of a Child upon the Altar, and ſo after he had imbraced and kiſſed him, it returned again to the likeneſs of Bread, as he ſhould come to the receiving thereof. This miracle when it was objected againſt Berengarius, he merily deriding the blind fable, anſwered in theſe words, Speciosa, inquit pax nebulonis, ut cui oris præberet baſium, ei dentium inferret exitium. That is, A godly peace, quoth he, of a falſe varlet, that whom he kiſſed before with his mouth, by and by he goeth about to tear him with his teeth.

Another lying miracle of Paſchaſius to prove Tranſubſtantiation.

Another

Another miracle reported.

Another monkiſh miracle to prove Tranſubſtantiation.

Another miracle is reported of a Jew-Boy, who, upon a time entring into the Church, with another Chriſtian Lad which was his play-fellow, ſaw upon the Altar a little Child broken and torn in pieces, and afterward by portions to be diſtributed among the People. Which ſight when the young Jew coming home and told unto his Father to be true and certain, he was for the ſame condemned to be burned. Thus he being incloſed in a houſe, and the door faſt were he ſhould be burned, he was found and taken out from thence by the Chriſtians, not only alive, but alſo having not one hair of his head blemiſhed with the flames about him. Who then being of the Chriſtians demanded, how he was ſo preſerved from the burning fire: there appeared, ſaid he, to me a beautiful Woman ſitting on a Chair, whoſe Son the Child was, which was before divided and diſtributed in the Church among the People, who reached to me her hand in the burning flame, and with her Gown Skirts kept the flame from me, ſo that I was preſerved thereby from periſhing, &c. Belike theſe Monks lacked Miracles among the Chriſtians, when they were fain to borrow ſuch figments of the Jews to prove their fained Tranſubſtantiation.

And theſe commonly were then the Arguments of thoſe Monks, wherewith they perſwaded the People to believe their Tranſubſtantiation. But to leave theſe Monks fictions, and to return again to Berengarius, thus Malmesbury of him reporteth, that after he had once or twice recanted (as is aforeſaid;) yet notwithſtanding this Doctrin of the Sacrament ſtill remained in the mind of his hearers. And howſoever the Tyranny of the Pope did drive him through fear to deny his Opinion, and wrought him much trouble, yet notwithſtanding, after his death he lacked not his well willers. In the number of whom was Hilbertus Biſhop Cenomanenſis: Whoſe verſes in commendation of his Maſter I thought here not unworthy to be preſerved, being otherwiſe rare peradventure to be found in our Story Writers.

Although in this time of Berengarius, which was about the year of our Lord, 1060. (as ye have heard) this errour of Tranſubſtantiation began to grow in force and ſtrength, by the ſupporting of certain Popiſh Monks above rehearſed, as Lanfrancus, Guimundus, Algerius Hugo, Biſhop of Lincoln, Fulbertus (of whom it is ſaid in Stories, that our Lady gave him ſuck being ſick with her own breaſts) and ſuch other: yet notwithſtanding all this while the ſaid Tranſubſtantiation was decreed for no publick law, nor Doctrine to be holden by any general conſent, either of the Church of Rome, or any other Councel, before the Councel of Laterane, under Pope Innocent the third, who in the year of our Lord, 1215. celebrating in the Church of Laterane a general Councel of 1300. Biſhops enacted there divers Conſtitutions, as of yearly Confeſſion, and the Communion to be uſed of the whole multitude once a year through every Pariſh Church.

Tranſubſtantiation firſt decreed for a general law by Pope Innocent the third.

The general Councel of Laterane.

Item, for the recovery of the Holy Land, with Subſidy alſo to be levied for the ſame.

Item, for the eſtabliſhing of the Books and Writings of Joachim Abbas, and alſo the Opinions of Almaricus afore mentioned; notwithſtanding that the ſaid Joachim did ſubſcribe with his own hand, that he held the ſame Doctrine which was in the Church of Rome, and alſo ſubmitted his Books to be preſented to the See of Rome, there to be corrected or approved. And yet he was judged though not an Heretick, yet to be erroneous, and eſpecially in thoſe Books which he wrote againſt Peter Lombard, called afterward the Maſter of Sentences.

Ex Antonin. pars. 3. tit. 19. cap. 1.

In the ſaid Councel, beſides divers other Conſtitutions and the Articles of the Creed there in order repeated, as appeareth, Extr. De ſumma Trinit. & Fide Catholica, Chap. 1. there was enacted, decreed, and eſtabliſhed the Faith and Belief of Tranſubſtantiation, in theſe words following.

Extran. De Sum. Trin. & a. 1. firmiter credimus.

The words of the Councel whereby Tranſubſtantiation was firſt eſtabliſhed.

There is one univerſal Church of the faithful, without which none can be ſaved, in the which Church the ſelf-ſame Jeſus Chriſt is both Prieſt and alſo the Sacrifice, whoſe Body and Blood are truely contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, the Bread being tranſubſtantiated in the Body, and Wine into the Blood, by the power and working of God. So that to the accompliſhing of this Myſtery of unity, we might take of his, the ſame which he hath taken of ours. And this Sacrament none can make or conſecrate, but he that is a Prieſt lawfully ordained, according to the Keyes of the Church, which Jeſus Chriſt hath left to his Apoſtles, and to their Succeſſors, &c.

And thus was the foundation laid for the building of Tranſubſtantiation, upon the conſent of theſe foreſaid 1300. Biſhops in the year of our Lord above ſpecified, under Pope Innocentius, and the Doctrine thereof intruded for an Article of Faith into the Church, neceſſarily to be believed of all men under pain of Hereſie.

Elevation and Adoration brought in by Pope Honorius the third.

But yet all this while, notwithſtanding that the Subſtance of Bread and Wine was now baniſhed out of the Sacrament, and utterly tranſcorporated into the Subſtance of Chriſts very Body and Blood; yet was not this Body elevated over the Prieſts head, nor adored of the People till the days of Pope Honorius the third, ſucceeding after Innocentius, who by his Councel likewiſe commanded Adoration and Elevation to be joyned with Tranſubſtantiation, as one Idolatry commonly bringeth forth another.

Anno 1129.

Again, the Sacraments of the Lords Supper being now conſecrated, tranſubſtantiated, elevated, adored, yet it was not offered up for a Sacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead, nor for a remedy of the Souls in Purgatory, nor for a merit operis operati, ſive bino motu utentis, &c. before that other Popes coming after added ſtill new additions to the former inventions of their predeceſſors.

Conſecration. Tranſubſtantiation. Elevation. Adoration. Oblation.

And thus have you the whole order and origine of theſe Idolatrous parts of the Maſs deſcribed by their times and ages, which firſt began with Conſecration, and the form thereof, which were words of the Canon. Then came Tranſubſtantiation by Innocentius, and after Elevation and Adoration by Honorius, and laſt of all came the Oblation meritorious and propitiatory for the quick and the dead in remiſſion of ſins, Ex opere operato.

Which things being thus conſtituted by the too much uſurped authority of the Church of Rome, ſhortly after followed Perſecution, Tyranny and Burning among the Chriſtians, firſt beginning with the Albingenſes, and the faithful Congregation of Tholouſe, near about the time of the ſaid Innocentius, as is afore remembred.

Perſecution firſt beginning in theſe later days. Read before.

And thus much for the firſt Article of Tranſubſtantiation which (as you have heard) was not admitted into the Church for any general Doctrine of Faith, before the year and time above aſſigned of Pope Innocent the third: and therefore if any have been otherwiſe perſwaded, or yet do remain in the ſame perſwaſion ſtill of this Doctrin, as though it had been of a longer continuance then for the time above expreſſed, let him underſtand that by ignorance of Hiſtories he is deceived: and for the more ſatisfying of his mind, if he credit not me, let him believe the words of one of his own Catholick ſort, J. Duns I mean, who in his fourth Book writing of Tranſubſtantiation, in what time and by whoſe authority it was firſt eſtabliſht, hath theſe words, which alſo are before mentioned: Theſe words of the Scripture might be expounded more eaſily and more plainly without Tranſubſtantiation; but the Church did chuſe this ſenſe, which is harder, being thereto moved, as ſeemeth, chiefly becauſe men ſhould hold of the Sacraments, the ſame which the Church of Rome doth hold, &c. And further in the ſame place the ſaid Duns expounding himſelf what he meaneth by the Church of Rome, maketh there expreſs mention of the ſaid Innocentius the third, and of this Councel of Laterane &c.

John Duns, in 4. lib. Sentent. Read before.

And furthermore, to the intent that ſuch as be indifferent ſeekers of the Truth may be more amply ſatisfied in this behalf, that this Tranſubſtantiation is of no antiquity, but of a late invention: I will alſo adjoyn to this Teſtimony of Joannes Scotus, the judgment and verdict of Eraſm lib. Annot. where he writeth in theſe words, In Synaxi Tranſubſtantiationem ſero definivit Eccleſia. Diu ſatis erat credere ſive ſub pane conſecrato, ſive quocunq; modo adeſſe verum corpus Chriſti, &c. That is, In the Sacrament of the Communion, the Church concluded Tranſubſtantiation but of late days. Long before that, it was ſufficient to believe the true Body of Chriſt to be preſent either under Bread, or elſe by ſome other manner, &c.

The ſecond Article.

The ſecond. Article of both kinds.

As touching the ſecond Article, which debarreth from the Lay-People the one half of the Sacrament, underſtanding that under one kind both parts are fully contained, forſomuch as the world well knoweth that this Article is but young, invented, decreed and concluded no longer ſince, than at the Councel of Conſtance, not paſt 200. years ago: I ſhall not need to make any long ſtanding upon that matter, eſpecially for that ſufficient hath been ſaid thereof before in our long diſcourſe of the Bohemians Story.

The reaſons and objections of the Papiſts againſt both kinds.

Firſt let us ſee the Reaſons and Objections of the Adverſaries in reſtraining the Laity from the one kind of this Sacrament. The uſe, ſay they, hath been of ſo long continuance in the Church. Whereunto we anſwer, that they have no evident nor authentick example of any antient cuſtom in the Church which they can produce in that behalf.

Item, where they alledged the place of St. Luke where Chriſt was known in breaking of Bread, &c, citing moreover many other places of Scripture, wherein mention is made of breaking of Bread: to anſwer thereunto, although we do not utterly repugn, but that ſome of theſe places may be underſtood of the Sacrament: yet that being granted, it followeth not therefore, that one part of the Sacrament was only miniſtred to the People without the other, when as by the common uſe of ſpeech, under the naming of one part the whole action is meant. Neither doth it follow, becauſe that Bread was broken among the Brethren, therefore the Cup was not diſtributed unto them. For ſo we find by the words of St. Paul, that the uſe of the Corinthians was to communicate not only in breaking of Bread, but in participating the Cup alſo, The Cup, ſaith he, which we participate, &c.

1. Cor 10.

Alſo after the Apoſtles, in the time of Cyprian, of Hierome, of Gelaſius and other ſucceſſively after them, it is evident that both the kinds were frequented in the Church. Firſt Cyprian in divers places declareth that the Sacrament of the blood was alſo diſtributed. How do we, ſaith he, provoke them to ſtand in the confeſſion of Chriſt, to the ſhedding of their Blood, if we deny unto them the Blood of Chriſt when they prepare themſelves to the conflict?

Cypria. lib. 1. Epiſt. 2. Delaicis Martyrib. Scriberis.

The words of Jerome are plain. Prieſts, ſaith he, which Miniſter the Euchariſt, and divide the Blood unto the People.

Hieronymus in Sophon. cap. 3.

In hiſtoria tripartita, it was ſaid to the Emperor Theodoſius, How will you receive the Body of the Lord with ſuch bloody hands, or the Cup of his precious Blood with that mouth, which have ſpoiled ſo much innocent Blood?

In hiſt. tripart. lib. 9.

In the Canon of Gelaſius, and in the Popes own Decrees, theſe words we read, We underſtand that be ſome which receiving only the portion of the Lords Body, do abſtain from the Cup of his ſacred Blood: to whom we enjoyn, that either they receive the whole Sacrament in both kinds, or elſe that they receive neither; for the dividing of the whole and one Sacrament cannot be done without great ſacrilege, &c. So that this Decree of P. Gelaſius being contradictory to the Councel of Conſtance, it muſt follow, that either the Pope did err; or elſe the Councel of Conſtance, muſt needs be a ſacrilegious Councel, as no doubt it was.

Deconſecrati

The like Teſtimony alſo appeareth in the Councel of Toletane, that the Laity did then communicate in both kinds, beſide divers other old Preſidents, remaining yet in the Churches both of Germany and alſo of France, declaring likewiſe the ſame.

The Council of Conſtance a Sacrilegious Councel.

The forbidding of both kinds of the Sacrament hath no ground of ancient cuſtom.

And thus it ſtandeth certain and demonſtrable by manifold probations, how far this new found cuſtome differeth from all antiquity and preſcription of uſe and time. Again, although the cuſtome thereof were never ſo antient, yet no cuſtome may be of that ſtrength to gainſtand or countermand the open and expreſs commandment of God, which ſaith to all men, Bibite ex hoc omnes, Drink ye all of this, &c.

No cuſtome may derogate from the Lords expreſs commandment.

Again, ſeeing the Cup is called the Blood of the New Teſtament, who is he that dare or can alter the Teſtament of the Lord, whon none may be ſo hardy to alter the Teſtament of a man, being once approved or ratified?

The Lords Teſtament ought not to be altered for any reſpect.

Further, as concerning thoſe Places of Scripture before alledged, De fractione panis; That is, Of breaking of Bread, whereupon they think themſelves ſo ſure that the Sacrament was then adminiſtred but in one kind: to anſwer thereunto, firſt we ſay it may be doubted whether all thoſe places in Scripture de fractione panis, are to be referred to the Sacrament. Secondly, the ſame being given unto them, yet can they not infer thereby, becauſe one part is mentioned, that the full Sacrament therefore was not miniſtred. The common manner of the Hebrew Phraſe is, under breaking of Bread to ſignifie generally the whole. Feaſt or Supper: as in the Prophet Eſay, theſe words Frange eſurienti panem tuum, do ſignifie as well giving Drink as Bread, &c. And thirdly, howſoever thoſe places, De fractione panis, be taken yet it maketh little for them, but rather againſt them. For if the Sacrament were adminiſtred among them, in fractione panis (id eſt) in breaking of Bread, then muſt they needs grant, that if Bread was there broken, Ergo there there was Bread, forſomuch as neither the accidents of Bread without Bread can be broken, neither can the natural Body of Chriſt be ſubject to any fraction or breaking by the Scripture, which ſaith, And ye ſhall break no bone of him &c. Wherefore take away the Subſtance of Bread, and there can be no fraction. And take away fraction, how then do they make a Sacrament of this breaking, whereas neither the Subſtance of Chriſts Body, neither yet the accidents without their Subſtance can be broken, neither again will they admit any Bread there remaining to be broken? and what then was it in this their fractione panis, that they did break, if it were not Panis (i.) Subſtantia panis quæ frangebatur? To conclude, if they ſay that this fraction of Bread was a Sacramental breaking of Chriſts Body, ſo by the like figure let them ſay that the being of Chriſts natural Body in the Sacrament is a Sacramental being, and we are agreed.

In fractione panis.

Exod. 12. The natural Body of Chriſt may not be broken. Accidents no man can break. No Bread is there to be broken. Ergo, there is nothing in the Sacrament broken.

Another object. againſt both kinds. Anſwer.

Item, They object furtherand ſay, That the Church upon due conſideration may alter as they ſee cauſe, in Rites, Ceremonies and Sacraments.

1 Order.

Anſwer. The inſtitution of this Sacrament ſtandeth upon the order, example, and commandment of Chriſt. This order he took: firſt he divided the Bread ſeverally from the Cup, and afterward the Cup ſeverally from the Bread. Secondly, this he did not for any need on his behalf, but only to give us example how to do the ſame after him, in remembrance of his death to the worlds end. Thirdly, beſide this order taken, and example left, he added alſo an expreſs commandment, Hoc facite, Do this: Bibite ex hoc omnes, Drink ye all of this, &c. Againſt this order, example, and commandment of the Goſpel no Church nor Councel of men nor Angel in Heaven hath any power or authority to change or alter, according as we are warned; If any bring unto you any other Goſpel beſide that ye have received, hold him accurſed, etc.

Another objection againſt both kinds. Acts 2.

Item another objection: And why may not the Church (ſay they) as well alter the form of this Sacrament, as the Apoſtles did the form of Baptiſm? where in the Acts Saint Peter ſaith, Let every one be baptiſed in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

Anſwer. The Apoſtles changed not the form of Baptiſm.

Anſwer. This Text ſaith not that the Apoſtles uſed this form of baptiſing; I baptiſe thee in the name of Chriſt, &c. but they uſed many times, his manner of ſpeech, to be baptized in the name of Chriſt, not as expreſſing thereby the formal words of baptiſing, but as meaning this, that they would have them to become Members of Chriſt, and to be baptized as Chriſtians, entring into his Baptiſm, and not only to the Baptiſm of John; and therefore although the Apoſtles thus ſpake to the People, yet notwithſtanding when they baptized any themſelves, they uſed (no doubt) the form of Chriſt preſcribed, and no other.

Mans curioſity in magnifying his own deviſes above Gods.

Item, Among many other objections, they alledge certain Perils and cauſes of weight and importance, as ſpilling, ſhedding, or ſhaking the Blood out of the Cup, or ſcouring, or elſe ſticking upon mens Beards, &c. For the which they ſay it is well provided the half Communion to ſuffice.

Whereunto it is ſoon anſwered, That as theſe cauſes were no let to Chriſt, to the Apoſtles, to the Corinthians, and to the Brethren of the Primitive Church, but that in the publick Aſſemblies they received all the whole Communion, as well in the one part as in the other; ſo neither be the ſaid cauſes ſo important now, to adnul and evacuate the neceſſary commandment of the Goſpel, if we were as careful to obey the Lord, as we are curious to magnifie our own deviſes, to ſtrain at gnats to ſtumble at ſtraws, and to ſeek knots in Ruſhes, which rather are in our own fantaſies growing, than there where they are ſought.

In ſumma. Divers other objections and cavillations are in Popiſh Books to be found, as in Gabriel the difference made between the Laity and Prieſts, alſo the diſtinction uſed to be made between the prieſts Communion and the laical Communion. Where is to be underſtood, that when Prieſts were bid to uſe the laical Communion, thereby was meant not receiving under one kind, as Lay-men do now, but to abſtain from conſecrating, and only to receive as the Lay-men then did. Some alſo alledge certain ſpecial or particular examples, as of the Cup only ſerving for the Bread, or of the Bread only ſent to certain ſick folk for the Cup. And here they do infer the Story of Sozomenus, touching the Woman in whoſe mouth the Sacrament of Bread, which ſhe only received without the Cup, was turned to a ſtone, &c. Other alledge other private examples likewiſe of Infants, aged men, ſick Perſons, men excommunicate, Phrentickes, or mad men, or men dwelling far off from Churches, in Mountains or Wilderneſſes, &c. All which private examples neither make any inſtance againſt the antient cuſtom of publick Congregations frequented from the Apoſtles time, and much leſs ought they to derogate from the expreſs and neceſſary Precept of the Goſpel, which ſaith to all men without exception, Hoc facite, &c. Bibite ex hoc omnes, &c.

Objections of private example make no inſtance againſt Publick uſages, and Doctrin of the Church. Communio Sacerdotum. Communio Laicalis. Hiſt. Eccle. lib. Cap. 5.

All reſpects muſt give place to the obedience of the word.

The third Article.

The 3. Article.

Private Maſſes, Trental Maſſes, and Dirige Maſſes, as they were never uſed before the time of Gregory, ſix hundred years after Chriſt; ſo the ſame do fight directly againſt our Chriſtian Doctrine, as by the definition thereof may well appear. The Maſs is a work or action of the Prieſt, applied unto men for meriting of grace, Ex opere operato, in the which action the Sacrament is firſt worſhipped, and then offered up for a Sacrifice for remiſſion of Sins, à pœna et culpa, for the quick and the dead. Of this definition as there is no part, but it agreeth with their own teaching; ſo there is no part thereof which diſagreeth not from the rules of Chriſtian Doctrine, eſpecially theſe, as follow.

Definition of the Maſs.

The firſt Rule of Chriſtian Doctrine.

1 The firſt Rule is; Sacraments be inſtituted for ſome principal end and uſe, out of the which uſe they are no Sacraments. As the Sacrament of Baptiſm is a Sacrament of regeneration and forgiveneſs of Sins to the Perſon that is baptized; but if it be carried about to be worſhipped and ſhewed to other, as meritorious for their remiſſion and regeneration, to them it is no Sacrament.

The 2. Rule.

2 No Sacrament or ceremony doth profit or conduce, but them only which take and uſe the ſame.

The 3. Rule.

3 Only the death of Chriſt, and the work of his Sacrifice upon the Croſs is to be applied to every man by faith, for ſalvation and health of his Soul. Beſide this work alone, to apply any action or work of Prieſt or any other Perſon, as meritorious of it ſelf, and conducible to Salvation, to Souls health, or to remiſſion of Sins, it is Idolatry, and derogatory to the Teſtament of God, and to the Blood of Chriſt prejudicial.

The 4. Rule. 1 Cor. 10.

4. To make Idols of Sacraments, and to worſhip dumb things for the living God, it is Idolatry; Fugite Idola, &c. 1. Cor. 10.

The 5. Rule.

5. Every good work whatſoever it be that a man doth, profiteth only himſelf, and cannot bee applied to other men, Ex opere operato, to profit them unto merit or remiſſions, only the actions of Chriſt except.

The 6. Rule.

6 No man can apply to another the Sacrifice of Chriſts death by any work doing, but every man muſt apply it to himſelf by his own believing. Juſtus ex fide ſua vivet, Habacuc. 2.

The 7. Rule.

7 The Sacrifice of Chriſts Death doth ſave us freely by it ſelf, and not by the means of any mans working for us.

The 8 Rule.

8 The Paſſion of Chriſt once done and no more is a full and a perfect oblation and ſatisfaction for the Sins of the whole world, both original and actual: by the vertue of which paſſion the wrath of God is pacified toward mankind for ever, Amen.

The 9. Rule.

9 The paſſion of Chriſt once done is only the object of that Faith of ours which juſtifieth us, and nothing elſe. And therefore whoſoever ſetteth up any other object, beſide that paſſion once done, for our Faith to apprehend and behold the ſame, teacheth damnable Doctrine, and leadeth to Idolatry.

Againſt all theſe rules private Maſs directly do repugne For firſt, beſide that they tranſgreſs the order, example, and commandment of Chriſt (which divided the Bread and Cup to them all) they alſo bring the Sacrament out of the right uſe whereunto principally it was ordained. For whereas the uſe of that Sacrament is principally inſtituted for a teſtimonial and remembrance of Chriſts Death, the private Maſs tranſferreth the ſame to another purpoſe, either to make of it a gazing Idol, or a work of application meritorious, or a Sacrifice propitiatory for remiſſion of ſins, or a commemoration for Souls departed in Purgatory, according as it is written in their Maſs Book, Pro quorum memoria corpus Chriſti ſumitur. Pro quorum memoria ſanguis Chriſti ſumitur, &c. Whereas Chriſt ſaith contrary, Hoc facietis in meam commemorationem.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper put out of his right uſe by private Maſſes.

Furthermore, the inſtitution of Chriſt is broken in this, that where the Communion was given in common, the private Maſs ſuffereth the Prieſt alone to eat and drink up all, and when he hath done, to bleſs the people with the empty Cup.

Chriſts memory put out in dirige Maſſes.

Secondly, whereas Sacraments properly profit none but them that uſe the ſame, in the private Maſs the Sacrament is received in the behoof not onely of him that executeth, but of them alſo which be far off, or dead and in purgatory.

An application.

Thirdly, when by the Scripture nothing is to be applied for Remiſſion of our ſins, but onely the Death of Chriſt, cometh in the private Maſs as a work meritorious done of the Prieſt, which being applied to other, is available Ex opere operato, both to him that doth it, and to them for whom it is done ad remiſſionem peccatorum.

Adoration.

Fourthly, private Maſſes and all other Maſſes now uſed of the Sacrament make an Idol, of commemoration make adoration, in ſtead of a receiving make a deceiving, in place of ſhewing forth Chriſts Death make new oblations of his death, and of a Communion make a ſingle ſole ſupping, &c.

Oblation.

Fiftly, whereas in this general frailty of mans nature, no man can merit by any worthineſs of working for himſelf, the Prieſt in his private Maſs taketh upon him to merit both for himſelf, and for many other.

Meriting for other.

Sixthly, it ſtandeth againſt Scripture; that the Sacrifice and Death of Chriſt can be applied any otherwiſe to our benefit and juſtification, than by Faith. Wherefore it is falſe that the action of the Maſs can apply the benefit of Chriſts Death unto us, Ex opere operato, ſive bono motu utentis vel ſacrificantis.

Opus operatum. Private Maſſes againſt the free Grace of God.

Seventhly, whereas the benefit of our Salvation and juſtifying ſtandeth by the free gift and grace of God, through our Faith in Chriſt; contrarily, the application of theſe Popiſh Maſſes ſtoppeth the freeneſs of Gods Grace, and maketh that this benefit muſt firſt come through the Prieſts Hands, and his opus operatum, unto us.

Heb. 10.

The eighth contrariety between private Maſs and Gods Word is in this; That where the Scripture ſaith, Vnica oblatione conſummavit eos, qui ſanctificantur in perpetuum, with one oblation he hath made perfect them that be ſanctified for ever; againſt this rule the private Maſs proceedeth in a contrary Doctrine, maketh of one oblation a daily oblation, and that which is perfectly done and finiſhed now to be done again: And finally, that which was inſtituted onely for eating and for a remembrance of that oblation of Chriſt once done, the Popiſh Maſs maketh an oblation and a new ſatisfaction daily to be done for the quick and the dead:

Private Maſſes turn our faith from Chriſts Body crucified, to Chriſt ſacrificed in their Maſſes.

To conclude, theſe both private and publick Maſſes of Prieſts turn away the object of our Faith from the Body of Chriſt crucified, to the Body of Chriſt crucified in their Maſſes. And where God annexeth the promiſes of juſtification but onely to our Faith in the Body of Chriſt crucified; they do annex promiſe of remiſſion à pœna & culpa, to the Body in their Maſſes Sacrificed, by their application; beſides divers other horrible and intolerable corruptions which ſpring of their private and publick Maſſes, which here I leave to other at their leaſure further to conceive and to conſider. Now let us proceed to the other Articles following.

The fourth and fifth Articles of Vows and Prieſts Marriage.

The 4. and 5. Articles of Vowes and Prieſts marriage.

AS we have diſcourſed before by ſtories and order of time the antiquity of the 3 former Articles above mentioned, to wit, of Tranſubſtantiation, of the half Communion, and of private Maſſes: ſo now coming to the Article of Vows, and of Prieſts marriage, the Reader will like perchance to be ſatisfied in this likewiſe, as in the other before, and to be certified from what continuance of time theſe Vows and unmarried life of Prieſts have continued. Wherein, although ſufficient hath been ſaid before in the former proceſs of this hiſtory, as in the life of Anſelmus, alſo of Pope Hildebrand, &c. Yet for the better eſtabliſhing of the Readers mind againſt this wicked Article of Prieſts marriage, it ſhall be no great labour loſt, here briefly to recapitulat in the tractation of this matter, either what before hath been ſaid, or what is more to bee added. And to the intent that the world may ſee and judge the ſaid Law and Decree of Prieſts ſingle ſole life, to be a Doctrine of no antient ſtanding here within this Realm, but onely ſince the time of Anſelmus, I will firſt alledge for me the words of Henry Huntington, lib. 7. de hiſtoria Anglorum here following.

Read afore. Read afore.

Ex Hen. Huntingt. lib. 7. De hiſtoria Anglorum.

Prieſts marriage firſt forbidden by Anſelmus in England. The words of Huntington.

Eodem anno ad feſtum Michaelis tenuit Anſelmus Archiepiſcopus Concilium apud Londonias: In quo prohibuit ſacerdotibus Anglorum uxores antea non prohibitas. Quod quibuſdam mundiſſimum viſum eſt, quibuſdam periculoſum: ne dum mundicias viribus majores appeterent, in immundicias horribiles ad Chriſtiani nominis ſummum dedecus inciderent, &c. That is, The ſame year at the Feaſt of St. Michael, Anſelme the Archbiſhop of Canterbury held a Synod at London: in the which Synod, he forefended Prieſts here in England to have wives, which they were not inhibited before to have. Which conſtitution ſeemed to ſome perſons very pure and chaſte. To otherſom again it ſeemed very dangerous, leſt while that men ſhould ſeem to take upon them ſuch chaſtity more than they ſhould be able to bear, by that occaſion they might happily fall into horrible filthineſs, which ſhould redound to the exceeding ſlander of Chriſtian profeſſion, &c.

Prieſts not reſtrained from wives before Anſelmus time.

Albeit I deny not but before the time alſo of Anſelmus, both Odo, and after him Dunſtane Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Ethelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Oſwald Biſhop of Worceſter in the days of King Edgar, Anno 963. as they were all Monks themſelves, ſo were they great Doers againſt the marriage of Prieſts, placing in Monks in Churches, and Colledges, and putting out the married Prieſts, as ye may read before. Yet notwithſtanding neither was that in many Churches, and alſo the Prieſts then married were not conſtrained to leave their Wives, or their Rooms, but only at their own choice. For ſo writeth Malmesbury in vita Dunſtani: Itaque Clerici multarum Eccleſiarum, data optione ut aut amictum mutarent aut locis valedicerent, &c. That is, Therefore divers and ſundry Clerks of many Churches being put to their choice, whether to change their weed, or to part from their places, went their ways, &c. So alſo Elfricus after them (of whom mention was made before) was ſomewhat buſie in ſetting forward the ſingle life of Prieſts, and Lanfrancus likewiſe. But yet this reſtraint of Prieſts lawful marriage was never publikly eſtabliſhed for a Law here in the Church of England, before the coming of Anſelme in the days of William Rufus, and King Henry the firſt, writing in theſe words Boldly I command by the Authority which I have by my Archbiſhoprick, not onely within my Archbiſhoprick, but alſo throughout England, that all Prieſts, that keep Women, ſhall be deprived of their Churches, and all Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, &c. as ye may read more at large before. Which was much about the ſame time, when as Hildebrand alſo at Rome began to attempt the ſame matter, as before hath been ſhewed, and alſo beſids him were other Popes more, as Innocent the third, Pope Nocholas the ſecond, and Calixtus the ſecond, by whom the Act againſt Prieſts Marriage was brought at length to his full perfection, and ſo hath continued ever ſince.

Long

Long it were and tedious to recite here all ſuch conſtitutions of Councels provincial and general, namely, of the Councel of Carthage and of Toledo, which ſeemed to work ſomething in that behalf againſt the Matrimony of Prieſts.

Again, longer it were to number up the names of all ſuch Biſhops and Prieſts, which notwithſtanding have been married ſince that time in divers Countries, as more amply ſhall bee ſhewed (the Lord willing) in the ſequel hereof. In the mean ſeaſon, as touching the age and time of this deviliſh prohibition for Prieſts to have their Wives, this is to be found by credible proofs, and conferring of Hiſtories, that in the year of our Saviour, 1067. at what time Pope Hildebrand began firſt to occupy the Papal Chair, this Oath began firſt to be taken of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, that they ſhould ſuffer none to enter into the Miniſtery, or into any Eccleſiaſtical Function having a Wife; and likewiſe the Clergy to be bound to promiſe the ſame.

Ex actis Syn. Mediolan.

And this was, as I ſaid, about the year of our Lord, 1067. well approved and teſtified by courſe of Hiſtories. Whereby appeareth the Propheſie of Saint Paul truely to be verified, ſpeaking of theſe latter times, the firſt of Timothy the fourth, Where he writeth in theſe words, The Spirit ſpeaketh plainly, that in the latter times there ſhall ſome depart from the Faith, harkening unto Spirits of Errour, and to Doctrines of Divels, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abſtain from meats, which the Lord hath created to be taken with thankſgiving, &c.

St. Paul prophecieth forbidding of Marriage.

In this Prophecy of St. Paul two things are to be obſerved; Firſt the matter which he prophecieth of, that is, the forbidding of marriage, and forbidding of Meats, which God generally hath left free to all Men. The ſecond thing in this Prophecy to be noted is the time when this Prophecy ſhall fall, that is, in the latter times of the World. So that this concurreth right well with theſe years of Pope Hildebrand aforeſaid, being a thouſand years complete after the Aſcenſion of our Saviour; ſo that they may well be called the latter times.

St. Pauls prophecies found true, for the count of times:

This Prophecy of Saint Paul thus ſtanding, as it doth, firm and certain, that is, that forbidding of marriage muſt happen in the latter times of the world, then muſt it needs conſequently follow thereby, that the married life of Prieſts is more ancient in the Church than is the ſingle life, than the law I mean commanding the ſingle life of Prieſts. Which may ſoon be proved to be true, by the true count of times, and ſearch of Hiſtories.

The married life of Prieſts more antient in the Church than the ſingle life of Prieſts.

1. For firſt at the Councel of Nice, it is notorious that this deviliſh law of marriage to be reſtrained was ſtopped by Paphnutius.

2. Before this Councel of Nice, in the year of our Lord 180. we read of Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus, who diſſenting from Pope Victor about a certain controverſie of Eaſter day, alledgeth for himſelf how his progenitors before him ſeven together, one after another, ſucceeded in that Seet, and he now the eighth after them was placed in the ſame, uſing this his Deſcent of his Parents not onely as a defence of his cauſe, but alſo as a glory to himſelf.

3. Pope Syricius about the year of our Lord 390 wrote to the Prieſts of Spain about the ſame matter of putting their Wives from them, if his Epiſtle be not counterfeit. Theſe Spaniſh Prieſts had then with them a Biſhop of Terragon; who anſwering to Syricius in this behalf, alledged the Teſtimonies of Saint Paul, that Prieſts might lawfully retain their Wives, &c. To this Syricius replyed again; (if his writing be not forged) moſt arrogantly, and no leſs ignorantly, reproving the Prieſt that were married; and for the defence of his cauſe, alledged this ſentence of Saint Paul, Si ſecundum carnem vixeritis, moriemini; That is, If ye ſhall live after the Fleſh, ye ſhall die, &c. Whereby may appear not onely how they in Spain then had Wives, but alſo how blind theſe Men were in the Scriptures, which ſhewed themſelves ſuch and ſo great Adverſaries againſt Prieſts Marriages.

Syricius enemy to Prieſts.

Rom. 8.

4. To be ſhort, the further that we go, and the nearer that we come to the antient and Primitive time of the Church, the leſs antient wee ſhall finde the deprivation of lawful Matrimony amongſt Chriſtian Miniſters, beginning, if ye will, with the Apoſtles, their examples and Canons, who although they were not alſo married, yet divers of them were, and the reſt had power and liberty to have and keep their Wives, witneſſing Saint Paul, where he writeth of himſelf; Non habemus poteſtatem ſororem mulierem circumducendi ſicut & reliqui Apoſtoli? That is to ſay, Have we not power to lead about a Siſter to Wife, as alſo the other Apoſtles have? Whereby is to be ſeen, both what he might do, and what the other Apoſtles did. Alſo Clemens Alexandrinus, which was two hundred years after Chriſt, Lib. Strom. 7. denieth not, but that Paul was married being an Apoſtle, as well as Peter and Philip. And as the ſaid Apoſtles in their Doctrine admoniſh all men to marry that cannot otherwiſe do, ſaying unto every one being in danger of temptation, Vnuſquiſque ſuam uxorem habeat, ne tentet vos Satanas, &c. That is, Let every Man have his own Wife, leſt Satan tempt you, &c. So likewiſe the ſame Apoſtles in their Canons (as in the Popes Decrees is cited) do preciſely charge, that no Biſhop nor Prieſt ſhould ſequeſter from him his Wife for any matter or pretence of Religion, ſaying, If any ſhall teach that a Prieſt for Religion ſake ought to contemn his own Wife, let him bee accurſed &c.

Divers of the Apoſtles were married.

Clemens Alexandrinus, lib. Strom. 7.

Diſtinct. 28.

Canons of the Apoſtles.

As for the Gloſs there in the margent, which expoundeth this word contemning for exhibiting things neceſſary for her ſuſtenance, all the world may ſee that to be a Gloſs of meer Sophiſtry. And becauſe I have here made mention of Clemens Alexandrinus, it ſhall not bee to our purpoſe impertinent, to infer the words of this worthy writer, wherewith he doth defend Prieſts lawful matrimony, againſt certain vain boaſters of Virginity, in his time. Dicunt glorioſi iſti jactatores, ſe imitari Dominum, qui neque uxorem duxit, neque inmundo aliquid poſſedit, ſe magis quam alios Evangelium intellexiſſe gloriantes. That is, Theſe glorious braggers do vaunt themſelves to bee the followers of the Lord, who neither had Wife, nor yet poſſeſſed any thing here in the world, &c. And it followeth; Eis autem dicit Sriptura, Deus ſuperbis reſiſtit, humilibus autem dat gratiam. Deinde neſciunt cauſam cur Dominus uxorem non duxerit. Primum quidem, propriam Sponſam habuit Eccleſiam. Deinde vero nec homo erat communis, ut opus haberet etiam adjutore aliquo ſecundum carnem, &c. To theſe the Scripture maketh anſwer, God withſtandeth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Again they conſider not the cauſe why the Lord took no Wife. Firſt, he had his own peculiar Spouſe, which is the Church. Moreover, neither was he as a common man, that he ſhould ſtand in ſuch need of a helper after the Fleſh, &c. And in the ſame Book a little after alledging againſt them that abhor Matrimony, he inferreth the words of Saint Paul, how that in the latter days, Some ſhall fall from the Faith, attending to ſpirits of Errour, and to Doctrin of Devils, forbidding to marry, and to abſtain from meats, &c.

A ſophiſtical gloſs.

Clemens Alexandrinus.

The cauſe why Chriſt had no wife

1. Tim. 4.

Which place of Saint Paul, Clement here applieth not againſt the Novatians, and them that condemn Matrimony in general in all men, as naught; but he applieth it onely againſt ſuch, as forbid marriage in part, and namely in Prieſts, &c.

This Clement wrote after Chriſt two hundred years, and yet if we come downward to lower times, we ſhall find both by the Councel of Gangren three hundred years, and alſo by the Councel of Nice four hundred years after Chriſt, the ſame liberty, Prieſts marriage eſtabliſhed and enacted as a thing both good and godly. The words of the Gangren Councel theſe; Si quis diſcernit Presbyterum conjugatum, tanquam occaſione nuptiarum quod offerre non debeat, & ab ejus oblatione ideo abſtinet, anathema ſit, &c. That is, If any do judge that a Prieſt for his marriage ſake ought not to miniſter, and therefore doth abſtain from the ſame, let him be accurſed.

Concilium Gangrenſe.

Diſtinct. 28

Moreover proceeding yet in times and Chronicles of the Church, we ſhall come to the ſixth Councel called Synodus Conſtantinopolitana, almoſt ſeven hundred years after Chriſt: the words of the which Councel be alledged in the Decrees, and be theſe in Latine. Quoniam in Romani ordine canonis eſſe cognovimus tradit[illegible] eos qui ordinati ſunt Diaconi vel [illegible]

Concilium Conſtantinopolitanum, Diſtinct. 3. Quoniam.

confiteri quod non ſuis jam copulentur uxoribus, tanquam, ſequentes Canonem Apoſtolicæ diligentiæ, & Conſtitutiones ſacrorum virorum, legales nuptias a modo valere volumus, nullo modo cum Uxoribus ſuis eorum connubia diſſolventes, aut privantes eos familiaritate adinvicem, in tempore opportuno, &c. That is, Becauſe in the order of the Roman Canon, we know it ſo to be received, that ſuch as be Deacons and Prieſts ſhall profeſs themſelves to have no more copulation with their Wives, we following the ancient Canon of the diligent Apoſtles and Conſtitutions of holy men, enact that ſuch lawful Marriage from henceforth ſhall ſtand in force, in no caſe diſſolving their conjunction with their Wives, neither depriving them of their mutual ſociety and familiarity together, inſuch time as they ſhall think convenient, &c. Hitherto ye have heard the decree; hear now the penalty in the ſame decree and diſtinction contained. Si quis igitur præſumpſerit contra Apoſtolicos Canones aliquos Presbyterorum & Diaconorum privare a contactu & communione legalis Uxoris ſuæ, deponatur, &c. That is, if any man therefore ſhall preſume againſt the Canons of the Apoſtles, to deprive either Prieſt or Deacon from the touching and Company of his lawful Wife, let him be deprived. And likewiſe this Prieſt and Deacon, whoſoever for Religion ſake ſhall put away his Wife, let him be excommunicate, &c. and the Counſel of Gangren ſaith: Let him be accurſed. By theſe Words of the Counſel recited, ſix things are to be noted.

Six things in this Counſel to be noted.

1 Firſt, how this Council calleth the Marriage of Prieſts lawful, contrary to theſe ſix Articles, and to a certain late Engliſh writer of our Country, entituling his Book againſt the unlawful Marriage of Prieſts.

2 In that this Councel ſo followeth the Canons of the Apoſtles, and Conſtitutions of holy men; we have to underſtand what the cenſures both of the Apoſtles and determination of other holy men were therein.

3. If the Injunction of this Councel, agreeing thus with the Apoſtles and holy men, ſtood with Truth, the contrary Canon of the Romans, and alſo of theſe ſix Engliſh Articles, muſt needs be condemned of errour.

4 By this Council appeareth, that ſo long time, almoſt ſeven hundred years after Chriſt, this prohibition of Prieſts Marriage was not yet entred into the Orient Church but very ſtoutly was holden out.

5. By the Roman Canon here mentioned, which began with Gregorius ſix hundred years after Chriſt, a little before this Councel, it cannot be denied, but the Church of Rome began then to diſſever, not only from the verity, but alſo from the unity of all other Churches following the Apoſtolick Doctrin, albeit the ſaid Roman Canon at that time ſtood not long, but was ſhortly diſannulled by the ſaid Gregorius again, by the occaſion of Infants Heads found in the fiſh Pond; whereof (Chriſt willing) more ſhall be ſpoken hereafter.

The crafty packing of the Romans in ſuppreſſing and counterfaiting the Canons of Councels.

6. Sixthly here is to be noted and remembred the crafty falſe packing, and fraud of the Romans, which in the Latin Book of Councels, in divers new impreſſions have ſuppreſſed this Canon, becauſe belike it maketh little with their purpoſe: playing much like with this, as Pope Soſimus, Bonifacius, and Celeſtinus played with the ſixth Councel at Carthage, which for their ſupremacy would have forged a falſe Canon of Nice had not the Councel ſent to Conſtantinople for the true exemplar thereof, and ſo proved them open lyers to their faces. So likewiſe this Canon above mentioned, although it be omitted in ſome Books, yet being found in the antient and true written Copies, being alledged of Nilus a Greek Biſhop of Theſſalonica two hundred years before; and moreover being found and alledged in the Popes own Book of Decrees, Diſtinct. 31. muſt needs convince them of manifeſt theft and falſehood.

Diſt 31.

Thus it may ſtand ſufficiently proved, that the deprivation of Prieſts lawful Marriage all this ſpace was not entred into the Church, neither Greek nor Latin, at leaſt took no full poſſeſſion before Pope Hildebrands time, Anno Domini 1070. and eſpecially Pope Calixtus time, Anno Domini 1120. which were the firſt open Extortion of Prieſts Marriage.

Aventinus, a faithful Writer of his time, writing of the Councel of Hildebrand, hath theſe words; Sacerdotes illa tempeſtate publice uxores, ſicut cæteri Chriſtiani, habebant, filios procreabant, ſicuti inſtrumentis donationum quæ illi Templis, Myſtis, & Monachis fecere, ubi hæ nominatim cum conjugibus teſtes citantur & honeſto vocabulo Presbyteriſſæ nuncupantur, invenio. Cæſar tum &c. That is, in thoſe days Prieſts commonly had Wives, as other Chriſtian men had, and had Children alſo, as may appear by antient Inſtruments and Deeds of gift, which were then given to Churches, to the Clergy, and to Religious Houſes: In the which Inſtruments both the Prieſts and their Wives alſo with them (which there be called Presbyteriſſæ) I find to be alledged for witneſſes. It happened moreover the ſame time (ſaith Aventine) that the Emperour, had the inveſting of divers Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Abbeys, and Nunneries within his Dominions. Pope Hildebrand diſdaining againſt both theſe ſorts aforeſaid, that is, both againſt them that were inveſted by the Emperour, and alſo againſt all thoſe Prieſts that had Wives, provided ſo in his Councel at Rome that they which were promoted by the Emperour, into Livings of the Church, were counted to come in by Simony; the other, which were Married Prieſts, were counted for Nicolaitans Whereupon Pope Hildebrand writing his Letters to the Emperour, to Dukes, Princes, and other great Prelates and Potentates, namely to Bertholdus, Zaringer, to Rodulphus of Suevia, to Welphon of Bavaria, to Adalberon, and to their Ladies, and to divers other to whom he thought good, alſo to Biſhops, namely to Otto Biſhop of Conſtance, with other Prieſts and Lay People, willed them in his Letters to refuſe and to keep no Company with thoſe Simoniacks and thoſe Nicolaitan Prieſts (for ſo were they termed then) which had either any Eccleſiaſtical living by the Emperor, or elſe which had wives, to avoid their Maſſes, neither to talk, neither to eat nor drink with them, nor once to ſpeak to them, nor to ſalute them, but utterly to ſhun them, as men execrable and wicked, no otherwiſe than they would eſchew the Plague or Peſtilence.

Aventinus in Hiſtor. Bonorum.

Simoniack Prieſts, Nicolaitan Prieſts.

Ex Aventino Annal Bonor lib. 5.

By reaſon whereof enſued a mighty ſchiſm and affliction among the Flock of Chriſt, ſuch as lightly the like hath not been ſeen: For the Prieſts went againſt their Biſhops, the People againſt the Prieſts, the Laity againſt the Clergy: Briefly, all ran together in heaps and in confuſion. Men and Women, as every one was ſet upon miſchief, wickedneſs, contention, and avarice, took thereby occaſion, upon every light ſuſpition, to reſiſt their Miniſter, to ſpoyl the goods of the Church. The vulgar People contemned the Prieſts which had married Wives, deſpiſed their Religion, and all things that they did, yea, and in many places would purge the place where they had been, with holy Water, and brent their Tithes. Alſo ſuch was the miſchief of them, that they would take the holy Myſteries which thoſe married Prieſts had conſecrated, and caſt them in the dirt, and tread them under their feet: For ſo then had Hildebrand taught them, that thoſe were no Prieſts, neither that they were Sacraments which they did conſecrate. So that by this occaſion many falſe Prophets roſe, ſeducing the People from the Truth of Chriſt by forged fables, and falſe miracles, and fained gloſſes, wreſting the Scriptures as ſerved beſt for their own purpoſes. Of whom few there were that kept any true chaſtity. Many could make glorious boaſts and brags thereof; but the greateſt part under the ſhew and pretence of honeſty and pureneſs of life committed Inceſt, Fornication, Adultery, every where almoſt, and no puniſhment was for the ſame, &c. Thus much out of Aventinus, lib. 5. Annal.

To this Teſtimony of Aventinus above mentioned we will alſo adjoyn the record of Gebuilerus a writer of this our later time, and one alſo of their own crew, who doth teſtifie that in the time of the Emperor Henricus the fourth, Anno. 1057. the number of twenty four Biſhops, both in Germany, Spain, and in France, were married, with the Clergy alſo of their Dioceſs.

Gebuilerus.

Of the which Spaniſh Biſhops we read alſo in Iſidorus, which wrote more then ſix hundred years after Chriſt (and the place alſo cited in the Popes Diſtinctions) in his Book De Clericorum vita, how they ought either to lead an honeſt chaſt life, or elſe to keep themſelves within the band of Matrimony, &c. Whereby is declared the ſingle life of Prieſts either to be then voluntary or elſe their marriage not to be reſtrained as yet by any law.

Moreover, ſuch Calixtian Prieſts as be now a days, counting Prieſts marriage as a new deviſe, and not ſtanding with ancient times, let them look upon the decree of Pope Symmachus, and anſwer thereof to the Gloſs Diſt. 81. where it is written: Let Prieſts be all reſtrained from the converſation of all Women, except it be their Mother, Siſter, or their own Wife, &c. Where the Gloſs in the margent giveth a Note, ſaying, Hic loquitur ſecundum antiqua tempora.

Calixtian Prieſts, that is, of Calixtus ſect, who chiefly condemned Prieſts marriage.

Thus if either the voice of Scripture might take place with theſe men that be ſo rigorous againſt Prieſts marriage: or if the examples of the Apoſtles might move them (whom Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth to have been all married, except only Paul and John) or elſe if the multitude of married Biſhops and Prieſts might prevail with them, here might be rehearſed.

All theſe were married Biſhops.

Diſtinct. 56. Hoſius.

Of Polycrates and his ſeven Anceſtors Biſhops, and married Men, we ſpake before.

Epiphanius, Biſhop of Conſtantinople in Juſtinians time, was the more commended, becauſe his Father and Anceſtors before him were Prieſts and Biſhops married.

Hierome ſaith, That in his time, Plurimi Sacerdotes habebant matrimonia; That is, Many Prieſts were then married Men.

Pope Damaſus reciteth up a great number of Biſhops of Rome which were Prieſts Sons; as.

And how many other Biſhops and Prieſts in other Countries, beſides theſe Biſhops of Rome, might be annexed to this Catalogue, if our leaſure were ſuch to make a whole beaderol of them all?

In the mean time the words of Sylvius Cardinal, and afterward Biſhop of Rome, are not to be forgotten, which he wrote to a certain Friend of his, which after his Orders taken was diſpoſed to marriage. To whom the foreſaid Sylvius anſwereth again in theſe words following; Credimus te utinon inſulſo conſilio, ſi, cum nequeas continere, conjugium quæris: quamvis id prius cogitandum fuerat, antea quam initia veris ſacris ordinibus. Sed non ſumus Dij omnes qui futura proſpicere valeamus. Quando huc ventum eſt, ut legire ſtere nequeas, melius eſt nubere quam uri, &c. That is, We believe that you in ſo doing follow no ſiniſter Counſel, in that you chuſe to be married, when otherwiſe you are not able to live chaſte, Albeit this Counſel ſhould have come into your Head before that you entred into Eccleſiaſtical Orders. But we are not all Gods to foreſee before what ſhall happen hereafter. Now forſomuch as the matter and caſe ſtandeth ſo, that you are not able to reſiſt the Law, better it is to marry than to burn, &c.

Ex Æneas Silvio. Epiſt. 321.

All the premiſſes well conſidered, it ſhall ſuffice I truſt, though no more were ſaid, to prove that this general Law and prohibition of Prieſts marriage, pretended to be ſo ancient, is of no ſuch great time nor long continuance of years as they make it, but rather to be a late deviſed Doctrin, gendered by the Monks, and grounded upon no Reaſon, Law, nor Scripture, but that certain, which be repiners againſt the Truth, do wrack and wreſt a few places out of the Doctors, and two or three Councels for their pretenſed purpoſe. Whoſe objections and blind Cavillations, I, as profeſſing here but to write ſtories, referr to the further diſcuſſion of Divines, in whoſe Books this matter is more at large to be ſought and ſearched. In the mean ſeaſon, ſo much as appertaineth to the ſearching of times and antiquity, and to the conſervation of ſuch Acts and Mounments as are behoveable for the Church, I thought hereunto not unprofitable to be adjoyned a certain Epiſtle learned and antient, of Voluſianus Biſhop ſometime of Carthage, tending to the defence of Prieſts lawful wedlock, which Æneas Sylvius in deſcriptione Germaniæ, alſo Illyricus in Catal. and Melanæthon, Lib. de Conjugio, do father upon Huldericus Biſhop of Auguſta, in the time of Pope Nicholas the ſecond: but as I find it in an old written example ſent by John Bale to Matthew Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as it is joyned in the ſame Book, ſo it beareth alſo the ſame title and name of Voluſianus Biſhop of Carthage; joyning alſo withal another Latine Epiſtle, which perhaps hath not been ſeen in Print before. The Copies of both which Epiſtles, as being pertinent to the purpoſe preſent, hereunder enſue in form as followeth.

Epiſtola Voluſiani Carthaginenſis Epiſcopi ad Nicolaum Romanorum Epiſcopum.

Hæc eſt reſcriptio Voluſiani Carthaginenſis Epiſcopi, in qua Papæ Nicolao de continentia Clericorum, non iuſtè, ſed impiè nec canonicè ſed indiſcretè tractanti, ita reſpondit.

Nicolao Domino & Patri pervigili, ſanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ Proviſori, Voluſianus ſolo nomine Epiſcopus, amorem ut filius, timorem ut ſervus.

The Epiſtle of Voluſianus, or as ſome ſay, of Huldericus to the Pope, in defence of Prieſts marriage.

CUm tua, ô Pater & Domine, decreta ſuper Clericorum continentia nuper mihi tranſmiſſa à diſcretione invenirem aliena, timor me turbavit cum triſtitia. Timor quidem propter hoc, quod dicitur Paſtoris ſententia, ſive juſta ſive injuſta, timenda eſt. Timebam enim infirmis Scripturæ auditoribus, qui vel juſtæ vix obediunt ſententiæ, ne injuſtam conculcantes liberè, oneroſa, imo importabili Paſtoris prævaricatione præcepti, ſe obligarent. Triſtitia verò vel compaſſio, dum conſiderabam, qua ratione membra cavere poſſent, capite ſuo tam gravi morbo laborante. Quid enim gravius, quid totius Eccleſiæ compaſſione dignius, quam te ſummæ Sedis Pontificem, ad quem totius Eccleſiæ ſpectat examen, à ſancta diſcretione vel minimum exorbitare? Non param quippe ab hac deviaſti, cum Clericos, quos ad abſtinentiam conjugij monere debebas, ad hanc imperioſa quadam violentia cogi volebas. Nunquid enim merito communi omnium ſapientum judicio hæc eſt violentia, cum contra Evangelicam inſtitutionem, ac ſancti Spiritus dictationem, ad privata aliquis decreta cogitur exequenda?

Cum Ergo plurima veteris ac novi teſtamenti ſuppetant exempla, ſanctam (ut noſti) diſcretionem docentia, tuæ rogo ne grave ſit Paternitati, vel pauca ex pluribus huic paginæ interſeri. Dominus quidem in veteri lege Sacerdoti conjugium conſtituit, quod illi poſtmodum interdixiſſe non legitur. Sed idem in Evangelio loquitur; Sunt Eunuchi, qui ſe caſtraverunt propter regnum cœlorum.

cælorum, ſed non omnes hoc verbum capiunt: qui poteſt capere, capiat: Quapropter Apoſtolus quoque ait; De virginibus præceptum Domini non habeo, conſilium autem do. Qui etiam juxta prædictum Domini, Non omnes hoc conſilium capere poſſe conſiderans, ſed multos ejuſdem conſilii aſſentatores, hominibus, non Deo, pro falſa ſpecie continentiæ placere volentes, graviora vides committere, patrum ſcilicet uxores ſubagitare, maſculorum ac pecudum amplexus non abhorrere; ne morbi hujus aſperſione ad uſque peſtilentiam convaleſcente, nimium ſtatus labefactetur Eccleſiæ totius: Propter fornicationem, dixit, unuſquiſque ſuam uxorem habeat. Quod ſpecialiter ad Laicos pertinere iidem mentiuntur hypocritæ: qui licet in quovis ſanctiſſimo Ordine conſtituti, alienis tamen uxoribus non dubitant abuti. Et quod flendo cernimus, omnes in ſupradictis ſcæviunt ſceleribus: hi nimirum non rectè Scripturam intellexerunt, cujus mammillam quia durius preſſere, ſanguinem pro lacte biberunt. Num illud Apoſtolicum, unuſquiſque ſuam habeat uxorem, nullum excipit vere, niſi profeſſorem continentiæ, vel eum qui de continuanda in Domino virginitate prefixit.

Scripturæ perperam intellectæ. Dutius premendo ſanguis elicatur.

Quod nihilomus in tuam, Pater venerande, condecet ſtrenuitatem, ut omnem, qui tibi manu vel ore votum faciens continentiæ poſtea voluerit apoſtatare, aut ad votum exequendum ex debito conſtringas, aut ab omni Ordine Canonica Authoritate deponas; & ut hoc viriliter implere ſufficias, me omneſque mei ordinis viros adjutores habebis non pigros. Verum ut hujus voti neſcios omninò ſcias non eſſe cogendos, audi Apoſtolum dicentem ad Timotheum: Oportet (inquit) Epiſcopum irreprehenſibilem eſſe, unius uxoris virum. Quam ſententiam ne quis ad ſolam Eccleſiam verteret, ſubjunxit, Qui autem domui ſuæ præeſſe neſcit, quomodo Eccleſiæ Dei diligentiam habebit? Similiter, inquit, Diaconi ſint unius uxoris viri, qui filiis ſuis benè præſint, & ſuis domibus. Hanc autem uxorem à ſacerdote benedicendam eſſe, Sancti Sylveſtri Papæ decretis ſcio te ſufficienter docuiſſe. His & hujuſmodi Sanctæ Scripturæ ſententiis, regulæ Clericorum ſcriptor non immeritò concordans ait; Clericus ſit pudicus, aut certè unius matrimonii vinculo fœderatus. Ex quibus omnibus veracitèr colligit quòd Epiſcopus & Diaconus reprehenſibiles notantur, ſi in mulieribus multis dividuntur. Si verò unam ſub obtentu religionis abjiciunt, utrunque, ſcilicet Epiſcopum & Diaconum ſinè graduum differentia, hæc Canonica damnat ſententia: Epiſcopus aut Presbyter uxorem propriam nequaquam ſub obtentu religionis abjiciat, ſi verò rejecerit, excommunicetur; & ſi perſeveraverit, dejiciatur. Sanctus quoque Auguſtinus, ſanctæ diſcretionis non inſcius; Nullum (inquit) tam grave facinus eſt, quin admittendum ſit, ut devitetur pejus.

Can. Apoſt. 5. If this Rule of S. Auſtin be true, better it is for the Papiſts to admit the marriage of Prieſts, then that Adultery, Sodomitey, and other like inconveniences ſhould follow, as they do.

Legimus præterea in ſecundo Tripartitæ Eccleſiaſticæ libro hiſtoriæ, quòd cum Synodus Nicæna hæc eadem vellet ſancire decreta, ut videlicet Epiſcopi, Presbyteri, Diaconi, poſt conſecrationem à propriis uxoribus vel omnino abſtinerent, vel gradum deponerent; ſurgens in medio Paphnutius (ex illis Martyribus quos Maximus Imperator, oculis eorum dextris evulſis & ſiniſtris ſuris inciſis, damnavit) contradixit, honorabiles confeſſus nuptias, ac caſtitatem eſſe, dicens, connubium cum propria uxore; perſuaſitque Concilio, ne talem ponerent legem, gravem afferens eſſe cauſam; quæ aut ipſis, aut eorum conjugibus occaſio fornicationis exiſteret. Et hæc quidem Paphnutius, licet nuptiarum expers, expoſuit; Synoduſque ejus ſententiam laudavit, & nihil ex hac parte ſancivit, ſed hoc in uniuſcujuſque voluntate, non in neceſſitate dimiſit.

*Sunt verò aliqui qui S.*Gregorium ſuæ ſectæ ſumunt adjutorem; quorum quidem temeritatem rideo, ignorantiam doleo. Ignorant enim, quòd periculoſum hujus hæreſis decretum à S. Gregorio factum, condigno pœnitentiæ fructu poſtmodum ab eodem ſit purgatum. Quippe cum die quadam in vivarium ſuum propter piſces miſſet, & allata inde plus quam ſex millia Infantum capita videret, intima mox ductus pœnitentia ingemuit, & factum à ſe de abſtinentia decretum tantæ cædis cauſam confeſſus, condigno illud, ut dixi, pœnitentiæ fructu purgavit: ſuoque decreto prorſus damnato, Apoſtolum ſecutus laudavit conſilium; Melius eſt nubere, quàm [illegible]: addens ex ſua parte, melius eſt nubere, quàm mortis occaſionem præbere. Hunc forſitan rei eventum ſi illi mecum legiſſent, non tam temere, credo, judicarent, Dominicum ſaltem timentes præceptum; Nolite judicare, ut non judicemini. Inde Paulus dicit Tu quis es, qui judicas alienum ſervum? ſuo Domino ſtat, aut cadit. Stabit autem; potens eſt enim Dominus ſtatuere illum. Ceſſet ergo Sanctitas tua cogere, quos tantum deberet admonere; ne privato (quod abſit) præcepto tam veteri quàm novo contrarius inveniaris teſtamento. Nam, ut ait Sanctus Auguſtinus ad Donatum, ſolum eſt quod in tua juſtitia pertimeſcimus, ne non pro lenitatis Chriſtianæ conſideratione, ſed pro immanitate facinorum cenſeas coercendum. Quod te per ipſum Chriſtum ne facias obſecramus, ſic enim peccata compeſcenda ſunt, ut ſuperſint quos peccaſſe pœniteat. Illud etiam Auguſtini volumus te recordari, quod ait, Nihil nocendi fiat cupiditate, omnia conſulendi charitate: & nihil fiat immanitèr, & nihil inhumaniter. Idem de eodem, in timore Chriſti, in nomine Chriſti exhortor, quicunque non habetis temporalia, habere non cupiatis: quicunque habetis, in eis non præſumatis. Dico autem, non ſi iſta habetis, damnamini; ſed ſi in iſtis præſumatis, damnamini: ſi propter talia magni vobis videamini, ſi generir humani conditionem communem propter excellentem unitatem obliviſcamini. Quod nimirum poculum diſcretionis exillo fonte Apoſtolicæ hauſerat prædicationis; Solutus es ab uxore, noli quærere uxorem; alligatus es uxori, noli quærere ſolutionem? Ubi & ſubditur, Qui habent uxores, ſint tanquam non habentes; & qui utuntur mundo, tanquam non utantur. Idem dicit de vidua, Cui vult nubat, tantùm in Domino. Nubere in Domino eſt, nihil in contrahendo connubio quod Dominus prohibeat, attentare. Jeremias quoque ait, Nolitè confidere in verbis mendacii, dicentes, Templum Domini, Templum Domini, Templum Domini eſt. Quod Hieronymus exponens, Poteſt (inquit) & hoc illis virginibus convenire, quæ jactant pudicitiam ſuam impudenti vultu: præferunt caſtitatem, cum aliud habeat conſcientia, & neſciunt illam Apoſtoli definitionem de virgine, ut ſit ſancta corpore & ſpiritu. Quid enim prodeſt corporis pudicitia, animo conſtuprato, ſi cæteras virtutes, quas Propheticus Sermo deſcribit, non habuerit? Quas quidem, quia te aliquatenus habere videmus, & quia diſcretionem, licet in hac re neglectam, in aliis tamen vitæ tuæ conſtitutionibus eam honeſtè conſervatam non ignoramus: hujus intentionis pravitatem te citò correcturum non deſperamus. Et ideo non quanta poſſumus gravitate, iſtam licèt graviſſimam negligentiam corripimus vel judicamus. Quamqam enim ſecundum vocabula quæ uſus obtinuit, ſit Epiſcopatus Presbyterio major: tamen Auguſtinus Hiernoymo minor eſt, & à minori quolibet non eſt refugienda correptio: præſertim cum is qui corripitur, & contra veritatem, & pro hominibus niti invenitur. Neque enim (ut ait Sanctus Auguſtinus ad Bonifacium,) quorumlibet diſputationes quamvis Catholicorum & laudatorum virorum, velut Scripturas Canonicas habere debemus: ut non liceat nobis, ſalva honorificentia quæ illis debetur, aliquid in eorum ſcriptis improbare atque reſpuere, ſi fortè invenerimus quod aliter ſenſerint quàm veritas habeat, divino adjutorio vel ab aliis intellecta vel à nobis. Quid autem veritati magis contrarium, quam hoc, quod cum ipſa veritas de continentia loquens, non unius hominis, ſed omnium planè (non excepto numero profeſſorum continentiæ) dicat; qui poteſt capere, capiat; iſti (neſcitur unde inſtigati) dicant, Qui non poteſt capere, feriatur anathemate.

Quid vero per homines fieri poteſt ſtolidius? quid divinæ maledictioni obligatius, quam cum aliqui, vel Epiſcopi videlicet, vel Archidiaconi, ita præcipites ſint in libidinem, ut neque adulteria, neque inceſtus, neque maſculorum (proh pudor!) turpiſſimos amplexus ſciant abhorrere? caſta Clericorum conjugia ſibi dicant fœtere, & ab eis non veræ juſtitiæ compaſſione, ſed falſæ juſtitiæ dedignatione, non ut conſervos rogent continere, ſed ut ſervos jubeant ac cogant abſtinere? Ad cujus imperii, ne dicam Conſilii, tam fatuum, tamque turpem addunt ſuggeſtionem, ut dicant; honeſtius eſt pluribus occultè implicari, quàm apertè in hominum vultu & conſcientia cum una ligari. Hi ſunt, qui prius deberent nobis perſuadere, ut in conſpectu ejus, cui omnia nuda & aperta ſunt, erubeſcamus peccatores eſſe, quam in conſpectu hominum mundi eſſe. Licet ergo merito ſuæ pravitatis, nullius conſilium mereantur pietatis, nos tamen memores humanitatis, divinæ eis conſilium authoritatis nunquam à pietate vacantis, per viſcera miniſtramus charitatis. Illud quoque rogamus eos attendere, quod dominus dicit de muliere; Qui ſine peccato eſt veſtrum, primus in eam lapidem mittat, quaſi diceret; Si lex jubet, ſi Moſes jubet, jubeo & ego, ſed competentes legis miniſtros exigo. Attendentes quid adducitis, attendite quæſo & quid eſtis: quia, ſi te ipſum, ut ait Scriptura, perſpexeris, nulli unquam detraxeris. Significatum eſt autem nobis de quibuſdam eorum quod tanta apud ſe intumeſcant elatione, ut gregem Domini, pro quo boni paſtores animas non dubitant ponere, iſti verberibus etiam abſque ratione præſumant laniare. Quorum ſententiam Sanc. Gregorius nimium deplorans ait. Quid fiet de ovibus, quando paſtores lupi fiunt? Sed quis vincitur, niſi qui ſævit? Quis verò perſecutorem judicabit, niſi qui dorſum ſuum ad flagella patienter miniſtravit? Operæ precium eſt ante, ut audiatur, quo fructu tantum eccleſiæ Dei inducebant ſcandalum, tantum clerus deſpectum, & ab ipſis Epiſcopis, & ab eorum infidelibus patiatur. Nec enim eos infideles dicere dubitaverim, de quibus Paulus Apoſtolus dicit ad Timotheum; Quia in noviſſimis temporibus diſcedent quidam à fide, attendentes ſpiritibus erroris, & Doctrinis dæmoniorum, in hypocriſi loquentium mendacium, & cauteriatam habentium conſcientiam, prohibentium nubere.

1. Tim. 4.

Ex cælibatu Sacerdotum qui fructus oriantur.

Hic eſt autem, ſi diligenter inſpiciatur totius eorum manipulus zizaniæ, totius eventus inſaniæ, ut dum clerici licita unius mulieris conſortia, Phariſaico devicti, quod abſit, furore, relinquere cogantur, fornicatores, & adulteri, & aliorum pravitatum turpiſſimi miniſtri cum ipſis efficiantur. Qui hanc in excleſia Dei hæreſim ſicut cæci duces cæcorum machinantur, ut videlicet illud impleatur quod Pſalmiſta eis, utpote doctoribus erroris, taliter imprecatur; Obſcurentur oculi eorum ne videant, &c. Quia ergo nemo, ò Apoſtolice, ignorat, quod ſi tu per tui decreti ſententiam, tantam futuram eſſe peſtilentiam ſolitæ diſcretionis claritate perſpexiſſes, nunquam quorumlibet tam pravis ſuggeſtionibus conſenſiſſes: debitæ tibi ſubjectionis fidelitate conſulimus, ut vel nunc ad tanti ſcandali ab Eccleſia Dei propulſionem evigiles; & qua noſti diſcretionis diſciplina, Phariſaicam ab ovili Dei extirpes doctrinam, ne ſcilicet unica Sunamitis, adulteriis diutius uſa meritis, gentem ſanctam, regale ſacerdotium, per irrecuperabile à ſponſo, Chriſto videlicet, avellat divortium: dum nemo ſine caſtimonia, non tantùm in virginali flore, ſed etiam in conjugali habita conjunctione, viſurus ſit dominum noſtrum; qui cum Deo patre & ſpiritu ſancto vivit & regnat per omnia ſæcula ſæculorum, Amen.

Pſal. 69.

As touching the antiquity of this Epiſtle above prefixed, it appeareth by the Copy which I have ſeen, and received of the above named Matthew Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to be of an old and antient writing, both by the form of the Characters, and by the wearing of the Parchment, almoſt conſumed by length of years and time.

And as concerning the authors thereof, the ſuperſcription (if it be true) plainly declareth it to be the Epiſtle of Voluſianus Biſhop of Carthage. Albeit, heretofore it hath commonly been taken and alledged by the name of Huldericus Biſhop of Auguſta, and partly appeareth to be ſo, both by the Teſtimony of Æneas Silvius, in Deſcriptione Germaniæ, who in the ſaid treatiſe affirmeth that Huldericus, Biſhop of Auguſta, did conſtantly reſiſt the Pope, aboliſhing the Marriage of Prieſts, &c. and alſo by the record of Illiricus, teſtifying that the ſaid Epiſtle not only remaineth yet to this day in old Monuments, but alſo that he himſelf did ſee two exemplars of the ſame, both pretending the name of the ſaid Huldericus to be the Author, notwithſtanding this Copy here above prefixed beareth the Title not of Huldericus Biſhop of Auguſta, but of Voluſianus Biſhop of Carthage in Africk, as you may ſee by the words of the preamble, ſaying, This is the reſcript of Voluſianus Biſhop of Carthage, unto Pope Nicholas concerning Prieſts not to be reſtrained from lawful Marriage, &c.

Furthermore, which Pope Nicholas this was to whom theſe Epiſtles were written, it is not plainly ſhewed in the ſame, but that by probable conjecture it may be gheſſed rather to be Pope Nicholas the ſecond, for ſo much as in his time Prieſts Marriage began ſomewhat earneſtly to be called in, more than at other times before.

Now as touching the Engliſh of this Latin Epiſtle above exhibited, foraſmuch as the ſame is before inſerted, we will refer the reader unto the ſame place. Wherein if the tranſlation of the Engliſh do ſwerve any thing from the Latin here above prefixed, the cauſe was for that the Latin Copy which here we follow, came not before to our hands. Read before.

Another Epiſtle of the ſaid Voluſianus, concerning Marriage not to be reſtrained from Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church.

Quid eſt ſeparare apud vos primitias Domino, niſi ſtudioſa cogitatione & meditatione in cordibus noſtris tractare, & cum diſcretione deponere & dividere, quid Domino de theſauro cordis noſtri valeamus offerre? Si enim rectè offeras & non rectè dividas, peccaſti. Et quid eſt prono animo offerre, niſi quod ait Pſalmiſta; Voluntariè ſacrificabo tibi? Et Apoſtolus, Non ex triſtitia aut neceſſitate; Hilarem datorem diligit Deus. Et Salomon; *Bono animo gloriam redde Domino, & in omni dato hilarem fac vultum tuum, & in exultatione ſanctifica decimas tuas, & in bono oculo facito ad inventionem manuum tuarum. Et Apoſtolus Iacobus; Non amat Dominus (inquit) coacta ſervitia. Et, maledictus qui opus Domini facit negligenter; (id eſt) non curioſe, neque voluntariè. Sicut nos ergo Dominus invitos aliquid offerre non jubet: ita vos invitos aliquos offerre aliquid cogere prohibet per eundem Moſen ubi ait; Ne facias Calumniam proximo tuo, nec vi opprimas eum. Calumniam proximo facere, eſt eum non compatiendo & miſerando corrigere de peccato; ſed dedignando & exprobrando & detrahendo arguere & accuſare, & non in ſpiritu lenitatis inſtruere, ſed in ſpiritu aſperitatis & auſteritatis deſtruere, cum Apoſtolus dicat; ſi præoccupatus fuerit homo in aliquo delicto, vos qui ſpirituales eſtis inſtruite hujuſmodi in ſpiritu lenitatis, conſiderans teipſum ne & tu tenteris. Vi opprimere proximum, eſt ultra vires ſuas aliquid exigere, & onus quod portare non poteſt imponere, imponentibus fortaſſis importabile, cùm Dominus de Phariſæis ad Diſcipulos loquens, hoc eis prohibeat dicens: Super Cathedram Moſis ſedent Scribæ et Phariſæi, &c. Et Apoſtolus Petrus, Paſcite (inquit) qui in vobis eſt, gregem Domini, providentes, non coactè ſed ſpontaneè, ſecundum Dominum; neque turpis lucri gratia ſed voluntariè; neque dominantes in Clero, ſed forma eſtote gregi ex animo. tatis arbitrium vel poteſtatis imperium: et illis formam eſſe gregi debere, ut quid alijs imperant, ipſi priores faciant, & non minus exemplis, quam verbo proficiant. Ex animo (inquit) non ex imperio; ex voluntate, non coactione; ex charitate, non ex cupiditate. Sunt enim plerique qui zelo cupiditatis, non charitatis accenſi alijs imperant quod implere non valent; et dum lucrum animarum quærere ſe ſimulant, lucrum potius terrenum captant. Quod benè Baalam Propheta exprimit, qui Prophetiæ donum et benedicendi gratiam, quam Divinitus acceperat, non ad utilitatem aliorum, ſed ad uſum ſuæ cupiditatis vertit; et ſicut nonnulli qui dum alios corrigunt, hoc zelo Dei facere ſe oſtentant, et dum meliores alijs ſe videri volunt, hoc præſumptione quadam et temeritate agunt, et ideo in ipſo præſumptionis ſuæ et temeritatis actu corruunt. De quibus dicit Apoſtolus: Qui zelum Dei habent ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam. Zelum Dei ſecundum eſt ſcientiam habere, provide et conſulte in divinis rebus aliquid agere. Quorum profectò Oza ſimilitudinem gerit, Qui dum Arcam Domini, calcitrantibus bobus qui eam portabant, inclinatam parumper erigere voluit, mox dum ad eam manum tetendit, mortuus cecidit. Arcam Domini calcitrantibus bobus inclinari, eſt legem Domini quam ipſi ſacerdotes portare et tenere debent, ab eis non obſervando contradici, et quaſi à recto ſtatu in diverſam partem flecti, quam Oza, qui adjutor Dei interpretatur, erigere tentat: quia ſunt quidam Prælati, qui dum ſacerdotalem ordinem, ipſam legem divinam maligno exceſſu vel leviter à ſita rectitudinis via quaſi inclinare et in aliam partem flectere vident, eam inclinationem caſtigare et corrigere magis virtutis ſuæ oſtentatione quàm divina æmulatione præſumunt; et quia hoc inconſulte agunt, dum adjutores Dei videri appetunt, plerumq; mortaliter in deterius cadunt. Sunt et alij qui nullam infirmitatis humanæ conſiderationem, nec ullum miſericordiæ reſpectum et compaſſionis affectum habent, et cum Apoſtolo dicere neſcientes: Quis infirmatur et ego non infirmor? Duri ſe ſubditis, non conditione qua pares, ſed authoritate qua ſuperiores ſunt, conferunt, atq; magiſtri videri, et plus præeſſe quàm prodeſſe cupiunt, illorum infirmitatem vi dominationis premunt, et eos ſibi obedire compellunt. Quod nimirum illo facto figuratur, quod de Simone Cyrenæo in Evangelio legitur, quem angariaverunt perſecutores Domini ut tolleret crucem ejus. Cujus etiam nomen huic figuræ convenienter aptatur. Simon namq; interpretatur obediens. Simon verò, id eſt, obediens, crucem Domini portare angariatur, cum ſubjecti quiq; à ſuis magiſtris vi dominationis vel authoritatis, vel Anathematis preſſi, et eis obedire compulſi, crucem continentiæ patiuntur inviti: ipſam crucem quam portant, non amant, quia ipſam plus ad perniciem ſuam, quàm ad ſalutem portant, nec ipſa cruce peccato moriuntur, ſed potius ipſi peccato vivificantur: nam et alia peccata graviora exindè oriuntur. Inhibito enim naturali unius mulieris conjugio, ſurrepit non naturalis, ſed contra naturam execrabilis Sodomitica fornicatio: ſurrepit illicita et damnabilis, non legitima ſed contra legem alienæ uxoris contaminatio, nec non etiam et meretricabilis nefanda pollutio: quin etiam abhominabilis omnibus parentalis inceſtatio vel aliarum multarum immundiciarum vel libidinum à Diabolo inventarum id genus, in quibus humana infirmitas periclitatur. Vnde Loth de Sodomitico incendio angelo Domini educente ereptus, et Uxoris conſortio viduatus, dum ſuæ infirmitatis conſcius ad montana non auſus eſt Angelo monente aſcendere, ipſe in Segor, *parva civitate quæ juxta erat, elegit habitare, ipſo Angelo præcipiente et ſic ad eum loquente, Salva animam tuam; noli reſpicere poſt tergum, ſed in monte ſalvum te fac, ne et tu ſimul pereas. pulam, cùm ad utramque continentiam parvula eſt et utrique proxima, confugit. Namque poſt continentias ſupradictas, hæc caſtitas probatur laudabilis et non privatur præmio regni cœleſtis. Ad hanc caſtitatem, qui non poteſt continere, jubetur accedere & in ea ſalvari, ne forte ſi montem aſcenderit, apprehendat eum malum & moriatur, & ne, ſi continentiam non ſibi divinitus conceſſam, ſuis viribus obtinere tentaverit, malum incontinentiæ, vel fornicationis, vel aliquarum ſupradictarum peſtium eum apprehendat, & in eis mortaliter pereat. Sunt enim multi qui dum infirmitatem ſuam non conſiderant, & dum majora ſe apprehendere conantur, ipſa ſua præcipitatione retroacti, in deteriora labuntur; quia dum majora inconſultius ambiunt, minora, quæ tenere videbantur, amittunt. Quod ſane exemplo ipſius Loth aperte demonſtratur; qui dum relicta Segor quam ad habitandum elegerat, & in qua ſalvari petierat, in montem aſcendit, ibique manſit, in inceſtum filiarum ſuarum, ipſarum ſurreptione corruit, ſicut Scriptura dicit. Ita namque ſcriptum eſt, Aſcendit Loth de Segor et manſit in monte, dederuntque filiæ patri ſuo bibere vinum nocte illa, & ingreſſa eſt major, dormivitque cum patre. Quod nequaquam ſibi contigiſſet, ſi in Segor in qua ſalvari poterat, ad præceptum Angeli, ſicut ille poſtulaverat, remaneret. Sed quia hoc quod ſibi ab Angelo conceſſum fuerat, dereliquit, & quod conceſſum non fuerat, id poſtea ſua voluntate contra præceptum Angeli præſumpſit, ſalutis ſuæ diſpendium pertulit, et grave inceſtus peccatum incurrit. Sic pleriſque contingit, qui dum quod ſibi conceſſum eſt à Deo relinquunt, & id quod ſibi conceſſum non eſt ambiunt, & illud quod ſibi conceſſum eſt perdunt, & illud quod ſibi conceſſum non eſt apprehendunt. Quia ſunt nonnulli, qui dum conjugalem vitam quæ ſibi conceſſa eſt & in qua ſalvari poſſent, vel inviti vel volentes, deſerunt, & majoris profectus deſiderio cœlibem vitam actitare ſatagunt, ſalutem quam in illa habere poterant, perdunt, & periculum maximum in iſta incurrunt, & ex quo proficere cohabantur, magis deficiunt (& ſicut ſupra diximus) in majoris riunæ voraginem vergunt. Quod bene Doctor gentium Paulus conſiderans, & infirmis quibuſque benigne proſpiciens Corinthijs, ſuper his ſcriptis ſuis ſe conſulentibus, ita reſcripſit dicens, De quibus autem ſcripſiſtis mihi, bonum homini eſt mulierem non tangere; propter fornicationem autem vitandam, unuſquiſque uxorem ſuam habeat; & unaquæque virum. Et uxori vir debitum reddat; ſimiliter uxor viro. Et poſt pauca, Nolite, inquit, fraudare invicem, niſi forte ex conſenſu ad tempus, ut vacetis orationi: et iterum revertimini in idipſum, ne tentet vos Satanas propter incontinentiam veſtram; quoniam, ſicut ait Poeta, non omnia poſſumus omnes: Et ſicut Apoſtolus in ſuperioribus dixit: Quia non eſt volentis neque currentis, ſed Dei miſerentis; Et alibi, Quia unicuique noſtrum data eſt gratia ſecundum menſuram donationis Chriſti. Hanc menſuram unicuique tenendam nec tranſgrediendam eſſe, docens mox intulit; Volo autem omnes homines eſſe ſicut meipſum, ſed unuſquiſque proprium habet donum ex Deo, alius quidem ſic, alius autem ſic; Qua videlicet menſura nos arcendos & debere eſſe contentos in ſequentibus intimavit dicens, Vnumquemq; ſicut vocavit deus, ita ambulet. Et unuſquiſque in qua vocatione vocatus eſt, in hac permaneat apud Deum. Et hoc idem repetit paulo inferius cauſa confirmationis; Unuſquiſque in quo vocatus eſt frater, in hoc permaneat apud Deum. Et quia infirmitatem humanam videbat non poſſe tolerare incentiva gemini caloris, niſi per gratiam Dei, neque vincere pugnam carnis adverſus ſpiritum; & quia ſic ipſe dixit de ſe alibi, Videbam aliam legem in membris meis, repugnantem legi mentis meæ, hoc ſe miſericorditer & compatienter, & unanimiter, non regulariter neque imperativè dixiſſe, ſicut in alia Epiſtola monſtraverat, ubi ait, Humanum dico propter infirmitatem carnis veſtræ. Et in hac ipſa paulò ſuperius, in eodem ſchemate, ubi ait; Hoc autem dico ſecundum indulgentiam, non ſecundum imperium, ſubdendo demonſtrat; De virginibus autem præceptum domini non habeo: conſilium do tanquam miſericordiam conſecutus, ut ſim fidelis. Id eſt, miſericordia qua mihi Dominus conſuluit quando ad fidem me vocavit, & ſibi fidelem fecit, & ego alijs conſulo & eandem miſericordiam illis impendo. Et quoniam bonum eſt utrumque, cum uxore eſſe & ſine uxore eſſe, & cum viro eſſe & cum viro non eſſe, neque peccatum eſt vel cum uxore eſſe, vel cum viro eſſe, mox ſubinfert dicens; æſtimo ergò bonum eſſe propter inſtantem neceſſitatem; quoniam bonum eſt homini eſſe ſic, &c.

Neceſſitas inſtans apud Paulum quæ ſit.

Quid eſt propter inſtantem neceſſitatem? Quæ eſt neceſſitas inſtans, niſi infirmitas præſens? Vel neceſſitas inſtans, eſt neceſſitas urgens & cogens prout neceſſitas extiterit vel cogerit. Vel inſtantem neceſſitatem dicit illius temporis neceſſitatem & anguſtiam, quæ tunc extabat & tum cogebat ut talia ſcriberet, & eis ſic indulgeret, cauſa ſcilicet vitandæ fornicationis quæ tunc temporis acciderat, & aliarum multarum fornicationum ſupradictarum quæ accidere poſſent. Pro qua fornicatione hoc incœpit, & ſibi ſcribentibus reſcripſit, & Corinthijs in ſuperioribus hujus Epiſtolæ vehementèr invectus, in hæc verba prorupit; Quid vultis? In virga veniam ad vos, an in charitate & ſpiritu manſuetudinis? Omninò auditur inter vos fornicatio, & talis fornicatio qualis nec inter gentes, ita ut uxorem patris ſui quis habeat. Propter hanc ergo neccesſitatem vitandæ fornicationis dico bonum eſſe homini ſic eſſe, ut ſi continere non poteſt, nubat, vel uxorem accipiat. Quod exponendo ſubdit; Alligatus es uxori? Noli quærere ſolutionem. Solutuſes ab uxore? Noli quærere uxorem. Si autem acceperis uxorem, non peccaſti: & ſi nupſerit virgo non peccavit. Et hic iterum non imperando ſed indulgendo & compatiendo ſe dixiſſe oſtendit; Ego autem vobis parco, id eſt, infirmitati veſtæ cedo. Hoc itaque in poteſtate voluntatis uniuſcuiuſque poſuit utrum velit eligere; nec ſe dicit cuiquam violentiam inferre, nec laqueum quocum aſtringat & teneat, injicere; conſequenter ſubjungens, porrò, hoc ad utilitatem veſtram dico non ut laqueum vobis injiciam, ſed ad id quod honeſtum eſt, & quod facultatem præbeat Dominum obſecrandi. Hoc dicit illis quos ad continentiam ſuperius hortatus fuerat, & qus conſortio uxoriæ conjunctionis impediti, vel ſolicitos eſſe nolebat. Alijs vero ita dicit; Si quis autem turpem videri ſe exiſtimat ſuper virginem ſuam, quod ſit ſuperadulta, & ita oportet feri; quod vult, faciat: non peccat ſi nubat. Et iterum, utrumque bonum eſſe, unum tamen melius eſſe concludendo confirmat. Igitur qui matrimonio cunjungit virginem ſuam, bene facit, & qui non jungit melius facit. Quod concordatur ſuperiori ſententiæ utrique ſexui datæ, in qua ait; Si acceperis uxorem non peccaſti, & ſi nupſerit virgo non peccavit. Si ergo virum accipere uxorem, & virginem nubere, iuxta Apoſtolum, peccatum non eſt, & beatitudinem non aufert ſed affert; & quia uterque benè facit, ideò ambo beati: nos qui uxores propter infirmitatem habemus, quid habendo peccamus? Aut ſi Apoſtolus unicuique propter fornicationem uxorem ſuam habere indulget & permittit, cur nos qui ex eadem maſſa ſumus, & carnem peccati ex carne Adæ peccatricem traximus, & continere non poſſumus, propter eandem cauſam & ſecundum eandem indulgentiam uxores habere non permittimur, & habitas dimittere angariamur? Aut itaque uxores nobis habere imitantes Apoſtolum permittite, aut nos ex eadem maſſa non eſſe docete, aut nobis eandem indulgentiam, & permiſſionem non eſſe conceſſam ab Apoſtolo demonſtrate. Quod opinor dicturi eſtis, quia hæc indulgentia non fuit data ab Apoſtolo Clericis aut alicui noſtri ordinis, ſed ſolis Laicis. Quod ex verbis Apoſtoli, vel ex circumſtantia Epoſtolæ non poteſt defendi, cum nulla ibi certa diſtinctio vel denominatio habeatur perſonarum vel graduum ſive profeſſionum, nec ipſe diſcernit ſeu nominibus ſeu officijs, vel qui ſibi ſcripſerunt, vel de quibus, vel quibus ipſe reſcribebat, niſi tantum generaliter omni Eccleſiæ Corinthiorum, ſicut ipſe in principio hujus Epiſtolæ his verbis demonſtrat; Paulus vocatus Apoſtolus Chriſti Jeſu per voluntatem Dei & Soſthenes Frater Eccleſiæ Dei quæ eſt Corinthi, ſanctificatis in Chriſto Jeſu, vocatis ſanctis, cum omnibus qui invocant nomen Domini. (Et poſt nonnulla alia quæ compendij cauſa hic reſcidimus, haud ita multum ad rem attinentia, ſubinfert mox ad hunc modum:) Infirmitatem noſtram vos conſiderare, ac miſereri rogamus, & ne ei violentiam inferatis ſuppliciter imploramus. Nam ſicut iam ſatis ſuperius inculcavimus vobis, nullus ad continentiam invitus debet compelli. Neque hoc [illegible] tutis ulli per Legem Dei neceſſario imperatum eſt, ſed [illegible]

Atque* Pymtus Dionyſio reſcripſit ſententiam ſe conſilii melioris, quod ipſe dabat, amplecti. Hoc itidem & Paphnutius vir diviniſſimus atque caſtiſſimus, cùm in Niceno Concilio (ut in Tripartita hiſtoria invenimus) patres qui ibi aderant, hoc interdicere Sacerdotibus voluiſſent, in medium eorum zelo humanæ infirmitatis commotus & conſcius exurgens, hoc ne facerent rogavit, quin potius in voluntate uniuſcujuſque ponerent exoravit, ne forte per hoc locum darent & occaſionem adulterio & fornicationi. Hac namque cautela ſancti viri in religione utebantur, ut cum de inſtructione & ædificatione ſubditorum aliquid agerent, & eos ad meliorem vitam de divinis Præceptis commoneri facerent, cùm patientia & manſuetudine potius obedienda præciperent, quam cum potentia & auſteritate imperarent, nullumque invitum ſibi obedire compellerent. Quorum vos exempla ſequentes, qui eorum loca tenetis & nomen, ne nobis infirmis importabilem ſarcinam quæſumus imponatis, ne imprecatione dominica cum Phariſæis & legiſperitis ſuſcipiamini, in qua ait: Væ vobis legiſperitis, qui oneratis homines oneribus quæ non poſſunt portari, & ipſi uno digito veſtro ea non tangitis. Quod vos non rectè, ſi dici liceat (ne moleſte accipiatis) videtur nobis facere, & contra divinam authoritatem & Canonicam regulam hoc quod facitis esse: cum Dominos per legiſlatorem dicat; Turpitudinem matris tuæ non reveles, & ignominiam ejus ne diſcooperias. Mater noſtra Eccleſia eſt; Filii hujus matris quique fidelium ſunt. Cujus tamen materna appellatio maxima in Sacerdotibus eſt. Nam ipſi generant fideles & verbo prædicationis & Sacramento baptiſmatis. An non mater erat quæ dicebat; Filioli mei quos iterum parturio? Turpitudo ergo & ignominia matris noſtræ reprehenſibilis eſt actio Sacerdotalis vitæ. Quæ turpitudo tunc revelatur, & ignominia diſcooperitur, cum Sacerdotalis vita publicè infamatur. Quod ſi, ut dicitis, eſſet, nequaquam Diſcipulis & turbis de Phariſæis Dominus præciperet; Omnia quæcunque dixerint vobis, ſervate & facite. Et rurſus, ſi ita eſſet, nequaquam Dominus Judam, quem furem eſſe ſciebat & proditorem ſuum futurum, cum diſcipulis aliis ad prædicandum mitteret, neque poteſtatem ſigna faciendi & ſanitates donandi, neque ad Communionem Sacroſanctæ cœnæ eum admitteret. Et ſi immunditia noſtra divina Myſteria & Miniſteria & eorum capaces & auditores inficeret & deterioraret, nequaquam Dominus leproſum quem mundaverat, tangeret, neque ei oſculum daret, & nequaquam cum Simone alio Leproſo manducaret, & nequaquam à Maria peccatrice pedes ſuos oſculari, & lacrymis lavari, & capillis tergi, & caput ſuum ungi permitteret. Hinc ſacrorum Canonum veneranda authoritas ſanxit, nullum qui etiam ab hæretico Sacramenta dominica rectè perceperit, ullatenus ipſa hæretica pravitate corrumpi, nec ulla Sacramenti illius contagione commaculari. Unde Romana Eccleſia Anaſtaſium Papam, in quadam Epiſtola ad Anaſtaſ. Imperatorem directa, decrevit & ſcripſit, quod nullum de his vel quos baptizavit Acatius, vel quos Sacerdotes, vel Levitas ſecundum Canones ordinavit, ulla eos ex nomine Acatii portio læſionis attingat, quo forſan per iniquum tradita Sacramenti gratia minus firma videatur. Nam & baptiſmum (quod procul ſit ab Eccleſia) ſive ab adultero, ſive à fure datum fuerit, ad percipientem non minus pervenit illibatum. Quod vox illa quæ ſonuit per columbam: Omnem malitiam vel maculam humanæ pollutionis excludit, qua declaratur ac dicitur; Hic eſt qui baptizat, &c. Nam ſi viſibilis ſolis iſtius radii cum per loca fœdatiſſima tranſeunt, nulla contactus inquinatione maculantur; multò magis virtus illius qui iſtum viſibilem ſolem fecit, nulla myſterii dignitate conſtringitur. Quicquid ergo ad hominum profectum quilibet in Eccleſia miniſter pro officio ſuo videtur operari, hoc totum continetur implendo divinitatis effectu. Ita ille, per quem Chriſtus loquitur, Paulus affirmat, Ego plantavi, Apollo rigavit; ſed Deus incrementum dedit. A Deo non quæritur quis vel qualis prædicet, ſed ſic prædicet, ut invidos etiam bene de Chriſto prædicare confirmet. Tanta eſt namque divinæ potentia gratiæ, ut per malos acquirat bonos, & per reprobos & improbos acquirat & colligat probos. His itaque authoritatibus & aliis prædictis rationibus perſuadi debetis, neque nos à divini officii celebritate arcere, neque illos, quorum nihil intereſt, ab ejus communione ſuſpendere. Quod ſi mali ſumus, nobis ipſis ſumus, & plus nobis quam aliis nocemus; & quos fortaſſe malos conſpicitis, quid boni interius habeant ignoratis. Sunt enim plerique quos de incontinentia judicatis, qui continentiores ſunt quam illi quos de continentia glorificatis. Qui habemus uxores, juxta Apoſtolum tanquam non habemus. Quam videlicet continentiam quia nobis non poteſtis dare, orate nobiſcum & pro nobis ut ille nobis donet, cujus hoc donum noſcitur eſſe, & ſine quo nemo poterit continens eſſe. FOraſmuch as we are created under the Power of Freewill, and not under the Law but under Grace, let us ſo live as we are created. You, which lay upon us the Law of Continency againſt our will, to deprive us of the liberty of Free-will. You command us, and by commanding compel us to will that we would not, and not to will that we would do. You bind us to the Law, from the which by Grace we are made free: and you conſtrain us to receive the Spirit of Bondage again to fear; and go about to make the Grace of God of no effect, without the which we can do nothing; ſo that, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Grace is no grace, and the gift of God is not the gift of God; and not of God, but of man; not of him that calleth, but of him that worketh: whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercy.

* What he meaneth here by Free-will, he expoundeth plainly in another place.

Rom. 9.

And whereas there be three principal and effectual things, whereby every human Soul, indued with reaſon, apprehendeth and perceiveth whatſoever ſpiritual thing it is able to apprehend and perceive, and without the which it can perceive nothing; the which three things be theſe; to wit, Free-will, the Commandment, and Grace, (for by Free-will we diſcern and chooſe the good from the evil: By the Commandment we are provoked and ſtirred up to do all things: By Grace we are furthered and holpen to perform the ſame) yet of all theſe, Grace is the Lady and Miſtreſs, and as a mighty Empreſs and Queen, upon whoſe beck the other do wait and give attendance, receiving of her both their ſtrength and efficacy, and without her can do nothing, but remain as things of themſelves dull and dead, much like as amongſt the Philoſophers their Materia without Forma being thereto adjoyned.

1. Free-will. 2. The Commandment or the Law. 3. Grace. Grace, Lady and Queen over the Commandment and Free-will.

Free-will likened to Materia, Grace to Forma.

For in the ſtead of Materia, we may after a manner not unfitly place Free-will; and in the place of Forma we may ſet Grace, and the Commandment (which is the mean between them both, as a certain Inſtrument) to have reſpect to both; whereby the principal Artificer, which is God, furthereth and ſetteth forward Free-will as a rude dull matter, applieth to it his Grace as the form thereof. And like as the ſaid Materia without Forma is rude and ſhapeleſs, ſo Free-will is a thing rude and deform, if it be not holpen with Grace coming thereunto, to move it and to further it, the Commandment coming as a mean between them both, in the ſtead of the inſtrumental Cauſe, as is before ſaid. Therefore like as Forma is in reſpect of Materia, the like reſemblance beareth Free-will in reſpect of Grace. And again, as Materia is in reſpect of Forma, the ſame alſo is Free-will in reſpect of Grace. And as the Inſtrument ſerveth between the aforeſaid Materia and Forma, ſo doth the Commandment between Free-will and Grace. The Inſtrument coming and working upon the ſaid Materia being of it ſelf ugly, rugged, and a thing without all ſhape and faſhion, doth form it, ſhape, and poliſh it, and maketh it handſom, ſightly, lightſom, bright and clear; even ſo likewiſe the Commandment coming and working upon Free-will, being of it ſelf a thing rude, groſs, unſhapen and deformed, blind and obſcure, doth clarifie it, deck it, adorn it, beautifie and enlighten it through the brightneſs of Grace coming unto it, according to the ſaying of the Prophet, The Commandment of the Lord is bright and clear, giving ſight unto the eyes.

Freewill, which after he calleth voluntary Devotion, without the Law, and the Law without Grace, can do nothing.

Pſal. 19.

And as the Matter and the Inſtrument without the Form can do nothing, even ſo Free-will and Commandment without Grace have no power to work. For what can either Free-will or the Commandment do, except they be holpen with Grace, both going before and following? For Grace ſendeth the Commandment as a Meſſenger and Miniſter to Free-will; the Commandment provoketh Free-will and ſtirreth it up, as out of a ſleep to do good works, and leadeth it as a blind man by the hand, teaching him the way wherein to go. Which both, if they be deſtitute of Grace, are able of themſelves to do nothing. And if they begin, yet they proceed not, neither do they perform or accompliſh any thing; and if they preſume, it proſpereth not, and is but labour loſt. For where the Commandment cometh, either by Man or by Angel, and alſo where Free-will is moved, provoked, and informed either by the motion of Man or Angel, yet unleſs Gods Grace go withal, preventing and following the ſame, what is it able to do? For when Man was put in Paradiſe, what availed him the Commandment which he heard, Thou ſhalt eat of every Tree of Paradiſe, but only of the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil thou ſhalt not eat. Which Commandment wrought not to his ſalvation, but to his condemnation. And why? becauſe Grace, that ſaveth and helpeth, was wanting, which he preſuming unjuſtly upon his own ſtrength deſpiſed. Or what did the Commandment of the Law, given by Moſes, profit the people of Iſrael in the Wilderneſs, which Law they refuſed to obey? Or what profit wrought it to him which preſumed to follow the Lord of his own free will, and not of the Lords calling, ſaying unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt. By theſe, and many other places of holy Scripture, both of the Old and New Teſtament, it may be proved that neither the Commandment nor Free-will have power to work of themſelves, unleſs they be holpen by Gods Grace preventing and following them.

Gen 2. The Commandment, without Grace, availed Adam nothing in Paradiſe.

Matth. 8.

Seeing therefore the gift of Continency, as all other gifts be, is the gift only of Gods Grace, and cometh not by the Commandment nor by Free-will; they err therefore, and ſtrive in vain, which labour to obtain it by their own power: And much more they alſo do err, which by force conſtrain men againſt their will thereunto; moving them to offer gifts into the Sanctuary of God, not of their own accord, but by coaction, either not knowing, or elſe not remembring the ſaying of the Lord to Moſes, Separate amongſt you the firſt fruits unto the Lord, and let every man of his own voluntary and willing mind come and offer the ſame unto the Lord. What is this, to ſeparate with you the firſt fruits to the Lord, but only to weigh and conſider diligently in your hearts, and with diſcretion to lay down and ſeparate unto the Lord, what we ought to preſent unto him out of the treaſure of our heart? for if thou offer rightly, and doeſt not rightly divide, thou ſinneſt. And what is it to offer with a willing and ready mind, but as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, I will offer Sacrifice unto thee willingly and chearfully: And the Apoſtle ſaith, Not grudgingly or of neceſſity: For God loveth a chearful giver. And Solomon ſaith, Give the Lord his glory with a good and free heart, and in every gift thou giveſt, ſhew a joyful countenance, and ſanctifie thy tythes with gladneſs: and with a chearful eye do all that thou takeſt in hand. And the Apoſtle James ſaith, The Lord loveth not conſtrained ſervice. And curſed be he that doth the work of the Lord negligently; that is, not carefully, and with a willing mind.

Continency only the gift of God.

Num. 18.

Pſal. 54. 2 Cor. 9. Eccl. 35. Jerem. 48.

Wherefore, as the Lord willeth us not to offer any thing to him againſt our wills; ſo doth he forbid us to compel any man to offer any thing againſt their wills by the foreſaid Moſes, where he ſaith, Thou ſhalt not do thy Neighbour wrong, neither oppreſs him with violence. To do wrong to thy Neighbour, is to correct him for his ſin, not of any compaſſion or mercy towards him, but to reprove him and to judge him, in diſdaining, upbraiding and rebuking him; not to inform him in the ſpirit of lenity, but to deſtroy him in the ſpirit of bitterneſs and rigor, as the Apoſtle ſaith, If a man be taken in any fault, you that are ſpiritual inform ſuch in the ſpirit of lenity, conſidering thy ſelf leſt thou alſo be tempted.

Levit.

Gal. 6.

To oppreſs our Neighbour with violence, is to exact any thing of him above his power, and to lay upon him more than he is able to bear, and more peradventure than they themſelves are able to weild, which lay it upon him. Whereas the Lord, ſpeaking of the Phariſees to his Diſciples, forbiddeth them the ſame, ſaying, The Scribes and Phariſees do ſit upon the Chair of Moſes, &c. And the Apoſtle Peter, Feed, ſaith he, as much as in you lyeth, the Lords flock; providing for them, not by conſtraint, but willingly after a godly ſort, and not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, not as though ye were Lords over the Clergy, but be you as an example to the flock of good will.

Free-will and the Law, without Grace, have no power.

Matth. 23.

1 Pet. 5.

This Shepherd of Shepherds, and Prince of the Apoſtles, doth plainly and evidently declare and inſinuate what all other Paſtors and Apoſtles ought to do: how to intreat the flock of the Lord committed unto them, and what great care & compaſſion of mind they ought to have towards their cure: and removeth far out of their hearts all power of tyrannical Lordſhip and all Ambition, which ſome do exerciſe with greedineſs upon thoſe that are committed to their charge, and pronounceth, that they ought not to be Lords, but Fathers over their Flock: and not imperiouſly to command them, as exerciſing ſtately Authority and Power upon them, but gently to admoniſh them and beſeech them in the zeal of Piety, according to the ſtrength of every perſon, after the Lord, and not after the affection of their own will, or ambitiouſly ſetting forth their own Power and Juriſdiction, and that they ought to be an example to the Flock, doing firſt themſelves that thing which they command others, and ſo to teach them no leſs by examples than by words. Willingly, ſaith he, and not by conſtraint; of Charity, and not for greedy gain. For there be many, which being inflamed with affection, not of charity, but of covetous greedineſs and ambition, command others that which they are not able to accompliſh, and while they pretend to ſeek the gain of Souls, they hunt and ſeek rather for worldly Lucre: which Baalam the Prophet did well expreſs; who converted the gift of Prophecy, and the grace of Bleſſing which he had received of God, not to the profit of others, but to his own commodity. Num 22.

And ſome there be, which whiles they correct others, they pretend to do it with the zeal of God, and whiles they would ſeem to be better than other; this they do with a certain preſumption and raſhneſs, and ſo fall in their own preſumption and temerity. Of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Which have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. To have a zeal of God according to knowledge, is to do any thing in Gods matters prudently and circumſpectly. Of whom Oza beareth a type and reſemblance. Who whiles that he went about with his hand to ſtay the Ark of the Lord, ſtaggering a little by reaſon of the kicking of the Oxen which carried it, fell down therefore dead. The Ark of the Lord to ſtagger or miſcarry by the kicking of the Oxen, ſignifieth the Law of the Lord (which the Prieſts themſelves ought to bear and hold up) to be contraried of them in not obſerving the ſame, and to be turned out of the right courſe to the contrary part; which Oza, who is interpreted to be a helper of God, attempteth to hold up. For there be certain Prelats, which while they ſee the Order of Prieſthood, by ſome enormity or exceſs, to ſtrain the Law of God never ſo little out of the right courſe, and labour to redreſs and rectifie that miſorder, rather by vain oſtentation of their own ſtrength, then for any pure zeal to God: while they thus preſume inordinately to do, thinking to ſeem to be the helpers of God, many times do mortally fall, and incur thereby great danger and peril. Some other alſo there be, which having before their eyes no conſideration of mans infirmity, neither being touched with any reſpect of mercy and compaſſion, nor knowing how to ſay with the Apoſtle, Who is infirm and I am not infirm? theſe, whiles they compare themſelves to ſuch as be under their charge, not in condition wherein they are equal, but in authority wherein they are ſuperiours, and covet to be their Maſters, and more to rule over them than to profit them, they oppreſs the weakneſs of them, by force and violence of Authority, and compel them to their Obedience; which is rightly figured by the Fact, which is read in the Goſpel of Symon Cyreneus, whom the Perſecutors of the Lord conſtrained to take up the Croſs of Chriſt. Whoſe Name alſo doth fitly agree with the ſame Figure: for Symon by Interpretation is called Obedient. Symon then, that is to ſay, the obedient man is forced to bear the Croſs of the Lord, when as Subjects being conſtrained of their Maſters, by the rigor either of Lordſhip or Authority, or fear of their Curſe, and ſo compelled to obey them, are driven to ſuſtain the Croſs of Continency againſt their wills; who neither do love the Croſs which they bear, becauſe they bear it rather to their deſtruction than to their health; neither by bearing the Croſs do dye unto ſin, but by the bearing thereof are rather quickned unto ſin: For thereof riſe divers other more grievous ſins. For by the inhibiting of lawful and natural marriage with one woman, riſeth the unnatural and moſt execrable Sodomitical Fornication; riſeth alſo the unlawful and damnable defiling of other mens wives, riſeth furthermore curſed and whoriſh filthineſs and pollution; and moreover riſeth moſt abominable Inceſt againſt all Nature, with their own Kindred, with a heap of manifold other filthy abominations and letcherous pollutions, whereby the frail infirmity of man is brought no doubt into great peril.

Luke 23.

What inconveniences riſe hereof to conſecrated Matrimony.

Wherefore Lot being delivered from the burning of Sodom through the guiding of the Lords Angel, and bereaved of the fellowſhip of his Wife, whiles he conſidering his own Infirmity, durſt not aſcend unto the Mountain as the Angel bad him, did chooſe rather to dwell in Segor a little City near by, the Angel thus bidding him, and ſpeaking unto him, Save thy Soul and look not behind thee, but ſave thy ſelf in the Mountain, leſt thou alſo periſh. To whom Lot anſwered, I pray thee Lord, becauſe thy Servant hath found ſuch grace in thy ſight that thou wilt ſave me, I cannot be ſaved in the Mountain, leſt perhaps ſome evil take me, and I dye: There is a little City hereby whereunto I may fly and be ſaved in it. Gen. 19:

What meaneth this, that Lot flying from Sodom by the commandment of the Angel, to be ſaved in the Mountain, would not aſcend up to the Hill, fearing there to periſh, but did chooſe rather to dwell in Segor, a ſmall City near unto the Hill, there to be ſaved, but that every faithful man coveting to eſchew the burning and danger of Sodomitical Luſt, while neither he is able to mount up to the top of Virginity, and alſo is afraid to aſcend to the Mountain of the ſtate of Widowhood, leſt he periſh therein, flyeth therefore to the ſtate of Matrimony, which is a ſmall Continency in reſpect of the other two, and alſo near unto them both. For after thoſe two kinds of Continency, this Chaſtity is alſo proved to be laudable, and is not deprived of the reward of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Lot refuſing to go up to the Mountain, what it meaneth.

The Chaſtity of marriage, as near to Heaven as Virginity.

Unto this Chaſtity he is commanded to fly, which cannot otherwiſe contain, and to be ſaved in it, leſt peradventure if he climb up to the Mount, he fall into inconvenience and periſh therein: that is, leſt if he ſhall attempt to obtain by his own ſtrength the Continency which is not given unto him of God, the evil of Incontinency, or Fornication, or of ſome of the other evils afore rehearſed, do fall upon him, and ſo he periſh in them mortally. For there be many, who while they conſider not their own Infirmity, and while they ſtrive to atchieve greater things than they are able to reach, in this their climbing, do fall headlong into worſe inconveniency, and while they fooliſhly ſeek for great things, do loſe the leſs, which before they ſeemed to have. Which we may well underſtand by the example of Lot aforeſaid, who what time he left the ſmall City Segor, which he choſe before to inhabit, in the which he ſought to be ſaved, went up to the Mountain, and there abiding, fell into the ſtoln Inceſt of his own Daughters, as the Scripture witneſſeth, ſaying, Lot went up from Segor and remained in the Mountain, and his Daughters gave to their Father wine to drink that night. And the elder of them went and lay with her Father: which thing had not befaln him, if he had kept himſelf ſtill in Segor, where he might have been ſaved at the bidding of the Angel, as he himſelf required. But becauſe he forſook that which was granted to him of the Angel, and preſumed to that upon his own will, contrary to the Precept of the Angel, which was not granted; therefore he fell into great danger of his Soul, and committed the grievous ſin of Inceſt.

No otherwiſe doth it happen to many other, who while either they forſake the thing which is granted them of God, or ambitiouſly climb after that which is to them not granted, both they looſe that which they had granted unto them, and fall into that which to them was not granted. For divers there be which while they forſake, either willingly or againſt their will, the married life which is to them lawfully permitted, and in which they might be ſaved, and ſtrive with a preſumptuous deſire to lead a ſingle life, both they loſe that health and ſafety which they might have had in one, and incur great danger in the other: So that whereby they ſuppoſe moſt to gain, by the ſame they loſe and fall into the Pit of greater Ruin. Which thing S. Paul, the Doctor of the Gentiles, well conſidering, and tenderly providing for the infirmity of the weak Corinthians, writing to him for counſel touching this matter, did write to them again in this wiſe, ſaying, As concerning the things whereof you wrote unto me, it is good for a man not to touch a woman. Never the leſs leſs to avoid Whoredom, let every man have his Wife, and let every woman have her Husband. Let the Husband give unto his Wife due Benovelence: likewiſe alſo the Wife unto her Husband. And a little after, withdraw not (ſaith he) your ſelves one from another, except it be with conſent for a time, that you may give your ſelves unto Faſting and Prayer, and afterward come together again, leſt Satan tempt you for your Incontinency. For as the Poet ſaith, We cannot all do all things: and as the Rom.9. Apoſtle ſaith, It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercy. Alſo in another Eph.4. place, For to every one of us is given grace according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. And that every one of us ought to keep, and not to tranſgreſs this meaſure, he 1 Cor.7. teacheth anon after, ſaying, I wiſh that all men were as I my ſelf am; but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, another after that.

Every man ought to be contented with his own gift.

1 Cor. 7:

And that we are to be kept within our compaſs and meaſure, and ought therewith to be content, he teacheth moreover as followeth, Let every man abide in that Vocation wherein he is called. And ſhortly after, for confirmation thereof, he repeateth the ſame again, and ſaith, Let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with the Lord. And becauſe he perceived that the infirmity of man was not able to ſuſtain the burning motions and heats of Nature ſtirring in a man, but only by the grace of God, neither be able to conquer the Fleſh fighting againſt the Spirit, according to that which he ſaith of himſelf in another place, For I ſee another Law in my Members rebelling againſt the Law of my Mind; he therefore of Mercy and Compaſſion, as condeſcending unto their weakneſs, and not by rigor of Law and force of Commandment, thus ſaid. As alſo in another place in his Epiſtles he Rom.6. ſpeaketh in like words, ſaying, I ſpeak thus groſsly, after the manner of men, becauſe of the infirmity of your fleſh. And in this foreſaid Epiſtle, moreover a little before, uſing 1 Cor. 7. the ſame manner of ſpeech, he ſaith, This I ſay to you as of favour and not of commandment. And adding moreover, he ſheweth, As touching Virgins I have no commandment of the Lord, but only do give counſel, as one that have found mercy with God, that I ſhould be faithful. That is, after the ſame mercy wherewith the Lord hath informed and inſtructed me when he called me to the Faith, and made me faithful to him; ſo I likewiſe do give counſel to others, and ſhew the ſame mercy to them.

And forſomuch as both are good, to wit, to have a Wife, or not to have; to have a Husband, or not to have; neither is there any ſin in having Wife or Husband; ſhortly after he inferreth, ſaying, I ſuppoſe therefore this to be good for the preſent neceſſity: I mean, that it is good for a man ſo to be. What meaneth this, for preſent neceſſity? What is this neceſſity preſent, but preſent infirmity? or elſe inſtant neceſſity, compelling to do as the order of neceſſity requireth. Or elſe he meaneth by this preſent For preſent neceſſity to marry what it meaneth. neceſſity, the diſtreſs of that time which then was inſtant, and compelled him to write, and ſo to bear with them, which was for the avoiding of Fornication amongſt them, and many other kinds of filthineſs above touched which might have happened. For the which Fornication he took occaſion to write unto the Corinthians, and to anſwer to their Letters; and therefore he vehemently againſt the ſaid Corinthians, in the former part of the ſaid Epiſtle, uttereth theſe words; What, will you I ſhall come to you with a rod? or in love and in the Cor.4. ſpirit of meekneſs? There is heard among you to be Fornication, and ſuch Fornication as is not named among the Gentiles, that one ſhould have his own Fathers Wife, &c. And therefore for this neceſſity of avoiding ſuch Cor.7. Fornication, he ſaith, It is good for a man ſo to be, that he which cannot contain ſhall marry and take a Wife; which afterward he expoundeth, thus inferring, Art thou bound to a Wife? ſeek not to be looſed. And if thou be looſed from a Wife, ſeek not a Wife. But if thou takeſt a Wife thou ſinneſt not; and if a Virgin marry ſhe ſinneth not, &c. And that he ſpake not this by way of commanding, but of ſufferance and compaſſion, he ſheweth plainly in theſe words following; But I ſpare you; that is to ſay, I bear with your Infirmity; and therefore he leaveth it in the free power and will of every man, to chooſe what he liketh beſt. Neither doth he enforce any man (he ſaith) violently, nor charge them with any ſtrait commandment, and therefore addeth theſe words following, And this I ſpeak for your own commodity, not to tangle you as in a ſnare, but for that it is good and honeſt for you, that you may ſerve the Lord without ſeparation.

This he ſaith to them whom before he exhorteth to Continency, and whom he would not to be let or troubled by Matrimonial Conjunction. But to other he ſaith thus, If any man think that it is uncomly for his Virgin to remain over-long unmarried, and if need ſo require, let him do what he thinketh good, he ſinneth not, let them marry. And again, both be good, he ſaith; but yet the one to be better he concludeth, ſaying, Therefore he that joyneth in Matrimony his Virgin, doth well; but he that doeth not, doth better. Which agreeth well with the Text above, ſpeaking of both kinds, as well the man as the woman, where he ſaith, If thou take a Wife thou ſinneſt not; and if the Virgin take a Husband, ſhe ſinneth not.

If therefore it be no ſin for the man to take a Wife, nor for the Virgin to take a Husband, after the Apoſtles mind, neither doth diminiſh their felicity, but rather increaſe it; and forſomuch as both do well, and ſo both be bleſſed; we then which take Wives for our infirmity, what do we ſin in having them? Or if the Apoſtle do ſuffer and permit to every man, for the avoiding of Fornication, to have his Wife; we then which come of the ſame lump or maſs, and taking our ſinful fleſh of the ſinful fleſh of Adam, are not able otherwiſe, to contain, why are we not permitted for the ſame cauſe, and by the ſame permiſſion, to have likewiſe our Wives, but are inforced to forſake them, being married?

Wherefore either do you permit us, following the Apoſtle, to have our Wives, or elſe teach us that we come not of the ſame maſs, either elſe ſhew us that the ſame ſufferance and permiſſion is not granted to us by the Apoſtle, which is granted to other. Which cauſe peradventure you will thus pretend; That this ſufferance was granted of the Apoſtle, not to the Clergy, or to any of our Order, but only to Lay-men. Which cannot well be defended, neither by the words of the Apoſtle, nor by any circumſtance of his Epiſtle, forſomuch as there is no certain diſtinction or denomination either of Perſons or Degrees or Profeſſions there mentioned, neither doth he make any difference either in Names or Offices of men, either of them which wrote unto him, either of thoſe Perſons of whom he wrote, or elſe of thoſe to whom he anſwered, but only in general to the whole Church of the Corinthians, as he himſelf in the beginning of his Epiſtle purporteth in theſe words, Paul called the Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor.1. by the will of God, and Soſthenes his brother, to the Church which is at Corinth, ſuch as be ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus, called Saints, with all that invocate the Name of the Lord, &c. (And after a few other words, which here for brevities ſake we omit, as not being greatly to the purpoſe pertinent; thus he inferreth.) Theſe Premiſſes being well conſidered, we beſeech you to have regard and compaſſion of our infirmity, moſt humbly deſiring you not to oppreſs us with this violence. For as we have ſufficiently before proved, no man ought to be conſtrained unto Continency againſt his will, neither is this kind of vertue commanded of God to any man of neceſſity, but only of voluntary Devotion to be offered to the Lord; as he himſelf ſpeaketh in the Goſpel, All men cannot receive this Forced Continency is no Vertue. ſaying, but to whom it is given. Whereunto he gently Matth. 19. exhorteth them that can take it, ſaying, He that is able to receive this, let him receive it, &c. Wherefore for diſtinctions ſake Moſes is not himſelf commanded to clothe Aaron and his Sons with Breeches, as in theſe words going before, Thou ſhalt clothe with theſe Aaron thy brother, and his ſons, &c. But he thus ſaith, Thou ſhalt make linen breeches that they themſelves may cover the filth of their fleſh. That they themſelves, ſaith he, may cover the filth of their fleſh. Thou, ſaith he, ſhalt make the breeches for the Biſhop and his ſons: thou ſhalt teach the rule of Chaſtity; thou ſhalt exhort them to abſtain from the company of their Wives, and ſhalt do the Prieſts Office; yet laying upon none violently the ſaid yoke of Continency, but whoſoever ſhall be Prieſts, and ſhall ſerve the Altar, ſhall of their own accord ſurceaſe from the uſe of Matrimony: which when they ſhall do, and of their own Marriage is permitted to the infirmity of all men. Prieſts are infirm as other men be. Ergo, Marriage ought to be permitted to Prieſts alſo.

voluntary conſent ſhall take upon them the purpoſe of Continency to ſerve the Altar, then ſhall the grace of God be preſent, which as it did apparel thoſe other Prieſts aforeſaid with attire for them convenient, ſo ſhall it inſtruct theſe abundantly, how they ought to live and to teach. And this ſenſe well agreeth with the Text that Exod.29. followeth, ſaying, And when thou ſhalt waſh the Father and the Sons with water, thou ſhalt take the Garments, that is, the ſtrait Coat, the Tunicle, and the Breaſtlap, and put them upon Aaron, and gird them to him with a brodered girdle of the Ephod. Then thou ſhalt put the Myter upon his head, and ſhalt put the holy Crown upon the Myter, and thus ſhall he be conſecrated. Alſo thou ſhalt bring his Sons, and put Coats upon them, and ſhalt gird them with girdles, both Aaron and his Sons, and ſhalt put Bonets on them, and the Prieſts Office ſhall be theirs for a perpetual Law.

The place of Moſes Exodus 29. applied. Thus then you ſee a Commandment of receiving of the Linen Breeches of Moſes. Whereby it plainly appeareth, that Aaron and his Sons firſt did apparel themſelves with this kind of Apparel, and ſo entred in to be waſhed, inducted, anointed and conſecrated by the hands of Moſes.

By the which we are plainly taught, that the yoke of Continency is not to be enforced upon any man againſt his will, but is to be received of God with a prompt and devout will. Which thing alſo Dionyſius Areopagita, that godly wiſe man, the Diſciple of S. Paul, and ordained of him Biſhop of Athens, in a certain Epiſtle of his ſent to Pymtus Biſhop of the Gnaſians, in which he toucheth many things of Marriage and Chaſtity (as is in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory rehearſed) doth admoniſh the ſaid Pymtus, and prayeth him that he will lay no grievous Burthens upon the necks of the Diſciples, neither infer any neceſſity of compelled Chaſtity upon the Brethren, whereby the infirmity of ſome of them might be in danger. And Pymtus anſwering to Dionyſius again, ſheweth himſelf willing to embrace the Sentence of his wholeſome Counſel. The ſame alſo did Paphnutius, the divine and chaſt Biſhop, who in the Councel of Nice (as Ex. Hiſtor. Tripartita. the Tripartite Hiſtory doth ſhew us) when the Fathers which there were preſent went about to reſtrain Prieſts from Marriage, he riſing up among them, and moved with the zeal of mans infirmity, deſired them that the would not ſo do, but rather to leave it unto the voluntary diſcretion of every man, leſt in ſo doing they might peradventure give occaſion of Adultery and Fornication. For thoſe holy men did then uſe this Cautel and Moderation in Religion, that when they treated any thing concerning Inſtruction and Edification of the People, and would have them ſtirred up to a better life by godly Inſtructions, they would rather perſwade things to be obſerved with Patience and Lenity, than command with Rigor and Authority: neither would they compel any man to their Obedience againſt his will.

The ſpirit of lenity required in Biſhops. Whoſe Examples you alſo following, which ſucceed in their room and name, do you not lay upon us infirm perſons ſuch importable Burthens, leſt you be partakers with the Phariſees and Lawyers of the Lords Curſe:
Luke 11. who ſaith, Wo to you Lawyers, which lay burthens upon men, which they cannot bear, and you your ſelves touch not the burthens with one finger. And leſt the cry of the Children of Iſrael aſcend up to the Lord for the Exod.3. cruel dealing of them which are Overſeers of the works.
Read the Canons of the Apoſtles. Can.22. Neither do you make ſuch Eunuchs which are ſo born from their Mothers womb, or ſuch Eunuchs which are violently made by men, but rather thoſe Eunuchs, that of their own accord have gelded themſelves for the Kingdom of Heaven. Neither do you bring upon the holy Order of Gods Miniſters, for us only, ſuch an offence and ſlander, that for our wicked life you make the Miniſtry ſo to be deſpiſed of others, while you will not ſuffer them either to Matth.19. hear us, or to receive the Sacraments of us, infaming thereby our lewd life, and cauſing the ſavor of us to ſtink before Pharaoh and his Servants. Wherein it ſeemeth to us
Exod.5. that you deal not ſoundly and uprightly, if a man may ſo ſay (I pray you take it in good worth that I ſpeak) and alſo to be againſt the Authority of Gods Word, and the Canonical Conſtitutions, which you do, whereas the Lord ſaith by Moſes the Law-giver, The ſhame of thy Mother
Levit.18. thou ſhalt not diſcloſe, and her ignominy thou ſhalt not diſcover. Our Mother is the Church, the Sons of this Mother be all the Faithful, which name yet moſt fitly is appropriate to Prieſts, for they do beget the Faithful, both by the Word of Preaching and Sacrament of Baptiſm. Was not he to be counted a right Mother who ſaid,
Gal.4. My little Children of whom I travel in birth again? The ſhame and ignominy of our Mother, what is it but the reproveable Converſation of the life of Prieſts? which ſhame and ignominy is then revealed when the life of Prieſts is publickly infamed: which thing you do, that diſcover and notifie to men our fragility, lying before as hid and covered, becauſe before it was not known, and for that ſame you bring the holy Miniſtry and Myſteries of God into contempt and hatred: as though the polluted life of others did any thing pertain thereto to pollute the ſame, and as though our uncleanneſs did any thing blemiſh them, or diminiſh the pureneſs thereof, whereas the Pſalmiſt ſaith,
Pſal.18. The Law of the Lord is pure and immaculate; or as though they were any whit polluted by our infection, which do receive the ſaid Myſteries either by our Mouth or Miniſtery: which if you grant, then the Lord would never have ſpoken ſo to his Diſciples, and the People, touching the Phariſees, ſaying, Whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that ob-
Matth.23. ſerve and do.

The wickedneſs of the Miniſters makes not the Miniſtery worſe. And again, if it were ſo, the Lord would not have ſent forth Judas, whom he knew ſhould betray him, with the other Diſciples to preach, neither would have committed to him the power of working Miracles, and of giving Health, nor have admitted him to the Communion of the Supper. And if our impurity ſhould infect our holy Myſteries or Miniſtrations, and make them worſe that hear and receive the ſame, then the Lord would never have touched the Leper whom he had healed, neither would he have kiſſed him, neither would have eaten with Simon another Leper, neither would have ſuffered his feet to be kiſſed, and with the tears to be waſhed, and with the hair to be dried, and his head to be anointed of Mary the ſinner.

Therefore the holy Canons have thus decreed, That no man, which rightly receiveth the Lords Sacraments of an Heretick, ſhould be therefore any thing corrupted by his heretical pravity, nor the ſaid Sacraments ſhould be any whit diſtained by the infection of him. Whereupon the Church of Rome, in a certain Epiſtle directed unto Anaſtaſius the Emperor, to Anaſtaſius the Pope, did ſo ordain and write, That none of all them whom Acatius did baptize, or whom he ordained Canonically to be Prieſts or Levites, ſhould be any thing hurt by the name of the ſaid Acatius; ſo that thereby the Sacraments which by him were miniſtred, ſhould ſeem the leſs firm and effectual. For the Sacrament of Baptiſm alſo being miniſtred of an Adulterer or a Thief (which God forefend to be in the Church) doth come unto the Receiver never a whit the worſe. What meant that voice which ſounded by the Dove, but that it excluded all evil and impurity of the corruption of man? in the which it is Matth.3. declared and ſaid, This is he which baptizeth, &c. For if the beams of this viſible Sun, paſſing by the filthy places, receive no ſpot or filthineſs thereby, much more the grace of him which made this viſible Sun, is not tyed to any worthineſs of our works. Whatſoever therefore any Miniſter of the Church worketh in his Function to the behoof of the People, all that taketh his effect by the operation of God. Thus witneſſeth Paul, by whom Chriſt
1 Cor.3. ſpeaketh, I have planted, and Apollo hath watred, but it is the Lord that hath given the increaſe. God regardeth not ſo much who or what manner of perſon doth preach, but that he ſo preach that he may confirm them that be naught, and cauſe them to preach well of Chriſt. For ſuch is the operation of Gods mighty Grace, that by evil men he winneth good men, and by reprobate and wicked perſons, he getteth and gathereth together thoſe that be good.

By theſe, and ſuch other Reaſons and Authorities above alledged, you ought to be perſwaded, neither to abandon us that be married from the adminiſtration of Divine Service, nor yet to Excommunicate ſuch, to whom the matter nothing pertaineth, from the Communion thereof. And if we be evil, we are evil to our ſelves, and hurt our ſelves more than others. And ſuch as you ſuppoſe peradventure to be vicious, yet may have ſome good thing inwardly which you know not of.

For

For many there be whom you judge to be incontinent, which live more chaſtly than they whom you ſo greatly extoll for their continency. We that have Wives, according to the Apoſtles mind, ſo have them as though we had them not. Which gift of Continency, forſomuch as you cannot give us, pray therefore with us and for us, that he will give it unto us, who only is the giver thereof, and without whom no man is able to live continently. For otherwiſe we cannot have it, unleſs we pray unto him from the bottom of our hearts, who is known to be the Author and Giver thereof. And this ſame (ſaith Solomon) is wiſdom, to know whoſe gift it is, neither is there any gift above this.

1 Cor. 7.

Sap. 8.

Theſe two Epiſtles, written to Pope Nicolas under the Title of Voluſianus, give us to underſtand by the Contents thereof, firſt, That he himſelf was then a married Biſhop.

Secondly, That the liberty of Prieſts Marriage ought not to be reſtrained by any general Law of compulſion, but to be left to every mans free choice and voluntary Devotion.

Thirdly, The ſaid Epiſtles being written to Pope Nicolas (if the title be true) declare, that the Law, prohibiting the lawful Matrimony of Church-men, began firſt in this Popes time generally to be enacted.

And although it be not here expreſſed which Pope Nicolas this was, yet by the circumſtance of time, and eſpecially by the words of Pope Alexander, 1. Diſtinct. 32. Præter, it may probably be eſteemed to be Nicolas the ſecond, and not Nicolas the firſt, as ſome do ſuppoſe: amongſt whom is Illyricus in Centur. 9. cap. 10. and alſo John Bale, de Scriptoribus, Cent. 2. with certain other. From whoſe Judgments, although I am loth to diſſent, yet notwithſtanding modeſtly and freely to utter herein my opinion, this I ſuppoſe, that if the truth of this matter were throughly tried, it might peradventure be found that they be herein deceived, and all by miſtaking a certain place of Gratian: For the better explanation whereof here it is to be underſtood, that amongſt the Diſtinctions of Gratian there is a Conſtitution, Diſtinct. 3. Nullus, the tenour whereof is this, Nullus Miſſam audiat Presbyteri, quem ſcit concubinam indubitanter habere, aut ſubintroductam mulierem, &c. That is, That no man ſhall hear Maſs of any Prieſt whom he knoweth undoubtedly to have a Concubine, or a Woman privily reſorting to him, &c.

Diſt. 32. præter. Flac. Illyric. Cent. 9. cap. 10. Joan. Baleus de Scriptoribus, Cent. 2.

A doubt diſcuſſed whether this Nicolas was firſt or ſecond, to whom Voluſianus wrote.

Diſt. 23. Nullus.

This Decree, forſomuch as Gratian doth alledge under the name and title of Pope Nicolas, not naming what Nicolas he was, therefore John Bale and Illyricus, one following the other, and they both following Volaterane, Lib. 22. do vouch this Conſtitution upon Nicolas the firſt. The words of Volaterane be theſe, writing of Nicolas the firſt, Multa hic utilia conſtituit, inter quæ, nequis Concubinam habenti Presbytero aut Sacrificanti intereſſet, ut teſtatur Gratianus, &c.

In like effect follow alſo the words of Illyricus aforeſaid, Decretum fecit, ne quis à Sacerdote Sacramentum ſuſcipiat, quem ſciret habere Concubinam, ſeu Uxorem; and alledgeth (as Volaterane doth) the ſaid Diſtinction of Gratian, Diſtinct. 32. Nullus. In alledging whereof both they ſeem to be deceived, in miſtaking belike one Nicolas for another, as may be proved and made good by three or four Reaſons.

Volateran. 22. diſt. præter.

The firſt reaſon to prove this Nicolas, to whom Voluſianus wrote, to be Nicolas the ſecond.

Firſt, By the words of Pope Alexander the ſecond in the next Chapter following, who being the Succeſſor of Leo and Nicolas the ſecond, uſeth the ſame words in his Synod of Mantua (which Gratian referreth unto Nicolas) and proſecuteth the ſame more amply and fully, alledging moreover the former Conſtitution of both his Predeceſſors, Pope Leo and Nicolas, which by all ſtories are known to be Leo the Ninth, and Nicolas the Second, which both were next before him. The words of Alexander the Second, be theſe; Præter hoc autem præcipiendo mandamus, ut nullus Miſſam audiat Presbyteri quem ſcit Concubinam habere indubitanter, vel ſubintroductam mulierem, unde etiam ſancta Synodus hoc capitulum ſub excommunicatione ſtatuit, dicens; Quicunque Sacerdotum, Diaconorum, Subdiaconorum, poſt conſtitutum beatæ memoriæ prædeceſſoris noſtri ſancti Leonis Papæ, & Nicolai, de vaſtitate Clericorum, Concubinam palam duxerit, vel ductam non reliquerit, &c. By the which words ſpeaking of Nicolas his Predeceſſor, it is evident to underſtand this to be Pope Nicolas the Second, which was his next Predeceſſor, and not Pope Nicolas the firſt, who was about 200 years before him.

The Conſtitution of Pope Alexander the Second, againſt Prieſts marriage.

The ſecond Reaſon.

The ſecond Reaſon I take out of the next Chapter of Gratian going before, where he alledgeth again the ſame Nicolas writing to Otho Archbiſhop. Which Otho was then in the time of this Nicolas the Second Archbiſhop of Colen, and was afterward in the Councel of Mantua, under Pope Alexander the Second, teſte Joan. Quintio, jureconſulto, Whereby it muſt needs be granted, that this was Nicolas the Second, and not the Firſt.

Ex Joan. Quintio in Speculo Sacerdotii.

The third Reaſon.

The third Conjecture or Reaſon is this, for that Pope Nicolas the Firſt never made any ſuch Act or Decree, that Prieſts that were intangled with a Concubine, ſhould neither ſing Maſs, nor that any ſhould reſort to hear the Maſs of ſuch, &c. but rather the contrary. For ſo we read in the Hiſtory of Antonius, and in the Decrees, 15. q. 8. Sciſcitantibus. Sciſcitantibus vobis ſi à Sacerdote qui fuerit comprehenſus in adulterio, ſive de hoc ſola fama reſperſerit, debeatis communionem ſuſcipere, nec ne, reſpondemus; Non poteſt aliquis, quantumcunque pollutus ſit, Sacramenta divina polluere, quæ purgatoria cunctarum contagionum exiſtunt, &c.

Antonius part. 2. tit. 16

And yet more plainly alſo afterward he ſaith, Conſulendum decernitis utrum Presbyterum habentem uxorem debeatis ſuſtentare & honorare, an à vobis projicere? in quo reſpondemus, quoniam licet ipſi valde ſint reprehenſibiles, vos tamen convenit Deum imitari, qui ſolem ſuum oriri facit ſuper bonos & malos; rejicere enim à vobis eos non debetis. Diſtinct. 18. conſulendum, &c. That is, Where ye demand concerning the Prieſt that hath a Wife, whether ye ought to ſuſtain him, and honour him, or reject him from you; we anſwer, That albeit they be very much blame-worthy, yet we ought to be followers of God which maketh his Sun to riſe both upon the good, and upon the bad. And therefore ye ought not to reject ſuch away from you, &c.

Diſt. 18. Conſulendum. Ex Antonino Ibidem.

And this Nicolas, Antonius confeſſeth plainly to be Nicolas the Firſt. Whereby it is not only not unlike, but alſo moſt certain, that Nicolas the Firſt was not the Author of this Conſtitution, either to exterminate married Prieſts from their Churches, or to Excommunicate the People from receiving their Communion, much leſs then from hearing their Service.

The fourth Reaſon out of the words of Voluſianus.

Fourthly, Foraſmuch then as it is undoubted that Nicolas the Second, and Alexander the Second, through the inſtigation of wicked Hildebrand, were the Authors of that Conſtitution, whereof Gratian ſpeaketh, it remaineth plain by the words of Voluſianus, in the later end of his Letter (wherein he maketh mention both of diſcharging the Prieſt from ſinging Maſs, and the People from hearing) that the ſaid Epiſtle was written, not to Pope Nicolas the Firſt, but to the Second, becauſe both theſe were decreed againſt married Prieſts under Nicolas the Second, and Alexander the Second, as is afore declared.

And further, leſt my Judgment herein ſhould ſeem to ſtand alone and ſingular, without ſome to take my part, I will here produce for me a Pariſian Doctor, and a famous Lawyer, Jannes Quintius above mentioned, who in his Book De Clericorum moribus, plainly accordeth with mine Opinion touching this Nicolas Author of the Decree aforeſaid, where he writeth in theſe words; Nicolaus Papa Othoni Colonienſi Archiepiſc. &c. Quinque fuerunt hoc nomine Pontifices, primum ſecundumve oportuit eſſe, qui hæc reſcripſerit, ille Romanus An. 860. hic Burgundus, An. 1059. Reliquos Nicolaos anteceſſit Gratianus, qui ſcripſit hæc. Anno 1250. Poſtericrem fuiſſe credo, qui in Panomiæ lib. 3. Tit. de Lapſis, nominatur Nicolaus junior, cujus eſt & aliud Decretum ſequens, &c. That is to ſay in Engliſh, Pope Nicolas writing to Otho Archbiſhop of Colen. Gloſſ. There have been in all five Popes called by the name of Nicolas. Of the which five, this Nicolas the writer hereof muſt be either the firſt or ſecond: the one a Roman, Anno 860. the other a Burgundian, Anno 1059. or 1060. The other Nicolas lived after Gratian, who wrote in the year 1150. In my Judgment I ſuppoſe this

Ex teſtimonio Joan. Quintii de Clericorum moribus.

The Author of this Book of Panomia was Ivo Carnotenſis, in which Book he compiled divers Canons of Popes and Biſhops.

to be Nicolas the Second, which in the third Book of the Laws, called Panomiæ, tit. De Lapſis, is named Nicolas the younger: Which Nicolas alſo is Author of the next Decree that followeth, &c.

Objection anſwered.

Wherefore if any man ſhall object hereafter, That becauſe Gratian in the Diſtinction aforeſaid nameth Pope Nicolas abſolutely without any additions, it is therefore to be taken for Nicolas the firſt; unto this Objection I ſet here theſe two Lawyers to anſwer. Unto whoſe anſwer this I add alſo, That the common manner of Gratian lightly in all his Diſtinctions, is, that when he ſpeaketh of Popes, as of Innocentius, Gregorius, Leo, Lucius, and ſuch other, very ſeldom he expreſſeth the difference of their names: So in the Diſtinction 18. Presbyteris, where he bringeth in the Decree of Calixtus in like manner againſt the Matrimony of Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons, he addeth thereto no diſcrepance of his name; and yet all the world knoweth that this was Calixtus the Second, and not the Firſt, &c. But whether he were or no, the matter forceth not much. The Letters (no doubt) by their title appear to be written by Voluſianus. Moſt certain this is, by whomſoever they were written, fruitful Epiſtles they are, and effectual to the purpoſe.

But leſt we ſhould ſeem too much to digreſs from our purpoſe, let us return to the ſtory and time of Nicolas the Second again, which was about the year, as is ſaid, 1060. a little before Hildebrand was Pope. Which Hildebrand, albeit he was then but a Cardinal, yet was he the whole doer of all things, and concluded what him liſted in the Church of Rome, and alſo made Popes whom he would, as appeareth both by this Nicolas, and alſo Pope Alexander which followed him. So that this diſſolution of Prieſts marriage began ſomewhat to kindle under this Pope Nicolas, through the Peſtilent means of Hildebrand, and after him encreaſed more under Pope Alexander, as appeareth by the Synod holden at Millain, Anno 1067. But moſt of all it burſt out under the ſaid Hildebrand himſelf, being Pope, the year as is ſaid 1076.

Read afore.

The times examined of this Voluſianus's Epiſtle to Pope Nicolas.

Although as touching this Prohibition of Prieſts to be married, I am not ignorant that certain of the contrary Faction, in ſearching out the reach and antiquity of this Tradition, for Prieſts to abſtain from Wives, do refer the ſame to the time of the ſecond Councel of Carthage, which was about the time of Pope Syritius, a great enemy to Miniſters Wives, as appeareth Diſtinct. 84. cum Præterito. Yet notwithſtanding to the ſame may be anſwered, That this was no univerſal or general Councel, but ſome particular Synod, and therefore of no ſuch great forcible Authority.

Concil. Carthag. 2. c. 3.

Diſt. 84. cap. Cum præterito.

2. Secondly, The ſame Synod being about the time of Pope Syritius, who was a capital Enemy againſt Prieſts marriage, may ſeem to draw ſome corruption of the time then preſent.

3. Thirdly, Neither is it unpoſſible, but as divers baſtard Epiſtles have been falſly fathered upon certain ancient Biſhops of the Primitive Church, and divers Canons alſo, as of the Councel of Nice, have been corrupted by Biſhops of Rome, ſo ſome falſhood likewiſe or forgery might be uſed in this ſecond Councel of Carthage.

4. Fourthly, Although no falſe Conveyance had been uſed therein, yet forſomuch as the ſaid Canon of the ſecond Councel of Carthage doth miſ-report and falſifie the Canons of the Apoſtles, in ſo doing it doth juſtly diminiſh his own credit.

Prieſts and Biſhops married long after the ſecond Councel of Carthage.

5. Fifthly, Seeing the foreſaid Canon of this ſecond Councel of Carthage tendeth clean contrary to the Canons of the Apoſtles, to the Councel of Gangra, and other Councels more, and commandeth that which they do accurſe, the Authority thereof ought to have no great force, but rather may be rejected.

6. Finally, though this Conſtitution of the Councel of Carthage were perfectly ſound without all corruption, yet plain and evident it is by this Voluſianus, Biſhop alſo of Carthage, that the ſame Conſtitution took no great hold in the Church, forſomuch as we ſee, that both this Voluſianus was married after that in Carthage himſelf, and alſo beſides him, many hundred years after, marriage was a common matter through moſt Churches of Chriſtendom, amongſt Biſhops and Prieſts, as partly before hath been declared. And more may be ſeen in Hiſtories, what great tumults and buſineſs was long after that in Hildebrands time, and after him alſo amongſt the Clergy-men, both in Italy, Spain, France, and in all Quarters of Chriſtendom, for ſeparating Prieſts from their liberty of marrying.

And again, if this Tradition concerning the unmarried life of Prieſts had ſtood upon ſuch an old Foundation from the ſecond Councel of Carthage (as they pretend) what needed then in the time of Pope Nicolas the Second, Pope Alexander the Second, Pope Gregory the Seventh, and other Popes after them, ſo much labour to be taken, ſo many Laws and Decrees to be deviſed and enacted, for the aboliſhing of Prieſts marriage, if the ſame had been of ſuch a long Antiquity as they would make men believe?

The general Law forbidding Prieſts to marry, when it firſt began.

By theſe things conſidered it may appear, that this detraction of Prieſts marriage, by publick Law compelling them to ſingle life, was never received for a full Law generally to be obſerved in the Church of Rome, but only ſince the beginning of Hildebrand, that is, ſince theſe five hundred years.

About which time firſt is to be noted, That under Pope Leo, and this Pope Nicolas, Cranzius, and certain Germani Chronicles do ſay, that Symony and Prieſts marriage were prohibited. This Pope Leo was Anno 1051.

Ex Romana Synodo 4.

After this Pope Nicolas (to whom the foreſaid Letter of Voluſianus ſeemeth to be written) made this Ordinance: Ut nullus Miſſam audiat Presbyteri quem ſcit Concubinam indubitanter habere aut ſubintroductam mulierem. Et mox, quicunque Sacerdotum, Diaconorum, Subdiaconorum, poſt conſtitutum beatæ memoriæ prædeceſſoris noſtri ſanctiſſ. Papæ Leonis, de caſtitate Clericorum, Concubinam palam duxerit, vel ductam non reliquerit, ex parte Omnipotentis Dei & Authoritate beati Petri & Pauli præcipimus, & omnino contradicimus ut Miſſam non cantet, &c. That is, Whatſoever Prieſt, Deacon, or Sub-deacon, according to the Conſtitution of Pope Leo our Predeceſſor, concerning the Chaſtity of Clerks, ſhall openly marry a Concubine, or ſhall not put her away being married: in the behalf of Almighty God, &c. we utterly charge and forbid the ſame, that he ſing no Maſs, nor read the Goſpel or Epiſtle at Maſs, nor execute any Divine Service, &c. And this was about the year of our Lord, 1058.

Although in this Conſtitution of Pope Nicolas, this word Concubine may be underſtood for no Wife, but ſo as Gratian underſtandeth it in the ſixteenth Canon of the Apoſtles in theſe words, Concubina vero intelligenda eſt præter Uxorem: That is, For one beſides a mans Wife. Then after this Pope Nicolas coming Pope Alexander, and ſpecially Pope Hildebrand, do expound this Concubine forbidden, for a Wife, and ſuch Prieſts as be married, they expound them for Nicolaitans; for ſo we read in the Synod of Millain, under Pope Alexander the Second; Nicolaitæ autem dicuntur Clerici, qui contra caſtitatis Eccleſiaſticæ regulam fœminis admiſcentur, &c.

Concubina.

Diſt. 33. quæ. Ex Synod. Mediolanenſ. Married Prieſts call'd Nicolaitans.

And further it followeth in the ſame Synod, Nicolaitarum quoque hæreſin nihilominus condemnamus, & non modo Presbyteros, ſed & Diaconos & Subdiaconos ab Uxorum, vel Concubinarum fœdo conſortio noſtris ſtudiis, in quantum nobis poſſibilitas fuerit, arcendos eſſe promittimus, &c.

And after it followeth in this wiſe, Si hæc de Simoniaca & Nicolaitarum hæreſi delenda & funditus deſtruenda fideliter non obſervavero, ab Omnipotenti Deo & omnibus Sanctis ſim excommunicatus & anathematizatus, & ab omni Chriſtianorum conſortio inveniar alienus.

Ibidem.

And moreover it followeth upon the ſame, Anathematizo quoque omnes hæreſes extollentes ſe adverſus ſanctam Catholicam & Apoſtolicam Eccleſiam, ſpecialiter vero & nominatim Simoniacam hæreſin; deinde Nicolaitarum æque abhominalem hæreſin, quæ impudenter latrat, ſacri Altaris Miniſtros debere vel poſſe licenter uti Conjugibus, quomodo & laicos, &c. As much to ſay in Engliſh, as, I do accurſe all Hereſies extolling themſelves againſt the holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, but eſpecially and namely, the hereſie of Symony.

The Synod of Millain againſt Prieſts marriage.

Symony: and in like manner the abominable Heresie of the Nicolaitans, which impudently barketh, that the Ministers of the holy Altar may and ought to use Wives lawfully, as well as Lay-men, &c. And thus much concerning the Synod of Millain, under Pope Alexander the Second, An. 1067.

Anno 1067.

Pope Hildebrand the greatest enemy to Priests marriage.

And after this Alexander rose up Pope Hildebrand, of all other the chiefest and most principal Enemy against Priests marriage. For whereas all other approved Canons and Councels were contented, that any Clergyman, having a Wife before his entring into his Ministry, might enjoy the liberty of his Marriage, so that he married not a Widow, or a known Harlot, or kept a Concubine, or were twice married; now cometh in Pope Hildebrand, making Priests Marriage to be Heresie, and further enacting, That whatsoever Clerk, Deacon, or Minister had a Wife, whatsoever she was, Maid or other, either before his Orders, or after, should utterly put her from him, or else forsake his Ministery, &c.

1 Tim 4. Ex Lamberto Schafnaburgensi.

Although notwithstanding the greatest part of Ecclesiastical Ministers seeing this strange Doctrine and Proceedings (which S. Paul expresly calleth The Doctrine of Devils) did what they could to withstand the same. Of whom Lambertus Schafnaburgensis thus writeth; Adversus hoc Decretum protinus vehementer infremuit tota factio Clericorum, hominem plane Hæreticum, & vesani dogmatis esse clamitans, qui oblitus sermonis Domini, quo ait, Non omnes capiunt hoc verbum; Qui potest capere, capiat, &c. Et Apostoli, Qui se non continet, nubat; Melius est nubere, quam uri; violenta exactione homines vivere cogeret ritu angelorum. Quod si pergeret, malle se Sacerdotium quam conjugium deserere, &c. In English thus; Against this Decree the whole number of the Clergy did vehemently storm and grudge, crying out upon him as a pernicious Heretick, and one that made Phantastical Doctrine: who forgetting what the Lord saith, All men cannot take this word; he that can take it, let him take it. And also what the Apostle saith, Who so cannot otherwise contain, let him marry; better it is to marry than to burn, &c. Yet notwithstanding would he bind men to live like Angels. Who if he continued as he began, they would (they said) sooner forsake the Order of Priesthood, than their Order of Matrimony, &c.

The Councel of Rome against Priests marriage under Pope Hildebrand. Anno 1074.

Which Hildebrand, all this notwithstanding, yet ceased not still to call upon them, and to send to the Bishops every where to execute his Commandment with all severity, threatning to lay the Apostolical Censure upon them, if otherwise they shewed not their diligence therein to the uttermost. Ex Lamb. This was An. 1074. Of the same Hildebrand Radulphus de Diceto also writing, hath these words:

Ex Radulpho de Diceto.

Gregorius Papa septimus Hildebrandus, celebrata Synodo, Simoniacos anathematizavit, uxoratos Sacerdotes à divino removit Officio, & Laicis Missam eorum audire interdixit novo exemplo, & (ut multis visum est) inconsiderato præjudicio contra sanctorum Patrum Sententiam, &c. The English is this; Pope Gregory the Seventh, called Hildebrand, holding a Synod, accursed such as committed Symony, and removed married Priests from saying Service, forbidding also the Lay-men to hear their Mass, after a new and strange example, and as many thought, after an inconsiderate prejudice, against the Sentence of holy Fathers.

And thus much for the Antiquity of bringing in the single life of Priests, which first springing from the time of Pope Nicolas and Alexander the Second, began first with a Custom, and afterwards was brought into a Law, chiefly by Pope Hildebrand, and so spread from Italy into other Countries, and at length into England also, albeit not without much adō, as ye shall hear, the Lord willing.

Lanfrank's Law for Priests not to marry.

In the mean while, as Pope Nicolas and Hildebrand were busie at Rome, so Lanfrank Archbishop of Canterbury likewise was doing here in England about the same matter, although he began not altogether so roughly as Pope Hildebrand did, for so it appeared by his Councel holden at Winchester: where though he inhibited such as were Prebendaries of Cathedral Churches to have Wives, yet did he permit in his Decree, that such Priests as dwelt in Towns and Villages, having Wives, should retain them still, and not to be compelled to be separate from them; and they which had none, should be inhibited to have; injoyning moreover the Bishops thus, to foresee hereafter, that they presumed not to admit into Order any Priests or Deacons, unless they should first make a solemn profession to have no Wives.

Ex actis Concilii Wintoniensis sub Lanfranco.

The words of the Councel be these; Decretumque est, ut nullus Canonicus uxorem habeat, Sacerdotum vero in Castellis & in vicis habitantium habentes uxores, non cogantur ut dimittant: non habentes, interdicantur ut habeant: & deinceps caveant Episcopi, ut Sacerdotes vel Diaconos non præsumant ordinare, nisi profiteantur ut uxores non habeant, &c.

Ex Mat. Parif. Lanfrank supposed not to be a pure Virgin.

And here to note by the way of the said Lanfranke, for all his glorious gay shew of his Monkish Virginity and single Life, yet he escaped not altogether so unspotted for his part, but that the story of Matthew Paris, writing of Paulus Cadonensis, whom Lanfranke preferred so gladly to be Abbot of S. Albanes, thus reporteth of him, Paulus (inquit) Monachus Cadonensis Archiepiscopi Lanfranci nepos, jure, aliquorum relationibus, consanguinitate propinquior, &c. That is, Paul a Monk of Cadune, and Nephew of the Archbishop Lanfranke, yea, as some say further, more near in blood to him than so, &c.

Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury, a constant doer against Priests marriage. Conc. Later. Can 14. De Clericis matrimon. copulatis.

Then after Lanfranke came Anselme into the See of Canterbury, who taking to him a stouter stomack, more fiercely and eagerly laboured this matter, in abrogating utterly the Marriage of Priests, Deacons, Sub-deacons, and of the Universal Clergy, not permitting (as Lanfranke did) Priests that had Wives in Villages and Towns to keep them still, but utterly commanding, and that under great pain, not only Priests and Deacons, but Sub-deacons also (which is against the Councel of Lateran) which were already married, to be separated, and that none should be received into Order hereafter, without profession of perpetual Chastity.

And yet notwithstanding, for all this great blustering and thundering of this Romish μυγδμ, the Priests yet still holding their own as well as they could, gave not much place to his unlawful Injunction, but kept still their Wives almost two hundred years after, refusing and resisting of long time the yoke of that servile Bondage, to keep still their freedom from such vowing, professing, and promising, as may well appear by those Priests of York, of whom Gerardus Archbishop of York speaketh, writing to Anselme in these words:

Sitio Clericorum meorum integritatem, sed præterquam in paucis admodum, vel Aspidis surditatem, vel fabulosi cujusdam Prothes mutabilitatem invenio. Variis linguarum aculeis, modò minas, modò convitia infigunt. Sed hoc facilius in his qui remotiores sunt, tolero. Illud omnino grave genus mali est, quod hi qui quasi in sinu meo sunt, qui Canonicorum nomine gaudent, Canones aspernant, adversus Concilii nostri statuta, quasi sophistici disputatores argumentantur, professiones verò mihi penitus abnegant Canonici illi, qui sine professione ad sacros Ordines inordinabiliter sunt provecti, & qui in Presbyteratu vel Diaconatu constituti; Uxores sive Concubinas in publico hactenus habuerunt, ab Altari nulla se reverentia continuerunt. Cum verò ad ordines aliquos invito, dura cervice nituntur, ne in Ordinando castitatem profiteantur. In English thus; I much desire the purity of my Clergy-men: howbeit, except it be in very few, I find in them the deafness of the Serpent Aspis, and the inconstancy of Proteus, that the Poets Fable spake of. With their stinging Tongues they cast out sometimes threats, somewhile taunts and rebukes. But this grieveth me less in them that be further off. This grieveth me most of all, that they which be of mine own Church, as in mine own bosome, and Prebendaries of mine own See, contemn our Canons, and argue like Sophistical Disputers, against the Statutes of our Councel. The Prebendaries which unordinately have been taken into Orders heretofore, without making vow or profession, refuse utterly to make profession to me. And they that be Priests or Deacons, having married before openly Wives or Concubines, will not be removed for any reverence from the Altar. And when I call upon any to receive Order, stiffly they deny to profess Chastity in their Ordering, &c.

Thus

Hereby appeareth that Prieſts in the old time here in England never made vow of Chaſtity, at their orders before this time. Ex Edmero l.4.

Thus for all their rigorous auſterity, by this Anſelm enforcing his Decree made at London, againſt the marriage of Prieſts, yet the ſame had no great ſucceſs, neither in his life time, nor after his life. For although ſundry Prieſts during his life time were compelled by his extremity to renounce their Wives, yet many denied to obey him.

Divers were contented rather to leave their Benifices than their Wives. A great number were permitted by K. Henry for Money to enjoy their Wives. Which was ſo chargeable unto them (ſaith Edmer in his fourth Book) that at length 200. Prieſts, in their Albes and Prieſtly Veſtments, came barefoot to the Kings Palace, crying to him for mercy, and eſpecially making their ſuit to the Queen, who uſing much compaſſion towards them, yet durſt not make any interceſſion for them.

Read before. Anſelm at this time was over the Sea, making his Voyage to the Pope. Who hearing hereof writeth to the King, declaring that ſuch forfeitures appertained nothing to him, but only unto Biſhops, and in their default to the Archbiſhops. Whereof read more before. So wilful was the blind zeal of this Prelate, againſt all reaſon, againſt nature it ſelf, againſt the example of his fore-Elders, againſt publick cuſtom of his time, againſt the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, the Conſtitution of Councels, againſt all honeſty; and all Gods forbode, that he neither at the commiſeration of the King, nor at the crying out and publick dolour of ſo many Prieſts, nor yet moved with the Letters of Pope Paſchalis himſelf, who putting him in remembrance of ſo many Prieſts Sons, willed him to conſider the neceſſity of the time, would yet any thing relent from his ſtubborn purpoſe unto his Read afore: latter end. In whom, as many great crimes may juſtly be noted, ſo of all other this is moſt principally in him to be reprehended: for that he ſeeing and perceiving what Sodomitical fedity and abomination, with other inconveniencies did ſpring incontinently upon this his diabolical Doctrine, yet for all that would not give over his peſtilent purpoſe.

After the prohibition of Matrimony followed the vice of Sodomitry. For ſo the ſtory recordeth, that when Anſelme had eſtabliſhed his Synodal Conſtitution, in ſeparating Prieſts from their Wives (which was Anno 1103.) not long after, rumours and complaints were brought to him, of the execrable vice of Sodomitry, which then began eſpecially to raign in the Clergy, after this inhibition of Matrimony.

An Act of Anſelme againſt Sodomitry. Whereupon Anſelme was conſtrained to call another Councel at Pauls within London, to provide for this miſchief, In which Councel this Act was made. Sodomiticum flagitium facientes, & eos in hac voluntate juvantes, gravi anathemate damnamus, donec pœnitentia & confeſſione abſolutionem mereantur, &c. All them that commit the ungracious Sin of Sodomitry, and them alſo which aſſiſt them in their wicked purpoſe, with grievous curſe we do condemn, till ſuch time as they ſhall deſerve abſolution by penance and confeſſion, &c.

Thus ye have heard what abominable wickedneſs enſued after that Prieſts were debarred from marriage, and what ſore puniſhment was deviſed by this maidenly Prelate, for extirping that ſinful wickedneſs; in the aboliſhing whereof, more wiſely he ſhould have removed away the occaſion whereof he was the Author himſelf, than by penalty to ſuppreſs, which he could never do.

The penalty provided againſt Sodomitry. Now let us hear further, what followed in that worthy Councel; Qui vero in hoc crimine publicatus fuerit, Statutum eſt, ſiquidem fuerit perſona religioſi ordinis, ut ad nullum amplius gradum promoveatur, & ſi quem habet, ab illo deponatur; Si autem laicus, ut in toto Regno Angliæ legali ſua condignitate privetur. Et ne hujus criminis abſolutionem, iis qui ſe ſub regula vivere voverunt, aliquis niſi Epiſcopus deinceps facere præſumat. Statutum quoque eſt, ut per totam Angliam in omnibus Eccleſiis, & in omnibus diebus Dominicis, excommunicatio præfata publicetur ac renovetur, &c. Which is as much to ſay in Engliſh, It is enacted, that whoſoever ſhall be publickly known to be guilty hereof, if he be a religious perſon, he ſhall from henceforth be promoted to no degree of honor, and that degree which he hath already ſhall be taken from him. If he be a Lay perſon, he ſhall be deprived of all his freedom within the whole Realm of England. And that none under a Biſhop ſhall preſume to abſoil ſuch as have been Monks profeſſed, of that treſpaſs. It is alſo enacted, that every Sunday in the year, and in every Pariſh Church in England, this general curſe aforeſaid ſhall be publiſhed and renewed, &c. Ex Rog. Hoved. & Epiſt. Anſelm. 278.

Ex Epiſt. Anſelm. Reg. Hovede.

Is not here (trow you) good diviſion of Juſtice, that lawful wedlock of Prieſts can find no Grace nor Pardon, yea, is made now Hereſie; where Adultery and horrible Sodomitry is waſhed away with a little confeſſion? And ſee yet what followeth more. After that this penal curſe ſhould now go abroad and be publiſhed in Churches, the Monks perceiving this matter to touch them ſomwhat near, whiſpered in Anſelmus ear, perſwading him that the publication of that Act might grow to great danger and inconvenience, in opening the vice which before was not known; in ſuch ſort, that in ſhort time after that curſe was called in again. The curſe againſt curſed Sodomitry called in again. Ex Joan. Trev iſa.

And ſo curſed Sodomitry and Adultery paſſed free without puniſhment, or word ſpeaking againſt it; where contrarily godly Matrimony could find no mercy. Vertue puniſhed, Vice eſcapeth free

Now what Reaſons and Arguments this Anſelmus ſucked out of the Court of Rome, to prove the Matrimony of Prieſts unlawful, were it not for combring the Reader with tedioufneſs, here would be ſhewed. Briefly the chief grounds of all his long diſputation, in his Book intituled, Offendiculum Sacerdotum, between the Maſter and Scholar, come to this effect. Anſelm. Offendiculum Sacerdotum.

Argument.

Prieſts of the Old Law, during the time of their Adminiſtration, abſtained from their Wives. The Reaſons and Arguments of Anſelm againſt the marriage of Prieſts.

Ergo, Prieſts in the time of the Goſpel, which every day Miniſter at the Altar, muſt never have any Wives.

Another Argument.

Moſes, when he ſhould ſanctifie the people, going up to the hill, commanded them to ſequeſter themſelves from their Wives three days:

Ergo, Prieſts that muſt be ſanctified to the Lord always, ought to live chaſtly always without Wives.

Another Argument.

David, before he ſhould eat of the Shewbread, was asked whether he and his company had been without the company of their Wives three days:

Ergo, Prieſts that be continually attending upon the Table and Sacraments of the Lord, ought never to have company with any ſuch.

Another Argument.

Oza, which put his hand to the Ark, was ſlain therefore, as it is thought, becauſe he lay with his Wife the Night before. 1 Kings 6.

Ergo, Prieſts whoſe hands be always occupied about the Lords Service, muſt be pure from the company of Wife or any Woman.

Another Argument.

Nadab and Abihu, which ſacrificed with ſtrange fire, were devoured therefore, becauſe they companied with their Wives the ſame Night.

Ergo, Prieſts and Sacrificers muſt have no Wives to company withal.

Another Argument.

The Prieſts of the Gentiles in old time when they ſacrificed to their Idols, are ſaid to lye from their Wives:

Ergo, much more the Prieſts that ſacrifice to the living God ought ſo to do,

Another Argument.

Chriſt was born of a Virgin, Chriſt lived ever a Virgin, and commandeth them that will ſerve him, to follow him. Qui mihi miniſtrat, me ſequatur, (id eſt) Si vis mihi miniſtrare, me caſtè vivendo imitare. John 12.

Ergo, Prieſts that have Wives are not meet to ſerve him.

1 Cor. 7.

Let every Man have his own Wife for avoiding of Fornication.

The expoſition of Anſelme.

The groſs expoſitions of Anſelm, upon the words of S. Paul.

That is meant and granted of the Apoſtle only to Laymen: Hoc ſolis Laicis conceſſiſſe, nemo ignorat.

1 Cor. 7.

Melius eſt nubere quam uri: It is better to marry than to burn.

The expoſition.

Melius, id eſt, levius eſt legitimæ uxori nubere, quam uri, id eſt quàm alienarum mulierum concupiſcentia conſumi. It is a lighter fault to marry one lawful wife, than to be conſumed with concupiſcence of ſtrange Women.

1 Tim. 3.

Oportet eſſe Epiſcopum irreprehenſibilem, unius uxoris virum, &c. A Biſhop ought to be unreproveable, the Husband of one Wife, &c.

The expoſition.

Præcipit Apoſtolus; ne quis ad ſacerdotium accedere præſumat, niſi is qui non niſi unicam uxorem laicus habuiſſet. Accepto autem Ordine nunquam ei carnis commixtione ſe copularet, tantum vitæ neceſſaria ei ſubminiſtraret: That is; The Apoſtle here commandeth, that none ſhould preſume to be Prieſt, but he who being a Layman before, hath had no more but one Wife: And after he be made Prieſt, not to couple himſelf any more with her, but only to miniſter to her things neceſſary for her living, &c.

And finally after theſe things thus diſputed and alledged, the ſaid Anſelme concludeth the matter with this final cenſure and determination, as followeth: Per hoc autem quod ſacras veſtes induunt, vel ſacra vaſa tangunt, Chriſto violenter manus injiciunt. Per hoc autem quod impudenter offerre præſumunt, Chriſtum quodam modo viſibiliter in Altari crucifigunt. Legitur miniſterium eorum Chriſti perſecutio, imo crucifixio appellatur. In Engliſh thus; In that theſe men (he ſpeaketh of married Prieſts) do put on the holy Veſtments, or do touch the holy Veſſels, they do lay violent hands upon Chriſt. And in that they preſume impudently to offer, they do in a manner viſibly crucifie Chriſt upon the Altar. The miniſtry of ſuch is read to be a perſecution, or rather a Crucifying of Chriſt, &c. The concluſion or cenſure of Anſelm upon married Prieſts.

Loe here the mighty Reaſons, the ſtrong timbred Arguments, and the deep Divinity wherewith this Anſelm and all other that draw after his ſtring, go about to impugn the lawfulneſs of Prieſts marriage. Becauſe the Iſraelites when they ſhould appear before the Lord at Mount Sinai, were commanded to be kept from their Wives three days; and becauſe the Prieſts of the old Law in doing their Function, as their turn came about, refrained the company of their Wives for that preſent time; Ergo, Prieſts of the new Law muſt at no time have any Wives, but live always ſingle, &c. Anſwer to Anſelmes Reaſons.

And why might not Anſelm as well argue thus: the People of Iſrael approaching to the Mount, were commanded in like ſort to waſh their Garments; Ergo, Prieſts of the new Law, which are occupied every day about the Altar, ought every day to waſh all their Garments.

Moſes, approaching to the preſence of the Lord in the Buſh, was commanded to put off his ſhooes; Ergo, Prieſts of the new Law, which are ever approaching to the preſence of their God, ſhould never wear ſhooes.

Of King David and his company, which but once in all their life did eat of the Shew-bread, it was demanded by the high Prieſt, whether they had kept them from their Wives three days before: Ergo, Kings and the people of the new Teſtament, which every year eat the Bread of the Lords Boord, more precious than ever was that Panis Propoſitionis, ſhould abide all their life wifeleſs and unſpouſed.

But here Anſelm ſhould have conſidered by theſe Scriptures, how we are taught not to put away our Wives, but wiſely to diſtinguiſh times; when and how to have them. For as Solomon teacheth that there is a time for all things; ſo is there a time to marry; and a time not to marry, a time to reſort, a time to withdraw, a time of company, a time of abſtinence and Prayer, which S. Paul calleth, προσκαιρον; and as he ſpeaketh of a time of Prayer and abſtinence; ſo he ſpeaketh alſo of a time of reſorting together, and addeth the cauſe why; Ne tentet vos Satanas propter incontinentiam veſtram, &c. That is, Leſt Satan, ſaith he, tempt you for your incontinency. A time for all things. 1 Cor. 7.

And thus ſhould Anſelm, with Solomon and Paul, have conſidered the order and diſtinction of time. Oftentimes in Scripture that is commanded to ſome, and at ſome time, which extendeth not to others. And that which for a time is convenient, is not by and by always convenient. Neither that which for a time is forbidden in Scripture, is therefore forbidden for ever. Neirher ought ſpecial examples to break general orders; neither again do extraordinary prohibitions make an univerſal rule. Special examples break no general orders.

They were then commanded to ſequeſter themſelves from their Wives at the coming of the Lord; not that the coming of the Lord did break Wedlock, but his commandment did bind obedience; and therefore obeyed they, becauſe they were commanded. And yet were they not commanded to put away their Wives, but only to ſeparate themſelves for a time, and that not for Months and Years, but only for three days: which abſtinence alſo was enjoyned them, not in the preſence, nor at the appearing of the Lord, but three days before his deſcending to them on the hill. Whereby it appeareth, that the uſe of their Wedlock neither diſpleaſed God being preſent, nor yet did drive his preſence away when he was come; for he remained there preſent amongſt them on the hill forty days notwithſtanding. Separation of the Iſraelites from their Wives for three days is no Argument that Prieſts ſhould never marry.

Furthermore, this time of ſeparation from their Wives, as it was expreſly commanded to them of God, ſo was it not long nor tedious, but ſuch as was neither hard for them, nor unconvenient for the time: giving us thereby to underſtand, how to uſe ſeparation in Wedlock wiſely, that is, neither at no time, nor yet too long.

For as they do not well, which never follow the time of Saint Paul called, προσκαιρον, for abſtinence and Prayer: ſo do they worſe which fall into that παρεκπτωσιν, whereof Saint Paul again giveth us warning. Ne tentet vos Satanas per incontinentiam veſtram. But worſt of all do they, which ſo ſeparate their Wives clean from them, and ſo abjure all Matrimony, that they fall headlong into the Devils pitfal of fornication and all filthy abomination. And therefore the Lord foreſeeing the peril thereof, ſaid unto the people, Eſtote parati in diem tertium, & ne appropinquetis uxoribus veſtris, &c. Appointing indeed a ſeparation from their Wives; but yet, knowing the infirmity of Man, limiteth the time withal, adding, in diem tertiam and goeth no further. Separation in Wedlock, how it is to be uſed. Exod. 19.

He ſaith not, as Anſelme ſaid in the Councel of Wincheſter, Jurabunt Preſbyteri, Diaconi, & Subdiaconi, uxores ſuas omnino abjurare, nec ullam deinceps cum iis converſationem habere, ſub diſtinctione cenſuræ, &c.

The like order alſo was taken by the Lord with the Prieſts of the Old Teſtament, who although they were enjoyned to withdraw themſelves from their Wives during the time of their Prieſtly ſervice, yet for avoiding fornication they were permitted to have their Wives notwithſtanding. So that both their abſenting from their Wives ſerved to Sanctification, and their reſorting again unto them ſerved to avoid Adultery and Fornication. Objection of the Papiſts why Prieſts ſhould leave Wives.

But here our Prieſtly Prelates will object, That becauſe they be continually converſant about the Prieſtly Function, therefore a perpetual ſanctification is of them ſpecially required. Whereupon I anſwer.

tion.

Anſwer to the objection. 1. Firſt, The Prieſtly Function of thoſe high Prieſts, Sacrificing for the people in the old Law, repreſenteth only the Function of Chriſt the High-prieſt, Sacrificing for the Sins of the World, which truly and only performed that pure chaſtity in his ſanctified Body, which the Law then in thoſe Prieſts prefigured.

No ſacrificer for ſin but only Chriſt. 2. Secondarily, ſpeaking now of the Prieſts of the New Teſtament (and ſpeaking properly) the Scripture neither knoweth nor admitteth any Prieſt to Sacrifice to God for the Sins of Man, but only the high King and Prieſt Chriſt Jeſus.

3. Unto that Prieſt all other be but Servants and Miniſters; of whom ſome be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Preachers, having the gift of utterance, ſome Interpreters and Doctors, having the gift of underſtanding, ſome Deacons ſerving the Lords boord. The Office of all whom chiefly conſiſteth in miniſtring the Word, next in adminiſtring the Sacraments.

Mariage more convenient for Prieſts of the new law than of the old. 4. Fourthly, Foraſmuch as in theſe, principally above all other, pureneſs and Sanctification of life is required, as much and more too, than was in the Prieſts of the old Law, from whom all Fornication, Adultery, Inceſt, and uncleanneſs of life ought moſt to be baniſhed; therefore in theſe eſpecially, above the Prieſts of the old Law, Matrimony and Spouſage is moſt requiſite and convenient, whoſoever he be, which otherwiſe cannot contain; according to the Apoſtle, ſaying, Unuſquiſque uxorem ſuam habeat propter fornicationem.

1 Cor. 7.

Matrimony is no hinderance, but a furtherance to ſanctification. 5. Fifthly. Neither is this Matrimony in theſe any hindrance to their Sanctification before God, but rather furthereth and helpeth their ſanctification, foraſmuch as where Matrimony is not, there commonly reigneth Adultery, Fornication and all kinds of filthineſs; according to the true ſaying of Bernard, Tolle de Eccleſia honorabile connubium, & thorum immaculatum, nonne reples eam Concubinariis, inceſtuoſis, ſeminifluis, mollibus, maſculorum concubitoribus & omni denique genere immundorum? That is, Take from the Church honourable mariage, and the bed undefiled, ſhalt thou not repleniſh it with Concubinaries, with inceſtuous perſons, Sodomitical vices, and finally with all kind of beaſtly filthineſs?

Bern. ſup. Cant. Serm. 6.

The truth of which ſaying lacketh no kind of examples for confirmation, if we liſted here to ranſack the lives of theſe glorious deſpiſers of Matrimony, even from Lanfrank, the firſt Ring-leader of this dance here in England, with * Paulus Monk of Cadone his Nephew whom Matthew Paris miſdoubted to be his own Son, even to Stephen Gardiner with his Gold Locks, the Author and Work-maſter of theſe ſix Articles. But to the Reaſons of Anſelme hitherto ſufficient, which of themſelves are ſo frivolous and groſs, that only to recite them is enough to confute the ſame.

* Matth. Paris. Paulus Monachus Cadonenſis Archiepiſ. Lanfranci nepos imo aliquorum relatione conſanguinitate propinquior.

Permitting therefore the reſt to the diſcuſſing of Divines, it ſhall ſuffice for our purpoſe, profeſſing here to write Stories, to declare and make manifeſt by proceſs of times and Hiſtories, that this cruel Law, compelling Miniſters of the Church to abjure Matrimony, entred not into this land before Lanfranke and Anſelme his Succeſſor, as both may appear by the multitude of Prieſts Sons lawfully begotten in Matrimony, and ſucceeding in the Churches here in England, teſtified by the Epiſtle of Pope Paſchalis to Anſelme before, and alſo may appear likewiſe by the Council of Anſelme, holden at Wincheſter, which, partly was touched before, and now the full Act we have more largely expreſſed to be read and ſeen of all poſterity, as under followeth.

* Forte extra hortum paradiſi intelligit.

And yet this unreaſonable Statute of Anſelme, ſo diligent defenſed with ſharp Cenſures and Penalties, had no great ſpeed, neither in the life time of the ſaid Anſelme, nor long after his death; but divers Prieſts notwithſtanding kept ſtil their Wives, or after his death, they returned to their Wives again, through the ſufferance of the Famous and Learned King, named then Henry Bewclark, who ſomething ſtayed the Importunity of this Monkiſh Prelat, and willed the Prieſts ſhould keep both their Wives and their Churches, as they did before in Lanfranks days.

The cruel law of Anſelme took no great place.

Then after Anſelme followed Radulphus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in whoſe time was no great ſtir againſt the Prieſts that were married. About the time of this Archbiſhop King Henry called a Councel at London, where he obtained of the Spirituality a grant to have the puniſhment of married Prieſts (which the Spiritualty afterward did much repent) whereby the Prieſts, paying a certain ſum to the King, were ſuffered to retain their Wives ſtill, as is above ſtoried.

Ex epiſt. Anſelme. 77. Radulph. archiepiſc. Cant.

Read afore.

Next after this Radulph, then ſucceeded William Turbile, ſurnamed De Turbine, who renewed again the conſtitution of Anſelme againſt married Prieſts, eſpecially by the help of Joannes Prieſt and Cardinal of Crema, the Popes Legate, ſent the ſame time into England, An. 1129. Of which Cardinal Cremenſis, becauſe enough hath been before declared, how after his ſtout replying in the Councel of London, againſt the married ſtate of Prieſt exclaiming what a ſhameful thing it was to riſe from the ſides of a Whore to make Chriſts Body, the night following he was ſhamefully taken with a notable Whore, &c. as is apparant before.

Richardus de Turbine, archepiſc. Cant. Of this Cardinal Cremenſis read afore.

I will therefore paſs over that matter, returning again to William the Archbiſhop, who with the Cardinal Legate aforeſaid, although he buſily occupied himſelf in reproving the Matrimony of Prieſts, inſomuch that he would give them no longer reſpite to put away their Wives but from Michaelmas to Saint Andrews-day following, yet could he not bring his purpoſe to paſs, but that the Prieſts ſtill continued with their Wives by the Kings leave, as the Saxon Story plainly recordeth in theſe words: This bebedſe Archbiſcop William of Canterbriges, and ealle thaleod Biſcopes tha tha wæron on Engelon: and neforſtod noht ealle tha boblaces. eall heoldon her pifes be thas kinges leve, ſwa ſwa hi ear didon; That is to ſay in Engliſh Cronic. Saxon.

The Prieſts kept their Wives contrary to the Archbiſhops commandment.

Engliſh, This William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhops which were in England did command, and yet all theſe Decrees and Biddings ſtood not: all held their Wives by the Kings leave, even ſo as they before did. So hard was this Cauſe to be won, that the Archbiſhop at length gave it over, and left the Controverſie wholly unto the King. Whereupon he decreed that the Prieſts ſhould remain with their Wives ſtill. And ſo continued they after that, in the time of Theobaldus after him, of Thomas Becket, Richard Baldwin, Stephen Langton, Richard Edmund, Boniface, Peckham, and other, during well-near the time after Anſelme, two hundred years.

An. 25. H. 1.

And leaſt the quarrelling Adverſary, being peradventure diſpoſed here to cavil, ſhould object and ſay that ſuch marriage amongſt the Spiritual Men might be private and ſecret, but not openly known, nor quietly ſuffered by any Law of this Realm: to avoid therefore what may be by them objected, I thought it good, and as a thing neither impertinent nor unprofitable to this Story, and for the further ſatisfying of the Readers mind herein, to infer and make known by good Record, not only that the liberty of marriage, amongſt Spiritual Men, hath continued within this Realm during the time aforeſaid (videlicet) two hundred years, or thereabouts, after Anſelme, and not only in ſecret wiſe, but alſo openly, and the ſame being well known, ſuffered, and lawfully allowed of, in ſuch ſort, as both they, their Wives, Children, and Aſſigns might inherit and enjoy Lands, Tenements, and other Hereditaments, by way of Feoffment, Deed of Gifts, or any other Aſſurance, in ſuch ſort, manner and form, as Lay-men, their Heirs and Aſſigns at this day lawfully may do. As by divers Writings and Inſtruments ſhewed to us at the writing hereof, by divers Men whoſe names hereafter follow (ſome to this day remaining fair ſealed, ſome by Antiquity and long keeping much worn and their Seals mouldred and waſted) is very evident and manifeſt to be ſeen. The Copies whereof being by us truly and faithfully excerpted out of the very Originals (being yet extant) we have hereunder inſerted, as followeth.

Prieſts with Wives, how long they continued in England after Anſelme.

Certain Inſtruments and Evidences of ancient Record, declaring the marriage of Prieſts to have ſtood in times paſt, both with ancient Cuſtom, and publick Laws of this Realm.

All the Originals of theſe ſeven ſeveral pieces of Evidences, the true Copies whereof are here before inſerted and laſt recited, at this preſent (videlicet) this 23. of November, in the year of our Lord 1575. are in the cuſtody and do remain among the Evidences and Writings of John Hunt of Eſſe, aliàs Alſhen, in the County of Eſſex, Eſquire, and are pertaining and belonging to his Manor of Overhall, aliàs Parva Bradley aforeſaid, in the County of Suffolk. At whoſe hands they are eaſily at this preſent, and long time (I truſt) after the writing of this Hiſtory, ſhall remain to be ſeen of good Record, if any man either be deſirous of the ſight thereof, or doubtful of the truth of the ſame.

Mr. John Hunt hath ſeven pieces of Evidences for Prieſts marriage in his cuſtody.

Although theſe Inſtruments and Evidences above here ſpecified, be of themſelves evident and plain enough, ſo that no man can reaſonably object any thing to the contrary, yet to ſtop the mouths of all ſuch wranglers and cavillers, who being ſatisfied with no truth, will here peradventure take ſome occaſion upon this word Clericus, ſo oftentimes named in theſe Evidences aforeſaid, to object that this word may as well be taken for other as for Prieſts; therefore to prevent the cavilling Objections of ſuch, this will be briefly to reply thereunto, That in the common Laws of this Realm, in all Gifts or Feoffments made to any ſpiritual perſon (unleſs he be ſome Graduate of Divinity in the Schools) the ſaid ſpiritual perſon is named by no other term but by the word Clericus; as by divers places, as well in the printed Books, as in old Regiſters and Writings of the Lawyers, as well in the Common Law as Statute Law, remaineth of Record very evident to be ſeen. Some ſpecial notes whereof, as well for the eaſe of the Reader in the ſearch of the ſame, as alſo for the further ſatisfying of ſome who peradventure ſhall want the Books, I thought good here to exhibit in form and tenour as followeth.

Objections concerning the word Clericus reſolved.

Certain Notes how this word Clericus is taken in the Law Books.

In Stat. de Marlbridge, An. 52 H. 3. c. 27. SI Clericus aliquis pro reatu vel crimine aliquo, quod ad Coronam pertineat, areſtatus fuerit, & poſtmodo per præceptum Domini Regis in Ballium traditus, vel replegiatus extiterit, ita quod hi quibus traditus fuerit in Ballium eum habeant coram Juſticiariis, non amercienter de cætero illi quibus traditus fuerit in Ballium, nec alii plegii ſui, ſi corpus ſuum habeant coram Juſticiariis, licet coram eis propter privilegium Clericale reſpondere noluerit, vel non potuerit propter Ordinarios ſuos.

Another Note.

Artic. Cleri, 9 E. 2. in fine. c. 8. REx & Anteceſſores ſui, à tempore cujus, contrarii memoria non exiſtit, uſi ſunt, quod Clerici ſuis immorantes obſequiis, dum obſequiis illis intenderint, ad reſidentiam in ſuis Beneficiis faciendam minime compellantur, nec debet dici tendere in præjudicium Eccleſiaſticæ libertatis quod pro Rege & Republica neceſſarium invenitur.

Another Note.

In eiſdem Articulis in fine, c. 15. CLericus ad Eccleſiam confugiens pro felonia, pro immunitate Eccleſiaſtica obtinenda, ſi aſſerit ſe eſſe Clericum, regnum non compellatur abjurare, ſed legi regni ſe reddens gaudebit Eccleſiaſtica libertate, juxta laudabilem conſuetudinem regni hactenus uſitatam.

Another Note.

In cap. 16. APpellaturi in forma debita tanquam Clerico per Ordinarium petito libertatis Eccleſiaſticæ beneficium non negabitur.

In the Statute entituled Articuli Cleri, made only for the benefit of the Clergy, Anno Regni Edwardi Reg. 2. nono, are divers notes to like effect.

But what need many Arguments for the proof hereof? The Statutes and Law-Books of this Realm are very full of them in diverſe and many places, beſides the Preſidents, for the form of giving of Benefices, whereof none are capable but ſuch as are ſpiritual men, and of the Clergy, wherein they are not called or termed by any other title or term in Latin, than Clerici, for moſt part, not in the Kings own Grant, or the Lord Chancellors, or any other Subjects of his, as very well appeareth both by divers old written Preſidents which hath been ſhewed unto me, and alſo by the forms of Preſentations, collected and ſet forth for the inſtruction of ſuch as are ignorant, or not very perfect in the order of them, in a printed Book, called The Book of ſundry Inſtruments: In which form, in the ſaid Book, the words in the Kings Grant be theſe:

Clericus in the Law ever taken for a Prieſt.

REX Reverendiſſimo in Chriſto, &c. Ad Eccleſiam Parochialem de N. veſtræ Diocæſis modo per mortem ultimi incumbentis ibidem vacantem, & ad noſtram donationem pleno jure ſpectantem, dilectum Capellanum noſtrum A. B. Clericum, intuitu charitatis vobis præſentamus, & mandamus uti dictum A. Capellanum noſtrum, ad præfatam Eccleſiam admittere, eumque Rectorem ejuſdem inſtituere, cum ſuis juribus, &c.

But if the Preſentation be from a Knight, an Eſquire, or a Gentleman, then theſe words, Capellanum noſtrum, are always left out, as in the ſaid Book appeareth in this ſort:

REverendo in Chriſto Patri, &c. A. B. de N. ad Eccleſiam de N. prædictam veſtræ Diocæſis modo per mortem T. D. ultimi Incumbentis ibidem vacantem, & ad meam præſentationem pleno jure ſpectantem, dilectum mihi in Chriſto Jacobum P. Clericum veſtræ Paternitati præſento, humiliter rogans quatenus præfatum J. ad dictam Eccleſiam admittere, ipſumque, in Rectorem ejuſdem Eccleſiæ inſtitui & induci facere velitis cum ſuis juribus & pertinentiis univerſis, &c. As in the ſaid Book is more at large to be ſeen or peruſed.

Thus I doubt not, loving Reader, but by theſe ſo plain Evidences above prefixed, thou haſt ſufficiently to underſtand, that this violent reſtraint of Prieſts lawful marriage, within this Realm of England, is of no ſuch long reach and antiquity, as hath been thought of many, and all by reaſon of ignorance of Hiſtories, and courſe of times. So that briefly, as in a ſummary Table, to comprehend the whole effect hereof:

First about the year of our Lord 946. the profeſſion of ſingle life, and diſplacing of marriage, began to come into example here in England by reaſon of S. Benets Monks, which then began to increaſe here about the time of King Edgar, and eſpecially by the means of Oſwald Biſhop of York, Odo and Dunſtane, Archbiſhops of Canterbury, and Ethelwold Biſhop of Wint. ſo that in divers Cathedral Churches and Biſhops Sees, Monks with their profeſſed ſingleneſs of life crept in, and married Miniſters (which were then called Secular Prieſts) with their Wives out of ſundry Churches were diſpoſſeſſed, not from Wives, but only from their Places; and yet not in all Churches, but only in certain, whereof read before.

Anno 946. Prieſts marriage, how and when it began firſt to be excluded out of Churches.

Not long after that, about the time of Pope Nicolas the Second, Anno 1060. of Alexander and Hildebrand, came into the See of Canterbury another Monk called Lanfrank, who alſo, being a promoter of this profeſſed Chaſtity, made the Decree more general, that all Prebendaries being married in any Churches ſhould be diſplaced; yet the Prieſts in Towns and Villages ſhould not be compelled to leave their married Wives, unleſs they would.

Anno 1067.

Anno 1106. Laſt of all followed Monkiſh Anſelme, Anno 1106. by whom was made this Law at Wincheſter aforeſaid, that Prieſts, Arch-deacons, Deacons and Sub-deacons, which had Wives and Spiritual Livings, ſhould be put from them both; and alſo that none after ſhould be admitted to their Orders, but ſhould firſt profeſs ſingle life, that is, to live without Wives. And thus much concerning Prieſts marriage forbidden.

Let us add moreover to theſe Evidences above rehearſed, for more confirmation of the ancient uſe and liberty of Prieſts marriage, another teſtimony or two out of like ancient Records, with like plain words declaring unto us, how the Matrimony of Prieſts, before the time of Lanfrank aforeſaid, was no ſtrange example in the Church. And firſt we will infer the words of an old Martyrologue pertaining to the Records of Canterbury. The words of which Martyrologue be theſe.

Ex antiquo Martyrologio Eccleſiæ Cant.

Livingus Presbyter cum Uxore. LAnfrancus Archiep. reddidit Eccleſiæ Sanctæ Andreæ, quia de jure ipſius Eccleſiæ antiquitus fuerunt, in Sutherge, Murtilac, Londoniæ, Monaſterium Sanctæ Mariæ cum terris & domibus, quas Livingus Presbyter & Uxor illius Londoniæ habuerunt.

To this alſo may be adjoyned another like Antiquity out of an old written Hiſtory belonging to the Church of S. Aſaph, after the time of Lanfrank, as followeth.

Anno Domini 1261. ex antiq. libro Aſaph. Manuſcripto.

* Forbonizatum is a Saxon term, and ſignifieth as much as a man outlawed. *DE Clerico Uxorato receptante publicè * Forbonizatum ſcienter, & poſſit contra ipſum probari, nobis videtur quod tenetur reſpondere in foro Eccleſiaſtico. Si vero facit reſidentiam in terra principis, & contingat ipſum mulctari, tota mulcta ſua principi debetur. Si vero reſidentiam in terra Epiſcopi facit, mulcta dividatur inter Epiſcopum & Principem. Si vero Uxor alicujus talis ſcienter vel volenter in ejus abſentia receptaverit, Mulier in foro Eccleſiaſtico reſpondeat, & Clericus ratione ſui facti non puniatur, nec pro ea, (niſi velit) reſpondere cogatur.*

Neither is the teſtimony of Mantuanus unworthy alſo hereunto to be added, writing in the Life of Hilarius Biſhop of Pictavium, as followeth.

Ex Mantuano.

The ſixth Article, touching Auricular Confeſſion.

OF Confeſſion three things we find in the Scriptures expreſſed and approved. The firſt is our Confeſſion privately and publickly made unto God alone; and this Confeſſion is neceſſary for all men at all times. Wherefore S. John ſpeaketh, If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful to forgive, &c. Three kinds of Confeſſion. Confeſſion to God. 1 John 1.

The ſecond is the Confeſſion which is openly made in the face of the Congregation. And this Confeſſion alſo hath place when any ſuch thing is committed, whereof riſeth a publick offence and ſlander to the Church of God; as examples there be of Penitentiaries in the Primitive Chnrch, as Melciades and other, &c.

The third kind of Confeſſion is that which we make privately, to our Brother. And this Confeſſion is requiſite, when either we have injured or by any way damnified our Neighbour, whether he be rich or poor. Whereof ſpeaketh the Goſpel, Go and reconcile thy ſelf firſt unto thy Neighbour, &c. Alſo S. James, Confeſs your ſelves one to another, &c. Or elſe this Confeſſion may alſo have place, when any ſuch thing lieth in our Conſcience, in the opening whereof we ſtand in need of the counſel and comfort of ſome faithful Brother. But herein muſt we uſe diſcretion in avoiding theſe points of blind Superſtition. Firſt, That we put therein no neceſſity for remiſſion of our ſins, but that we uſe therein our own voluntary diſcretion, according as we ſee it expedient for the better ſatisfying of our troubled mind. The ſecond is, That we be not bound to any enumeration of our ſins. The third, That we tye not our ſelves to any one perſon, more than to another, but that we uſe therein our free choice, whom we think can give us the beſt Spiritual counſel in the Lord. Private Confeſſion to our Brother. Matth. 5. James 5. Certain points of Superſtition to be avoided in private Confeſſion.

But as there is nothing in the Church ſo good and ſo ghoſtly, which through peeviſh Superſtition either hath not, or may not be perverted; ſo this Confeſſion alſo hath not lacked his abuſes. Firſt, The ſecret Confeſſion to God alone, as it hath been counted inſufficient; ſo hath it been but lightly eſteemed of many. The publick Confeſſion to the Congregation hath been turned to a ſtanding in a ſheet, or elſe hath been bought out for money. Furthermore, the ſecret breaking of a mans mind to ſome faithful or ſpiritual Brother, in diſcloſing his infirmity or temptations, for counſel and godly comfort, hath in like ſort been turned into Auricular Confeſſion in a Prieſts ear, for aſſoiling of his ſins. In which Auricular Confeſſion, firſt of the free liberty of the Penitent, in uttering his griefs, they have made a meer neceſſity, and that unto ſalvation and remiſſion of ſins. Secondly, They require withal enumeration and a full recital of all ſins whatſoever, both great and ſmall; alſo beſides the neceſſity of this ear Confeſſion, they add thereto a preſcription of time, at leaſt once in the year for all men, whether they repent or no, to be confeſſed; making moreover of the ſame a Sacrament. And laſtly, whereas before it ſtood in the voluntary choice of a man to open his heart to what Spiritual Brother he thought beſt, for an eaſment of his grief and ghoſtly Conſolation, they bind him to a Prieſt (unleſs ſome Frier come by the way to be his ghoſtly Father) to whom he muſt needs confeſs all, whatſoever he hath done, and though he lack the Key of Knowledge, and peradventure of good diſcretion, yet none muſt have power to aſſoil him, but he through the Authority of his Keyes. Four or five abuſes in Auricular Confeſſion. 1. Neceſſity. 2. Enumeration of ſins. 3. Preſcription of time. 4. Confeſſion made a Sacrament. 5. To a Prieſt only:

And this manner of Confeſſion, they ſay, was inſtituted by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, and hath been uſed in the Church ever ſince to this preſent day. Which is a moſt manifeſt untruth, and eaſie by Stories to be convinced.

For Soc. li. 5. c. 19. and Sozo. li. 7. c. 16. in the Book of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, do give us plainly to underſtand that this Auricular Confeſſion never came of Chriſt, but only of Man. Soc. l. 5. c. 19. Soz. l. 7. c. 16. Beat. Rhenanus in argum. Libel. Tertul. de Pœnitentia.

Item, In the time of Tertullian, Beat. Rhenanus teſtifieth, that there was no mention made of this Auricular Confeſſion. Which may well be gathered hereof, for that Tertullian writing upon Repentance, maketh no mention at all thereof.

Item,

Chryſ. in Pſ. 50. Homil.

Item, In the time of Chryſoſtom, it appeareth there was no ſuch aſſoiling at the Prieſts hands by theſe words, where he ſaith, I require thee not that thou ſhouldeſt confeſs thy ſins to thy fellow ſervant. Tell them unto God, who careth for them.

Chryſ in hom. de pœnit. & confeſſione.

Item, The ſaid Chryſoſtom in another place writing upon Repentance and Confeſſion, Let the examination of thy ſins and thy judgment, ſaith he, be ſecret and cloſe without witneſs; let God only ſee and hear thy Confeſſion, &c.

De pœn. diſt. 1. Petrus in Gloſſa.

Item, In the time of Ambroſe, de Pœnit. Diſt. 1. Petrus, the Gloſs of the Popes own Decrees reporteth, That the Inſtitution of Penance was not then begun, which now in our days is in uſe.

De pœn. diſt. 1 principio.

Item, It is truly ſaid therefore of the Gloſs in another place, where he teſtifieth, That this Inſtitution of Penance began rather of ſome Tradition of the Univerſal Church, then of any Authority of the New Teſtament, or of the Old, &c.

Eraſ in Schol. in Epitaphium Fabiolæ.

The like alſo teſtifieth Eraſmus, writing upon Jerome, in theſe words, Apparet tempore Hieronymi nondum inſtitutam fuiſſe, &c. That is, It appeareth that in the time of Jerome, this ſecret Confeſſion of ſins was not yet ordained, which the Church afterward did inſtitute wholeſomly, if our Prieſts and Lay-men would uſe it rightly. But herein, Divines not conſidering adviſedly what the old Doctors do ſay, are much deceived. That which they ſay of general and open Confeſſion, they wreſt by and by to this privy and ſecret kind of Confeſſion which is far divers, and of another ſort, &c.

Gratian. de pœnit. diſt. 1. Quamvis.

The like Teſtimony may alſo be taken of Gratian himſelf, who ſpeaking of Confeſſion uſed then in his time, leaving the matter in doubtful ſuſpence, neither pronouncing on the one ſide, nor on the other, but referreth the matter to the free judgment of the Readers, which the Act of theſe ſix Articles here enjoyneth as neceſſary, under pain of death.

The firſt Inſtitution of Auricular Confeſſion, when and by whom it began.

Briefly, in few words to ſearch out and notifie the very certain time, when this Article of our Confeſſion firſt crept into the Church, and what Antiquity it hath, in following the Judgment of Joannes Scotus, and of Antonius, it may well be ſuppoſed, that the Inſtitution thereof took his firſt original by Pope Innocent the Third, in his Councel of Laterane, Anno 1215. For ſo we read in Joan. Scotus, Lib. 4. Sent. Diſt. 17. Artic. 3. Præcipua autem ſpecificatio hujus præcepti invenitur in illo cap. Extra de pœnit. & remiſſ. Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c. And after in the ſame Article it followeth, Nam ex prima inſtitutione Eccleſiæ non videntur fuiſſe diſtincti proprii Sacerdotes. Quando enim Apoſtoli hinc & inde ibant prædicando verbum Dei, &c. By the which words it appeareth that there was no Inſtitution of any ſuch Confeſſion ſpecified before the Conſtitution of Pope Innocentius the Third.

Joan. Scot. l. 4. Sent. Diſt. 17. Artic. 3.

Antonius part. 3. Hiſt. tit. 19.

But more plainly the ſame may appear by the words of Antonius in 3. parte Hiſt. which be theſe: Innocentius tertius in Concilio Generali prædicto, circa Sacramenta Confeſſionis & Communionis ſic ſtatuit: Omnis utriuſque ſexus fidelis poſtquam ad annum diſcretionis pervenerit, omnia peccata ſua ſolus, ſaltem ſemel in Anno, confiteatur proprio Sacerdoti, & injunctam ſibi pœnitentiam propriis viribus ſtudeat adimplere, alioqui & vivens ab ingreſſu Eccleſiæ arceatur, & moriens Chriſtiana careat ſepultura. Unde hoc ſalutare Statutum frequenter in Eccleſiis publicetur: ne quiſquam ignorantiæ cœcitate velamen excuſationis aſſumat, &c. That is to ſay; Pope Innocent the Third, in his General Councel aforeſaid, touching the Sacraments of Confeſſion and the Communion, made this Conſtitution, as followeth. That every faithful perſon, both man and woman, after they come to the years of diſcretion, ſhall confeſs all their ſins by themſelves alone, at leaſt once a year, to their own ordinary Prieſt, and ſhall endeavour to fulfil by their own ſtrength their Penance to them injoyned. Or elſe who ſo doth not, ſhall neither have entrance into the Church, being alive, nor being dead, ſhall enjoy Chriſtian burial. Wherefore this wholeſom Conſtitution we will to be publiſhed often in the Churches, leſt any man through the blindneſs of Ignorance, may make to themſelves a Cloak of Excuſe, &c. And thus much hitherto we have alledged by occaſion incident of theſe ſix Articles for ſome part of confutation of the ſame, referring the Reader, for the reſt, to the more exquiſite tractation of Divines, which profeſſedly write upon thoſe matters.

The Conſtitution of Pope Innocent 3. touching Auricular Confeſſion.

In the mean time, forſomuch as there is extant in Latin a certain learned Epiſtle of Philip Melanchthon, written to King Henry the Eighth againſt theſe ſix wicked Articles above ſpecified, I thought not to defraud the Reader of the Fruit thereof, for his better underſtanding and inſtruction. The tenour and effect of his Epiſtle tranſlated into Engliſh thus followeth.

The Copy of Melanchthons Epiſtle ſent to King Henry, againſt the cruel Act of the ſix Articles.

A fruitful Epiſtle of P. Melanchthon, ſent to King Henry touching the ſix Articles.

MOſt famous and noble Prince, there was certain Emperors of Rome, as Adrianus, Pius, and afterward the two Brethren, Verus and Marcus, which did receive gently the Apologies and Defences of the Chriſtians; which ſo prevailed with thoſe moderate Princes, that they ſwaged their wrath againſt the Chriſtians, and obtained mitigation of their cruel Decrees: Even ſo, foraſmuch as there is a Decree ſet forth of late in your Realm againſt that Doctrine which we profeſs, both godly and neceſſary for the Church, I beſeech your moſt honourable Majeſty favourably both to read and conſider this our complaint, eſpecially ſeeing I have not only for our own cauſe, but much rather for the common ſafeguard of the Church, directed this my writing unto you. For ſeeing thoſe Heathen Princes did both admit and allow the defences of the Chriſtians, how much more is it beſeeming for a King of Chriſtian Profeſſion, and ſuch a one as is occupied in the ſtudies of holy Hiſtories, to hear the Complaints and Admonitions of the godly in the Church? and ſo much the more willingly I write unto you, for that you have ſo favourably heretofore received my Letters with a ſingular declaration of your * Benevolence towards me. This alſo giveth me ſome hope that you will not unwillingly read theſe things, foraſmuch as I ſee that the very phraſe and manner of writing doth plainly declare, not your ſelf, but only the Biſhops to be the Authors of thoſe Articles and Decrees there ſet forth; albeit, through their wily and ſubtile Sophiſtications, they have induced you (as it hapned to many other worthy Princes beſides you) to condeſcend and aſſent unto them, as the Rulers perſwaded Darius, being otherwiſe a wiſe and juſt Prince, to caſt Daniel unto the Lions.

* He meaneth here the Kings liberal reward ſent to him before in money, by Mr. J. Hales, which money he then diſtributed among the Miniſters and learned men of Wittenberge, Dan. 3.

It was never unſeemly for a good Prince to correct and reform cruel and rigorous Laws (as it is commonly ſaid) to have a ſecond view and overſight of things before paſſed and decreed.

The wiſe Athenians made a Decree when the City of Mitylene was recovered, which before had forſaken them that all the Citizens there ſhould be ſlain, and the City utterly deſtroyed. Whereupon there was a Ship ſent forth with the ſame Commandment to the Army. On the next morrow the matter was brought again before the ſame Judges, and after better advice taken, there was a contrary Decree made; that the whole multitude ſhould not be put to the Sword, but a few of the chiefeſt Authors of their Rebellion ſhould be puniſhed, and the City ſaved. There was therefore another Ship ſent forth with a Countermand in all haſte to overtake and prevent their former Ship, as alſo it happened. Neither was that noble City, which then ruled and reigned far and wide, aſhamed to alter and reform their former Decree. Many ſuch examples there be, the moſt part whereof I am ſure are well known unto you. But in the Church eſpecially Princes have many times altered and reformed their Decrees, as Nebuchodonoſor and Darius. There was a Decree ſet forth in the name of Aſſuerus, concerning the killing of the Jews: that Decree was afterwards called in again. So did Adrianus and Antoninus alſo correct and reform their Decrees.

Example, of the Athenians revoking their Decree.

Eſther 8.

Therefore, although there be a Decree ſet forth in England, which threatneth ſtrange puniſhments and penalties, diſagreeing from the cuſtom of the true Church, and ſwerving from the Rules and Canons thereof;

yet I thought it not unſeemly for us to become Petitioners unto you, for the mitigation of theſe your ſharp and ſevere proceedings. The which, when I conſider it, grieveth my mind, not only for the peril and danger of them which profeſs the ſame Doctrine that we do, but alſo I do lament for your cauſe, that they ſhould make you an Inſtrument and a Miniſter of their bloody Tyranny and Impiety. And partly alſo I lament to ſee the courſe of Chriſtian Doctrine perverted, ſuperſtitious Rites confirmed, Whoredom and letcherous Luſts maintained.

Mitigation of the ſix Articles deſired.

Beſides all this, I hear of divers good men, excelling both in Doctrine and Vertue, to be there detained in Priſon, as Latimer, Cromer, Shaxton, and others, to whom I wiſh ſtrength, patience, and conſolation in the Lord. Unto whom, albeit there can nothing happen more luckily or more gloriouſly, then to give their lives in the Confeſſion of the manifeſt Truth and Verity; yet would I wiſh that you ſhould not diſtain your hands with the blood of ſuch men; neither would I wiſh ſuch Lanthorns of Light in your Church to be extinguiſhed; neither theſe ſpiteful and malicious Phariſees, the enemies of Chriſt, to have their wills ſo much fulfilled. Neither again would I wiſh that you ſhould ſo much ſerve the will and deſire of that Romiſh Antichriſt, which laugheth in his ſleeve to ſee you now to take part with him againſt us, hoping well, by the help of his Biſhops, to recover again his former Poſſeſſion, which of late by your vertues and godly means he loſt: he ſeeth your Biſhops for the time loyal unto you, and obſequious to obey your will; but in heart he ſeeth them linked unto him in a perpetual bond of Fidelity and Obedience. In all theſe feats and practiſes the Romiſh Biſhops are not to ſeek. They ſee what great ſtorms and blaſts heretofore they have paſſed by bearing and ſuffering. They ſee that great things be brought to paſs in time. Neither do they forget the old Verſe of the Poet:

Latimer, Cromer, Shaxton, and others impriſoned for the ſix Articles.

The Biſhops pretend outward obedience to the King, but their hearts be with the Pope.

Multa dies variuſque labor mutabilis ævi
——Rettulit in melius.

Many good and learned men in Germany conceived of you great hope, that by your Authority and example other Princes alſo would be provoked to ſurceaſe likewiſe from their unjuſt Cruelty, and better to adviſe themſelves for the Reformation of Errors crept into the Church; truſting that you would be as a Guide and Captain of that godly purpoſe and enterpriſe. But now ſeeing theſe your contrary proceedings, we are utterly diſcouraged; the indignation of other Princes is confirmed; the ſtubbornneſs of the wicked is augmented; and old and great Errors are thereby eſtabliſhed.

But here your Biſhops will ſay again, no doubt, That they defend no Errors, but the very Truth of Gods holy Word. And although they be not ignorant that they ſtrive in very deed both againſt the true Word of God, and the Apoſtolick Church, yet like crafty Sophiſters they can find out fair gloſſes, pretending a goodly ſhew outwardly, to colour their Errors and Abuſes.

The Biſhops maintain errors againſt their knowledge.

And this ſophiſtication not only now in England is had in great admiration, and eſteemed for great wiſdom; neither in Rome only reigneth, where Cardinal Conterenus, Sadolet, and Cardinal Pool, go about to paint out Abuſes with new colours and goodly gloſſes; but alſo in Germany divers Noblemen are likewiſe corrupted and ſeduced with the like ſophiſtication. And therefore I nothing marvel that ſo many there with you be deceived with theſe crafty juglings. And although you for your part lack neither learning nor judgment, yet ſometimes we ſee it ſo happen, that wiſe men alſo be carried away, by fair and colourable perſwaſions, from the Verity. The ſaying of Simonides is praiſeworthy, Opinion (ſaith he) many times perverteth Verity. And many times falſe Opinion hath outwardly a fairer ſhew than ſimple Truth: and ſpecially it ſo happeneth in caſes of Religion, where the Devil transformeth himſelf into an Angel of Light, ſetting forth, with all colourable and goodly ſhews, falſe Opinions. How fair ſeemeth the Gloſs of Samoſatenus upon the Goſpel of S. John, In the beginning was the Word, &c. and yet is it full of Impiety. But I omit forreign Examples.

Falſhood often times beareth a fairer ſhew than Truth.

John 1.

In theſe Articles of yours; how many things are craftily and deceitfully deviſed? Confeſſion, ſaith the Article, is neceſſary, and ought to be retained. And why ſay they not plainly, That the rehearſing and numbering up of ſins is neceſſary by Gods Word? This the Biſhops knew well to be very falſe, and therefore in the Article they placed their words generally, to blear the eyes of the ſimple people, that when they hear confeſſion to be neceſſary, they ſhould thereby think the enumeration of ſins to be neceſſary by Gods Word.

Confeſſion.

The like Legerdemain alſo they uſe in the Article of private Maſſes, albeit the beginning of the ſaid Article containeth a manifeſt untruth, where they ſay that it is neceſſary to retain private Maſſes. What man in all the Primitive Church, more then four hundred years after the Apoſtles time, did ever ſo ſay or think, at what time there were no ſuch private Maſſes uſed: but afterward in the proceſs of the Article follow other blind ſophiſtications, to make the People believe that they ſhould receive by them Divine Conſolations and Benefits. And why do they not plainly declare what Conſolations and Benefits thoſe be? The Biſhops here do name no application and merit, for they know that they cannot be defended. Yet they dally, with gloſſing words, whereby they winde out and eſcape, if any ſhould improve their application. And yet notwithſtanding they would have this their application to be underſtood and believed of the People. They would have this idolatrous perſwaſion confirmed, to wit, that this Sacrifice doth merit unto others remiſſion à pœna & culpa; releaſe of all Calamities, and alſo gain and lucre in common Traffick, and to conclude, whatſoever elſe the careful heart of man doth deſire.

Private Maſſes.

By application of Maſſes is meant, when the Paſſion and Merits of Chriſt is applied to any by the vertue of the Maſs.

The like ſophiſtication they uſe alſo, where they ſay that Prieſts marriage is againſt the Law of God. They are not ignorant what S. Paul ſaith, A Biſhop ought to be the Husband of one Wife: and therefore they know right-well that marriage is permitted to Prieſts by the Law of God. But becauſe now they ſay they have made a Vow, they go craftily to work, and do not ſay that Prieſts for their Vows ſake cannot marry, but plainly give out the Article after this ſort; That marriage of Prieſts is utterly againſt the Law of God. Again, what impudency and tyranny do they ſhew moreover, when they compel marriages to be diſſolved, and command thoſe to be put to death which will not put away their Wives, and renounce their Matrimony? Whereas the Vow of Prieſts, if it had any force at all, ſhould extend no further, but only to put them from the Miniſtery if they would marry. And this, no doubt, is the true meaning of the Councels and Canons.

Prieſts marriage. 1 Tim. 3.

O curſed Biſhops! O impudent and wicked Winchester! who under theſe colourable fetches thinketh to deceive the eyes of Chriſt, and the judgments of all the godly in the whole World. Theſe things have I written, that you may underſtand the crafty ſleights, and ſo judge of the purpoſe and policy of theſe Biſhops. For if they would ſimply and heartily ſearch for the Truth, they would not uſe theſe crafty Colluſions and deceitful Jugglings.

Winchester cunning in the Art of Juggling, called Deceptio viſus.

This ſophiſtication, as it is in all other affairs pernitious and odious, ſo above all things, moſt ſpecially it is to be avoided in matters of Religion: wherein it is a heinous Impiety to corrupt or pervert the pure Word of God. And hereof the Devil, which is called Diabolus, ſpecially taketh his name, becauſe he wreſteth the Word of God out of mens hearts by ſuch falſe jugling and ſophiſtical Cavillations. And why do not theſe Biſhops as well plainly utter and confeſs, that they will abide no Reformation of Doctrine and Religion in the Church, for that it ſhall make againſt their Dignity, Pomp, and Pleaſure? Why do not their Adherents alſo, and ſuch as take their part, plainly ſay that they will retain ſtill this preſent ſtate of the Church, for their own profit, tranquillity, and maintenance? Thus to confeſs were true and plain dealing.

The Word of God ought ſimply to be handled without all ſophiſtry.

Now whiles they pretend hypocritically a falſe zeal and love to the Truth and ſincere Religion, they come in with their blind ſophiſtications, wherewith they cover their Errours. For their Articles ſet forth in this Act be erroneous, falſe and impious, how glorious ſoever

The cloaked hypocriſie of falſe Papiſts.

ſoever they ſeem outwardly. Wherefore it were to be wiſhed that theſe Biſhops would remember Gods terrible threatnings in the Prophet Iſaiah; Wo to you (ſaith he) which make wicked Laws, what will you do in the day of viſitation and calamity to come? &c. Wo unto you that call evil good, &c.

Iſa. 10. Iſai. 5.

Now to come more near to the matter which we have in hand; this cannot be denied, but that long and horrible darkneſs hath been in the Church of Chriſt. Mens Traditions not only have been a yoke to good Mens Conſciences, but alſo (which is much worſe) they have been reputed for Gods holy ſervice, to the great diſworſhip of God. There were Vows, things bequeathed to Churches, diverſity of Garments, choice of Meats, long babling Prayers, Pardons, Image-worſhip, manifeſt Idolatry committed to Saints, the true Worſhip of God, and true good Works not known. Briefly, little difference there was betwixt the Chriſtian and Heathen Religion, as ſtill is yet at Rome to this preſent day to be ſeen. The true Doctrine of Repentance, of Remiſſion of Sins, which cometh by the Faith of Chriſt, of Juſtification, of Faith, of the difference between the Law and the Goſpel, of the right uſe of the Sacraments, was hid and unknown. The Keyes were abuſed to the maintenance of the Popes uſurped tyranny. Ceremonies of Mens invention were much preferred before Civil Obedience and duties done in the Common-Wealth.

Mans traditions counted for Gods ſervice.

Unto theſe errors moreover was joyned a corrupt life, full of all letcherous and filthy luſts, by reaſon of the Law forbidding Prieſts to marry. Out of this miſerable darkneſs God ſomething hath begun to deliver his Church through the reſtoring again of true Doctrine. For ſo we muſt needs acknowledge, that theſe ſo great and long feſtered errors have not been diſcloſed and brought to light by the induſtry of Man; but this light of the Goſpel is only the Gift of God, who now again hath appeared unto the Church. For ſo doth the holy Ghoſt prophecy before, how in the later times the Godly ſhould ſuſtain ſore and perillous conflicts with Antichriſt, foreſhewing that he ſhould come, environed with a mighty and ſtrong Army of Biſhops, hypocrites, and Princes; that he ſhould fight againg the Truth, and ſlay the Godly.

The filthy life of the Clergy for lack of Marriage.

This reſtoring of the Goſpel is only of God and not of Man.

And that now all theſe things are ſo come to paſs, it is moſt evident and cannot be denied. The tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome hath partly brought in errors into the Church, partly hath confirmed them, and now maintaineth the ſame with force and violence, as Daniel well foreſhewed. And much we rejoyce to ſee you divided from him, hoping and truſting well that the Church of England would now flouriſh. But your Biſhops be not divided from the Romiſh Antichriſt; his Idolatry, Errors, and Vices they defend and maintain with tooth and nail; for the Articles now paſſed are craftily picked out. They confirm all Humane Traditions, in that they eſtabliſh ſolemn Vows, ſingle Life, and Auricular Confeſſion. They uphold and advance not only their pride and authority, but all errors withal, in retaining the private Maſs.

By the ſix Articles all errors and traditions are maintained.

Thus have they craftily provided that no Reformation can take any place, that their dignity and wealth may ſtill be upholden. And this to be the purpoſe of the Biſhops, experience it ſelf doth plainly teach us. Now what Man will not lament to ſee the glory of Chriſt thus to be defaced? For (as I ſaid before) this matter concerneth not only theſe Articles which be there enacted, but all other Articles of ſound Doctrine are likewiſe overthrown, if ſuch Traditions of Men ſhall be reputed as neceſſary, and to be retained. For why doth Chriſt ſay, For they worſhip me in vain with the precepts of Men? or why doth Saint Paul ſo oft deteſt Mens Traditions?

Mar. 7.

God will not be worſhipped but after his word.

It is no light offence to ſet up new kinds of worſhiping and ſerving of God without his Word, or to defend the ſame. Such preſumption God doth horribly deteſt, which will be known in his Word only. He will have none other Religions invented by Mans deviſe; for elſe all ſorts of Religions of all Nations might be approved and allowed. Lean not (ſaith he) to thine own wiſdom. But he ſent Chriſt, and commanded us to hear him, and not the invention of ſubtle and politick heads, which apply Religion to their own lucre and commodity.

Prov. 3.

Furthermore, private Maſſes, Vows, the ſingle life of Prieſts, numbring up of Sins to the Prieſt, with other things more, being but mear ordinances of Men, are uſed for Gods true ſervice and worſhip. For although the Supper of the Lord was truly inſtituted by Chriſt, yet the private Maſs is a wicked prophanation of the Lords Supper. For in the Canon, what a corruption is contained in this, where it is ſaid, That Chriſt is offered, and that the work it ſelf is a Sacrifice which redeemeth the quick and the dead? Theſe things were never ordained of Chriſt; yea manifold ways they are repugnant to the Goſpel. Chriſt willeth not himſelf to be offered up of Prieſts, neither can the work of the offerer, or of the receiver, by any means be a Sacrifice. This is manifeſt Idolatry, and overthroweth the true Doctrine of Faith, and the true uſe of the Sacraments. By Faith in Chriſt we are juſtified, and not by any work of the Prieſts. And the Supper is ordained that the Miniſter ſhould diſtribute to others, to the intent, that they repenting for their Sins ſhould be admoniſhed firmly to believe the promiſes of the Goſpel to pertain unto them. Here is ſet a plain teſtimony before us, that we are made the members of Chriſt, and waſhed by his Blood.

Againſt private Maſſes & the Canon of the Maſs. Chriſt but once offered.

The true uſe of the Lords Supper.

And this is the true uſe of that Supper, which is ordained in the Goſpel, and was obſerved in the Primitive Church three hundred years and more, from the which we ought not to be removed. For it is plain impiety to transfer the Lords Inſtitution to any other uſe, as we are taught by the ſecond Commandment. Wherefore theſe private Maſſes, foraſmuch as they ſwerve from the right Inſtitution of Chriſt manifold ways, as by Oblation, Sacrifice, Application, and many other ways beſides, they are not to be retained, but to be aboliſhed. Flie (ſaith Saint Paul) From all Idolatry. In theſe private Maſſes much Idolatry is committed, which we ſee our Biſhops now ſo ſtoutly to defend; and no marvel. For in the later times the Scripture plainly ſheweth that great Idolatry ſhall reign in the Church of God. As Chriſt himſelf alſo ſignifieth, ſaying, When ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, which is foretold of the Prophet Daniel, ſtanding in the holy place, he that readeth, let him unnerſtand. And Daniel in the eleventh Chapter, and he ſhall worſhip the God Maozin in his place, and ſhall adore the God whom his Fathers knew not, with Gold, Silver, and precious ſtones. Both theſe places do ſpeak of the Maſs.

Sacraments ought not to be removed out of their right uſe.

1 Cor. 10.

Matth. 24.

Dan. 11.

This kind of worſhip and horrible prophanation of the Sacrament God abhorreth. For how many and ſundry kinds of manifeſt impiety are here committed in this one action of the Maſs? Firſt it is ſet forth to ſale. Secondly, they that are unworthy are compelled to receive whether they will or no. Thirdly, it is applied for meritorious and ſatisfactory for the quick and the dead. Fourthly, many things are promiſed thereby, as proſperous navigation, remedies againſt diſeaſes both for Man and Beaſt, with other infinite more. Theſe be moſt manifeſt and notorious abominations. But beſides theſe, there be other alſo no leſs to be reprehended, which the ſimple people do not ſo plainly ſee. Such worſhipping and ſerving of God is not to be ſet up after the phantaſie of Men.

What impiety is in the Maſs.

Wherefore they do wickedly when they offer Sacrifice to God without his commandment. For when of this work they make a Sacrifice, they imagine that private Maſſes are to be done, becauſe God would be worſhipped after this ſort. And we ſee that Maſſes are bought with Gold and Silver, great riches and ſumptuous charges; alſo that the Sacrament is carried about in Gold and Silver to be worſhipped, whereas the Sacrament was never ordained for any ſuch purpoſe. Wherefore ſeeing the commandment of God biddeth, flie from Idolatry, private Maſſes are not to be maintained. And I marvel that they ſay that ſuch private Maſſes are neceſſary to be retained, when it is evident that in the old time there was none ſuch. Shall we think that things, pertaining to the neceſſary worſhip of God, could ſo long be lacking in the Primitive Church, three hundred years after the Apoſtles and more? What can be more abſurd and againſt all reaſon?

No private Maſſes uſed in the old time.

We

We ſee theſe private Maſſes to be defended with great labour and much ado: of ſome, for fear leſt their gain ſhould decay; of ſome, becauſe they would ſerve the affection of the vulgar people (which thinketh to have great ſuccour thereby, and therefore are loath to leave it) rather then for any juſt Cauſe or Reaſon to leave them. But howſoever they do, a moſt manifeſt and evident cauſe there is why theſe private Maſſes ought to be aboliſhed. For firſt, their application undoubtedly is wicked; neither doth the work of the Prieſt merit any Grace to any Perſon, but every one is juſtified by his own Faith. Neither again would God have any Man to truſt upon any Ceremony, but only to the benefit of Chriſt; and moſt certain it is, that the application of theſe Maſſes for the dead is full of great errour and impiety.

Application of the Maſs Idolatrous.

But here come in blind gloſſes (albeit to no purpoſe) to excuſe this application. For univerſally among all the people, who is he that thinketh otherwiſe, but that this work is available for the whole Church? Yea the Canon of the Maſs it ſelf declareth no leſs. And why then do ſome of theſe crafty Sophiſters dally out the matter with their gloſſing words, denying that they make any application of their Maſſes, when they know full well that the error of the people is confirmed by this their doing; although they themſelves do think otherwiſe? Albeit how few be there in very deed which do otherwiſe think?

The old Inſtitution of Chriſt is not to be altred by new inventions.

We ought not to diſſemble in Gods matters. Let us uſe them as the holy Scripture teacheth, and as the antient cuſtom of the Primitive Church doth lead us. Why ſhould any Man be ſo preſumptuous to ſwerve from antient cuſtom? Why now do they defend the error of other which have perverted the inſtitution of Chriſt.

Now, although ſome perhaps will pretend and ſay, that he maketh no application of his Maſſes, yet notwithſtanding he ſo dealeth in handling the Ceremony privately by himſelf, that he thinketh thit his oblation to be high ſervice done to God, and ſuch as God requireth: Which is alſo erroneous and to be reproved. For why? No ſervice or worſhip pertaining unto God ought to be ſet up by mans device, without the commandment of God.

Wherefore I beſeech you, for the Glory of Chriſt, that you will not defend the Article of this Act concerning theſe private Maſſes, but that you will ſuffer the matter to be well examined by vertuous and learned Men. All things that we here with us do, we do them by evident and ſubſtantial teſtimony of the Primitive Church; which teſtimony I dare be bold to ſet againſt the judgments of all that have ſinck followed, ſuch as have corrupted the the ancient Doctrine and told Rites with manifold errors.

Againſt Vows of Prieſts ſingle life.

The common error concerning Vows.

As touching the other Articles, they have no need of any long diſputation. Vows that be wicked, fained, and impoſſible, are not to be kept. There is no doubt but this is the common perſwaſion of all Men touching Vows, that all theſe will-works deviſed by Man are the true ſervice and worſhip of God; and ſo think they alſo which ſpeak moſt indifferently of them. Other add thereunto more groſs errours, ſaying, that theſe works bring with them perfection, and merit everlaſting life. Now all theſe opinions the Scripture in many places doth reprove. Chriſt ſaith, They worſhip me in vain with the precepts of Men. And Paul ſaith, that theſe obſervations be the Doctrine of Devils, for they aſcribe to the power and ſtrength of Man falſe honour, becauſe they are taken for the ſervice of God: they obſcure faith and the true worſhip of God. Item, the ſaid Paul to the Coloſſians ſaith, Let no Man deceive you by fained humility, &c. Why make you Decrees, &c.? Wherefore theſe corrupt traditions of Men are indeed a wicked and deteſtable ſervice of God.

Mark. 7.

1 Tim. 4.

Coloſſ. 2.

Unto theſe alſo are annexed many other corrupt and wicked abuſes. The whole Order of Monkery what ſuperſtition doth it contain? What prophanations of Maſſes, invocations of Saints, colours and faſhions of apparel, choice of meats, ſuperſtitious Prayers without all meaſure? Of which cauſes every one were ſufficient, why theſe Vows ought to be broken. Beſides this, a great part of Men are Cauſes why Vows ought to be broken.

then afterward they pretended the holineſs of the Vow and Profeſſion.

Furthermore this Vow of ſingle life is not to all Men poſſible to be kept, as Chriſt himſelf ſaith, All Men do not receive this. Such Vows therefore which without Sin cannot be performed are to be undone; but theſe things I have diſcuſſed ſufficiently in other of my works.

Matth. 19.

The ſix Articles make the Vow of Prieſts as ſtraight as the Vow of Monks, Which is cantrary to their own Law.

But this cauſeth me much to marvel, that this Vow of Prieſts in your Engliſh Decree is more ſtrait and hard, than is the Vow of Monks, whereas the Canons themſelves do bind a Prieſt no farther to ſingle life, but only for the time that he remaineth in the Miniſtery. And certainly it made my heart to tremble when I read this Article who ſo forbiddeth Matrimony, and diſſolveth the ſame being contracted, and appointeth moreover the puniſhment of death for the ſame. Although there have been divers godly Prieſts which in certain places have been put to death for their marriage, yet hath never man hitherto been ſo bold to ſtabliſh any ſuch law. For every Man in a manner well perceived that all well diſpoſed and reaſonable perſons would abhor that cruelty; and alſo they feared leſt the poſterity would think evil thereof. Who would ever think that in the Church of Chriſt, wherein all lenity toward the Godly ought moſt principally to be ſhewen, ſuch cruelties and tyranny could take place, to ſet forth bloody Laws to be executed upon the Godly for lawful Matrimony?

No Law of death ever eſtabliſhed for Prieſts marriage, before the ſix Articles.

But they brake their Vows, will the Biſhop ſay. For (as I ſaid) that Vow ought not to ſtand, ſeeing it is turned to a falſe worſhip of God, and is impoſſible to be kept. Again, although it ſtood in force, yet it ſhould not extend to them which forſake the Miniſtry. Finally, if the Biſhops here would have a care and regard to Mens Conſciences, they ſhould then ordain Prieſts without any ſuch profeſſion or Vow-making, as appeareth by the old Canons, how that many were admitted to the Miniſtry without profeſſing of any Vow; and the ſame afterward, when they had married their Wives, remained in the Miniſtry, as is teſtified, Cap. Diaconi. Diſtinct. 28.

Why Prieſts Vows ought not to ſtand.

Diſt. 28. cap. Diaconi.

Certainly what here I may complain I cannot tell. Firſt, in this Article I cannot impute it to ignorance that they do. For no Man is ignorant of the Commandment of God, which ſaith, Let every Man have his Wife for avoiding of fornication. Again, who is ſo blind but he ſeeth what a life theſe unmarried Prieſts do live? The complaints of good Men are well known. The filthineſs of the wicked is too too manifeſt. But peradventure your Biſhops, holding with the Sect of Epicures, do think God is not offended with filthy luſts. Which if they ſo think, then do we ſuſtain doubtleſs an hard cauſe where ſuch muſt be judges.

Biſhops reſtrain Prieſts marriage againſt all reaſon and excuſe.

I am not ignorant that this ſingle life is very fit to ſet out the glory and bravery of Biſhops and Colledges of Prieſts, and to maintain their wealth and portly ſtate, and this I ſuppoſe to be the cauſe why ſome do abhor ſo much that Prieſts ſhould be married. But O lamentable ſtate of the Church, if Laws ſhould be ſo forced to ſerve, not the verity and the Will of God, but the private gain and commodity of Men! They err which think it lawful for them to make Laws repugnant to the Commandment of God, and to the Law of nature, ſo that they be profitable to attain Wealth and Riches: and of truth from my very heart I do mourn and lament, Right Noble Prince, both for your ſake, and alſo for the cauſe of Chriſts Church. You pretend to impugn and gainſtand the tyranny of the Romiſh Biſhop, and truly do call him Antichriſt, as indeed he is; and in the mean time you defend and maintain thoſe Laws of that Romiſh Antichriſt, which be the ſtrength and ſinews of all his power, as private Maſs, ſingle life of Prieſts, and other ſuperſtitions. You threaten horrible puniſhments to good Men, and to the members of Chriſt, you violently oppreſs and bear down the verity of the Goſpel boginning to ſhine in your Churches. This is not to aboliſh Antichriſt, but to eſtabliſh him.

Complaint of unjuſt Laws ſerving to the lucre of Men againſt the Glory of God.

I beſeech you therefore for our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye file not your Conſcience in defending thoſe Articles which your Biſhops have deviſed and ſet forth touching private Maſſes, Auricular Confeſſion, Vows, ſingle life of Prieſts, and prohibition of the one half of the Sacrament. It is no light offence to eſtabliſh Idolatry, errours, cruelty, cruelty, the filthy luſts of Antichriſt. If the Roman Biſhops ſhould call a Councel, what other Articles chiefly would he deviſe and publiſh unto the World, but the very ſame which your Biſhops have here enacted?

The ſubtilty of Sathan in abuſing the power of Princes to maintain his Kingdom.

Underſtand and conſider, I pray you, the ſubtil trains and deceits of the Devil, which is wont firſt to ſet upon and aſſail the chief Governours. And as he is the enemy of Chriſt from the beginning of the World, ſo his chiefeſt purpoſe is by all crafty and ſubtil means to work contumely againſt Chriſt, by ſparſing abroad wicked opinions, and ſetting up Idolatry, and alſo in polluting mankind with bloody Murthers and fleſhly luſts: in the working whereof he abuſeth the policies and wits of Hypocrites, alſo the power and ſtrength of mighty Princes; as Stories of all times bear witneſs, what great Kingdoms and Empires have ſet themſelves with all might and main againſt the poor Churches of Chriſt.

Example of good Princes.

And yet notwithſtanding God hath reſerved ſome good Princes at all times out of the great multitude of ſuch Gyants, and hath brought them to his Church, to embrace true Doctrine, and to defend his true worſhip; as Abraham taught Abimelech; Joſeph the Egyptian Kings; and after them came David, Joſaphat, Ezechias, Joſias excelling in true Godlineſs. Daniel converted to the knowledge of God, the Kings of Chaldea and Perſia. Alſo Brytany brought forth unto the World the Godly Prince Conſtantine. In this number I wiſh you rather to be, than amongſt the Enemies of Chriſt, defiled with Idolatry, and ſpotted with the Blood of the Godly; of whom God will take puniſhment, as he doth many times forewarn, and many examples do teach.

Yet again therefore I pray and beſeech you, for our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that you will correct and mitigate this Decree of the Biſhops; in which doing you ſhall advance the Glory of Chriſt, and provide as well for the wealth of your own Soul, as the ſafegard of your Churches.

Let the hearty deſires of ſo many Godly Men through the whole World move you, ſo earneſtly wiſhing that ſome good Kings would extend their Authority to the true reformation of the Church of God, to the aboliſhing of all Idolatrous Worſhip, and the furthering of the courſe of the Goſpel. Regard alſo and conſider, I beſeech you, thoſe Godly perſons which are with you in bands for the Goſpels ſake, being the true members of Chriſt.

He meaneth Shaxton, Latimer, Cromer, and others.

And if that cruel Decree be not altered, the Biſhops will never ceaſe to rage againſt the Church of Chriſt, without mercy or pity: for them the Devil uſeth as Inſtruments and Miniſters of his fury and malice againſt Chriſt. Theſe he ſtirreth up to ſlay and kill the members of Chriſt. Whoſe wicked and cruel proceedings and ſubtil ſophiſtications and that you will not prefer before our true and moſt righteous requeſt, all the Godly moſt humbly and heartily do pray and beſeech you. Which if they ſhall obtain, no doubt but God ſhall recompence to you great rewards for your piety, and your excellent vertue ſhall be renowned both by pen and voice of all the Godly, whiles the World ſtandeth. For Chriſt ſhall judge all them that ſhall deſerve either well or evil of his Church. And whiles Letters ſhall remain, the memorial worthy of ſuch noble deſerts ſhall never dye or be forgotten with the poſterity to come. And ſeeing we ſeek the glory of Chriſt, and that our Churches are the Churches of Chriſt, there ſhall never be wanting ſuch as both ſhall defend the righteous cauſe, and magnifie with due commendation ſuch as have well deſerved, and likewiſe ſhall condemn the unjuſt cruelty of the enemies.

The Devils Inſtruments by whom he worketh.

Chriſt goeth about hungry, thirſty, naked, impriſoned, complaining of the raging fury of the Biſhops, and of the wrongful oppreſſion and cruelty of divers Kings and Princes, intreating that the members of his Body be not rent in pieces, but that true Churches may be defended, and his Goſpel advanced. This requeſt of Chriſt to hear, to receive, and to embrace, is the Office of a Godly King, and ſervice moſt acceptable unto God.

The penalty of the ſix Articles declared.

Concerning theſe ſix Articles paſſed in this Act aforeſaid; in the one and twentieth year of King Henry, ſufficiently hitherto hath bin declared, firſt what theſe Articles were: Secondly, by whom, and from whom they chiefly proceeded: thirdly, how erroneous, pernicious, repugnant, and contrarious to true Doctrine, Chriſtian Religion, and the word of God, to nature alſo it ſelf, all reaſon and honeſty, and finally to the ancient Laws, Cuſtoms, and Examples of our fore-elders, during the days of a thouſand years after Chriſt they were. Fourthly, ye have heard alſo what unreaſonable and extream penalty was ſet upon the ſame, that a man may deem theſe Laws to be written not with the ink of Stephen Gardiner, but with the Blood of a Dragon, or rather the Claws of the Devil. The breach whereof was made no leſs than Treaſon and Felony, and no leſs puniſhment aſſigned thereto than Death.

Draconis leges ſanguine ſcriptæ.

Beſides all this, the words of the Act were ſo curious and ſubtile, that no Man could ſpeak, write or cypher againſt them, without preſent danger, yea ſcarcely a Man might ſpeak any word of Chriſt and his Religion, but he was in peril of theſe ſix Articles. Over and beſides, the Papiſts began ſo finely to interpret the Act, that they ſpared not to indite Men for abuſing their Countenance and Behaviour in the Church. So great was the power of darkneſs in thoſe days. And thus much concerning this Act.

Poteſtas tenebrárum.

An Act againſt Fornication of unmarried Prieſts.

Beſides theſe ſix Articles in this foreſaid Act concluded, there was alſo another Conſtitution annexed withal, not without the advice (as may ſeem) of the Lord Cromwel, which was this: That Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church, ſeeing now they would needs themſelves be bound from all Matrimony, ſhould therefore by Law likewiſe be bound to ſuch honeſty and continency of life, that carnally they ſhould uſe, and accuſtom no manner of Woman married or ſingle by way of Advoutry, or Fornication; the breach whereof for the firſt time, was to forfet goods, and to ſuffer Impriſonment at the Kings pleaſure: and for the ſecond time, being duly convicted, it was made Felony, as the other were.

In this Conſtitution, if the Lord Cromwel and other good Men of the Parliament might have had their will, there is no doubt, but the firſt crime of theſe concubinary Prieſts, as well as the ſecond, had had the ſame penalty, as the other ſix Articles had, and ſhould have bin puniſhed with death. But Stephen Gardiner with his fellow Biſhops, who then ruled all the roſt, ſo baſted this extraordinary Article with their accuſtomed ſhifts, that if they were taken and duly convict for their not caſtè, nor cautè, at firſt time it was but forfeit of goods. Alſo for the ſecond conviction or attainder they ſo provided, that the next year following, that puniſhment and pain of death by Act of Parliament was clean wiped away and repealed. And why ſo? Becauſe, ſaith the Statute, that puniſhment by pain of death is very ſore, and much extream, therefore it pleaſeth the King, with the aſſent of the Lords, that that clauſe above written concerning Felony, and pains of death, and other penalties and forfeitures, for and upon the firſt and ſecond conviction or attainder of any Prieſt or Woman for any ſuch offences of Whoredom, or Advoutery aforeſaid, ſhall be from henceforth void and of none effect, &c. So that by this Statute it was provided, for all ſuch Votaries as lived in Whoredom and Adultery, for the firſt offence to loſe his goods, and all his ſpiritual promotions except one; for the ſecond, to forfeit all that he had to the King; for the third conviction to ſuſtain continual Impriſonment.

Stat. An. 32. Reg. Hen. 8. cap. 10.

The Act againſt the Whoredom of Prieſts qualified, & after what manner.

In theſe ungodly proceedings of the Popes Catholick Clergy two things we have to note.

The manifeſt impiety of the Popes Doctrine diſcloſed.

1. Firſt, the horrible impiety of their Doctrine, directly fighting againſt the expreſs Authority of God and his Word, foraſmuch as that which God permitteth, they reſtrain; that which he bids they forbid. Habeat, ſaith he; Non habeat, ſay they, taking exceptions againſt the word of the Lord. That which he calleth honourable and undefiled, they call Hereſie; that which he commandeth and inſtituteth, they puniſh with pains of death. Not only the Prieſts that marry, but them alſo that ſay or cypher that a Prieſt may marry, at the firſt they kill as Felons. Neither can any Miſerere take place for chaſte and lawful wedlock; whereas contrariwiſe a ſpiritual Man may thrice defile his neighbours Wife, or thrice deflour his Brothers Daughter, and no Felony at all layed to his charge. What is this in plain words to ſay, but that it is leſs ſin thrice to commit Advoutry, than once to marry?

Dilemma againſt Votaries that will not marry.

2. The ſecond is to be noted, how theſe painted Hypocrites do bewray their falſe diſſembled dealings unawares, with whom a Man might thus reaſon. Tell us you Prieſts and Votaries, which ſo preciſely flie the ſtate of Matrimony intend you to live chaſte & are able ſo to do without Wives, or do you keep your ſelves honeſt and chaſt without them, without burning, or not? If you be not able, why then marry ye not? Why take you not the remedy appointed of God? why make you thoſe Vows, which you cannot perform? Or why do you not break them being made, falling thereby in danger of breaking Gods Commandment, for keeping your own? If you be able and ſo do intend to continue an honeſt and a continent converſation without Wives, then ſhall I ask of you according as Doctor Turner gravely and truly layeth to your charge; Why do you ſo carefully provide a remedy by your Laws aforehand for a miſchief to come, which you may avoid if you liſt, unleſs either ye liſted not to ſtand though you might, or elſe ſaw your own infirmity, that you could not though you would? And therefore, fearing your own weak fragility, to provide wiſely for your ſelves aforehand, that where others ſhall ſuffer pains of death at the firſt for well doing, you may fall thrice in abominable Adultery, and yet by the Law have your lives pardoned.

D. Turner.

D. Turner hunting the Romiſh Fox.

And here cometh out your own Hypocriſie by your ſelves bewrayed; for whereas you all confeſs, that you are able to live chaſte if ye will without Wives, this moderation of the Law provided before againſt your advouterous incontinency, plainly declareth that either ye purpoſe willingly to fall, at leaſt ye fear and ſtand in doubt not to be able to ſtand. And why then do you ſo confidently take ſuch Vows upon you, ſtanding in ſuch doubt and fear for the performance thereof?

The Papiſts bewray their Hypocriſie.

And be it to you admitted that all do not fall, but that ſome keep their Vow, though ſome viciouſly run to other Mens Wives and Daughters; then herein again I ask you, ſeeing theſe Vicious Whorehunters and advoutrous perſons among you do live viciouſly, (as you cannot deny) and may do otherwiſe if they liſt, as you confeſs, what puniſhment then are they worthy to have, which may live continent and will not, neither yet will take the remedy provided by God, but refuſe it? Which being ſo, then what iniquity is this in you, or rather impiety inexcuſable againſt God and Man, to procure a moderation of Laws for ſuch, and to ſhew ſuch compaſſion and clemency to theſe ſo heinous Adulterers, whore-hunters, and beaſtly Fornicators, that if they Adulterate other Mens Wives never ſo oft, yet there is no death for them; and to ſhew no compaſſion at all, nor to find out any moderation for ſuch, but at the very firſt to kill them as Felons and Hereticks, which honeſtly do marry in the fear of God, or once ſay that a Prieſt may marry? How can ye here be excuſed, O you Children of iniquity? What Reaſon is in your doing, or what truth in your Doctrine, or what fear of God in your hearts? You that neither are able to avoid burning and pollution without Wedlock, nor yet will receive that remedy

The impiety of the Papiſts inexcuſable.

that the Lord hath given you, how will you ſtand in his face, when he ſhall reveal your operations and cogitations to your perpetual confuſion, unleſs by time ye convert and repent? And thus being aſhamed of your execrable doings, I ceaſe to defile my pen any further in this ſo ſtinking matter of yours, leaving you to the Lord.

Read before: It was declared before, that what time theſe ſix Articles were in hand in the Parliament Houſe, Cranmer, then being Archbiſhop of Canterbury, only withſtood the ſame, diſputing three days againſt them; whoſe Reaſons and Arguments I wiſh were extant and remaining. After theſe Acticles were thus paſſed and concluded, the King, who always bare eſpecial favour unto Cranmer, perceiving him to be not a little diſcomforted therewith, ſent all the Lords of the Parliament, and with them the Lord Cromwel, to dine with him at Lambeth (as is before declared) and within few days alſo upon the ſame, requiring that he would give a note of all his doings and reaſonings in the ſaid Parliament: Which the ſaid Cranmer eftſoons accompliſhed, accordingly, drawing out his Reaſons and Allegations; the copy whereof, being fair written out by his Secretary, was ſent and delivered unto the King, and there remained..

Cranmers reaſons and allegations againſt the ſix Articles written to the King.

Now after theſe things thus diſcuſſed, as touching the ſix wicked Articles, it followeth next, in returning to the order of our ſtory again, to declare thoſe things which after the ſetting out of theſe Articles enſued, coming now to the time and ſtory of the Lord Cromwel, a man whoſe worthy fame and deeds are worthy to live renowned in perpetual memory.

The Hiſtory concerning the Life, Acts, and Death of the famous and worthy Counſellour Lord Thomas Cromwel Earl of Eſſex.

The Story of the L. Thom. Cromwel.

THomas Cromwell although born of a ſimple Parentage, and Houſe obſcure, through the ſingular excellency of Wiſdom, and dexterity of Wit wrought in him by God, coupled with like induſtry of mind, and deſerts of life, roſe to high preferment and authority; inſomuch that by ſteps and ſtairs of Office and Honour, he aſcended at length to that, that not only he was made Earl of Eſſex, but alſo moſt ſecret and dear Counſellor to King Henry, and Vicegerent unto his perſon, which Office hath not commonly been ſupplyed, at leaſt not ſo fruitfully diſcharged within this Realm.

The baſe degree of the L. Cromwel recompenced with noble ornaments.

Firſt as touching his Birth, he was born at Putney or thereabout, being a Smiths Son, whoſe Mother married after to a ſheerman. In the ſimple eſtate and rude beginnings of this man, as of divers other before him, we may ſee and learn, that the excellency of noble vertues and heroical proweſſes which advance to fame and honour, ſtand not only upon Birth and Blood, as priviledges only entailed and appropriate to noble Houſes; but are diſpoſed indifferently, and proceed of the gift of God, who raiſeth up the poor Abject many times out of the Dunghil, and matcheth him in Throne with Peers and Princes, Pſal. 113.

Commendation of the L. Cromwil.

As touching the order and manner of his coming up, it would be ſuperfluous to diſcourſe what may be ſaid at large; only by way of ſtory it may ſuffice to give a touch of certain particulars, and ſo to proceed. Although the humble condition and poverty of this man was at the beginning (as it is to many other) a great let and hinderance for vertue to ſhew her ſelf, yet ſuch was the activity and forward ripeneſs of nature in him, ſo pregnant in wit, and ſo ready he was, in judgment diſcreet, in tongue eloquent, in ſervice faithful, in ſtomack couragious, in his pen active, that being converſant in the ſight of men, he could not be long uneſpied, nor yet unprovided of favour and help of friends to ſet him forward in place and office. neither was any place or Office put unto him, whereunto he was not apt and fit; Nothing was ſo hard which with wit and induſtery he could not compaſs. Neither was his capacity ſo good, but his memory was as great in retaining whatſoever he had attained. Which well appeareth in canning the text of the whole new Teſtament of Eraſmus Tranſlation without Book, in his journey going and coming from Rome, whereof you ſhall hear anon.

Tho. Cromwel learned the new Teſtament in Latin without book.

Thus in his growing years, as he ſhot up in age and ripeneſs, a great delight came in his mind to ſtray into forreign Countries, to ſee the World abroad, and to learn experience; whereby he learned ſuch Tongues and Languages as might better ſerve for his uſe hereafter.

And thus paſſing over his youth, being at Antwerp, he was there retained of the Engliſh Merchants to be their Clerk or Secretary, or in ſome ſuch like condition placed pertaining to their affairs.

The Town of Boſton.

It happened the ſame time that the Town of Boſton thought good to ſend up to Rome, for renewing of their two pardons, one called the great pardon, the other the leſſer pardon. Which thing although it ſhould ſtand them in great expences of money (for the Popes Merchandiſe is always dear ware) yet notwithſtanding ſuch ſweetneſs they had felt thereof, and ſuch gain to come to their town by that Romiſh Merchandiſe (as all Superſtition is commonly gainful) that they like good Catholick Merchants, and the Popes good cuſtomers, thought to ſpare for no coſt, to have their leaſes again of their pardons renewed, whatſoever they paid for the fine. And yet was all this good Religion then, ſuch was the lamentable blindneſs of that time.

The Popes Merchandiſe dear ware.

Superſtition commonly is gainful.

The Popes leaſes of pardons.

This then being ſo determined and decreed among my Countrymen of Boſton, to have their pardons needs repaired and renewed from Rome, one Gefferey Chambers with another Champion was ſent for the meſſengers, with writings and money, no ſmall quantity, well furniſhed, and with all other things appointed, neceſſary for ſo chargeable and coſtly exploit. Who coming in his journey to Antwerp, and miſdoubting to be too weak for the compaſſing of ſuch a weighty piece of work, conferred and perſwaded with T. Cromwel to aſſociat him in that legacy, and to aſſiſt him in the contriving thereof. Cromwel although perceiving the enterpriſe to be of no ſmall difficulty to traverſe the Popes Court, for the unreaſonable expences amongſt thoſe greedy Cormorants, yet having ſome skill of the Italian Tongue, and as yet not grounded in the judgment of Religion in thoſe his youthful days, was at length obtained and content to give the adventure, and ſo took his journey towards Rome. Cromwel loth to ſpend much time, and more loth to ſpend his money; and again perceiving that the Popes greedy humour muſt needs be ſerved with ſome preſent or other (for without rewards there is no doing at Rome) began to caſt with himſelf, what thing beſt to deviſe wherein he might beſt ſerve the Popes devotion.

Cromwel goeth to Rome.

At length having knowledge how that the Popes holy tooth greatly delighted to new fangled ſtrange delicates, and dainty diſhes, it came in his mind to prepare certain fine diſhes of gelly, after the beſt faſhion, made after our Countrey manner here in England, which to them of Rome was not known nor ſeen before.

This done, Cromwell, obſerving his time accordingly, as the Pope was newly come from hunting into his pavillion, he with his companions approached with his Engliſh preſents brought in with a three mans ſong (as we call it) in the Engliſh Tongue, and all after the Engliſh faſhion. The Pope ſuddenly marvelling at the ſtrangeneſs of the Song, and underſtanding that they were Engliſh men, and that they came not empty handed, willed them to be called in. Cromwel there ſhewing his obedience, and offering his jolly junkets, ſuch as Kings and Princes only, ſaid he, in the Realm of England uſe to feed upon, deſired the ſame to be accepted in benevolent part, which he and his companions, as poor ſuters unto his Holineſs, had there brought and preſented, as novelties meet for his recreation, &c.

Cromwels preſents to the Pope. Cromwel a ſuter for Boſton Pardons.

Pope Julius, ſeeing the ſtrangeneſs of the diſhes, commanded by and by his Cardinal to take the aſſay. Who in taſting thereof liked it ſo well, and ſo likewiſe the Pope after him, that knowing of them what their ſutes were, and riquiring them to make known the making of that meat, he incontinent, without any more adoe, ſtamped both their pardons as well the greater as the leſſer.

Boſtons pardons obtained at Rome.

And thus were the jolly pardons af the Town of Boſton obtained as you have heard, for the maintenance of their decayed port. The copy of which pardons (which I have in my hands) briefly comprehended, cometh to this effect:

effect; That all the Brethren and Sisters of the Guild of our Lady in S. Botolphes Church at Boston, should have free Licence to chuse for their Confessour or ghostly Father whom they would, either secular Priest, or Religious Person, to assoil them plenarily from all their sins, except only in cases reserved to the Pope.

The effect & contents of Boston pardons.

Also should have licence to carry about with them an Altar-stone, whereby they might have a Priest to say them Mass, or other Divine Service where they would, without prejudice of any other Church or Chappel, though it were also before day, yea and at three of the Clock after midnight in the summer time.

Pardon for visiting our Ladies Chappel in Boston.

Furthermore, that all such Brethren and Sisters of the said Guild, which should resort to the Chappel of our Lady in Saint Botolphes Church at the feast of Easter, Whitsontide, Corpus Christi, the Nativity or Assumption of our Lady, or in the Octaves of them, the feast of Saint Michael, and first Sunday in Lent, should have pardon no less than if they themselves personally had visited the Stations of Rome.

The price of Boston pardons. Crafty Merchants.

Provided that every such person, Man or Woman, entring into the same Gilde, at his first entrance should give to the finding of seven Priests, twelve Quiristers, and thirteen Beadesmen, and to the lights of the same Brotherhood and a Grammar School, six Shillings eight pence, and for every year after twelve pence.

And these premisses being before granted by Pope Innocentius, and Pope Julius the second, this Pope Clement also confirmed, granting moreover, that whatsoever Brother or Sister of the same Guild, through poverity, sickness or any other let could not resort personally to the said Chappel, notwithstanding he should be dispensed withal, as well for that, as for all other Vows, irregularities, Censures Canonical whatsoever, only the Vow of going the Stations of Rome, and going to S. James of Compostella excepted, &c.

Full remission a pœna & culpa. Good stuff I trow.

He also granted unto them power to receive full remission, a pœna & culpa, once in their life, or in the hour of death.

Item, that having their Altar-stone, they might have Mass said in any place, though it were unhallowed. And in the time of interdict, to have Mass or any Sacrament ministred: and also being departed, that they might be buried in Christian burial notwithstanding the interdict.

Or if they for any impediment could not be present at the Chappel aforesaid, yet if they came unto their own Parish Church, and there said one Pater noster, and Ave Maria, they should enjoy the same remission above specified; or whosoever came every Friday to the same Chappel, should have as much Remission, as if he went unto the Chappel of our Lady called Scala Cœli.

These Indulgences, Pardons, Grants, and Relaxations were given and granted by Pope Nicholas the fifth, Pope Pius the second, Pope Sixtus, and Pope Julius the second, of which Pope Julius it seemeth that Cromwel obtained his Pardon aforesaid about the year of our Lord, 1510. Which Pardon again afterward through the request of King Henry, Anno, 1526. was confirmed by Pope Clement the seventh. And thus much concerning the Pardon of Boston, renewed by the means of Thomas Cromwel, of Pope Julius the second.

Ex literis Bullæ Clementis 7. ad Guliel. Warrámum. Archiep.

All this while it appeareth, that Cromwel had yet no sound taste nor judgment of Religion, but was wild and youthful, without sense or regard of God and his Word as he himself was wont ofttimes to declare unto Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, shewing what a Ruffian he was in his young days, and how he was in the Wars of the Duke of Bourbon at the siege of Rome, also what a great doer he was with Geffery Chambers in publishing and setting forth the Pardon of Boston every where in Churches as he went, and so continued, till at length by learning the Text of the New Testament without book of Erasmus Translation in his going and coming from Rome (as is aforesaid) he began to be touched and called to better understanding.

Cromwel was in the Wars of the Duke of Bourbon besieging Rome.

In this mean time Thomas Wolsey Cardinal of York began to bear a great port in England, and almost to rule all under the King, or rather with the King; so that the freshest Wits, and of the best towardness, most commonly sought unto him. Among whom was also Thomas Cromwel to his service advanced, where he continued a certain space of years, growing up in Office and Authority till at length he was preferred to be Solicitour to the Cardinal.

Cromwel received into the Cardinals Service. Cromwel Solicitor to the Cardinal.

There was also about the same time, or not much different, in the Houshold of the said Cardinal Thomas More, afterward Knight and Chancellor of England, and Steven Gardiner after Bishop of Winchester and of the Kings Counsel. All these three were brought up in one Houshold, and all of one standing almost together. Whose Ages as they were not greatly discrepant, nor their wits much unequal: so neither was their fortune and advancements greatly divers, albeit their dispositions and studies were most contrary. And though peradventure in More and in Gardiner there was more art of the Letters, and skill of learning, yet notwithstanding there was in this man a more Heavenly light of the mind, and more prompt and perfect judgment, eloquence equal, and as may be supposed in this man more Heroical and Princely disposition, born to greater affairs in the Common-Wealth, and to the singular help of many.

Cromwel, More, and Gardiner, companions in the Cardinals House. A comparison between Cromwel, More, and Gardiner.

It happened that in this mean season, as Cromwel was placed in this Office to be Solicitour to the Cardinal, the said Cardinal had then in hand the building of certain Colledges, namely his Colledge in Oxford, called then Frideswide, now Christs Church. By reason whereof, certain small Monasteries and Priories, in divers places of the Realm, were by the said Cardinal suppressed, and the lands seised to the Cardinals hands. The doing whereof was committed to the charge of Thomas Cromwel. In the expedition whereof he shewed himself very forward and industrious, in such sort as in the handling thereof he procured to himself much grudge with divers of the Superstitious sort, and with some also of Noble calling about the King. And thus was Cromwel first set a work by the Cardinal, to suppress Religious Houses. Which was about the year of our Lord, 1525.

Small Monasteries suppressed by the Cardinal. Cromwel first set a work by the Cardinal to suppress Religious Houses.

As this passed on, it was not long, but the Cardinal which had gotten up so high began to come down as fast, first from the Chancellorship (in which room was placed Sir Thomas More, as is before said) then he fell into a Præmunire; So that his Houshold being dissolved, Thomas Cromwel, amongst other, laboured also to be retained into the Kings service.

Sir Christopher Hales helper of Cromwel to the King.

There was at the same time one Sir Christopher Hales Knight, Master of the Rolls, who notwithstanding was then a mighty Papist; yet bare he such favour and good liking to Cromwel, that he commended him to the King, as a Man most fit for his purpose, having then to do against the Pope. But here before is to be understood, that Cromwel had greatly been complained of, and defamed by certain of Authority about the King, for his rude manner ner and homely dealing in defacing the Monks Houſes, and in handling of their Altars, &c. Wherefore the King, hearing of the name of Cromwel, began to deteſt the mention of him, neither lacked their ſome Standers-by, who with reviling words ceaſed not to increaſe and inflame the Kings hatred againſt him: what there names were it ſhall not need here to recite. Among other, there preſent at the ſame hearing, was the Lord Ruſſel Earl of Bedford, whoſe life Cromwel before had preſerved at Bonony, through politick conveyance, at what time the ſaid Earl, coming ſecretly in the Kings affairs, was there eſpied, and therefore being in great danger to be taken, through the means and policy of Cromwel eſcaped.

The Lord Ruſſel Earl of Bedford, through the policy of Cromwel eſcaped at Bonony.

This Lord Ruſſel therefore not forgetting the old benefits paſt, and with like gratuity willing again to requite that he had received, in a vehement boldneſs ſtood forth, to take upon him the defence of Thomas Cromwel, uttering before the King many commendable words in the behalf of him, and declaring withal how by his ſingular device and policy he had done for him at Bonony, being there in the Kings affairs in extream peril. And forasmuch as now his Majeſty had to do with the Pope, his great Enemy, there was (he thought) in all England none ſo apt for the Kings purpoſe, which could ſay or do more in that matter, than could Thomas Cromwel, and partly gave the King to underſtand wherein. The King hearing this, and ſpecially marking the latter end of his talk, was contented and willing to talk with him, to hear and know what he could ſay.

The Lord Ruſſel commendeth Cromwel to the King.

This was not ſo privily done, but Cromwel had knowledge incontinent that the King would talk with him, and whereupon; and therefore providing before hand for matter, had in a readineſs the Copy of the Biſhops Oath, which they uſe commonly to make to the Pope at their conſecration; and ſo being called for, was brought to the King in his Garden at Weſtminſter, which was about the year of our Lord 1530.

Cromwel brought to talk with the King.

Cromwel after moſt loyal obeyſance, doing his duty to the King, according as he was demanded, made his declaration in all points; this eſpecially making manifeſt unto his Highneſs, how his Princely Authority was abuſed within his own Realm by the Pope and his Clergy, who being ſworn unto him, were afterward diſpenſed from the ſame, and ſworn anew unto the Pope; ſo that he was but as half King, and they but half his Subjects in his own Land: which (ſaid he) was derogatory to his Crown, and utterly prejudicial to the Common Laws of his Realm. Declaring thereupon how his Majeſty might accumulate to himſelf great Riches, ſo much as all the Clergy in his Realm was worth, if it ſo pleaſed him to take the occaſion now offered. The King giving good ear to this, and liking right well his advice, required if he could avouch that which he ſpake. All this he could (he ſaid) avouch to be certain, ſo well, as that he had the Copy of their own Oath to the Pope there preſent to ſhew, and that no leſs alſo he could manifeſtly prove, if his Highneſs would give leave; and therewith ſhewed the Biſhops Oath unto the King.

Cromwels words to the King concerning the Præmunire of the Clergy.

The King, following the vein of his Counſel, took his Ring off his Finger, and firſt admitting him into his Service, ſent him therewith to the Convocation-Houſe among the Biſhops. Cromwel coming with the Kings Signet boldly into the Clergy-Houſe, and there placing himſelf among the Biſhops (William Warham being then Archbiſhop) began to make his Oration, declaring unto them the Authority of a King, and the Office of Subjects, and eſpecially the Obedience of Biſhops and Churchmen under Publick Laws, neceſſarily provided for the profit and quiet of the Commonwealth. Which Laws notwithſtanding they had all tranſgreſſed, and highly offended in derogation of the Kings Royal Eſtate, falling in the Law of Præmunire, in that not only they had conſented to the Power Legative of the Cardinal, but alſo in that they had all ſworn to the Pope, contrary to the fealty of their Sovereign Lord the King, and therefore had forfeited to the King all their Goods, Chattels, Lands, Poſſeſſions, and whatſoever Livings they had. The Biſhops hearing this were not a little amazed, and firſt began to excuſe and deny the Fact. But after that Cromwel had ſhewed them the very Copy of their Oath made to the Pope at their Conſecration, and the matter was ſo plain that they could not deny it, they began to ſhrink and to fall to entreaty, deſiring reſpit to pauſe upon the matter. Notwithſtanding, the end thereof fell ſo out, that to be quit out of that Præmunire by Act of Parliament, it coſt them to the King for both the Provinces, Canterbury and York, no leſs than one hundred eighteen thouſand, eight hundred and forty Pounds, which was about the year of our Lord 1520, whereof before you may read more at large.

After this, Anno 1522. Sir Thomas Cromwel growing in great favour with the King, was made Knight and Maſter of the Kings Jewel-Houſe, and ſhortly after was admitted alſo into the Kings Council, which was about the coming in of Queen Anne Bulloign. Furthermore, within two years after the ſame, Anno 1524. he was made Maſter of the Rolls, Dr. Taylor being diſcharged.

Sir Thomas Cromwel made Knight and Maſter of the Kings Jewel-houſe

This Cromwel ſpringing up in favour and honour, after this, in the year 1527, a little before the birth of King Edward, was made Knight of the Garter, and not long after was advanced to the Earldom of Eſſex, and made Great Chamberlain of England. Over and beſides all which Honours, he was conſtitute alſo Vicegerent to the King, repreſenting his Perſon. Which Office although it ſtandeth well by the Law, yet ſeldom hath there been ſeen any beſides this Cromwel alone, either to have ſuſtained it, or elſe to have ſo furniſhed the ſame with counſel and wiſdom, as Cromwel did. And thus much hitherto concerning the ſteps and degrees of the Lord Cromwels riſing up to dignity and high eſtate.

Cromwel made Maſter of the Rolls.

Now ſomewhat would be ſaid likewiſe of the noble Acts, the memorable Examples and worthy Vertues, not drowned by eaſe of Honour in him, but increaſed rather, and quickned by advancement of Authority and Place, to work more abundantly in the Commonwealth. Among the which his worthy Acts and other manifold Vertues, in this one chiefly above all other riſeth his commendation, for his ſingular Zeal and laborſous Travel beſtowed in reſtoring the true Church of Chriſt, and ſubverting the Synagogue of Antichriſt, the Abbeys, I mean, and Religious Houſes of Friers and Monks. For ſo it pleaſed Almighty God, by the means of the ſaid Lord Cromwel, to induce the King to ſuppreſs firſt the Chauntries, then the Friers Houſes and ſmall Monaſteries, till at length all the Abbeys in England, both great and leſs, were utterly overthrown and pluckt up by the roots. The which Act and enterprize of him, as it may give a preſident of ſingular Zeal to all Realms Chriſtened, which no Prince yet to this day ſcarce dare follow; ſo to this Realm of England, it wrought ſuch benefit and commodity, as the fruit thereof yet remaineth, and will remain ſtill in the Realm of England, though we ſeem little to feel it. Rudely and ſimply I ſpeak what I ſuppoſe, without prejudice of other which can infer any better reaſon. In the mean time my reaſon is this, That if God had not raiſed up this Cromwel as he did, to be the Inſtrument of rooting out of the Abbeys and Cells of ſtrange Religion, what other men ſee I know not; for my part I never ſaw yet in this Realm any ſuch Cromwel ſince Cromwels time, whoſe heart and courage might not ſooner have been ſubverted with the Mony and Bribes of Abbats, than he to have ſubverted any Abbey in all England.

The acts and doings of the Lord Cromwel deſcribed.

The Lord Cromwel a profitable inſtrument in ſuppreſſing Abbeys.

But here I muſt of neceſſity anſwer the complaint of certain of our Country-men. For ſo I hear of many of the ſubverſion of theſe Monaſteries to be reprehended, as evil and wicked. The Buildings, ſay they, might have been converted unto Schools and Houſes of Learning, the Goods and Poſſeſſions might have been beſtowed to much better and more godly uſe of the Poor, and maintaining of Hoſpitality. Neither do I deny, but that theſe things are well and godly ſpoken of them, and could willingly embrace their Opinion with my whole heart, if I did not conſider herein a more ſecret and deeper meaning of Gods holy Providence, than at the firſt bluſh peradventure to all men doth appear.

The defence of the Lord Cromwel for overthrowing the Abbeys.

And firſt to omit the wicked and execrable Life of theſe Religious Orders, full of all fedity, and found out by the Kings Viſitors, and in their Regiſters alſo recorded, ſo horrible to be heard, ſo incredible to be believed, ſo ſtinking before

The abominable life in Monaſteries, bewrayed by their own confeſſion.

the face of God and Man, that no marvel it is if Gods vengeance from Heaven provoked would not suffer any stone or monument of these abominable Houses to be unplucked up. But, as I said, letting these things pass under chast silence, which for very shame will abhor any story to disclose, let us now come to the first Institution of these Orders and Houses of Monkery, and consider how and to what end they were first instituted and erected here among the Saxons at the first foundation of them, about the time 666.

Read afore: In the former part of this History, declaration was made before, first by whom, and at what time these Monkish Houses here in England among the Saxons (flowing no doubt out of the Order of St. Bennet, and brought in by Augustine) began first to be founded, as by

The first beginning of Religious Houses in the time of the Saxons. Augustine the Monk, Fursæus, Medulphus, Aldanus, Ceadda, King Ulferus, Oswius, Elfreda, King Oswis Daughter Kineburga, Hilda, Botolphus, Edeldreda, King Oswald, Edgar, Erkenewaldus Bishop, Ethelwoldus Bishop of Winchester, Osketellus Archbishop of York, Oswaldus Bishop of Worcester, Lesuinus Bishop of Dorcester, Dunstan, and divers others.

The end and cause of building Religious Houses. The end and final cause why they were builded, appeareth in Stories to be, Pro remissione & redemptione peccatorum: pro remedio & liberatione animæ; pro amore cœlestis patriæ; in eleemosynam animæ; in remissionem criminum; pro salute regnorum, pro salute & requie animarum patrum & matrum, fratrum, & sororum nostrarum, parentum, & omnium benefactorum; in honorem gloriosæ Virginis, &c. As may appear in ancient Histories, in old Charters and Donations unto Religious Houses, and in the Chronicle of Ingulphus, as also all other Stories be full of the same.

The damnable Doctrine and Institution of Religious Sects and Orders. So King Ethelstane, for killing his Brother Edwine, builded two Monasteries, Midleton and Michelney, for his Soul. Which Doctrine and Institution, forsomuch as it tendeth and soundeth directly against the foundation of Christian Religion, against the Testament of God, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the freedom of our redemption and free justification by Faith, it is therefore to be condemned as execrable or horrible, as evil or worse than the life of the persons, and not only worthy to be suppressed to the foundation, but to marvelled rather, that God would suffer it to stand so long. Albeit Gods mighty Vengeance and Scourge hath not ceased from time to time to work against such impious Foundations from the time of their first setting up. For besides the Invasions of the Danes (which may seem to be stirred up of God, especially for the subversion of Abbeys) let old Histories be searched, what Monastery almost in all this Realm was either left by the Danes, or reedified again after the Danes, but by some notorious casualty of fire sent by Gods hand it hath been burned up?

Gods continual plague against Monasteries. First, the Monastery of Canterbury, called the House of St. Gregory, was burnt Anno 1145. and afterward again burnt Anno 1174. ex Histor. Gervasii. Ex Chronic. Gervasii.

The Abbey of Croyland was also twice burnt. Ex hist. Ingulph. Ingulphi.

The Abbey of Peterborow twice set on fire Anno 1070. Ex Chron. Peterb. Peterborow. Walteri. Weekes. Hovedeni. Gualteri. Coventr. Fabiani. Willielm. Malmesb.

The Abbey of St. Maries in York burnt, with the Hospital also.

The Abbey of Norwich burnt.

The Abbey of St. Edmonds-Bury burnt and destroyed, Ex Chron. S. Edmund.

The Abbey of Worcester.

The Abbey of Glouceſter was also burnt.

The Abbey of Chicheſter burnt.

The Abbey of Glastenbury burnt.

The Abbey of St. Mary in Southwark burnt.

The Church of the Abbey of Beverly burnt.

Abbeys burnt and plagued with fire. The Steeple of the Abbey of Evesham burnt.

These, with many other Monasteries more, God brought down to the ground, so that few or none of all the Monastical Foundations in England, either before the Conquest, escaped the hands of the Danes and Scots, or else after the Conquest escaped destruction of fire, and that not without just cause deserved; for as the trade of their Lives was too too wretched and bestial, so the profession of their Doctrine was intolerable, fraught with all Superstition, full of much Idolatry, and utterly contrary to the Grace of the Gospel and Doctrine of Christ.

The Doctrine of the Monks worse than their lives. Furthermore, the more these Abbeys multiplied and the longer they continued, in time the more corruption still they drew unto them. And albeit we read the name of Monks to have continued from the old ancient time, yet notwithstanding the Monks of those days were not like the Monks of our time, nor their Houses then like to our Abbeys now. So we read of the Monks of Bangor before the coming of Augustine; but those Monks got their living with toyl and labour of their hands, and had no other Lands nor Lordships to live upon. Again, neither were they as Ministers then, but as Lay-men, according as Hierome describeth the Monks of his time, saying, Monachus non docentis, sed plangentis habet officium. And again he saith, Alia causa est Monachi, alia Clerici; Clerici oves pascunt; Ego pascor, &c. That is, A Monks Office is not to preach, but to mourn. The state of a Monk is one thing, and the state of a Priest is another. Priests feed the Flock of Christ; I am fed, &c. 16 q. Monachus. 16. q. 2. Alia causa Gloss.

Also in the Story of Ingulphus Abbot of Croyland thus I find: Anno 1075. In Croylandiam primum installatus inveni tunc in isto Monasterio Croylandensi Monachos numero 62. Quorum quatuor laici fratres erant, præter aliorum Monasteriorum Monachos nostri capituli conprofessos, &c. That is, Being installed in the Abbey of Croyland I found there to the number of sixty two Monks. Of which Monks, four of them were Lay-Brethren, besides the Monks of other Monasteries which were also professed to our Chapter, &c. Ex Chron. Ingulphi. Abbat. Croylandens. Lay-men received for Monks into Monasteries.

The like matter also appeareth in the fourth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, where it is provided: Ne Monachi se Ecclesiasticis negotiis immisceant, &c. Et Leo Epist. 62. Vetat Monachos & Laicos, etsi scientiæ nomine glorientur, admitti ad officium docendi & concionandi. Whereof read more before. Monks forbidden to intermeddle in Ecclesiastical matters.

Thus it appeareth about or before the time of Hierome, that Monks in the first Persecutions of the Primitive Church were Lay-men, and companies of Christians associating themselves together, either for fear of persecution, or for eschewing the company of Heathen Gentiles: afterward in continuance of time, when the Gentiles began to be called to Christianity, the Monks yet keeping their name, and growing in Superstition, would not joyn with other Christians, but kept still their Brotherhoods, dividing themselves from other Christians, and professing a kind of life strange and diverse from the common trade. Upon this diversity of Life and Profession, followed also like diversity of garments and attire differing from their other Brethren. After this moreover came in the Rule of St. Benedict, enjoyning to them a prescribed form of going, of wearing, of watching, sleeping, rising, praying, of silence, sole life and diet, and all things almost differing from the vulgar sort of common Christians. Monks diverse from other men in trade of life. Monks diverse from other in Apparel.

Whereby men, seeing their austerity, began to have them in great admiration. And thus growing up in Opinion of Holiness, of Lay-men and Labourers they came at length to be Clergy-men, and greatest doers of all other in Christs Religion; insomuch that at last there was none reputed almost for a Religious man or perfect Christian, unless he were a Monk: neither almost was any advanced to any dignity of the Church, but either he was a Monk, or afterward he put on a Monks weed. According as in the Stories of this Realm is to be seen, how in the time of Dunstane Archbishop of Canterbury, of Ethelwold Bishop of Worcester, and of Oswald Bishop of Wincheſter, Pope John the thirteenth, writing to King Edgar, willed him in his Letters, to see in his Cathedral Churches none to be promoted to be Bishops, but such as were of the Monastical Religion, and willed him moreover to exclude the Secular Prebendaries at Wincheſter, and to place in Monks, and that none of the Secular Clerks there should be chosen Bishop, but either taken out of the same Covent of that Church, or of some other Abbey. Monks of Lay-men made Clergy-men. Pope John 13. wrote to King Edgar, that none should be made Bishops but Monks.

So was also King Henry the Second commanded to do in the house of Waltham, where the Secular Canons were removed out, and Regular Canons intruded. The same did Oswald Bishop with the Church of Worcester, Secular Priests put out, and Monks intruded into Churches.

ceſter, likewiſe in their Sees did Dunſtane Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Osketellus Archbiſhop of York, Ethelwold Biſhop of Worceſter (who in ſtories is reported to be Multorum fundator Monaſteriorum,) Leſwinus alſo Bp. of Dorceſter, with other Biſhops more about the time and Reign of King Edgar. Odo Archbiſhop of Canterbury before Dunſtane, Anno 934. after his election refuſed to take that dignity upon him, before he had received the Habit of a Monk in the Abbey of Florence in France, becauſe as the ſtory telleth, (if it be true) Nullus ad id tempus, niſi Monachali ſchemate indutus, Archiepiſcopus fuiſſet, &c. That is, Becauſe all the Archbiſhops of Canterbury before him had been Monks, &c. In like manner Baldwinus alſo, Anno 1114. after he was elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury, took upon him the Habit and Profeſſion of Mereton Abbey. And ſo did Reginaldus his next Succeſſor after him, &c.

Ex Guliel. Malmesb. in vita Odonis. Ex Neubergenſ. li. 4. cap. 33. b.

Monks firſt Lay men. then made Regulars and Votaries: at length made Church-men by Pope Bonifac.

As concerning therefore the Origine of Monks, ye have heard how firſt they began of Lay men only: leading a ſtraiter life from the ſociety of other perſons, who then following the Rule of Saint Benet, where called Regulars, and Votaries, and yet all this while had nothing to do with any Eccleſiaſtical miniſtery, till the time of Pope Bonifacius the fourth, Anno 606. who then made a Decree, that Monks might uſe the office of Praching, of Chriſtening, of hearing Confeſſions and abſoyling them of their ſins, differing from Prieſts onely in this, that they were called Regulares, and Prieſts were called, Seculares, the Monks were Votaries, the Prieſts had free liberty to have Wives, till the time of Lanfranke and Anſelme, as is afore ſaid. Albeit Athanaſius, in his Epiſtle ad Draconitium, witneſſeth alſo, that he knew Monks in the old time, and Biſhops, which were married and had Children. Furthermore, as ignorance and ſuperſtition with time increaſed, ſo the number and ſwarm of Monks ſtill more and more multiplied in ſuch ſort as not only they thruſt out Secular Prieſts from their Houſes, but alſo out of them were made Popes, Cardinals, Archbiſhops and Biſhops, to govern Churches. Of which number began Auguſtine the firſt Archbiſhop of the See of Canterbury, and the moſt paſt of all other Archbiſhops after him, until the time of the conqueſt, and after.

Difference between Monks and Prieſts.

The coming in of the Friers.

All this while the Friers were not yet come, neither the Diſcipline of St. Dominick, nor the Teſtament of St. Francis, nor the Order of the Auſtin Brothers, nor of the Carmelites was yet heard of: which laſt of all came in with their pageants, and plaid their art likewiſe, an. 1220. being much more full of Hypocriſie, Blindneſs, Idolatry, and Superſtition, than were the Monks: So that what with Monks on the one ſide, and with the Friers on the other ſide, while all things were ruled by the Rules of St. Benet, by the Canons of the Pope, by the Doctrine of S. Dominick, and by the Teſtament of S. Francis, Chriſts Teſtament was trodden under Foot, the Rule of Gods Word neglected, true Chriſtian Religion defaced, Faith forgotten, the right way of Salvation aboliſhed, ſound Doctrin oppreſſed Chriſts Servants perſecuted, and the Peoples Souls uncomforted; yea, and the true Church of Chriſt almoſt clean extirpated, had not Almighty God (who cannot forget his promiſe) provided remedy in time, in raiſing up this Cromwel his Servant, and other like Champions, to cut up from the Root the Houſes of them, which otherwiſe would utterly have rooted up the Houſe of the Lord, and had ſubverted a great part already.

The life of Monks and Friers conſidered.

Wherefore, whoſoever findeth himſelf aggrieved with Cromwels doings in ſuppreſſing theſe Monaſteries of Monks and Friers, let him wiſely conſider with himſelf, Firſt the Doctrine, Laws and Traditions of theſe Men, which he ſhall find rebelling to the Religion of Chriſt, pernitious to our Salvation, Derogatory to Chriſt Glory, full of much Blaſphemy and damnable Idolatry. Secondly let him likewiſe well adviſe the horrible and execrable lives of the Cloiſterers, or at the leaſt ſearch out the Rolls and Regiſters of matters found out by inquiſition in King Henry the eighth his days, againſt them; which here is not to be ſpoken of, unleſs we will ſpeak as Matthew Paris ſpeaketh of the Court of Rome, Cujus fœtor uſque ad nubes fumum teterrimum exhalabat, That is, Whoſe filthy ſtinch, ſaith he, did breath up a moſt peſtiferous fume, even unto the Clouds of Heaven, &c.

All which things well conſidered, what marvel is it then, if God of his juſt judgment did ſet up the foreſaid Lord Cromwel to deſtroy theſe ſinful Houſes, whom their own Corruptions could ſuffer no longer to ſtand? And as touching the diſſipation of their Lands and Poſſeſſions to the Hands of ſuch as they were beſtowed upon, if it ſo pleaſed the King, in beſtowing thoſe Abbey-Lands upon his Nobles and Gentlemen, either to reſtore them again unto them from whence they came, or elſe to gratifie his Nobility by that means of policy, not to miſlike his doings, what is that to Cromwel? But they might, ſay you, have been much better imployed to other more fruitful uſes. Briefly to anſwer thereunto, what may be done preſently in a Common-wealth, is not enough to ſay, but what may alſo follow muſt be conſidered. If this throwing down of Abbeys had happened in ſuch free and reformed Cities and Countries, as are amongſt the Germans, where the State governed and directed by Laws, rather than by Rulers, remaineth always alike and unmutable, who doubteth, but ſuch Houſes there ſtanding ſtill, the Poſſeſſions might well be tranſported to ſuch uſes aboveſaid, without any fear or peril? But in ſuch Realms and Kingdoms as this, where Laws, and Parliaments be not always one, but are ſubject to the diſpoſition of the Prince, neither is it certain always what Princes may come; the ſureſt way therefore to ſend Monkery and Popery packing out of the Realm, is to do with their Houſes and Poſſeſſions as King Henry here did, through the motion of the Counſel of Cromwel. For elſe who ſeeth not in Queen Maries time, if either the Houſes of Monks had ſtood, or their Lands had been otherwiſe diſpoſed than into the Hands of ſuch as they were, how many of them had been reſtored and repleniſhed again with Monks and Friers, in as ample wiſe as ever they were? And if Dukes, Barons, and the Nobilitie ſcarſe were able to retain the Lands and Poſſeſſions of Abbies diſtributed to them by King Henry, from the devotion of Queen Mary ſeeking to build again the Walls of Jericho, what then ſhould the meaner ſort have done, let other men conjecture. Wherefore it is not unlike, but that Gods heavenly Providence did well foreſee and diſpoſe theſe things before by this man, in working the deſtruction of theſe Abbies; Whereupon as often as he ſent out any man to ſuppreſs any Monaſtery, he uſed moſt commonly to them ſend with this charge, that they ſhould throw down thoſe Houſes to the foundation.

The L. Cromwel defended in ſuppreſſing Abbies.

Diſſipation of Abbey lands in England expedient

Which words although it may ſeem percaſe to ſome to be cruelly ſpoken of him; yet contrariwiſe do I ſuppoſe the doing thereof not to be without Gods ſpecial Providence and ſecret guiding. Or elſe we might peradventure have had ſuch ſwarms of Friers and Monks poſſeſſed in their neſts again before this day in England, in ſo great a number, that ten Cromwels afterward uneth ſhould have been ſuffered to have unhouſed them.

The utter ruine of Monaſteries was Gods work.

Whefore if the Plantation, which the Lord God never planted, be plucked up by the Roots, let God alone with his working, and let the Monaſteries go. Matt. 15.

Now that you have ſeen, what this Malleus Monachorum had done in defacing the Synagogue of the Pope, let us ſee how the ſame Cromwel again did travel in ſetting up Chriſts Church and Congregation.

Malleus monachorum Cromwel.

After that the Biſhop of Romes Power and Authority was baniſhed out of England, the Biſhops of his Sect never ceaſed to ſeek all occaſion how either to reſtore his Head again, being broken and wounded, or at the leaſt to keep upright thoſe things which remained, wherein although their labours were not altogether fruſtrate, yet had they brought muchmore to paſs, if Cromwel (as a mighty wall and defence of the Church) had not reſiſted continually their Enterpriſes.

Cromwel the fort and defence of the Church:

It happened, that after the aboliſhing of the Pope certain tumults began to riſe about Religion. Whereupon it ſeemed good unto King Henry to appoint an Aſſembly of learned Men and Biſhops, which ſhould ſoberly and modeſtly intreat and determine thoſe things which pertained to Religion. Briefly, at the Kings pleaſure all the learned Men, but eſpecially the Biſhops aſſembled, to whom this matter ſeemed chiefly to belong. Cromwel thought alſo to be preſent himſelf with the Biſhops, who by chance meeting with Alexander Aleſius by the way, a Scotiſh man, brought him with him to the Convocation Houſe, where all the Biſhops were aſſembled together. Which was in the year 1537. The Biſhops and Prelates attending upon the coming of Cromwel, as he was come in, roſe up and did obeiſance unto him as to their Vicar General, and he again ſaluted every one in their degree and ſate down in the higheſt place at the Table, according to his degree and Office, and after him every Biſhop in his order, and Doctors. Firſt over againſt him ſate the Archbiſhop of Cantrebury, then the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops of London, Lincoln, Saliſbury, Bath, Ely, Hereford, Chicheſter, Norwich, Rocheſter, and Worceſter, &c. There Cromwel in the name of the King (whoſe moſt dear and ſecret Counſellor at that preſent he was, and Lord privy Seal, and Vicar General of the Realm) ſpake theſe words in manner following.

An aſſembly of learned men appointed by the King.

Cromwel with Alexander Aleſius reſort to the Aſſembly.

Cromwels Oration to the Biſhops.

RIght reverend Fathers in Chriſt: The Kings Majeſty giveth you high thanks that ye have ſo diligently, without any excuſe, aſſembled hither according to his commandment. And ye be not ignorant that ye be called hither to determine certain controverſies, which at this time be moved concerning the Chriſtian Religion and Faith, not only in this Realm, but alſo in all Nations throughout the world. For the King ſtudieth day and night to ſet a quietneſs in the Church, and he cannot reſt until all ſuch controverſies be fully debated and ended, through the determination of you and of his whole Parliament. For although his ſpecial deſire is to ſet a ſtay for the unlearned People, whoſe conſciences are in doubt what they may believe; and he himſelf by his excellent learning knoweth theſe controverſies well enough, yet he will ſuffer no common alteration but by the conſent of you and his whole Parliament. By the which thing ye may perceive both his high Wiſdom, and alſo his great love toward you. And he deſireth you for Chriſts ſake, that all malice, obſtinacy, and carnal reſpect ſet apart, ye will friendly and lovingly diſpute among your ſelves of the controverſies moved in the Church, and that you will conclude all things by the Word of God, without all brawling or ſcolding; neither will his Majeſty ſuffer the Scripture to be wreſted and defaced by any Gloſſes, any Papiſtical Laws, or by any Authority of Doctors or Councils, and much leſs will he admit any Articles or Doctrine not contained in the Scripture, but approved only by Continuance of time and old cuſtome, and by unwritten verities, as ye were wont to do. Ye know well enough that ye be bound to ſhew this ſervice to Chriſt and to his Church, and yet notwithſtanding his Majeſty will give you high thanks, if ye will ſet and conclude a godly and a perfect unity: whereunto this is the only way and mean, if ye will determin all things by the Scripture, as God commandeth you in Deuteronomy, which thing his Majeſty exhorteth and deſireth you to do.

The Kings requeſt to the Biſhops.

When Cromwel had ended this his Oration, the Biſhops roſe up altogether, giving thanks unto the Kings Majeſty, not only for his great Zeal toward the Church of Chriſt, but alſo for his moſt godly exhortation, worthy ſo Chriſtian a Prince.

Immediately they roſe up to diſputation, where Stokeſly Biſhop of London, the firſt of all, being the moſt earneſt Champion and maintainer of the Romiſh Decrees, (whom Cromwel a little before had checked by name, for defending unwritten Verities) indeavoured himſelf with all his labour and induſtry, out of the old School Gloſſes, to maintain the ſeven Sacraments of the Church; the Archbiſhop of York, Lincoln, Bathe, Chicheſter, and Norwich alſo favoured his part and Sect. On the contrary part was the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of Salisbury, Ely, Hereford, Worceſter, with many other.

Stokeſley defendeth the ſeven Sacraments.

After much communication had on either part, and that they had long contended about the Teſtimony of the Doctors, which as it ſeemed unto them diſſented and diſagreed among themſelves, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury at the laſt ſpake and ſaid thus unto them.

IT beſeemeth not men of learning and gravity to make much babling and brawling about bare words, ſo that we agree in the very Subſtance and effect of the matter. For to brawl about words is the property of Sophiſters and ſuch as mean deceit and ſubtilty, which delight in the debate and diſſenſion of the world, and in the miſerable State of the Church; and not of them which ſhould ſeek the glory of Chriſt; and ſhould ſtudy for the unity and quietneſs of the Church; there be weighty controverſies now moved and put forth, not of Ceremonies and light things, but of the true underſtanding, and of the right difference of the Law and of the Goſpel; of the manner and way how ſins be forgiven; of comforting doubtful and wavering conſciences, by what means they may be certified that they pleaſe God; ſeeing thy feel the ſtrength of the Law accuſing them of ſin; of the true uſe of the Sacraments, whether the outward work of them doth juſtifie man, or whether we receive our juſtification by Faith. Item, which be the good works, and the true Service and Honour which pleaſeth God; and whether the choice of meats, the difference of Garments, the vows of Monks and Prieſts and other Traditions which have no Word of God to confirm them; whether theſe (I ſay) be right good works, and ſuch as make a perfect Chriſtian man or no? Item, whether vain ſervice and falſe honouring of God, and mans Traditions, do bind mens conſciences or no? Finally, whether the ceremony of Confirmation, of Orders, and of annealing, and ſuch other (which cannot be proved to be inſtitute of Chriſt, nor have any word in them to certifie us of remiſſion of ſins) ought to be called Sacraments, and to be compared with Baptiſm and the Supper of the Lord, or no?

The Archb. of Canterbu. Oration to the Biſhops.

Sophiſtication of words to be avoided in matters of weight.

Queſtions and controverſies of Religion neceſſary to be diſcuſſed.

Falſe worſhipping.

Ceremonies.

Theſe be no light matters, but even the principal points of our Chriſtian Religion. Wherefore we contend not about words and Titles, but about high and earneſt matters. Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed be the Peacemakers, for they ſhall be called the Sons of God. And Paul, writing unto Timothy, commanded Biſhops to avoyd brawling and contention about words, which be profitable to nothing but unto the ſubverſion and deſtruction of the hearers: and moniſheth him ſpecially, that he ſhould reſiſt with the Scriptures, when any man diſputeth with him of the Faith; and he addeth a cauſe whereas he ſaith, Doing this thou ſhalt preſerve both thy ſelf, and alſo them which hear thee. Now if ye will follow theſe Councellors Chriſt and Paul, all contention and brawling about words muſt be ſet apart, and ye muſt ſtabliſh a godly and a perfect unity and concord out of the Scripture. Wherefore in this diſputation we muſt firſt agree of the number of the Sacraments, and what a Sacrament doth ſignifie in the holy Scripture, and when we call Baptiſm and the Supper of the Lord, Sacraments of the Goſpel, what we mean thereby. I know right well that Saint Ambroſe and other Authors call the waſhing of the Diſciples feet and other things, Sacraments; which I am ſure you your ſelves would not ſuffer to be numbred among the other Sacraments.

Matth. 5.

2 Tim. 2.

All be not Sacraments of the New Teſtament which may have the name of Sacraments.

When he had ended his Oration, Cromwel commanded Aleſius which ſtood by (whom he perceived to give attentive ear to that which was ſpoken) to ſhew his mind and Opinion; declaring to the Biſhops before, that he was the Kings Scholar, and therefore deſired them to be contented to hear him indifferently.

Aleſius, after he had firſt done his duty unto the Lord Cromwel and to the other Prelates of the Church, ſaid in this wiſe.

Alex. Aleſius reaſoneth with the Biſhops.

Right honorable and Noble Lord, and you moſt reverend Fathers and Prelates of the Church, although I come unprepared unto this diſputation, yet truſting in the aid of Chriſt, which promiſeth to give both mouth and wiſdom unto us when we be required of our Faith, I will utter my Sentence and judgment of this Diſputation. And I think that my Lord Archbiſhop hath given you a profitable exhortation, that ye ſhould firſt agree of the ſignification of a Sacrament, whether ye will call a Sacrament a Ceremony inſtitute of Chriſt in the Goſpel, to ſignifie a ſpecial or a ſingular vertue of the Goſpel, and of godlineſs (as Paul nameth remiſſion of ſins to be) or whether ye mean every Ceremony generally, which may be a token or a ſignification of an holy thing to be a Sacrament? For after this later ſignification I will not not ſtick to grant you that there be ſeven Sacraments and more too, if ye will. But yet Paul ſeemeth to deſcribe a Sacrament after the juſt ſignification, whereas he ſaith, That Circumciſion is a token and ſeal of the righteouſneſs of Faith. This definition of one particular Sacrament muſt be underſtood to appertain unto all Sacraments generally, for the Jews had but one Sacrament only, as all the Sophiſtical Writers do grant. And he deſcribeth Baptiſm after the ſame manner, in the fifth to the Epheſians, whereas he ſaith, That Chriſt doth ſanctifie the Church, that is to ſay, all that be baptized through the Bath of Water in the Word of Life. For here alſo he addeth the Word and Promiſe of God unto the Ceremony. And Chriſt alſo requireth Faith where he ſaith, Whoſoever believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved.

The name a Sacrament, how far it extendeth.

Rom. 4.

What is a Sacrament properly. Epheſ. 5.

Gods Word and promiſe going with an outward ceremony maketh a Sacrament.

A definition of a Sacrament.

No man hath power to make any Sacrament.

And S. Auguſtine deſcribeth a Sacrament thus; The Word of God coming unto the Element maketh the Sacrament. And in another place he ſaith, A Sacrament is a thing wherein the power of God, under the form of viſible things, doth work ſecretly ſalvation. And the Maſter of the Sentences doth deſcribe a Sacrament no otherwiſe: A Sacrament (ſaith he) is an inviſible grace, and hath a viſible form: and by this inviſible grace I mean (ſaith he) remiſſion of ſins. Finally, St. Thomas denieth that any man hath authority to inſtitute a Sacrament. Now if ye agree unto this definition of a Sacrament, it is an eaſie thing to judge of the number of thoſe Sacraments which have the manifeſt Word of God, and be inſtitute by Chriſt, to ſignifie unto us the remiſſion of our ſins.

Aug. ad Januarium Ep. 118.

Chriſts Church charged but with few & eaſy Sacraments.

St. Auguſtine ſaith that there be but two ſuch Sacraments, in the hundred and eighteenth Epiſtle to Januarius. His words be theſe, Firſt, I would have thee to underſtand the ſum and effect of this Diſputation, which is this: That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (as he himſelf ſaith in the Goſpel) hath laden us but with a light and eaſie Yoke or Burthen. Wherefore he hath knit together the fellowſhip of his new people with Sacraments, very few in number, very eaſie to be kept, and very excellent in ſignification, which be Baptiſm, and the Supper of the Lord, and ſuch other, if there be any more commanded in the holy Scripture, thoſe except which were Burthens for the ſervitude of the people in the old Law, for the hardneſs of their hearts, &c. And again in the third Book of the learning of the Chriſtian Man, he ſaith, The Scripture hath taught us but few ſigns, as be the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the ſolemn celebration and remembrance of the Body and Blood of the Lord, &c.

Stokeſly replieth againſt Aleſius.

Then the Biſhop of London, which could ſcarcely refrain himſelf all this while, and now could forbear no longer, brake out in this manner: Firſt of all, ſaith he, where you alledge that all the Sacraments which are in the Church inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, have either ſome manifeſt ground in the Scriptures, or ought to ſhew forth ſome ſignification of remiſſion of ſins, it is falſe, and not to be allowed.

Then ſaid Aleſius, that he would prove it, not onely by manifeſt Authorities of Scripture, but alſo by evident Teſtimonies of ancient Doctors and School-writers.

Foxe Biſhop of Hereford ſpeaketh.

Doctors not to be ſtickt to in matters of Faith for that they vary in themſelves.

But the Biſhop of Hereford (which was then lately returned out of Germany, where he had been Embaſſadour for the King to the Proteſtants) being moved with the Biſhop of Londons frowardneſs, turning himſelf firſt to Alexander Aleſius, willed him not to contend with the Biſhop in ſuch manner, by the Teſtimonies of Doctors and Schoolmen, forſomuch as they do not all agree in like matters, neither are they ſtedfaſt among themſelves in all points, but do vary, and in many points are utterly repugnant. Wherefore if this Diſputation ſhall be decided by their minds and verdicts, there ſhall be nothing eſtabliſhed, neither ſhall appear any way of agreement to follow. Furthermore, we be commanded by the King, that theſe Controverſies ſhould be determined onely by the rule and judgment of the Scripture. This he ſpake unto Aleſius. Then he turning himſelf unto the Biſhops, likewiſe admoniſhed them with a grave and ſharp Oration; which we thought not good to omit in this place.

The Oration of Foxe Bp. of Hereford, unto the Biſhops.

THink ye not (ſaid he) that we can by any ſophiſtical ſubtilties ſteal out of the the world again the light which every Man doth ſee. Chriſt hath ſo lightned the world at this time, that the light of the Goſpel hath put to flight all myſty darkneſs, and it will ſhortly have the higher Hand of all clouds, though we reſiſt in vain never ſo much. The Lay people do now know the Holy Scripture better than many of us. And the Germans have made the Text of the Bible ſo plain and eaſie by the Hebrew and Greek Tongues, that now many things may be better underſtood without any Gloſſes, at all, than by all the Commentaries of the Doctors. And moreover, they have ſo opened theſe Controverſies by their writings, that Women and Children may wonder at the blindneſs and Falſehood that hath been hitherto. Wherefore ye muſt conſider earneſtly what ye will determin of theſe Controverſies, that ye make not your ſelves to be mocked and laughed to ſcorn of all the world, and that ye bring them not to have this opinion of you, to think evermore hereafter, that ye have neither one ſpark of learning, nor yet of godlineſs in you. And thus ſhall ye loſe all your Eſtimation and Authority with them, which before took you for learned Men and profitable members unto the Common-wealth of Chriſtendom. For that which you do hope upon, that there was never Hereſie in the Church ſo great, but that proceſs of time, with the power and Authority of the Pope, hath quenched it, is nothing to the purpoſe. But ye muſt turn your opinion, and think this ſurely, that there is nothing ſo feeble and weak, ſo that it be true, but it ſhall find place, and be able to ſtand againſt all Falſehood.

Truth will come out at laſt.

Truth daughter of time.

Truth is the Daughter of time, and time is the Mother of Truth. And whoſoever is Beſieged of Truth cannot long continue, and upon whoſe ſide Truth doth ſtand, that ought not to be thought Tranſitory, or that it will ever fall. All things conſiſt not in painted eloquence and ſtrength or Authority. For the Truth is of ſo great power, ſtrength, and efficacy, that it can neither be defended with words, nor be overcom with any ſtrength, but after ſhe hath hidden herſelf long, at length ſhe putteth up her head and appeareth, as it is written in Eſdras. A King is ſtrong, Wine is ſtrong, yet Women be more ſtrong; but Truth excelleth all.

The nature of truth.

3 Eſdras 4.

To this effect, in a manner, and much more, did he ſpeak and utter in that Convocation, both copiouſly and diſcreetly. Through whoſe Oration Aleſius being encouraged, proceeded further, to urge the Biſhop with this Argument.

The Argument in form.

Ba- Sacraments be ſeals aſcertaining us of Gods good will.

ro- Without the Word there is no certainty of Gods good will.

co. Ergo, Without the Word there be no Sacraments.

Sacraments be ſeals certifying us of Gods good will.

The firſt part of this reaſon is Saint Pauls own ſaying, the fourth to the Romans, where here ſaith; That Circumciſion is a token and a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of Faith. Ergo, it requireth Faith to certifie mans heart of the will of God. But the Word of God is the Foundation of Faith, as Saint Paul witneſſeth. Rom. 10. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing cometh the Word of God. For the mind muſt be taught and inſtructed to the will of God by the Word, like as the eye is taught and inſtructed by the outward ceremony. And ſo Paul by that ſaying confuteth this opinion, that the Sacraments ſhould make Men righteous and juſt before God, for the very outward work, without Faith of them that receive them.

Rom. 4.

The Word is the ground of faith.

Rom. 10.

Ex opere operato.

And after this manner doth Paul ſpeak unto the Epheſians, that Chriſt doth ſanctifie his Church though the Bathe of Water in the Word of life. And for as much as he joyneth the Word unto the ceremony, and declareth the vertue and power of the Word of God, that it bringeth with it ſelf, he doth manifeſtly teach that Word of Epheſ. 5.

Sacraments only to be gathered out of the Word of God.

God is a principal thing, and even as it were the very ſubſtance and body of the Sacrament; and the outward ceremony to be in very deed nothing elſe but a token of that lively inflammation which we receive through faith in the Word and Promiſe. St. Paul alſo in miniſtring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, doth manifeſtly add the words of Chriſt. He took Bread, ſaith he, and when he had given thanks, he brake it and ſaid, Take ye this, and eat ye this, for it is my Body. Item, Do ye this in my remembrance. Beſide this he teacheth evidently that only Chriſt, and none but he had power to inſtitute a Sacrament; and that neither the Apoſtles nor the Church hath any Authority to alter or to add any thing unto his Ordinance, whereas he ſaith, For I have received of the Lord that which I delivered unto you, &c. To what purpoſe ſhould he go about to move the People to believe him, and to win their hearts with this Proteſtation, if it had been lawful for him to have made any Sacraments, or to have altered the form and manner of miniſtring the Sacrament, as ſome men both wickedly and ſhamefully do affirm, that the Apoſtles did alter the form of Baptiſm.

The Inſtitution of Chriſt ought not to be altered. 1 Cor. 11.

The anſwer of the Biſhop of London againſt Aleſius.

When he had ſpoken thus much, the Biſhop of London did interrupt him and ſaid; Let us grant that the Sacraments may be gathered out of the Word of God, yet are you far deceived, if ye think that there is none other Word of God, but that which every Sowter and Cobler do read in their Mother Tongue. And if ye think that nothing pertaineth unto the Chriſtian Faith, but that only that is written in the Bible, then erre ye plainly with the Lutherans. For John ſaith, that Jeſus did many things which be not written. And Paul commandeth the Theſſalonians to obſerve and keep certain unwritten Traditions and Ceremonies, 2 Theſſ. 2. Moreover he himſelf did preach not the Scripture only, but even alſo the Traditions of the Elders, Acts 16. Finally, we have received many things of the Doctors and Councils by times, which although they be not written in the Bible, yet forſomuch as the old Doctors of the Church do make mention of them, we ought to grant that we received them of the Apoſtles, and that they be of like authority with the Scripture, and finally that they may worthily be called the Word of God unwritten.

Stokeſley laughed to ſcorn.

Now when the right Noble Lord Cromwel, the Archbiſhop, with the other Biſhops, which did defend the pure Doctrine of the Goſpel, heard this, they ſmiled a little one upon another, forſomuch as they ſaw him flee even in the very beginning of the Diſputation, unto his old ruſty Sophiſtry and unwritten Verities. Then Aleſius would have proceeded further with the Biſhop to have confuted this blaſphemous Lie; but the Lord Cromwel bad him be content, for the time began to go away and it was twelve of the Clock; and thus he made an end with his Proteſtation. Right Reverend Mr. Biſhop, you deny that our Chriſtian Faith and Religion doth lean only upon the Word of God, which is written in the Bible: which thing if I can prove and declare, then you will grant me that there be no Sacraments but thoſe that have the manifeſt Word of God to confirm them. Unto this he did conſent, and then immediately that Aſſembly was diſſolved for that day.

The next day when the Biſhops were ſet again, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſending his Archdeacon, commanded Aleſius to abſtain from diſputation. Whereupon he wrote his mind, and delivered it to Cromwel, who afterward ſhewed the ſame unto the Biſhops. Thus through the induſtry of Cromwel, the Colloquies were brought to this end, that albeit Religion could not wholly be reformed, yet at that time there was ſome Reformation had throughout all England.

The publick care of Cromwel for the Commonwealth.

How deſirous and ſtudious this Cromwel was in the cauſe of Chriſts Religion, examples need not to be brought. His whole life was nothing elſe but a continual care and travel how to advance and further the right knowledge of the Goſpel, and reform the Houſe of God: as by ſo many Proclamations above-ſpecified, by his means ſet forth, may well appear, wherein firſt he cauſed the People to be inſtructed in the Lords Prayer and Creed in Engliſh. Then procured the Scripture alſo to be read and ſet forth in the ſame Language for every Engliſhman to underſtand: after that to reſcue the Vulgar People from damnable Idolatry, cauſed certain of the moſt groſſeſt Pilgrimages to be deſtroyed. And further, for the more commodity of the poor ſort which get their living with their daily labour and work of their hands, he provided that divers idle Holy-days were diminiſhed. Item, He procured for them liberty to eat Eggs and White-meat in Lent. Furthermore it was by him alſo provided, for the better inſtruction of the People, that Beneficed men ſhould be reſident in their Cures and Pariſhes, there to teach and to keep Hoſpitality, with many other things elſe moſt fruitfully redreſſed for the Reformation of Religion and behoof of Chriſts Church: as by the Proclamations, Injunctions, and neceſſary Articles of Chriſtian Doctrine above-ſpecified, ſet forth in the Kings Name, by his means, may more abundantly appear.

Now to adjoyn withal his private benefits in helping divers good Men and Women at ſundry times out of troubles and great diſtreſſes. It would require a long diſcourſe. Upon this, Thomas Frebarn her Husband ſpake to a Butter-Wife which he knew, that dwelled at Harnſey, named good-Wife Fiſher, to help him to a Pig for his Wife, for ſhe was with Child, and longed ſore to eat of a Pig: unto whom the ſaid good-Wife Fiſher promiſed that ſhe would bring him one the Friday following, and ſo ſhe did, being ready dreſſed and ſcalded before. But when ſhe had delivered him the Pig, ſhe craftily conveyed one of the Pigs feet, and carried it unto Dr. Cockes, at that time being Dean of Canterbury, dwelling in Ivy-Lane, who at that time of his Dinner, before certain Gueſts which he had bidden, ſhewed the Pigs foot, declaring who had the body thereof. And after that they had talked their pleaſure, and Dinner was done, one of his Gueſts being Landlord unto Frebarne aforeſaid, called Mr. Garter, and by his Office, King of Arms, ſent his Man unto the ſaid Frebarne, demanding if there were no body ſick in his houſe. Then the Biſhop being in his Chamber with divers other of the Clergy, called this Frebarn before him, and had him in examination for this Pig, laying alſo unto his charge, that he had eaten in his Houſe that Lent powdred Beef and Calves-heads. My Lord, if the Heads were eaten in my Houſe, in whoſe Houſes were the Bodies eaten; Alſo, if there be either Man or Woman that can prove, that either I, or any in my Houſe hath done as your Lordſhip ſaith, let me ſuffer death therefore. You ſpake (ſaid he) againſt Pilgrimages, and will not take holy Bread nor holy Water, nor yet go on Proceſſion on Palm-Sunday; Thou art no Chriſtian man. My Lord, ſaid Frebarn, I truſt I am a true Chriſtian man, and have done nothing either againſt Gods Law or my Princes.

Holland the B. of London's Sumner.

Tho. Frebarn examined before the Biſhop.

Phariſaical Judgment.

In the time of this his Examination, which was during the ſpace of two hours, divers came unto the Biſhop; ſome to have their Children confirmed, and ſome for other cauſes. Unto whom as they came, having the Pig before him covered, he would lift up the Cloth and ſhew it them, ſaying, How think you of ſuch a Fellow as this is? Is not this good meat, I pray you, to be eaten in this bleſſed time of Lent, yea, and alſo powdred Beef and Calves-Heads too beſides this.

Tho. Frebarn brought to the Counter.

After this, the Biſhop called his Sumner unto him, and commanded him to go and carry this Thomas Frebarn and his Pig openly thorow the Streets into the Old-Baily, unto Sir Roger Chomley; for the Biſhop ſaid, he had nothing to do to puniſh him, for that belonged unto the Civil Magiſtrates; and ſo was Frebarn carried with the Pig before him to Sir Roger Chomleys Houſe in the Old-Baily, and he being not at home at that time, Frebarn was brought likewiſe back again unto the Biſhops place with the Pig, and there lay in the Porters-Lodge till it was Nine of the Clock at Night. Then the Biſhop ſent him unto the Counter in the Poultrey by the Sumner and other of his Servants.

Tho. Frebarn brought before the L. Mayor.

The next day being Saturday, he was brought before the Mayor of London and his Brethren unto the Guild-Hall; but before his coming they had the Pig delivered unto them by the Biſhops Officer. Then the Mayor and the Bench laid unto his charge (as they were informed from the Biſhop) that he had eaten powdred Beef and Calves-heads in his Houſe the ſame Lent, but no man was able to come in that would juſtifie it, neither could any thing be found, ſave only the Pig, which (as is before ſaid) was for the preſervation of his Wifes life, and that ſhe went withal. Notwithſtanding the Mayor of London ſaid, that the Monday next following he ſhould ſtand on the Pillory in Cheapſide, with the one half of the Pig on the one ſhoulder, and the other half on the other.

Then ſpake the Wife of the ſaid Frebarn unto the Mayor and the Bench, deſiring that ſhe might ſtand there, and not he, for it was long of her and not of him. After this they took a Satten-Liſt, and tied it faſt about the Pigs neck, and made Frebarn to carry it hanging on his ſhoulder until he came unto the Counter of the Poultrey, from whence he came.

After this was done, the Wife of this Priſoner took with her an honeſt Woman, the Wife of one Michael Lobley, which was well acquainted with divers in the Lord Cromwels Houſe, unto whom the ſaid Woman reſorted for ſome help for this Priſoner, deſiring them to ſpeak unto their Lord and Maſter for his deliverance out of trouble.

Dr. Barnes and Barlow ſue to the L. Cromwel for Tho. Frebarn.

It hapned that the ſame time came in Dr. Barns and Mr. Barlow, who underſtanding the matter by Lobleys Wife, went up to the Lord Cromwel and certified him thereof; who upon their requeſt ſent for the Mayor of the City of London: but what was ſaid to him is unknown, ſaving that in the Afternoon of the ſame day the Wife of the perſon aforeſaid reſorted again unto the Lord Mayor, ſuing to get her Husband delivered out of Priſon, declaring how that ſhe had two ſmall Children, and had nothing to help her nor them, but only her Husband, who laboured for their livings. Unto whom the Mayor anſwered, What come ye to me? You are taken up with the Kings Council. I ſuppoſed you had come to deſire me that your Husband ſhould not ſtand upon the Pillory in Cheapſide on Monday next, with the one half of the Pig on his one ſhoulder, and the other half on the other. Alſo the Mayor ſaid unto her, That he could not deliver him without the conſent of the reſt of his Brethren the Aldermen. Wherefore he bade her the next day following, which was the Sabbath-day, to reſort unto Pauls, to St. Dunſtans Chappel, and when he had ſpoken with his Brethren, he would then tell her more. Other anſwer could ſhe get none at that time. Wherefore ſhe went unto Mr. Wilkinſon, then being Sheriff of London, deſiring him to be good unto her, and that ſhe might have her poor Husband out of Priſon. Unto whom Mr. Wilkinſon anſwered: O Woman, Chriſt hath laid a piece of his Croſs upon thy neck, to prove whether thou wilt help him to bear it or no, ſaying moreover unto her, that if the Lord Mayor had ſent him to his Counter, as he ſent him to his Brothers, he ſhould not have tarried there an hour, and ſo commanded her to come the next day unto him to dinner, and he would do the beſt for her he could. So the next day came, and this Woman reſorted again to Mr. Wilkinſons, according as he bade her, who alſo had bidden divers Gueſts, unto whom he ſpake in her behalf. But as they were ſet at dinner, and ſhe alſo ſitting at the Table, when ſhe ſaw the hot Fiſh come in, ſhe fell down in a ſwound, ſo that for the ſpace of two hours they could keep no life in her. Wherefore they ſent her home to her houſe in Paternoſter-Row, and then they ſent for the Midwife, ſuppoſing that ſhe would have been delivered incontinent of her Child that ſhe went with (but after that ſhe came ſomewhat again to her ſelf) where ſhe lay ſick and kept her Bed the ſpace of fifteen weeks after, being not able to help her ſelf, but as ſhe was helped of others, during the time of fifteen weeks.

The Lord Mayors Anſwer to the poor Woman.

The gentle words of Mr Wilkinſon Sheriff of London to the poor Woman.

Now to ſhew further what became of this Pig whereof we have ſpoken ſo much, it was carried into Finsbury Field by the Biſhop of Londons Sumner, at his Maſters commandment, and there buried. The Monday following, being the fourth day after that this Priſoner aforeſaid was apprehended, the Mayor of London, with the reſidue of his Brethren being at Guild-Hall, ſent for the Priſoner aforenamed, and demanded Sureties of him for his forth-coming, whatſoever hereafter ſhould or might be laid unto his charge; but for lack of ſuch Sureties as they required, upon his own Bond, which was a Recognizance of twenty pound, he was delivered out of their hands. But ſhortly after that he was delivered out of this his trouble, Mr. Garter, of whom we have ſpoken before, being his Landlord, warned him out of his Houſe, ſo that in four years after he could not get another, but was conſtrained to be within other good Folks, to his great hinderance and undoing.

That God ordaineth to be eaten, Superſtition burieth.

Tho. Frebarn delivered out of Priſon.

Tho. Frebarn diſcharged out of his Houſe by Mr. Garter his Landlord.

Hard it were, and almoſt out of number to rehearſe the names and ſtories of all them, which felt the gentle help of this good man in ſome caſe or other. Where might be remembred the notable deliverance of one Gray a Smith of Biſhops-Stafford, who being accuſed for denying the Sacrament of the Altar to be our Saviour, was ſent up for the ſame to London, and there ſhould have been condemned to be burnt, but that by the means of the Lord Cromwel he was ſent home again and delivered. One other Example, though it be ſomewhat long with the circumſtances and all, I will declare, how he helped the Secretary that then was to Dr. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which Secretary is yet alive, and can bear preſent Record of the ſame.

Gray a Smith, accuſed of Hereſie, and delivered by the Lord Cromwel.

How the Lord Cromwel helped Cranmers Secretary.

MEntion was made before how King Henry, in the one and twentieth year of his Reign, cauſed the ſix Articles to paſs, much againſt the mind and contrary to the conſent of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Thomas Cranmer, who had diſputed three days againſt the ſame in the Parliament-Houſe, with great Reaſons and Authorities. Which Articles after they were granted and paſt by

The Archb. Cranmer diſputed three days in the Parliament againſt the 6. Articles.

by the Parliament, the King for the ſingular favour which he ever bare to Cranmer, and reverence to his learning, being deſirous to know what he had ſaid, and objected in the Parliament againſt theſe Articles, or what could be alleadged by learning againſt the ſame, required a Note of the Archbiſhop of his doings, what he had ſaid and oppoſed in the Parliament touching that matter. And this word was ſent to him from the King by Cromwel, and other Lords of the Parliament, whom the King then ſent to dine with him at Lambeth, ſomewhat to comfort again his grieved mind and troubled ſpirits, as hath been above recited.

The name of this Secretary was Mr. Ralph Morice, being yet alive.

Whereupon when his Dinner was finiſhed, the next day after the Archbiſhop collecting both his Arguments, Authorities of Scriptures, and Doctors together, cauſed his Secretary to write a fair Book thereof for the King, after this order. Firſt, the Scriptures were alledged, then the Doctors, thirdly followed the Arguments deduced from thoſe Authorities. This Book was written in his Secretaries Chamber. Where, in a by-Chamber, lay the Archbiſhops Almoſiner. When this Book was fair written, and whilſt the Secretary was gone to deliver the ſame unto the Archbiſhop his Maſter, who was (as it then chanced) rid to Croydon, returning back to his Chamber, he found the door ſhut, and the Key carried away to London by the Almoſiner.

At this ſeaſon alſo chanced the Father of the ſaid Secretary to come to the City, by whoſe occaſion ſo it fell out that he muſt needs go to London. The Book he could not lay into his Chamber, neither durſt he commit it to any other perſon to keep, being ſtraitly charged, in any condition, of the Archbiſhop his Maſter, to be circumſpect thereof; ſo that he determined to go to his Father, and to keep the Book about him. And ſo thruſting the Book under his Girdle, he went over unto Weſtminſter Bridge with a Scullar, where he entred into a Wherry that went to London, wherein were four of the Guard who meant to land at Pauls-Wharf, and to paſs by the Kings Highneſs, who then was in his Barge, with a great number of Barges and Boats about him, then baiting of Bears in the Water over againſt the Bank.

A Bear-baiting upon Thames before the King.

Theſe foreſaid Yeomen of the Guard, when they came againſt the Kings Barge they durſt not paſs by towards Pauls-Wharf, leſt they ſhould be eſpyed, and therefore intreated the Secretary to go with them to the Bear-bayting, and they would find the means being of the Guard to make room, and to ſee all the paſtime; the Secretary, perceiving no other remedy, aſſented thereto. When the Wherry came nigh the multitude of the Boats, they with Pollaxes got the Wherry ſo far, that being compaſſed with many other Wherries, and Boats, there was no refuge if the Bear ſhould break looſe and come upon them, as in very deed, within one Pater noſter while, the Bear brake looſe and came into the Boat where the Yeomen of the Guard were, and the ſaid Secretary.

Tall Yeomen but ill keepers.

The Guard forſook the Wherry, and went into another Barge, one or two of them leaping ſhort, and ſo fell into the Water. The Bear and the Dogs ſo ſhaked the Wherry, wherein the Secretarie was, that the Boat being full of Water ſunk to the ground, and being alſo as it chanced an ebbing Tyde, he there ſate in the end of the Wherry up to the middle in Water. To whom came the Bear and all the Dogs. The Bear, ſeeking as it were aid and ſuccour of him, came back with his hinder parts upon him, and ſo ruſhing upon him, the Book was looſed from his Girdle, and fell into the Thames out of his reach.

The Book of D. Cranmer againſt the ſix Articles loſt in the Thames.

The flying of the People, after that the Bear was looſe, from one Boat to another, was ſo combrous, that divers Perſons were thrown into the Thames, the King commanding certain men that could ſwim to ſtrip themſelves naked, and to help to ſave them that were in danger. This paſtime ſo diſpleaſed the King, that he bad away with the Bear, and let us go all hence.

This Bearward was Princeſs Elizabeths Servant.

The Secretary perceiving his Book to fleet away in the Thames, called to the Bearward to take up the Book. When the Bearward had the Book in his cuſtody, being an arrant Papiſt, far from the Religion of his Miſtreſs (for he was the Lady Elizabeths Bearward, now the Queens Majeſty) ere the the Secretary could come to land, he had delivered the Book to a Prieſt of his own affinity in Religion ſtanding on the bank, who reading in the Book, and perceiving that it was a manifeſt Refutation of the ſix Articles, made much ado, and told the Bearward that whoſoever claimed the Book ſhould ſurely be hanged. Anon the Secretary came to the Bearward for his Book. What quoth the Bearward, dare you challenge this Book? Whoſe Servant are you? I am Servant to one of the Council, ſaid the Secretary, and my Lord of Canterbury is my Maſter. Yea marry, quoth the Bearward, I thought ſo much: you be like, I truſt, quoth the Bearward, to be both hanged for this Book. Well, ſaid he, it is not ſo evil as you take it, and I warrant you my Lord will avouch the Book to the Kings Majeſty. But I pray you let me have my Book, and I will give you a Crown to drink. If you will give me five hundred Crowns you ſhall not have it, quoth the Bearward. With that the Secretary departed from him, and underſtanding the malicious frowardneſs of the Bearward, he learned that Blage the Grocer in Cheapſide might do much with the Bearward, to whom the Secretary brake this matter, requiring him to ſend for the Bearward to Supper, and he would pay for the whole charge thereof, and beſides that, rather than he would forego his Book after this ſort, the Bearward ſhould have twenty ſhillings to drink. The Supper was prepared; The Bearward was ſent for and came. After Supper the matter was intreated of, and twenty ſhillings offered for the Book. But do what could be done, neither Friendſhip, acquaintance, nor yet reward of mony could obtain the Book out of his hands, but that the ſame ſhould be delivered unto ſome of the Councel that would not ſlightly look on ſo weighty a matter, as to have it redeemed for a Supper, or a piece of mony. The honeſt man Maſter Blage with many good reaſons would have perſwaded him not to be ſtiff in his own conceit, declaring that in the end he ſhould nothing at all prevail of his purpoſe, but be laught to ſcorn, getting neither penny nor praiſe for his Travel. He hearing that ruſhed ſuddenly out of the doors from his Friend Mr. Blage, without any manner of thanksgiving for his Supper, more like a Bearward, than like an honeſt man. When the Secretary ſaw the matter ſo extreamly to be uſed againſt him, he then thought it expedient to fall from any farther practiſing of intreaty with the Bearward, as with him that ſeemed rather to be a Bear himſelf, than the Maſter of the Beaſt, determining the next morning to make the Lord Cromwel privy of the chance that happened.

D. Cranmers Book againſt the ſix Articles delivered to a Popiſh Prieſt.

So on the next day, as the Lord Cromwel went to the Court, the Secretary declared the whole matter unto him, and how he had offered him twenty ſhillings for the finding thereof. Where is the fellow, quoth the Lord Cromwel? I ſuppoſe, ſaid the Secretary, that he is now in the Court attending to deliver the Book unto ſome of the Councel. Well, ſaid the Lord Cromwel, it maketh no matter; go with me thither and I ſhall get you your Book again. When the Lord Cromwel came into the Hall of the Court, there ſtood the Bearward with the Book in his hand, waiting to have delivered the ſame unto Sir Anthony Brown, or unto the Biſhop of Wincheſter, as it was reported. To whom the Lord Cromwel ſaid, Come hither fellow, what Book haſt thou there in thy hand? and with that ſnatched the Book out of his hand, and looking in the Book, he ſaid, I know this hand well enough. This is your hand, ſaid he to the Secretary. But where hadſt thou this Book, quoth the Lord Cromwel to the Bearward? This Gentleman loſt it two days ago in the Thames, ſaid the Bearward. Doſt thou know whoſe Servant he is, ſaid the Lord Cromwel? He ſaith quoth the Bearward, that he is my Lords of Canterburies Servant. Why then didſt thou not deliver to him the Book, when he required it, ſaid the Lord Cromwel? who made thee ſo bold as to detain and withold any Book or writing from a Counſellors Servant, ſpecially being his Secretary? It is more meet for thee to meddle with thy Bears, than with ſuch writing, and were it not for thy Miſtreſs ſake, I would ſet thee faſt by the feet, to teach ſuch malapert Knaves to meddle with Counſellors matters. Had not mony been well beſtowed upon ſuch a good fellow as this is, that knoweth not a Counſellors man from a Coblers man? And with thoſe words the L. Cromwel went into the Kings Chamber of preſence, and the Archbiſhops

Secretary

The words of the L. Cromwel to the Archbishop Cranmer.

Secretary with him, where he found in the Chamber the L. of Cant. To whom he said, My Lord, I have found here good stuff for you (shewing to him the paper Book that he had in his Hand) ready to bring both you and this good fellow your Man to the halter, namely if the Knave Bearward now in the Hall might have well compassed it. At these words the Archbishop smiled and said, he that lost the Book is like to have the worst Bargain, for besides that he was well washed in the Thames, he must write the Book fair again: and at these words, the Lord Cromwel cast the Book unto the Secretary, saying, I pray thee, Morice, go in hand therewith, by and by with all expedition, for it must serve a turn. Surely, my Lord, it somewhat rejoyceth me, quoth the Lord Cromwel, that the Varlet might have had of your Man twenty shillings for the Book, and now I have discharged the matter with never a penny, and shaked him well up for his over much malapertness. I know the fellow well enough, quoth he, there is not a ranker Papist within this Realm than he is, most unworthy to be a servant unto so Noble a Princess. And so after humble thanks given to the Lord Cromwel, the said Morice departed with his Book, which when he again had fair written, was delivered to the Kings Majesty by the said Lord Cromwel, within four days after.

The Lord Cromwel not forgetting his old Friends and Benefactors.

The gentle behaviour of the Lord Cromwel, in remembring his old friends.

IT is commonly seen, that men advanced once from base degree to ample dignities, do rise also with fortune into such insolency and exaltation of mind, that not onely they forget themselves what they were, and from whence they came, but also cast out of Remembrance all their old Friends and former Acquaintance, which have been to them before beneficial. From which sort of men how farr the courteous condition of this Christian Earl did differ, by divers examples it may appear. As by a certain poor Woman keeping sometimes a victualling House about Hounsloe, to whom the said Lord Cromwel remained in bebt for certain old reckonings, to the summ of forty shillings. It happened that the Lord Cromwel with Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, riding through Cheapside towards the Court, in turning his eye over the way and there espying this poor Woman brought now in need and misery, eftsoons caused her to be called unto him, Who being come, after certain questions asked her if she were not such a Woman, and dwelling in such a place. At last he demanded if he were not behind for a certain payment of mony between him and her. To whom she with reverent obeysance confessed that he owed her mony for a certain old reckoning which was yet unpaid, whereof she stood now in great necessity, but never durst call upon him, nor could come at him to require her right. Then the Lord Cromwel sending the poor Women home to his house, and one of his servants withal, that the Porter should let her in, after his return from the Court not only discharged the debt which he owed, but also gave her yearly pension of four pounds, and a livery every year while she lived.

Example of a grateful debtor.

The like courtesie the said Lord Cromwel shewed also to a certain Italian, who in the City of Florence had shewed him much kindness in succouring and relieving his necessity, as in this story following may appear. Which story set forth and compiled in the Italian Tongue by Bandello, and imprinted at Luke by Busdrago, Anno, 1554. I thought here to insert, with the whole order and circumstance thereof, as it is reported.

Ex Historia Italica.

A notable story of the L. Cromwel, and an Italian.

Not many years past, saith the Author, there was in Florence a Merchant, whose name was Francis, descended from the Noble and ancient Family of the Frescobalds. This Gentleman was naturally indued with a Noble and liberal mind, unto whom also, through prosperous success and fortunate luck in his affairs and doings, much abundance of riches increased, so that he grew in great wealth, having his coffers repleni shed with many heaps of much treasure, He according to the custom of Merchants, used his Trade into many Countries, but chiefly into England, where long time he lived, sojourning in London, keeping House to his great commendation and praise.

It happened, that Francis Frescobald being in Florence, there appeared before him a poor Young Man, asking his Alms for God sake. Frescobald, as he earnestly beheld this ragged stripling, who was not so disguised in his tottered attire, but that his Countenance gave signification of much towardness and vertue in him, with conformity of manners agreeing to the same, being moved with pity demanded of what Country he was, and where he was born. I am Sir, quoth he, of England, and my name is Thomas Cromwel. My Father is a poor Man, and by his occupation a cloth-shearer. I am strayed from my Countrey, and am now come into Italy with the Camp of Frenchmen that were overthrown at Gatilyon, were I was the Page to a Footman, carrying after him his Pike and Burganet. Frescobald partly considering the present State of this Young Man, and partly for the love he bare to the English Nation, of whom he had received in times past sundry pleasures, received him into his House, and with such courtesie entertained his guest, as at his departure, when he was in mind to return to his Countrey, he provided such necessaries as he any way needed. He gave him both Horse and new apparel, and sixteen Duckats of gold in his purse, to bring him into his Countrey. Cromwel, rendring his hearty thanks, took leave of his Host and returned into England. This Cromwel was a Man of Noble Courage, and Heroical Spirit, given to enterprise great matters, very liberal, and a grave Counsellor, &c. But to our purpose.

Cromwel asking his Alms of Frescobald.

Note that this cloth-shearer was his father in law.

The gentleness of Frescobald shewed to Cromwel.

At what time Cromwel was so highly favoured of his Prince, and advanced to such dignity as is aforesaid, Francis Frescobald (as it many times happeneth to Merchants) was by many misfortunes and great losses cast back and become very poor. For, according to Conscience and equity, he paid whatsoever was due to any other from himself, but such debts as were owing unto him he could by no means obtain: yet calling further to remembrance that in England by certain Merchants there was due to him the summ of fifteen thousand Duckats, he so purposed with himself, that if he could recover that mony, he would well content himself, and no longer deal in his Trade of Merchants, but quietly pass over the rest of his days.

An Italian Duckate cometh to as much as our English Crown.

All things prepared for his journey, he setting forward towards England at last arrived at London, having utterly forgotten what courtesie long before he had shewed to Cromwel, which is the property always of a good nature, for a Man to forget what benefits he hath shewed to other, but to keep in mind continually what he hath received of other. Frescobald thus being now arrived at London, and there travelling earnestly about his business, it chanced him by the way to meet with this Noble Man, as he was riding towards the Court. Whom, as soon as the said Lord Cromwel had espied, and had earnestly beheld, he bethought himself that he should be the Man of Florence, at whose Hands in times past he had received so gentle Entertainment, and thereupon suddenly alighting (to the great admiration of those that were with him) in his Arms he gently embraced the stranger, and with a broken voyce scarce able to refrain tears, he demanded if he were not Francis Frescobald the Florentine, Yea Sir, he answered, and your humble servant. My servant (quoth Cromwel?) no, as you have not been my servant in times past, so will I not now account you other ways than my great and special Friend, assuring you that I have just reason to be sory, that you knowing what I am (or at the least what I should be) will not let me understand of your arriving in this Land, which known unto me, truely I should have payed part of that debt which I confess to owe you; but thanked be God, I have yet time. Well, Sir, in conclusion, you are heartily welcom. But having now weighty affairs in my Princes cause, you must hold me excused, that I can no longer tarry with you. Therefore at this time I take my leave, desiring you with the faithful mind of a Friend, that you forget not this day to come to my House to dinner, and then in remounting on his Horse, he passed to the Court. Frescobald greatly marvelling with himself who this Lord should be, at last, after some pause his remembrance better called home, he knew him to be the same, whom long before (as you have heard) he had relieved in Florence, and thereat not a littled joyed especially.

The words of the Lord Cromwel to the Italian Merchant.

Old friendship remembred.

especially considering how that by his means he should the better recover his due.

The hour of Dinner drawing near, he repaired to the house of his honourable Counsellor, where walking a while in his base Court, he attended his coming. The Lord shortly returned from the Court, and no sooner dismounted, but he again embraced this Gentleman with so friendly a countenance, that both the Lord Admiral, and all the other Noble Men of the Court being then in his Company, did not a little marvel thereat.

Which thing when the Lord Cromwel perceived, he turning towards them, and holding Frescobald fast by the hand, do ye not marvel my Lords, quoth he, that I seem so glad of this man? This is he by whose means I have atchieved the degree of this my present calling: and because ye shall not be ignorant of his courtesie when I greatly needed, I shall tell it you, and there declared unto them every thing in order according as before hath been recited unto you. His Tale finished, holding him still by the hand, he entred his House, and coming into the Chamber, where his Dinner was prepared, he sate him down to the Table, placing his best welcomed Guest next unto him.

The courtesie of the Lord Cromwel in entertaining his old Host.

The Dinner ended, and the Lords departed, he would know what occasion had brought Frescobald to London. Francis in few words opened his cause, truly telling, that from great wealth he was fallen into poverty, and that his only Portion to maintain the rest of his life was fifteen thousad Duckats which were owing him in England, and two thousand in Spain. Whereunto the Lord Cromwel answering again, said, Touching the things, Mr. Frescobald that be already past, although it cannot now be undone by mans power, nor by policy called again, which hath hapned unto you by the unstable condition and mutability of this world altering to and fro; yet is not your sorrow so peculiar to your self alone, but that by the bond of mutual love I must also bewail with you this your state and condition: which state and condition of yours, though it may work in you matter of just heavines, yet notwithstanding, to the intent you may receive in this your heavy distress some consolation for your old courtesie shewed to me in times past, the like courtesie now requireth of me again, that I likewise should repay some portion of that debt wherein I am bound unto you; according as the part of a thankful man bindeth me to do, in requiting your benefits on my part heretofore received. And this further I avouch in the word of a true Friend, that during this life and state of mine, I will never fail to do for you, wherein my authority may prevail to supply your lack and necessity: and so let these few words suffice to give you knowledge of my friendly meaning. But let me delay the time no longer.

Example of a faithful debtor.

Then taking him by the hand, he led him into his Chamber, whence, after that every man by his commandment was departed, he locked fast the Door. Then opening a Coffer full heaped with Treasure, he first took out sixteen Duckats, and delivering them to Frescobald he said; Lo here (my Friend) is your mony which you lent me at my departure from Florence, and here other ten which you bestowed in my apparel, with ten more that you disbursed for the Horse I rid away on. But considering you are a Merchant, it seemeth to me not honest to return your mony without some consideration for the long detaining of it. Take you therefore these four bags, and in every of them is four hundred Duckats, these you shall receive and enjoy from the hands of your assured Friend.

The Lord Cromwels usurie.

Frescobald, although from great wealth he was brought to a low ebb, and almost an utter decay, yet expressing the vertue of a modest mind, after gentle thanks given to the Lord Cromwel for his exceeding kindness shewed, courteously would have refused that which was offered, had not the other enforced him against his will to receive it.

Kindnes requited with kindnes.

This done, he caused Frescobald to give him a Note of the Names of all his Debtors, and the sum that every one of them was owing him. This schedule he delivered to one of his Servants, unto whom he gave charge diligently to search out such men whose names were therein contained, if they were within any part of the Realm, and then straitly to charge them to make payment of those sums within fifteen days, or else to abide the hazard of his displeasure. The Servant so well performed his Masters commandment, that in very short time they made payment of the whole sum: and if it had liked Frescobald so to have demanded, they should have answered to the uttermost such commodity as the use of his mony in so many years would have given him profit: but he, contented with his principal, would demand no further. By which means he got both hearty love and great estimation, and the more, for that he was so dear to the Lord Cromwel, and so highly esteemed of him.

And during all this time, Frescobald continually lodged in the house of the Lord Cromwel, who ever gave him such entertainment as he had right well deserved, and oftentimes moved him to abide here in England, offering him the loan of threescore thousand Duckats for the space of four years, if he would continue and make his Bank in London. But Frescobald, who desired to return into his Country, and there quietly to continue the reste of his life, with the great favour of the Lord Cromwel, after many thanks for his high and noble entertainment, departed towards his desired home, where richly arriving he gave himself quietly to live. But this wealth he small time enjoyned, for in the first year of his return he died

The Duckats after the Italian count come much near to our English Crowns.

So plentiful was the life of this man in such fruits full of singular gratitude and courtesie, that to rehearse all it woul require too long a tractation. Yet one amongst many other I may not overpass, whereby we may evidently consider, or rather marvel at the lowly mind of such a Person in so High a State and place of Honour. For as he coming with other of the Lords of the Counsel and Commissioners, to the house of Shene, about the examination of certain Monks which there denied the Kings Supremacy, after the examination done was there sitting at Dinner, it chanced him to spy afar off a certain poor man, which there served to sweep their Cels and Cloisters, and to ring the Bells. Whom when the Lord Cromwel had well advised, he sent for the poor man to come unto him, and before all the Table most lovingly and friendly called him by his name, took him by the hand, and asked how he did, with many other good words; and turning therewith to the Lords, My Lords (quoth he) see you this poor man? This mans Father hath been a great Friend to me in my necessity, and hath given me many a meals meat. Then said he unto the poor man, Come unto me, and I will provide for thee, and thou shalt not lack so long as I live. Such as were there present, and saw and heard the same, report it to be true.

An other example of the kind and lowly mind of the Lord Cromwel.

In this worthy and Noble Person, besides divers other eminent vertues, three things especially are to be considered, to wit, flourishing authority, excelling wisedom, and fervent zeal to Christ and to his Gospel. First, as touching his fervent zeal in setting forward the sincerity of Christian Faith, sufficient is to be seen before by the Injunctions, Proclamations, and Articles above specified, that more cannot almost be wished in a noble man, and scarce the like hath been seen in any.

Three things in the Lard Cromwel. 1. Zeal. 2. Wisdome 3. Authority

Secondly, for his wisdom and policy no less singular, joyned with his Christian zeal, he brought great things to pass, as well on this side the Sea as in the other parts beyond. But especially his working was to nourish peace abroad with forein Realms, as may be well by the Kings Letters and instructions sent by his means to his Ambassadors resident both with the Emperour, the French King, and the King of Scots, and also with the Pope, appear. In all whose Courts, such watch and espial he had, that nothing there was done, nor pretended, whereof he before had not intelligence. Neither was there any spark of mischief kindling never so little against the King and the Realm, which he by wit and policy did not quench and keep down. And where policy would not serve to obtain peace, yet by mony he bought it out; so that during all the time of Cromwels prosperity, the King never had Wars with any forein Nation: notwithstanding, that both the Pope, the Emperour, the King of France and Scotland were mightily bent and incensed against him.

The wisdom and policy of the Lord Cromwel.

The Lord Cromwel a continual nourisher of peace.

Thus

The Authority of the Lord Cromwel employed to the publick commodity of the Realm.

Thus as the prudent policy of this man was ever circumspect abroad, to ſtay the Realm from forein wars; ſo his Authority was no leſs occupied in keeping good order and rule at home: Firſt, in hampering the popiſh Prelats, and diſappointing their ſubtil deviſes; ſecondly in bridling and keeping other unruly ſubjects under ſubjection and diſcipline of the Laws. Whereby as he was a ſuccour and refuge to all Godly Perſons, ſo was he a terror to the evil Doers; ſo that not the preſence of him onely, but alſo the hearing of the coming of Cromwel brake many fraies, and much evil rule, as well appeared by a certain notorious fray or riot, appointed to be fought by a company of Ruffians in the Street of London called Pater-noſter-Row; where Carts were ſet on both ſides, of purpoſe prepared to incloſe them, that none might break in to part them. It happened, that as this deſperate skirmiſh ſhould begin, the Lord Cromwel coming the ſame time from the Court through Pauls-Churchyard, and entering into Cheap, had intelligence of the great fray toward, and becauſe of the Carts he could not come at them, but was forced to go about the little conduit, and ſo came upon them through Pannier Alley.

A skirmiſh or fray in Pater-noſter row, ſtopped by the coming of the L. Cromwel.

Thus as the conflict began to wax hot, and the people were ſtanding by in great expectation to ſee them fight, ſuddenly at the Noiſe of the Lord Cromwels coming the Camp brake up, and the Ruffians to go, neither could the Carts keep in thoſe ſo couragious campers, but well was he that firſt could be gon. And ſo ceaſed this tumultuous outrage, without any other parting, onely through the Authority of the Lord Cromwels name.

One example more of the like affinity cometh here in mind, which ought not to be omitted, concerning a certain Serving-Man of the like ruffianly order, who thinking to diſſever himſelf from the common uſage of all other Men in ſtrange newfangleneſs of faſhions by himſelf (as many there be whom nothing doth pleaſe, which is daily ſeen and received) uſed to go with his hair hanging about his ears down unto his ſhoulders, after a ſtrange monſtrous manner, counterfeiting belike the wild Iriſh Men, or elſe Crinitus Ioppas, which Virgil ſpeaketh of, as own weary of his own Engliſh faſhion; or elſe as one aſhamed to be ſeen like a man, would rather go like a Woman, or like to one of the Gorgon Siſters, but moſt of all like to himſelf, that is, like to a Ruffian, that could not tell how to go.

A ſtory between the L. Cromwel and a Ruffian.

The Ruffian with the long hair.

As this Ruffian ruffling thus with his locks was walking the Streets, as chance was who ſhould meet him but the Lord Cromwel? Who beholding the deform and unſeemly manner of his diſguiſed going, full of much vanity and hurtful example, called the Man to queſtion with him whoſe ſervant he was: which being declared, then was demanded whether his Maſter or any of his fellows uſed ſo to go with ſuch hair about their ſhoulders as he did, or no? Which when he denied, and was not able to yield any reaſon for refuge of that his monſtrous diſguiſing, at length he fell to this excuſe, that he had made a Vow. To this the Lord Cromwel anſwered again, that for ſo much as he had made himſelf a votary, he would not force him to break his Vow, but until his Vow ſhould be expired, he ſhould lye the mean time in Priſon, and ſo ſent him immediately to the Marſhalſey, where he indured, till at length this intonſus Cato, being perſwaded by his maſter to cut his hair, by ſuit and petition of Friends, he was brought again to the Lord Cromwel with his head polled according to the accuſtomed ſort of his other fellows, and ſo was diſmiſſed.

Hereunto alſo pertaineth the example of Frier Bartley, who wearing ſtill his Friers coul after the ſuppreſſion of Religious Houſes, Cromwel coming through Pauls Churchyard, and eſpying him in Rheines his ſhop, yea ſaid he, will not that coul of yours be left off yet? And if I hear by one a clock that this apparel be not changed, thou ſhalt be hanged immediately; for example to all other. And ſo putting his Coul away, he durſt never wear it after.

Frier Bartly caſteth away his Friers coul.

If the ſame Lord Cromwel, which could not abide this Servingman ſo disfigured in his haire, were now in theſe our days alive, with the ſame Authority which then he had, and ſaw theſe new fangled faſhions of attire, uſed here amongſt us both of Men and Women, I ſuppoſe verily that neither theſe monſtrous ruffs, nor theſe prodigious hoſe, and prodigal or rather hyperbolical barbarous Breeches (which ſeem rather like Barrells than Breeches) would have any place in England. In which unmeaſurable exceſs of veſture this I have to marvel; firſt, how theſe Servingmen, which commonly have nothing elſe but their wages, and that ſo ſlender and bare, can maintain ſuch ſlops, ſo huge and ſo ſumptuous, which commonly ſtand them in more than their three years wages do come unto. Secondly, I marvel that their Maſters and Lords (who ſhall yeild to God account of their Servants doings) do not ſearch and try out their Servants walks, how they come by theſe expenſes wherewith to uphold this bravery, ſeeing their ſtipendary wages, and all revenues elſe they have, will not extend thereunto. Thirdly, this moſt of all is to be marvelled, that magiſtrates which have in their Hands the ordering and guiding of good Laws, do not provide more ſeverely for the needful reformation of theſe enormities. But here we may well ſee, and truly this may ſay, That England once had a Cromwel.

The Monſtrous ſlops of England lack a Cromwel.

Long it were to recite what innumerable benefits this worthy Counſellor, by his prudent policy, his grave Authorithy, and perfect Zeal, wrought and brought to paſs in the publick Realm, and eſpecially in the Church of England, what good Orders he eſtabliſhed, what wickedneſs and vices he ſuppreſſed, what corruptions he reformed, what abuſes he brought to light, what crafty jugglings, what Idolatrous deceptions, and ſuperſtitious deluſions he detected and aboliſhed out of the Church. What poſterity will ever think the Church of the Pope, pretending ſuch Religion, to have been ſo wicked, ſo long to abuſe the peoples eyes with an old rotten ſtock (called the Rood of Grace) wherein a Man ſhould ſtand incloſed, with an hundred wyers within the Rood to make the Image goggle with the eyes, to nod with the Head, to hang the lip, to move and ſhake his jawes, according as the wallew was of the gift which was offered? If it were a ſmal piece of ſilver he would hang a frowning lip, if it were a piece of gold, then ſhould his Jawes go merrily. Thus miſerably was the people of Chriſt abuſed, their Souls ſeduced, their ſenſes beguiled, and their purſes ſpoiled, till this Idolatrous forgery at laſt by Cromwels means was diſcloſed, and the Image with all his engins ſhewed openly at Pauls Croſs, and there torn in pieces by the People. The like was done by the Blood of Hales, which in like manner by Cromwel was brought to Pauls Croſs, and there proved to be the Blood of a Duck.

Divers corruptions in the Church detected and reformed by Cromwel.

The Rood of Grace gogling with his eyes.

The Blood of Hales.

Who would have judged, but that the Maid of Kent had been an holy Woman and a Propheteſs inſpired, had not Cromwel and Cranmer tried her at Pauls Croſs to be a ſtrong whore.

The holy Maid of Kent read before.

What ſhould I ſpeak of Darvel Gartheren, of the Rood of Cheſter, of Thomas Becket, our Lady of Walſingham, with an infinite multitude more of the like affinity? All which ſtocks and blocks of curſed Idolatry Cromwel, ſtirred up by the Providence of God, removed out of the peoples way, that they might walk more ſafely in the ſincere ſervice of Almighty God.

Stocks and blocks removed out of the way.

While the Lord Cromwel was thus bleſſedly occupied in profiting the common wealth, and purging the Church of Chriſt, it hapned to him, as commonly it doth to all good Men, that where any excellency of vertue appeareth, there envie creepeth in, and where true piety ſeeketh moſt after Chriſt, there ſome perſecution followeth withal.

This, I ſay, as he was labouring in the Commonwealth and doing good to the poor afflicted ſaints, helping them out of trouble, the malice of his Enemies ſo wrought, continually hunting for matter againſt him, that they never ceaſed, till in the end they by falſe trains and crafty ſurmiſes brought him out of the Kings Favour.

The chief and principal Enemy againſt him was Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter; who ever diſdaining and envying the State and Felicity of the Lord Cromwel, and now taking his occaſion by the Marriage of Lady Anne of Cleve, being a ſtranger and forein, put in the Kings ears what a perfect thing it were to the quiet of the Realm, and eſtabliſhment to the Kings ſucceſſion, to have an Engliſh Queen and Prince that were were meer Engliſh; ſo that in concluſion, the Kings affection, the more it was diminiſhed from the late married Anne of Cleve, the leſs favour he bare unto Cromwel. Beſides this Gardiner, there lacked not other Friends alſo, and ill willers in the Court about the King, which little made for Cromwel both for his Religion which they maligned, and for other private grudges alſo incident by the way.

St. Gardiner chief enemy to the Lord Cromwel.

Over and beſides all which, it is moreover ſuppoſed, that ſome part of diſpleaſure might riſe againſt him, by reaſon of a certain talk which happened a little before at Lambeth, at what time the King after the making of the ſix Articles, ſent the ſaid Lord Cromwel his Vicegerent, with the two Dukes of Northfolk, and Suffolk, with all the Lords of the Parliament to Lambeth, to dine with the Archbiſhop (who mightily had diſputed and alledged in the Parliament againſt the ſaid Articles) to cheer and comfort his daunted Spirits again.

The talk between the Lord Cromwel and certain of the Lords at Lambeth.

There the ſaid Cromwel with the other Noble Lords ſitting with the Archbiſhop at his Table in talk, as every Lord brought forth his ſentence in commendation of Cranmer, to ſignifie what good will both the King and they bare unto him; amongſt the reſt one of the company entring into a compariſon between the ſaid Thomas Cranmer, and Thomas Wolſey late Cardinal of York, declared in his judgment, that Cranmer was much to be preferred for his mild and gentle nature, whereas the Cardinal was a ſtubborn and a churliſh Prelate, and one that could never abide any Noble-man, and that, ſaid he, know you well enough, my Lord Cromwel, for he was your Maſter, &c. At theſe words the Lord Cromwel, being ſomwhat touched to hear the Cardinals ſervice caſt in his teeth, inferred again, ſaying, That he could not deny but he was Servant ſometime to Cardinal Wolſey, neither did repent the ſame, for he received of him both fee, meat, and drink, and other Commodities; but yet he was never ſo far in love with him, as to have waited upon him to Rome, if he had been choſen Pope, as he underſtood that he would have done, if the caſe had ſo fallen out. Which when the other had denied to be true, Cromwel ſtill perſiſted, affirming the ſame, and ſhewing moreover, what number of Florens he ſhould have received, to be his Admiral, and to have ſafe conducted him to Rome, in caſe he had been elected Biſhop of Rome. The party, not a little moved with theſe words, told him, he lied. The other again affirmed it to me true. Upon this, great and high words roſe between them. Which contention, although it was through intreaty of the Archbiſhop and other Nobles ſomwhat pacified for the time, yet it might be, that ſome bitter Root of grudg remained behind, which afterward grew unto him to ſome diſpleaſure. And this was Anno 1540. in the Month of July. Ex teſtimonio Secretarii Cantuar.

Anno 1541.

A Parliament. The Lord Cromwel apprehended.

After this, the next year following, which was 1541. in the Month of April, was holden a Parliament, which after divers prorogations was continued till the Month of July the ſaid year. In the which Month of July, the Lord Cromwel being in the Councel-Chamber was ſuddenly apprehended, and committed to the Tower of London. Whereat as many good Men, which knew nothing but truth by him, did lament and prayed heartily for him, ſo more there were on the contrary ſide that rejoyced, eſpecially of the Religious ſort, and of the Clergy, ſuch as had been in ſome dignity before in the Church and now by his means were put from it. For indeed ſuch was his nature, that in all his doings he could not abide any kind of Popery, or of falſe Religion creeping under Hpocriſie, and leſs could he abide the ambitious pride of Popiſh Prelacy, which profeſſing all humility was ſo elated in pride, that Kings could not rule in their own Realms for them. Theſe ſnuffing Prelates he could never abide, ſo they again hated him as much, which was the cauſe of ſhortning his days, and to bring him to his end; ſo that the xix. day of the Month aforeſaid, he was attainted by Parliament.

Crimes and accuſations brought againſt the Lord Cromwel.

In the which Attainder, divers and ſundry Crimes, ſurmiſes, objections, and Accuſations were brought againſt him, but chiefly and above all other he was charged and accuſed of Hereſie, for that he was a ſupporter of them (whom they recounted for Hereticks) as Barns, Clark, and many other, whom he by his Authority and Letters written to Sheriffs and Juſtices in divers ſhires reſcued, and diſcharged out of Priſon. Alſo that he did divulgate and diſperſe abroad among the Kings Subjects great numbers of Books, containing (as they ſaid) manifeſt matter of much Hereſie, diffidence, and miſbelief. Item, that he cauſed to be tranſlated into our Engliſh Tongue Books comprifing matter expreſly againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and that after the Tranſlation thereof, he commended and maintained the ſame for good and Chriſtian Doctrine. Over and beſides all this, they brought in certain witneſſes (what they were, the attainder expreſſeth not) which moſt eſpecially preſſed (or rather oppreſſed) him with hainous words ſpoken againſt the King in the Church of Saint Peter the Poor, in the Month of March, in the thirtieth year of the Kings Reign. Which words if they be true, as the Attainder doth purport, three things I have here much to marvel at. Firſt, if his Adverſaries had ſo ſure hold and matter againſt him, then what ſhould move them to make ſuch haſty ſpeed, in all poſt haſte to have him diſpatched and rid out of the way, and in no caſe could abide him to come to his purgation? Which if he might have done, it is not otherwiſe to be thought, but he would eaſily have cleared himſelf thereof.

Witneſſes againſt Cromwel ſuſpected.

Secondly, this I marvel, that if the words had been ſo hainous againſt the King, as his Enemies did pretend, why then did thoſe witneſſes which heard thoſe words in St. Peters Church, in the thirtieth year of the Kings Reign, conceal the ſaid words of ſuch Treaſon ſo long, the ſpace almoſt of two years, and now uttered the ſame in the two and thirtieth year of the Kings Reign, in the Month of July.

Thirdly, here is again to be marvelled, if the King had known or believed theſe words to be true, and that Cromwel had indeed been ſuch a Traitour to his Perſon, why then did the King ſo ſhortly after lament his death, wiſhing to have his Cromwel alive again? What Prince will wiſh the life of him whom he ſuſpecteth undoubtedly to be a Traitor to his Life and Perſon? Whereby it may appear what judgment the King had of Cromwel in himſelf, howſoever the Parliament by ſiniſter information was otherwiſe incenſed to judg upon him.

What miſchief malicious Makebates make in a Commonwealth.

Such Malicious Makebates about Princes, and Parliaments never lacked in Commonweals. By ſuch King Ethelſtane was incenſed to kill his Brother Edwine. So was King Edward the ſecond depoſed. So likewiſe when King Richard the ſecond was once brought into the Tower, what Crimes and Accuſations were laid againſt him in the Parliament? So was Humfrey the good Duke of Glouceſter, the Kings uncle, by Henry Beauford Biſhop of Wincheſter, and other in the Parliament holden at Berry, arreſted as a traytour, and falſely made away. What great Treaſon was in the words of him, who, dwelling in Cheapſide at the ſign of the Crown, ſaid merrily to his Son, that if he lived, he would make him heir of the Crown? and yet was he therefore attainted and judged for a Traytor. In the time of King Henry the eighth, how was that Parliament incenſed, wherein both Queen Anne was falſly condemned, and Queen Elizabeth her Daughter as falſly diſherited? To omit here the Attainder of the Duke of Buckingham, wrought by the Cardinal of York; of the Lord Cobham likewiſe, and Sir Roger Acton: If the cauſe of the Lord Henry late Earl of Surrey were well tried out, peradventure no ſuch hainous purpoſe of any Treaſon ſhould be found therein as then was made. Who incenſed the late Duke of Somerſet to behead his own Brother, but ſuch Makebates as theſe? And afterward, when the ſaid Duke himſelf was attainted for a Traitor, and condemned for a Felon, a Briber, and Extortioner; how was the Parliament then incenſed? Adam Damlip received of Cardinal Poole at Rome but a ſilly Crown in way of Alms, and therefore, by means of Stephen Gardiner, was attainted for a Traitour. George Egles did but read ſometimes in Woods, and by the ſaid Gardiner was alſo condemned, and ſuffered as a Traitour. Not that I here ſpeak or mean againſt the high Courts of Parliaments of this our Realm, neceſſarily aſſembled for the Commonwealth, to whom I always attribute their due Reverence and Authority. But as it happeneth ſometimes in General Councels, which though they be never ſo general, yet notwithſtanding ſometimes they may and do err in weighty matters of Religion. ſo likewiſe they that ſay, that Princes and Parliaments may be miſinformed ſometimes, by ſome ſiniſter Heads, in matters civil and politick, do not therein derogate or empair the high eſtate of Parliaments, but rather give wholſome admonition to Princes and Parliament Men, to be more circumſpect and vigilant what Counſel they ſhall admit, and what witneſſes they do credit. For private affection, which commonly beareth a great ſtroke in all Societies and doings of men, creepeth ſometimes into ſuch general Councels, and into Princes Courts alſo, either too much amplifying things that be but ſmall, making Mountains of Molehils, or elſe too much extenuating things that be of themſelves great and weighty, according as it is truly ſaid of the Poet Juvenal; Dat veniam corvis, vexat cenſura columbas; or as our Engliſh Proverb ſheweth, As a man is friended, ſo is his matter ended; And where the Hedg is low, a man may lightly make large leaps; or rather to ſpeak after the French Phraſe; Qui ſon chien veult tuer, la rage luy met ſus, That is He that is diſpoſed to have his Dog killed, firſt maketh men believe that he is mad. And thus much having declared touching the matter of his accuſation, the reſt I refer to the high Parliament of that mighty King, who ſhall one day bring all things to perfect light.

A French Proverb.

In the mean ſeaſon, howſoever the cauſe of the Lord Cromwel ſtandeth true or falſe, this is certain, that Stephen Gardiner wanted not an Head, nor yet privy Aſſiſters, which cunningly could fetch this matter about, and watch their time, when as the King being diſpoſed to marry another Wife, which was the Lady Katherine Haward, immediately after the beheading of the Lord Cromwel, did repudiate Lady Ann of Cleve, which otherwiſe is to be thought during the life of Cromwel could not ſo well be brought to paſs.

Lady Ann of Cleve divorced from the King.

But, theſe things being now done and paſt, let us paſs them over, and return again from whence we have digreſſed, that is, to the Lord Cromwel, being now attainted and committed to the Tower. Who ſo long as he went with full ſail of Fortune, how moderately, and how temperately he did ever bear himſelf in his eſtate, before hath been declared. So now the ſaid Lord Cromwel, always one man, by the contrary wind of adverſity being overblown, received the ſame with no leſs conſtancy, and patience of a Chriſtian heart, neither yet was he ſo unprovided of Counſel and forecaſt, but that he did foreſee this tempeſt long before it fell, and alſo prepared for the ſame; for two years before, ſmelling the conſpiracy of his Adverſaries, and fearing what might happen, he called unto him his Servants, and there ſhewing unto them in what a ſlippery ſtate he ſtood, and alſo perceiving ſome ſtormy weather already to gather, required them to look diligently to their order and doings, leſt through their default any occaſion might riſe againſt him. And furthermore before the time of his apprehenſion, ſuch order he took for his Servants, that many of them, eſpecially the younger Brethren, which had little elſe to take unto, had honeſtly left for them in their Friends hands to relieve them, whatſoever ſhould him befal.

The Chriſtian Patience of the Lord Cromwel in his adverſity.

Cromwel foreſeeing and preparing for his trouble before it fell.

Cromwel good to his Servants.

Briefly, ſuch a loving and kind Maſter he was to his Servants, that he provided aforehand almoſt for them all; inſomuch, that he gave to twelve Children, which were his Muſitians, twenty pounds a piece, and ſo committed them to their Friends, of whom ſome yet remain alive, who both enjoyed the ſame, and alſo gave record of this to be true.

Furthermore, being in the Tower, a Priſoner, how quietly he bare it, how valiantly he behaved himſelf, how gravely and diſcreetly he anſwered, and entertained the Commiſſioners ſent unto him, it is worthy noting. Whatſoever Articles and Interogatories they propounded, they could put nothing unto him, either concerning matters Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal, wherein he was not more ripened, and more furniſhed in every condition than they themſelves.

Amongſt the reſt of thoſe Commiſſioners which came unto him, one there was, whom the Lord Cromwel deſired to carry for him a Letter to the King, which when he refuſed, ſaying that he would carry no Letter to the King from a Traitor; then the Lord Cromwel deſired him at leaſt to do from him a meſſage to the King. To that the other was contented, and granted, ſo that it were not againſt his Allegiance. Then the Lord Cromwel taking witneſs of the other Lords, what he had Promiſed; You ſhall commend me, ſaid he, to the King, and tell him, By that he hath ſo well tried, and throughly proved you as I have done, he ſhall find you as falſe a man as ever came about him.

Beſides this, he wrote alſo a Letter from the Tower to the King, whereof when none durſt take the carriage upon him, Sir R. Sadler (whom he alſo had preferred to the King before, being ever truſty and faithful unto him went unto the King to underſtand his pleaſure, whether he would permit him to bring the Letter or not, which when the King had granted, the ſaid Maſter Sadler, as he was required, preſented the Letter unto the King, which he commanded thrice to be read unto him, inſomuch as the King ſeemed to be moved therewith.

Sir Ralph Sadler, the Lord Cromwel truſty Friend.

Notwithſtanding by reaſon of the Act of Parliament afore paſſed, the worthy and Noble Lord Cromwel, oppreſſed by his enemies, and condemned in the Tower, and not coming to his anſwer, the twenty eighth day of July, Anno 1541, was brought to the Scaffold on Tower-Hill, where he ſaid theſe words following.

The Lord Cromwel brought to the Scaffold.

I Am come hither to die, and not to purge my ſelf, as ſome think peradventure that I will. For if I ſhould ſo do, I were a very wretch and a Miſer. I am by the Law condemned to die, and thank my Lord God, that hath appointed me this death for mine Offence. For ſithence the time that I have had years of diſcretion, I have lived a ſinner, and offended my Lord God, for the which I ask him heartily forgiveneſs. And it is not unknown to many of you, that I have been a great Traveller in this World, and being but of a baſe degree, was called to high eſtate, and ſithence the time I came thereunto I have offended my Prince, for the which I ask him heartily forgiveneſs, and beſeech you all to pray to God with me, that he will forgive me. And now I pray you that be here, to bear me record, I die in the Catholick Faith, not doubting in any Article of my Faith, no nor doubting in any Sacrament of the Church. Many have ſlandered me, and reported that I have been a bearer of ſuch as have maintained evil Opinions, which is unture. But I confeſs, that like as God by his holy Spirit doth inſtruct us in the Truth, ſo the Devil is ready to ſeduce us, and I have been ſeduced; but bear me witneſs that I die in the Catholick Faith of the holy Church: and I heartily deſire you to pray for the Kings Grace, that he may long live with you in health and proſperity; and that after him, his Son, Prince Edward that goodly Impe, may long Reign over you. And once again I deſire you to pray for me, that ſo long as life remaineth in this fleſh, I waver nothing in my Faith. And ſo making his Prayer, kneeling on his knees he ſpake theſe words, the effect whereof here followeth.

A true chriſtian confeſſion of the L. Cromwel at his death.

A Prayer that the Lord Cromwel ſaid at the hour of his death.

O Lord Jeſus, which art the only health of all men living, and the everlaſting life of them which die in thee; I wretched ſinner do ſubmit my ſelf wholly unto thy moſt bleſſed will, and being ſure that the thing cannot Periſh which is committed unto thy mercy, willingly now I leave this frail and wicked fleſh, in ſure hope that thou wilt in better wiſe reſtore it to me again at the laſt day in the reſurrection of the juſt. I beſeech thee moſt merciful Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that thou wilt be thy grace make ſtrong my Soul againſt all temptations, and defend me with the Buckler of thy mercy againſt all the aſſaults of the Devil. I ſee and knowledge that there is in my ſelf no hope of Salvation, but all my confidence, hope and truſt is in thy moſt merciful goodneſs. I have no merits nor good works which I may alledge before thee. Of ſins and evil works (alas) I ſee a great heap; but yet through thy mercy I truſt to be in the number of them to whom thou wilt not impute their ſins; but wilt take and accept me for righteous and juſt, and to be the inheritor of everlaſting life. Thou mercifui Lord wert born for my ſake, thou didſt ſuffer both hunger and thirſt for my ſake; thou didſt teach, pray, and faſt for my ſake; all thy holy Actions and Works thou wroughteſt for my ſake; thou ſufferedſt moſt grievous Pains and Torments for my ſake; finally, thou gaveſt thy moſt precious Body and thy Blood to be ſhed on the Croſs for my ſake. Now moſt merciful Saviour, let all theſe things profit me, which haſt given thy ſelf alſo for me. Let thy Blood cleanſe and waſh away the ſpots and fulneſs of my ſins. Let thy righteouſneſs hide and cover my unrighteouſneſs. Let the merits of thy Paſſion and blood ſhedding be ſatisfaction for my ſins. Give me, Lord thy grace, that the Faith of my ſalvation in thy Blood waver not in me, but may ever be firm and conſtant. That the hope of thy mercy and life everlaſting never decay in me, that love wax not cold in me. Finally, that the weakneſs of my fleſh be not overcome with the fear of death. Grant me, merciful Saviour, that when death hath ſhut up the eyes of my Body, yet the eyes of my Soul may ſtill behold and look upon thee, and when death hath taken away the uſe of my Tongue, yet my heart may cry and ſay unto thee, Lord into thy hands I commend my Soul, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit, Amen.

The death of the Lord Cromwel.

And thus his Prayer made, after he had godly and lovingly exhorted them that were about him on the Scaffold, he quietly committed his Soul into the hands of God, and ſo patiently ſuffered the ſtroke of the Ax, by a ragged and butcherly Miſer, which very ungodly performed his Office.

Of the Bible in Engliſh, printed in the large Volume; and of Edmund Boner preferred to the Biſhoprick of London, by the means of the Lord Cromwel.

ABout the time and year when Edmund Boner Bp. of Hereford, and Embaſſadour reſident in France, being firſt nominate and preferred by the means of the Lord Cromwel to the Biſhoprick of London, which was Anno 1540. it happened that the ſaid Thomas Lord Cromwel Earl of Eſſex procured of the King of England his gracious Letters to the French King, to permit and Licence a ſubject of his to imprint the Bible in Engliſh within the Univerſity of Paris, becauſe Paper, was there more meet and apt to be had for the doing thereof, than in the Realm of England, and alſo that there were more ſtore of good workmen for the ready diſpatch of the ſame. And in like manner at the ſame time the ſaid King wrote unto his Embaſſadour, who then was Edmund Boner Biſhop of Hereford lying in Paris, that he ſhould aid and aſſiſt the doers thereof in all their reaſonable ſuits. The which Biſhop outwardly ſhewed great friendſhip to the Merchants that were the Imprinters of the ſame, and moreover did divers and ſundry times call and command the ſaid Perſons to be in manner daily at his Table both Dinner and Supper, and ſo much rejoyced in the workmanſhip of the ſaid Bibles, that he himſelf would viſit the Imprinters Houſe, where the ſame Bibles were printed, and alſo would take part of ſuch dinners as the Engliſhmen there had, and that to his coſt, which as it ſeemed he little weighed. And further, the ſaid Boner was ſo fervent, that he cauſed the ſaid Engliſhmen to put in print a New Teſtament in Engliſh and Latin, and himſelf took a great many of them, and payed for them, and gave them to his Friends. And it chanced the mean time, while the ſaid Bible was in printing, that King Henry the eighth preferred the ſaid Boner from the ſaid Biſhoprick of Hereford to be Biſhop of London; at which time the ſaid Boner according to the Statute Law of England took his Oath to the King, knowledging his Supremacy, and called one of the foreſaid Engliſhmen that printed the Bible, whom he then loved, although afterward upon the change of the world he did hate him as much, whoſe name was Richard Grafton; to whom the ſaid Boner ſaid when he took his Oath, Maſter Grafton, ſo it is, that the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty hath by his gracious gift preſented me to the Biſhoprick of London, for the which I am ſorry, for if it would have pleaſed his Grace, I could have been well content to have kept mine old Biſhoprick of Hereford. Then ſaid Grafton, I am right glad to hear of it, and ſo I am ſure will be a great number of the City of London; for though they yet know you not, yet they have heard ſo much goodneſs of you from hence, as no doubt they will be glad of your placing. Then ſaid Boner, I pray God I may do that may content them. And to tell you Maſter Grafton, before God (for that was commonly his Oath) the greateſt fault that ever I found in Stokeſley was, for vexing and troubling of poor men, as Lobley the Book-binder and other, for having the Scripture in Engliſh; and, God willing, he did not ſo much hinder it, but I will as much further it, and I will have of your Bibles ſet up in the Church of Pauls, at leaſt in ſundry places ſix of them, and I will pay you honeſtly for them, and give hearty thanks. Which words he then ſpake in the hearing of divers credible Perſons, as Edmund Stile Grocer, and other. But now Maſter Grafton at this time I have ſpecially called you to be a witneſs with me, that upon this tranſlation of the Biſhops Sees, I muſt according to the Statute take an Oath unto the Kings Majeſty, knowledging his Supremacy, which, before God, I take with my heart, and ſo think him to be, and beſeech Almighty God to ſave him, and long to proſper his Grace. Hold the Book, Sirra, and read you the Oath (ſaid he to one of his Chaplains) and he laid his hand on the Book, and ſo he took his Oath: And after this he ſhewed great friendſhip to the ſaid Grafton, and to his partner Edward Whitchurch, but eſpecially to Miles Coverdale, who was the Corrector of the great Bible.

Boners wrath to Grafton when he took his Oath to the King.

Boner reproveth Stokeſley for his perſecuting.

Boners promiſe to ſet forth the Scripture in Engliſh.

Boner ſweareth heartily to the Kings Supremacy.

Miles Coverdale Corrector in printing the Bible of the large Volume.

Now after that the foreſaid Letters were delivered, the French King gave very good words, and was well contented to permit the doing thereof, and ſo the Printer went forward and printed forth the Book even to the laſt part, and then was the quarrel picked to the Printer, and he was ſent for to the Inquiſitors of the Faith, and there charged with certain Articles of Hereſie. Then were ſent for the Engliſh-men that were at the coſt and charge thereof, and alſo ſuch as had the correction of the ſame, which was Miles Coverdale: but having ſome warning what would follow, the ſaid Engliſh-men poſted away as faſt as they could to ſave themſelves, leaving behind them all their Bibles, which were to the number of two thouſand five hundred, called the Bibles of the great Volume, and never recovered any of them, ſaving that the Lieutenant Criminal having them delivered unto him to burn in a place of Paris (like Smithfield) called Malbert place, was ſomewhat moved with covetouſneſs, and ſold four great Dry-fats of them to a Haberdaſher to lap Caps in, and thoſe were bought again, but the reſt were burned, to the great and importunate loſs of thoſe that bare the charge of them. But notwithſtanding the ſaid loſs, after they had recovered ſome part of the foreſaid Books, and were comforted and encouraged by the Lord Cromwel, the ſaid Engliſh-men went again to Paris, and there got the Preſſes, Letters, and Servants of the foreſaid Printer, and brought them to London, and there they became Printers themſelves (which before they never intended) and printed out the ſaid Bible in London, and after that printed ſundry Impreſſions of them; but yet not without great trouble and loſs, for the hatred of the Biſhops, namely St. Gardiner and his Fellows, who mightily did ſtomack and malign the printing thereof.

The printing of the Bible ſtayed at Paris through the practiſe of Engliſh Biſhops.

Engliſh Bibles burnt at Paris.

How Grafton and Whitchurch became Printers.

Here by the way, for the more direction to the Story, thou haſt, loving Reader, to note and underſtand, that in thoſe days there were two ſundry Bibles in Engliſh, printed and ſet forth, bearing divers Titles, and printed in divers places, The firſt was called Thomas Matthews Bible, printed at Hamborough, about the year of our Lord 1532. the Corrector of which Print was then John Rogers of whom ye ſhall hear more, Chriſt willing, hereafter. The Printers were Richard Grafton, and Whitchurch. In the tranſlation of this Bible, the greateſt doer was indeed William Tindal, who with the help of Miles Coverdale had tranſlated all the Books thereof, except only the Apocrypha, and certain Notes in the Margent which were added after. But becauſe the ſaid W. Tindal in the mean time was apprehended before this Bible was fully perfected, it was thought good to them which had the doing thereof, to change the name of William Tindall, becauſe that name then was odious, and to further it by a ſtrange name of Thoms Mathew, John Rogers the ſame time being Corrector to the Print, who

The Bible of the greateſt Volume printed in Paris.

The doers hereof were R. Grafton and Whitchurch. Edm. Boner a great further in Printing the Bible in Engliſh.

The New Teſtament in Engliſh and Latin put in Print by Boner.

Edm. Boner made Biſhop of London.

who had then tranſlated the reſidue of the Apocrypha, and added alſo certain Notes thereto in the Margent, and thereof came it to be called Thomas Mathews Bible. Which Bible of Thomas Mathews, after it was Imprinted and preſented to the Lord Cromwel, and the Lord Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who liked very well of it, the ſaid Cromwel preſented it to the King, and obtained that the ſame might freely paſs to be read of his Subjects with his Graces Licence; ſo that there was printed upon the ſame Book, one line in red Letters with theſe words, Set forth with the Kings moſt Gracious Licence.

The Bible preſented to the King by the L. Cromwel. The Bible put forth with the K. priviledge.

The ſetting forth of this Book did not a little offend the Clergy, namely the Biſhops aforeſaid, both for the Prologues and eſpecially becauſe in the ſame Book was one ſpecial Table collected of the common places in the Bible, and the Scriptures for the approbation of the ſame, and chiefly about the Supper of the Lord, and Marriage of Prieſts, and the Maſs which there was ſaid not to be found in the Scripture.

Another Bible of the great volume printed at Paris.

Furthermore, after the reſtraint of this aforeſaid Bible of Mathews, another Bible began to be printed at Paris, Anno 1540. Which was called the Bible of the large Volume. The Printers whereof were the foreſaid Richard Grafton, and Whit-church which bare the charges. A great helper thereto was the Lord Cromwel. The chiefeſt overſeer was Miles Coverdal, who taking the tranſlation of Tindal, conferred the ſame with the Hebrew, and amended many things.

In this Bible although the former Notes of Thomas Mathews were omitted, yet ſundry marks and Hands were annexed on the ſides, which meant that in thoſe places ſhould be made certain Notes, wherewith alſo the Clergy was offended, though the Notes were not made.

The Biſhops offended at the Bible tranſlated into Engliſh. The ſale of the Bible ſtayed by the King through the Biſhops means.

After this the Biſhops, bringing their purpoſe to paſs, brought the Lord Cromwel out of favor, and ſhortly to his death; and not long after, great complaint was made to the King of the tranſlation of the Bible, and of the preface of the ſame, and then was the ſale of the Bible commanded to be ſtayed, the Biſhops promiſing to amend and correct it, but never performing the ſame. Then Grafton was called, and firſt charged with the printing of Mathews Bible, but he being fearful of trouble made excuſes for himſelf in all things. Then was he examined of the great Bible, and what Notes he was purpoſed to make. To which he anſwered, that he knew none. For his purpoſe was to have retained learned men to have made the Notes, but when he perceived the Kings Majeſty, and his Clergy not willing to have any, he proceeded no further. But for all theſe excuſes, Grafton was ſent to the Fleet, and there remained ſix weeks, and before he came out, was bound in three hundred pounds that he ſhould neither ſell, nor imprint, or cauſe to be imprinted, any more Bibles, until the King and the Clergy ſhould agree upon a Tranſlation. And thus was the Bible from that time ſtayed, during the Reign of King Henry the eighth.

Rich. Grafton impriſoned for printing the Bible.

But yet one thing more is to be noted, that after the Imprinters had loſt their Bibles, they continued ſuters to Boner, as is aforeſaid, to be a mean to obtain of the French King their Books again: but ſo long they continued ſuiters, and Boner ever fed them with fair words, promiſing them much, but did nothing for them, till at the laſt Boner was diſcharged of his Embaſſade, and returned home, where he was right joyfully welcomed home by the Lord Cromwel, who loved him dearly, and had a marvellous good opinion of him. And ſo long as Cromwel remained in Authority, ſo long was Boner at his beck and Friend to his Friends; and Enemy to his Enemies: as namely, at that time to Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, who never favoured Cromwel, and therefore Boner could not favour him, but he and Wincheſter were the greateſt enemies that might be. But ſo ſoon as Cromwel fell, immediately Boner and Wincheſter pretended to be the greateſt men that lived, and no good word could Boner ſpeak of Cromwel, but the lewdeſt, vileſt, and bittereſt that he could ſpeak, calling him the rankeſt Heretick that ever lived: and then ſuch as the ſaid Boner knew to be in good favour with Cromwel, he could never abide their ſight. Inſomuch as the next day after that Cromwel was apprehended, the above named Grafton, who before had been very familiar with Boner, met with the ſaid Boner ſuddenly, and ſaid unto him, That he was ſory to hear of the news that then was abroad. What are they, ſaid he? Of the apprehenſion of the Lord Cromwel, ſaid Grafton. Are ye ſory for that, ſaid he? It had been good that he had been diſpatched long ago. With that Grafton looked npon him and knew not what to ſay, but came no more to Boner. Howbeit afterward the ſaid Grafton being charged for the imprinting of a ballad made in favour of Cromwel, was called before the Councel, where Boner was preſent, and there Boner charged him with the words that he ſpake to him of Cromwel, and told out a great long tale. But the Lord Audley, who then was Lord Chancellor, right diſcreetly and honourably, cut off the matter, and entred into other talk.

The Hiſtory of Robert Barnes, Thomas Garret, and William Hierome, Divines.

Like as in forein Battles the chief point of Victory conſiſteth in the ſafety of the General or Captain: even ſo when the valiant Standardbearer and ſtay of the Church of England, Thomas Cromwel I mean, was made away, pity it is to behold what miſerable ſlaughter of good Men and good Women enſued thereupon, whereof we have now (Chriſt willing) to intreat. For Wincheſter having now gotten his full purpoſe, and free ſwing to exerciſe his cruelty, wonder it was to ſee that Aper Calydonius, or (as the Scripture ſpeaketh) that Ferus ſingularis, what troubles he raiſed in the Lords Vineyard. And leſt by delays he might loſe the occaſion preſently offered, he ſtraightways made his firſt aſſaults upon Robert Barnes, Thomas Garret, and William Hierome, whom in the very ſame Month, within two days after Cromwels death, he cauſed to be put to execution. Whoſe Hiſtories ſeverally to comprehend, firſt of all we will ſomewhat ſpeak of Barnes Doctor of Divinity, whoſe particular Story here followeth.

Rob. Barnes, Tho. Garret, Wil. Hierome Martyrs.

Pſal. 40.

This Barnes, after he came from the Univerſity of Lovain, went to Cambridge, where he was made Prior and Maſter of the Houſe of the Auguſtines. At that time the knowledge of good Letters was ſcarcely entred into the Univerſity, all things being full of rudeneſs and barbarity, ſaving in very few, which were privy and ſecret. Whereupon Barnes, having ſome feeling of better learning and Authors, began in his houſe to read Terence, Pluaust, and Cicero, ſo that what with his induſtry, pains, and labour, and with the help of Thomas Parnel his Scholar, whom he brought from Lovain with him, reading Copia verborum & rerum, he cauſed the Houſe ſhortly to flouriſh with good Letters, and made a great part of the Houſe learned (which before were drowned in barbarous rudeneſs) as Maſter Cambridge, Maſter Field, Maſter Coleman, Maſter Burley, Maſter Coverdale, with divers other of the Univerſity, that ſojourned there for learnings ſake. After theſe foundations laid, then did he read openly in the Houſe Pauls Epiſtles, and put by Duns and Dorbel, and yet he was a queſtionary himſelf: and onely, becauſe he would have Chriſt there taught and his Holy Word, he turned their unſavory problemes and fruitleſs diſputations to other better matter of the Holy Scripture, and thereby in ſhort ſpace he made divers good Divines. The ſame order of diſputation which he kept in his Houſe, he obſerved likewiſe in the Univerſity abroad when he ſhould diſpute with any man in the common Schools. And the firſt man that anſwered Doctor Barnes in the Scriptures, was Maſter Stafford for his form to be Batchelor of Divinity, which Diſputation was marvellous in the ſight of the great blind Doctors and joyful to the godly ſpirited.

Rob. Barnes Prior of the Houſe of Auguſtines in Cambridge.

Tho. Parnel a Londoner born, Scholar to Barnes.

Mr. Cambridge, Mr. Field, Mr. Coleman, Mr. Coverdale, Bacheler of Divinity.

Thus Barnes, what with his reading, diſputation, and preaching, became famous and mighty in the Scripture preaching ever againſt Biſhops and Hypocrites, and yet did not ſee his inward and outward Idolatry, which he both taught and maintained, till that good Maſter Bilney with other (as is aforeſaid in the life of Maſter Bilney) converted him wholly unto Chriſt.

The first Sermon that Dr. Barns preached in defence of the truth.

The first Sermon that ever he preached of this truth was the Sunday before Chriſtmas day, at Saint Edwards Church belonging to Trinity-Hall in Cambridge by the Peaſe Market; whoſe Theame was the Epiſtle, of the ſame Sunday, Gaudete in Domino, &c. And ſo poſtilled the whole Epiſtle, Following the Scripture and Luthers poſtil, and for that Sermon he was immediately accuſed of Hereſie by two Fellows of the Kings Hall. Then the godly learned in Chriſt both of Pembroke-Hall, Saint Johns, Peters-Houſe, Queens Colledg, the Kings Colledg, Gunwel Hall, and Benet Colledg ſhewed themſelves and flocked together in open ſight, both in the Schools and at open Sermons at Saint Maries, and at the Auſtins, and at other diſputations, and then they conferred continually together.

The Houſe that they reſorted moſt commonly unto was the white Horſe, which for deſpite of them, to bring Gods Word into contempt, was called Germany. This Houſe eſpecially was choſen becauſe many of them of Saint Johns, The Kings Colledge, and the Queens Colledge came in on the back ſide. At this time much trouble began to enſue. The Adverſaries of Doctor Barnes accuſed him in the Regent Houſe before the Vice-Chancellour, whereas his Articles were preſented with him and received, he promiſing to make anſwer at the next Convocation, and ſo it was done. Then Doctor Nottoris, a rank Enemy to Chriſt, moved Doctor Barnes to recant, but he refuſed ſo to do; which appeareth in his Book that he made to King Henry the eighth in Engliſh, confuting the judgment of Cardinal Wolſey, and the reſidue of the Biſhops Papiſtical, and ſo for the time ſtood ſtedfaſt. And this tragedy contpiued in Cambridge, one preaching againſt another, in trying out of Gods Truth, until within ſix days of Shrovetide. Then ſuddenly was ſent down to Cambridge a Sergeant of Arms, called Maſter Gibſon, dwelling in Saint Thomas Apoſtles in London, who ſuddenly arreſted Doctor Barnes openly in the Convocation-Houſe, to make all other afraid; and privily they had determined to make ſearch for Luthers Books, and all the Germans works ſuddenly.

Trouble amongſt the Cambridge men for the Goſpel.

Dr. Barnes arreſted by Mr. Gilſon.

But good Doctor Farman of the Queens Colledge ſent word incontinently thereof, to the Chambers of thoſe that were ſuſpected, which were in number thirty perſons. But, God be praiſed, they were conveyed away by that time that the Sergeant at Arms, the Vicechancellor and the Proctors were at every mans Chamber, going directly to the place where the Books lay (whereby it was perceived that there were ſome privy ſpies amongſt that ſmall company) and that night they ſtudied together, and gave him his anſwer, which anſwer he carried with him to London the next morning, which was the Tueſday before Shroveſunday, and came on the Wedneſday to London, and lay at maſter Parnels Houſe by the Stocks. In the morning he was carried by the Sergeant at Arms to Cardinal Wolſey to Weſtminſter, waiting there all day, and could not ſpeak with him till night. Then by reaſon of Doctor Gardiner Secretary to the Cardinal, (of whoſe familiar acquaintance he had been before) and Maſter Fox maſter of the Wards, he ſpake the ſame night with the Cardinal in his Chamber of Eſtate, kneeling on his Knees. Then ſaid the Cardinal to them, Is this Doctor Barnes your man that is accuſed of Hereſie? Yea, and pleaſe your Grace, and we truſt you ſhall find him reformable, for he is both well learned and wiſe.

False Brethren.

Dr. Barnes brought to London.

Dr. Gardiner Secretary to the Cardinal.

What, Mr. Doctor (ſaid the Cardinal) had you not a ſufficient ſcope in the Scriptures to teach the people, but that my golden ſhoes, my pollaxes, my pillars, my golden cuſhions, my Croſſes did ſo ſore offend you, that you muſt make us ridiculum Caput amongſt the people? We were jollily that day laughed to ſcorn. Verily it was a Sermon more fitter to be preached on a ſtage than in a Pulpit; for at the laſt you ſaid, I wear a pair of red gloves, I ſhould ſay bloody gloves (quoth you) that I ſhould not be cold in the midſt of my Ceremonies. And he anſwered, I ſpake nothing but the truth out of the Scriptures, according to my Conſcience, and according to the old Doctors; and then did he deliver him ſix ſheets of Paper written, to confirm and corroborate his ſayings.

The talk between Cardinal Wolſey and Dr. Barnes.

He received them ſmiling on him, and ſaying, We perceive then that you intend to ſtand to your Articles, and to ſhew your learning.

Yea, ſaid Barnes, that I do intend, by Gods Grace, with your Lordſhips favour.

He anſwered, Such as you are do bear us little favour and the Catholick Church. I will ask you a queſtion: Whether do you think it more neceſſary that I ſhould have all this Royalty, becauſe I repreſent the Kings Majeſties Perſon in all the high Courts of this Realm, to the terror and keeping down of all Rebellious Treaſons, Traitors, all the wicked and corrupt members of this Commonwealth, or to be as ſimple as you would have us, to ſell all theſe aforeſaid things, and to give it to the poor, which ſhortly will piſs it againſt the walls, and to pull away this Majeſty of a Princely dignity, which is a Terror to all the wicked, and to follow your Counſel in this behalf?

The preteaded reaſons of the Carthuſians, whereby they maintained their pomp.

He anſwered, I think it neceſſary to be ſold and given to the poor. For this is not comely for your calling, nor is the Kings Majeſty maintained by your pomp and pollaxes, but by God who ſaith, Per me Reges regnant, Kings and their Majeſty reign and ſtand by me.

Then anſwered he, Lo Maſter Doctors, here is the learned wiſe man that you told me of. Then they kneeled down and ſaid, we deſire your Grace to be good unto him, for he will be reformable.

Dr. Gardiner a ſuter for Barnes.

Then ſaid he, ſtand you up; for your ſakes and the Univerſity we will be good unto him. How ſay you Maſter Doctor, do you not know that I am Legatus de latere, and that I am able to diſpence in all matters concerning Religion within this Realm, as much as the Pope may? He ſaid, I know it be ſo.

Will you then be ruled by us, and we will do all things for your honeſty, and for the honeſty of the Univerſity.

He anſwered, I thank your Grace for your good will, I will ſtick to the Holy Scripture, and to Gods Book, according to the ſimple talent that God hath lent me.

Well, ſaid he, thou ſhalt have thy learning tried to the uttermoſt, and thou ſhalt have the Law.

Then he required him that he might have Juſtice with equity, and forthwith he ſhould have gone to the Tower, but that Gardiner and Fox became his Sureties that night, and ſo he came home to Mr. Parnels Houſe again, and that night fell to writing again and ſlept not, Maſter Coverdale, Maſter Goodwin, and Maſter Field being his writers; and in the morning he came to York place to Gardiner and Fox, and by and he was committed to the Sergeant of Arms to bring him into the Chapter Houſe at Weſtminſter before the Biſhops and the Abbot of Weſtminſter called Iſlip.

Still-yard men examined for Lollardy.

The ſame time when Doctor Barnes ſhould appear before the Cardinal, there were five Still-yard Men to be examined for Luthers Book and Lollardy, but after they ſpied Barnes they ſet the other aſide, and asked the Sergeant of Arms what was his errand. He ſaid he had brought one Doctor Barnes to be examined of Hereſie, and preſented both his Articles and his Accuſers. Then immediately after a little talk, they ſware him and laid his Articles to him. Who like as he anſwered the Cardinal before, ſo ſaid he unto them; and then he offered the Book of his probations unto them. Who asked him whether he had another for himſelf, and he ſaid yea, ſhewing it unto them. Who then took it from him, and ſaid they would have no leiſure to diſpute with him at that preſent, for other affairs of the Kings Majeſty, which they had to do, and therefore bade him ſtand aſide. Then they called the Still-yard Men again one by one, and when they were examined, they called forth the Maſter of the Fleet, and they were committed all to the Fleet. Then they called Dr. Barnes again, and asked him whether he would ſubſcribe to his Articles or no, and he ſubſcribed willingly; and then they committed him and young Maſter Parnel to the Fleet alſo with the other. There they remained, till Saturday in the morning, and the Warden of the Fleet was commanded that no Man ſhould ſpeak with him.

The Still-yard Men committed to the Fleet.

Dr. Barnes with Parnel committed to the Fleet.

On the Saturday he came again afore them into the Chapter Houſe, and there with the Still-yard men remained till five a clock at night. And after long diſputations, threatnings, and ſcornings, about five a clock at night they called him, to know whether he would abjure or burn. He was then in a great agony, and thought rather

Dr. Barnes and the Still-yard Men brought again before the Cardinal rather to burn than to abjure. But then was he said again to have the Counsel of Guard and Fox, and they perswaded him rather to abjure than to burn, because (they said) he should do no more in time to come, and with divers other perswasions that were mighty in the sight of reason and foolish Flesh. Upon that, kneeling upon his Knees, he consented to abjure, and the abjuration put in his hand, he abjured as it was there written, and then he subscribed with his own Hand; and yet they would scarcely receive him into the Bosom of the Church as they termed it. Then they put him to an Oath, and charged him to execute, do, and fulfil all that they commanded him, and he promised so to do.

Dr. Barns. perswaded by Gardiner and Fox to abjure.

Then, they commanded the Warden of the Fleet to carry him and his Fellows to the place from whence he came, and to be kept in close Prison, and in the morning to provide five Fagots for Doctor Barnes, and the four Still-yard Men. The fifth Still-yard Man was commanded to have a Taper of 5. pound weight to be provided for him, to offer, to the Rood of Northen in Pauls, and all these things to be ready by eight of the clock in the morning; and that he with all that he could make, with Bills and Glaves, and the Knight Marshal with all his Tipstaves that he could make, should bring them to Pauls and conduct them home again: In the morning they were all ready by their hour appointed in Pauls Church, the Church being so full that no man could get in. The Cardinal had a Scaffold made on the top of the stairs for himself, with six and thirty Abbots, mitred Priors and Bishops, and he in his whole pomp mitred (which Barnes spake against) sate there enthronised, his Chaplains and Spiritual Doctors in Gowns of Damask and Sattin, and he himself in Purple, even like a bloody Antichrist. And there was a new Pulpit erected on the top of the stairs also, for the Bishop of Rochester to preach against Luther and Doctor Barnes; and great Baskets full of Books standing before them within the Rails, which were commanded, after the great fire was made afore the Rood of Northen, there to be burned, and these Hereticks after the Sermon to go thrice about the fire and to cast in their Fagots.

Dr. Barns. & the Still-yard Men bear Fagots.

Now while the Sermon was a doing, Dr. Barnes, and the Still-yard men were commanded to kneel down and ask God forgiveness, the Catholick Church, and Cardinals Grace; and after that he was commanded at the end of the Sermon to declare that he was more charitably handled than he deserved, or was worthy (his Heresies were so horrible and so detestable) and once again kneeled down on his Knees, desiring the people of forgiveness and to pray for him; and so the Cardinal departed under a Canopy with all his mitred men with him till he came to the second Gate of Pauls, and then he took his Mule, and the mitred men came back again. Then these poor Men being commanded to come down from the Stage (whereon the Sweepers use to stand when they sweep the Church) the Bishops sat them down again, and commanded the Knight Marshal and the Warden of the Fleet with their company to carry them about the fire, and so were they brought to the Bishops, and there for absolution kneeled down. Where Rochester stood up and declared unto the people how many days of pardon and forgiveness of sins they had for being at that Sermon, and there did assoyl Doctor Barns with the other, and shewed the people that they were received into the Church again.

Days of pardon given for hearing a Popish Sermon.

This done, the Warden of the Fleet and the Knight Marshall were commanded to have them to the Fleet again, and charged that they should have the liberty of the Fleet as other Prisoners had, and that their Friends might resort unto them, and there to remain till the Lord Cardinals pleasure was known.

After that Barnes there in the Fleet had continued the space of half a year, at length being delivered, he was committed to be a free Prisoner at the Austin Friers in London. When those Caterpillars and bloody Beasts had there undermined him, they complained again to the Lord Cardinal. Whereupon he was removed to the Austin Friers of Northhampton, there to be burned. Yet he himself understanding nothing thereof, but supposing still that he should there remain, and continue in Free Prison, at last one Master Horne, who had brought him up, was his special Friend, having Intelligence of the Writ which should shortly be sent down to burn him, gave him Counsel to fain himself to be desperat; and that he should write a Letter to the Cardinal and leave it on his Table where he lay, and a Paper by, to declare whither he was gone to drown himself, and to leave his Clothes in the same place; and there another Letter to be left to the Mayor of the Town to search for him in the water, because he had a Letter written in parchment about his neck, closed in wax for the Cardinal, which should teach all men to beware by him. Upon this, they were seven days in searching for him, but he was conveyed to London in a poor mans apparel, and so tarried not there, but took Shipping and went by long Seas to Antwerp, and so to Luther, and there fell to study till he had made an answer to all the Bishops of the Realm, and had made a Book intituled, Acta Romanorum Pontificum, and another Book with a supplication to King Henry. Immediately it was told the Cardinal, that he was drowned, and he said, Perit memoria ejus cum sonitu. But this did light upon himself shortly after, which wretchedly died at Leicester.

Dr. Barns fained himself to be drowned.

In the same season Dr. Barns was made strong in Christ and got favor both the learned in Christ and forrein Princes in Germany, and was great with Luther, Melancthon, Pomeran, Justus Jonas, Hegendorphinus, and Æpinus, and with the Duke of Saxon, and with the King of Denmark, which King of Denmark in the time of More and Stokesly sent him with the Lubecks, as an Embassadour to King Henry the eighth. He lay with the Lubecks Chancellor at the Still-yard.

Dr. Barnes sent Embassador from the King of Denmark to King Henry, into England.

Sir Thomas More then Chancellor would fain have entrapped him, but the King would not let him, for Cromwel was his great Friend. And ere he went, the Lubecks and he disputed with the Bishops of this Realm in defence of the Truth, and so he departed again without restraint with the Lubecks. After his going again to Wittenberge to the Duke of Saxon, and to Luther, he remained there to set forward his works in print that he had begun, from whence he returned again in the beginning of the Reign of Queen Anne, as others did, and continued a faithful Preacher in this City, being all her time well entertained and promoted. After that he was sent Embassador by King Henry the eighth to the Duke of Cleve, for the Marriage of the Lady Anne of Cleve, between the King and her, and well accepted in the Embassade and in all his doings, until the time that Steven Gardiner came out of France; but after he came, neither Religion prospered, nor the Queens Majesty, nor Cromwel, nor the Preachers; who, after the Marriage of the Lady Cleve, never ceased until he had grafted the Marriage in another stock, by the occasion whereof he began his bloody Broyl.

Sir Thomas More sought the death of Dr. Barnes.

Dr. Barnes returned again into England in the time of Queen Anne.

Dr. Barnes sent Embassador by King Henry to the Duke of Cleve.

For not long after, Dr. Barnes with his Brethren were apprehended and carried before the Kings Majesty to Hampton-Court, and there he was examined. Where the Kings Majesty seeking the mean of his safety, to bring Winchester and him agreed, at Winchesters request granted him leave to go home with the Bishop to confer with him, and so he did. But as it happened, they not agreeing, Gardiner and his Compartners sought by all subtil means how to entangle and to entrap them in further danger, which not long after was brought to pass. For by certain Complaints made to the King of them, they were enjoyned to preach three Sermons the next Easter following at the Spittle. At the which Sermons, besides other Reporters which were thither sent, Stephen Gardiner also was there present sitting with the Mayor, either to bear record of their Recantation, or else as the Pharisees came to Christ, to trip them in their talk, if they had spoken any thing awry. When these three had thus preached their Sermons, among whom Barnes preaching the first Sermon, and seeing Stephen Gardiner there present, humbly desired him in the face of all the Audience, if he forgave him, to hold up his Hand, and the said Gardiner thereupon held up his finger; yet notwithstanding shortly after, by the means of the said reports, they were sent for to Hampton-Court; who from thence were carried to the Tower by Sir John Gostwike. From thence they never came out till they came to their Death, as hereafter, Christ willing, shall more appear.

And thus hitherto concerning the Hiſtory of Barnes. Now let us likewiſe, conſider the ſtory and doings of Thomas Garret.

The Story of Thomas Garret or Garrard, and of his trouble in Oxford, teſtified and recorded by Anthony Dalaber, who was there preſent the ſame time.

Tho. Garret brought Books to Oxford.

ABout the year of our Lord 1526. Mr. Garret, Curate in Hony-Lane in London, came unto Oxford, and brought with him ſundry Books in Latin, treating of the Scripture, with the firſt part of Unio diſſidentium, and Tindals firſt tranſlation of the New Teſtament in Engliſh, the which Books he ſold to divers Scholars in Oxford.

Garret ſought for at London.

After he had been there a while, and had diſpatched thoſe Books, News came from London, that he was ſearched for through all London to be apprehended and taken as an Heretick, and to be impriſoned for ſelling of thoſe heretical Books (as they termed them) becauſe they ſpake againſt the uſurped Authority and erroneous Doctrine of the Biſhop of Rome, and his no leſs impure and filthy Synagogue. For it was not unknown to Cardinal Wolſey, and to the Biſhop of London, and to other of that ungodly Generation, that Mr. Garret had a great number of thoſe Books, and that he was gone to Oxford to make ſale of them there, to ſuch as he knew to be the lovers of the Goſpel. Wherefore they determined forthwith to make a privy ſearch through all Oxford, to apprehend and impriſon him, and to burn all and every his foreſaid Books, and him too if they could; ſo burning hot was their Charity. But yet at that time one of the foreſaid Proctors, called M. Cole of Magdalen Colledge, who after was Croſs-bearer unto Cardinal Wolſey, was well acquainted with Mr. Garret, and therefore he gave ſecret warning unto a Friend or two of Mr. Garrets of this privy ſearch, and willed therefore that he ſhould forthwith, as ſecretly as he could, depart out of Oxford; for if he were taken in the ſame ſearch, no remedy but he ſhould be forthwith ſent up unto the Cardinal, and ſo he ſhould be committed unto the Tower.

A privy ſearch in Oxford for Garret. M. Cole of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford.

Anthony Dalaber Scholar of Alborne-Hall, Reporter hereof.

The Chriſtmaſs before that time, I Anthony Dalaber then Scholar of Alborne-Hall, who had Books of Mr. Garrets, had been in my Country in Dorſetſhire at Stalbridge, where I had a Brother Parſon of that Pariſh, who was very deſirous to have a Curate out of Oxford, and willed me in any wiſe to get him one there if I could. This juſt occaſion offered, it was thought good among the Brethren (for ſo did we not only call one another, but were indeed one to another) that Mr. Garret, changing his Name, ſhould be ſent forth with my Letters into Dorſetſhire to my Brother, to ſerve him there for a time, until he might ſecretly from thence convey himſelf ſome whither over the Sea. According hereunto I wrote my Letters in all haſt poſſible unto my Brother, for Mr. Garret to be his Curate, but not declaring what he was indeed, for my Brother was a rank Papiſt, and afterward was the moſt mortal Enemy that ever I had for the Goſpels ſake.

Brother againſt Brother.

So the Wedneſday in the Morning before Shrovetide Mr. Garret departed out of Oxford toward Dorſetſhire, with his Letters for his new Service. How far he went, and by what occaſion he ſoon returned, I know not. But the Friday next, in the Night time he came again to Radleys Houſe, where he lay before, and ſo after Midnight, in the privy ſearch which was then made for him, he was apprehended and taken there in his Bed by the two Proctors, and on the Saturday in the Morning was delivered unto one Dr. Cottisford Maſter of Lincoln Colledge, then being Commiſſary of the Univerſity, who kept him as Priſoner in his own Chamber. There was great joy and rejoycing among all the Papiſts for his Apprehenſion, and ſpecially with Dr. London, Warden of the New Colledge, and Dr. Higdon Dean of Frideſwides, two Arch-Papiſts, who immediately ſent their Letters in poſt-haſt unto the Cardinal, to inform him of the apprehenſion of this notable Heretick. For the which their doing they were well aſſured to have great thanks. But of all this ſudden hurly-burly was I utterly ignorant, ſo that I knew neither of Mr. Garrets ſo ſudden return, neither that he was ſo taken; until that afterward he came unto my Chamber, being then in Glouceſter Colledge, as a man amazed, and as ſoon as he ſaw me, he ſaid he was undone, for he was taken. Thus he ſpake unadviſedly in the preſence of a young man that came with him. When the young man was departed I asked him what he was, and what acquaintance he had with him. He ſaid, he knew him not: but he had been to ſeek a Monk of his acquaintance in that Colledge, who was not in his Chamber, and thereupon deſired that his Servant, (not knowing my Chamber, for that I was newly removed thither) to bring him to me: and ſo forth declared how he was returned and taken that Night in the privy ſearch, as ye have heard, and that now when the Commiſſary and all his Company were gone to Even-ſong, and had locked him alone in his Chamber, he hearing no body ſtirring in the Colledge, put back the Bar of the Lock with his Finger, and ſo came ſtrait unto Glouceſter Colledge, to ſpeak with that Monk, if he had been within, who had alſo bought Books of him.

Garret taken in the privy ſearch

The miraculous deliverance of Garret out of the Commiſſaries Chamber.

Then ſaid I unto him, Alas Mr. Garret, by this your uncircumſpect coming unto me, and ſpeaking ſo before this young man, you have diſcloſed your ſelf, and utterly undone me. I asked him, why he went not unto my Brother with my Letters accordingly. He ſaid, after that he was gone a days Journey and a half, he was ſo fearful, that his heart would no other but that he muſt needs return again unto Oxford; and ſo he came again on Friday at Night, and then was taken, as ye heard before. But now with deep ſighs and plenty of tears, he prayed me to help to convey him away, and ſo he caſt off his Hood and his Gown, wherein he came unto me, and deſired me to give him a Coat with Sleeves, if I had any, and told me that he would go into Wales, and thence convey himſelf into Germany, if he might. Then I put on him a ſleeved Coat of mine. He would alſo have had another manner of Cap of me, but I had none but Prieſt-like, ſuch as his own was.

Garret changeth his Apparel and flieth.

Then kneeled we both down together upon our knees, and lifting up our hearts and hands to God our heavenly Father, deſiring him with plenty of tears ſo to conduct and proſper him in his Journey, that he might well eſcape the danger of all his Enemies, to the glory of his holy Name, if his good pleaſure and will ſo were; and then we embraced and kiſſed the one the other, the tears ſo abundantly flowing out from both our eyes, that we all bewet both our faces, and ſcarcely for ſorrow could we ſpeak one to another; and ſo he departed from me apparelled in my Coat, being committed unto the tuition of our Almighty and Merciful Father.

The parting between Mr. Garret and Dalaber.

When he was gone down the Stairs from my Chamber, I ſtraightways did ſhut my Chamber-door, and went into my Study, and took the New Teſtament in my hands, kneeled down on my knees, and with many a deep ſigh and ſalt tear I did with much deliberation read over the tenth Chapter of St. Matthew's Goſpel: and when I had ſo done, with Prayer I did commit unto God that our dearly beloved Brother Garret, earneſtly beſeeching him, in and for Jeſus Chriſts ſake his only begotten Son our Lord, that he would vouchſafe not only ſafely to conduct and keep our ſaid dear Brother from the hands of all his Enemies; but alſo that he would endue his tender and lately born little Flock in Oxford with heavenly ſtrength by his holy Spirit, that they might be well able thereby valiantly to withſtand to his glory all their fierce Enemies, and alſo might quietly, to their own ſalvation, with all godly patience bear Chriſts heavy Croſs, which I now ſaw was preſently to be laid on their young and weak backs, unable to bear ſo huge a burthen, without the great help of his Holy Spirit.

Dalaber's Prayer for Mr. Garret.

This done, I laid aſide my Book ſafe, folded up Mr. Garrets Gown and Hood, and laid them in my Preſs among mine Apparel, and ſo having put on my ſhort Gown, ſhut up my Study and Chamber-doors, and went toward Friſwides, to ſpeak with that worthy Martyr of God M. Clark, and others, and to declare unto them what had hapned that Afternoon. But of purpoſe I went by St. Mary Church, to go firſt unto Corpus Chriſti Colledge, to ſpeak with Diet and Udal, my faithful Brethren and Fellows in the Lord there. But by chance I met by the way with a Brother of ours, one Maſter Eden, fellow of Magdalen-Colledge, who, as ſoon as he ſaw me, came with a pitiful countenance unto me, ſaying, that we were all undone, for Maſter Garret was returned again to Oxford, taken the laſt night in the Privy ſearch, and was in Priſon with the Commiſſary. I ſaid it was not ſo. He ſaid it was ſo. I told him it could not be ſo, for I was ſure he was gone. He anſwered me and ſaid, I know he was gone with your Letters, but he came again yeſterday in the even, and was taken in his Bed at Radleis this night in the Privy ſearch; for, quoth he, I heard our Proctor Maſter Cole ſay and declare the ſame this day in our Colledge to divers of the Houſe. But I told him again, that I was well aſſured he was now gone, for I ſpake with him later then either the Proctor or the Commiſſary did: and then I declared the whole matter unto him, how and when he came unto me, and how he went his way, willing him to declare the ſame unto our other Brethren whom he ſhould meet withal, and to give God hearty thanks for his wonderful deliverance and to pray him alſo that he would grant him ſafely to paſs away from all his enemies, and told him that I was going unto Maſter Clarke of Frideſwides, to declare unto him this matter; for I knew and thought verily that he and divers others there were in great ſorrow for this matter. Then I went ſtraight to Friſwides, and Evenſong was begun, and the Dean and the other Canons were there in their gray Amices; they were almoſt at Magnificat before I came thither, I ſtood at the Quire Door and heard Mr. Taverner play, and others of the Chappel there ſing with and among whom I my ſelf was wont to ſing alſo, but now my ſinging and muſick was turned into ſighing and muſing.

Mr. Clark a famous & worthy learned man.

M. Taverne.

The Phariſies troubled at M. Garrets eſcape out of Priſon.

As I thus and there ſtood, in cometh Dr. Cotiſford the Commiſſary as faſt as ever he could go, bare headed, as pale as Aſhes (I knew his grief well enough) and to the Dean he goeth into the Quire, where he was ſitting in his Stall, and talked with him very ſorrowfully: what I know not, but whereof I might and did well and truly gheſs. I went aſide from the Quire Door, to ſee and hear more. The Commiſſary and Dean came out of the Quire wonderfully troubled, as it ſeemed. About the middle of the Church met them Dr. London puffing, bluſtring, and blowing, like an hungry and greedy Lion ſeeking his Prey. They talkt together a while, but the Commiſſary was much blamed of them for keeping of his Priſoner ſo negligently, inſomuch that he wept for ſorrow: and it was known abroad that Maſter Garret was eſcaped, and gone out of the Commiſſaries Chamber at Evenſong time, but whither no man could tell. Theſe Doctors departed, and ſent abroad their Servants and ſpies every where. Maſter Clark about the middle of Compline came forth of the Quire: I followed him to his Chamber, and declared what was happened that afternoon, of Maſter Garrets eſcape. He was glad, for he knew of his foretaking. Then he ſent for one Mr. Sumner and Mr. Bets, Fellows, and Canons there. In the mean while he gave me a very good exhortation, praying God to give me, and all the reſt of our Brethren, Prudentiam ſerpentinam & ſimplicitatem columbinam, for we ſhould have ſhortly much need thereof, as he verily thought. When Mr. Sumner and Mr. Bets were come unto him, he cauſed me to declare again the whole matter to them two, and they were very glad that Maſter Garret was ſo delivered, truſting that he ſhould eſcape all his enemies. Then deſiring them to tell unto our other Brethren what was happened, (for there were divers other in that Colledge) I went to Corpus Chriſti Colledge to comfort our Brethren there being in like heavineſs. There I tarried and ſupped with them. At which Supper we were not very merry, conſidering our State and peril at hand.

M. Clark.

M. Sumner.
Mr. Bets.

When we had ended our Supper, and committed our whole cauſe with fervent ſighs and hearty Praiers unto God our heavenly Father, I went to Alborn-Hall, and there lay that night. In the morning I was up very early, and ſo ſoon as I could get out of the door, I went ſtraight toward Glouceſter Colledge to my Chamber. It had rained that morning, and with my going I had all to be ſprinkled my hoſe and ſhoes with mire. And when I was come unto Glouceſter Colledge, which was about ſix of the Clock, I found the Gates faſt ſhut. Whereat I did much marvel, for they were wont to be opened daily long before that time. Then did I walk up and down by the Wall there, a whole hour before the Gates were opened. In the mean while my muſing head being full of forecaſting cares, and my ſorrowful heart flowing with doleful ſighs, I fully determined in my conſcience before God, that if I ſhould chance to be taken and be examined, I would accuſe no man nor declare any thing further than I did already perceive was manifeſtly known before. And ſo when the Gate was opened, thinking to ſhift my ſelf, and to put on a longer Gown, I went in towards my Chamber, and going up the Stairs, would have opened my Door, but I could not in a long ſeaſon do it. Whereby I perceived that my Lock had been medled withal, and therewith was ſomewhat altered. Yet at laſt with much ado I opened the Lock and went in. When I came in, I ſaw my bed all to be toſſed and tumbled, my Cloaths in my Preſs thrown down, and my ſtudy door open. Whereat I was much amaſed, and thought verily that ſome ſearch was made there that night for Mr. Garret, and that it was known of his being with me, by the Monks man that brought him to my Chamber.

Dalabers Chamber ſearched for M. Garret.

Now was there lying in the next Chamber unto me a Monk, who, as ſoon as he had heard me in the Chamber, came to me, and told how Mr. Garret was ſought for in my Chamber that night, and what ado there was made by the Commiſſary and the two Proctors, with Bills and Swords thruſt through my bed ſtraw, and how every Corner of my Chamber was ſearched for Mr. Garret. And albeit his Gown and his Hood lay there in my Preſs with my Cloaths, yet they perceived them not. Then he told me he was commanded to bring me as ſoon as I came in, unto the Prior of the Students named Anthony Dunſtan a Monk of Weſtminſter. This ſo troubled me that I forgot to make clean my hoſe and ſhoos, and to ſhift me into another Gown, and therefore ſo all to be dirred as I was, and in my ſhort Gown, I went with him to the ſaid Priors Chamber, where I found the ſaid Prior ſtanding and looking for my coming. He asked me where I had been that night. I told him I lay at Alborn-Hall with my old bedfellow Fitzjames, but he would not believe me. He asked me if Maſter Garret were with me yeſterday. I told him yea. Then he would know where he was, and wherefore he came unto me. I told him I knew not where he was except he were at Woodſtock. For ſo, ſaid I, he had ſhewed me that he would go thither becauſe one of the Keepers there his Friend had promiſed him a piece of Veniſon to make merry withal the Shrovetide, and that he would have borrowed a Hat and a pair of high ſhoos of me, but I had none indeed to lend him. This Tale I thought meeteſt, though it were nothing ſo. Then had he ſpied on my finger a big Ring of ſilver very well double gilt with two Letters A. D. ingraved in it for my name; I ſuppoſe he thought it to be Gold. He required to ſee it. I took it unto him. When he had it in his hand, he ſaid it was his Ring, for therein was his name: An A. for Anthony. and a D, for Dunſtane. When I heard him ſo ſay, I wiſhed in my heart to be as well delivered from and out of his Company, as I was aſſured to be delivered from my Ring for ever.

Dalaber brought to the Prior of Glouceſter Colledge.

Anthony Dalabers ring taken from him.

Then he called for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and commanded me to write when and how Garret came unto me, and where he was become. I had ſcarcely written three words, but the chief Beadle with two or three of the Commiſſaries men were come unto Mr. Prior, requiring him ſtraightwaies to bring us away unto Lincolne Colledge to the Commiſſary, and to Doctor London. Whither when I was brought into the Chappel, there I found Dr. Cotisford Commiſſary, Doctor Higdon then Dean of the Cardinals Colledge, and Doctor London Warden of the New Colledge, ſtanding together at the Altar in the Chappel. When I was brought unto them, after Salutations given and taken between them, they called for Chairs and ſate down, and called for me to come to them. And firſt they asked what my name was. I told them that my name was Anthony Dalaber. Then they alſo asked me how long I had been ſtudent in the Univerſity, and I told them almoſt three years. And they asked me what what I ſtudied. I told them that I had read Sophiſtry and Logick in Alborn Hall, and now was removed unto Glouceſter Colledge to ſtudy the Civil Law, the which the foreſaid Prior of the Students affirmed to be true. Then they asked me whether I knew Maſter Garret, and how long I had known him. I told them I knew him well, and had known him almoſt a twelve Month. They asked me when he was with me. I told them yeſterday at afternoon.

Anthony Dalaber apprehended and troubled for Mr. Garret.

Now by this time, whiles they had me in this talk, one came unto them which was ſent for, with Pen, Ink and Paper; I trow it was the Clarke of the Univerſity. As ſoon as he was come, there was a Board and Treſles with a form for him to ſit on, ſet between the Doctors and me, and a great Maſs-Book layed before me, and I was commanded to lay my right hand on it, and to ſwear that I ſhould truly anſwer unto ſuch Articles and Interrogatories as I ſhould be by them examined upon. I made danger of it awhile at firſt, but afterward being perſwaded by them, partly by fair words, and partly by great threats, I promiſed to do as they would have me, but in my heart meant nothing ſo to do. So I laid my Hand on the Book, and one of them gave me my Oath, and that done commanded me to Kiſs the Book. Then made they great courteſie between them who ſhould examine me, and miniſter Interrogatories unto me. At the laſt, the rankeſt Papiſtical Phariſee of them all, Dr. London took upon him to do it.

The examination of Anthony Dalaber.

Dr. London Warden of New Colledge an arch Phariſee.

Then he asked me again by my Oath where Maſter Garret was, and whither I had conveyed him. I told him I had not conveyed him, nor yet wiſt where he was, nor whither he was gone, except he were gone to Woodſtock (as I had before ſaid) as he ſhewed me he would. Then he asked me again when he came to me, how he came to me, what and how long he talked with me, and whither he went from me. I told him he came to me about Evenſong time, and that one brought him unto my Chamber Door, whom I knew not, and that he told me he would go to Woodſtock for ſome Veniſon to make merry withal this Shrovetide, and that he would have borrowed a Hat, and a pair of high ſhoes of me, but I had none ſuch to lend him, and then he ſtraight went his way from me, but whither I know not. All theſe my ſayings the Scribe wrote in a Paper Book.

Then they earneſtly required me to tell them whither I had conveyed him, for ſurely they ſaid I brought him going ſome whither this morning, for that they might well perceive by my foul ſhoes and dirty hoſen, I had travelled with him the moſt part of this night. I anſwered plainly that I lay at Albern Hall with Sir Fitzjames, and that I had good witneſs thereof there. They asked me where I was at Evenſong. I told them at Friſwides, and that I ſaw firſt Maſter Commiſſary, and then Maſter Doctor London come thither at that time unto Maſter Dean of Friſwides, and that I ſaw them talking together in the Church there. Doctor London and the Dean threatned me, that if I would not tell the truth where I had done him, or whither he was gone, I ſhould ſurely be ſent to the Tower of London, and there be racked, and put into Little-eaſe. But Maſter Commiſſary prayed me with gentle words, to tell him where he was, that he might have him again, and he would be my very great Friend, and deliver me out of trouble ſtraight way. I told him I could not tell where he was, nor whither he was become. Thus they did occupy and toſs me almoſt two hours in the Chappel, ſometimes with threatnings and foul words, and then with fair words and fair promiſes flattering me. Then was he that brought Mr. Garret unto my Chamber brought before me, and cauſed to declare what Mr. Garret ſaid unto me at his coming to my Chamber; but I ſaid plainly I heard him ſay no ſuch thing, for I thought my nay to be as good as his yea, ſeeing it was to rid and deliver my godly Brother out of trouble and peril of his life.

At the laſt, when they could get nothing of me whereby to hurt or accuſe any man, or to know any thing of the which they ſought, they, all three together brought me up a long ſtairs into a great Chamber over Maſter Commiſſaries Chamber wherein ſtood a great pair of very high Stocks. Then Maſter Commiſſary asked me for my purſe and girdle, took away my money and my knives, and then they put both my leggs into the ſtocks, and ſo locked me faſt in them: in which I ſate, my feet being almoſt as high as my head, and ſo departed they (I think to their abominable Maſs) locked faſt the Chamber Door, and leaving me alone. When they all were gone, then came unto my remembrance the worthy forewarning and godly declaration of that moſt conſtant martyr of God, Maſter John Clark my Father in Chriſt, who welnigh two years before that, when I did earneſtly deſire him to grant me to be his Scholar, and that I might go with him continually when and whereſoever he ſhould teach or preach (the which he did daily) ſaid unto me much after this ſort, Dalaber, you deſire you wot not what, and that you are, I fear me, unable to take upon you: for though now my preaching be ſweet and pleaſant unto you, becauſe there is yet no perſecution laid on you for it, yet the time will come, and that peradventure ſhortly, if ye continue to live godly therein, that God will lay on you the Croſs of perſecution to try you withal, whether you can as pure gold abide the fire, or as ſtubble and droſs be conſumed. For the Holy Ghoſt plainly affirmeth by Saint Paul; Quod omnes qui piè volunt vivere in Chriſto Jeſu perſecutionem patientur. Yea, you ſhall be called and judged an Heretick, you ſhall be abhorred of the world, your own Friends and kinsfolk will forſake you, and alſo hate you, and you ſhall be caſt into Priſon, and no man ſhall dare to help or comfort you, and you ſhall be accuſed and brought before the Biſhops to your reproach and ſhame, to the great ſorrow of all your faithful Friends and Kinsfolk. Then will ye wiſh ye had never known this Doctrine; then will ye curſe Clarke, and wiſh that ye had never known him, becauſe he hath brought you to all theſe troubles. Therefore rather than that you ſhould do this, leave off from medling with this Doctrine, and deſire not to be and continue in my company.

The exhortion of Mr. Clarke to Anthony Dalaber.

2 Tim. 3.

The Croſs commonly followeth the Goſpel.

At which words I was ſo griev'd, that I fell down on my Knees at his feet, and with abundance of tears and ſighs, even from the very bottom of my heart I earneſtly beſought him, that for the tender mercy of God ſhewed to us in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt he would not refuſe me, but receive me into his company, as I had deſired, ſaying that I truſted verily, that he which had begun this in me would not forſake me, but give me grace to continue therein unto the end. When he heard me ſay ſo, he came to me and took me up in his Arms, kiſſed me, the tears trickling down from his eyes, and ſaid unto me; The Lord Almighty grant you ſo to do, and from henceforth for ever take me for your Father, and I will take you for my Son in Chriſt. Now were there at this time in Oxford divers Graduates and Scholars of ſundry Colledges and Halls, whom God had called to the knowledge of his holy Word, which all reſorted unto Mr. Clarks Diſputations and Lectures in Divinity at all times as they might, and when they might not come conveniently, I was by Mr. Clark appointed to reſort to every one of them weekly, and to know what doubts they had in any place of the Scripture, that by me from him they might have the true underſtanding of the ſame. Which exerciſe did me much good and profit, to the underſtanding of the holy Scriptures, which I moſt deſired.

This foreſaid forewarning and godly declaration (I ſay) of this moſt godly Martyr of God Mr Clarke, coming to my remembrance, cauſed me with deep ſighs to cry unto God from my heart, to aſſiſt me with his Holy Spirit, that I might be able patiently and quietly to bear and ſuffer whatſoever it ſhould pleaſe him of his fatherly love to lay on me, to his glory, and the comfort of my dearly beloved Brethren, whom I thought now to be in great fear and anguiſh, leſt I would be an accuſer of them all; for unto me they all were well known, and all their doings in that matter. But God be bleſſed, I was fully bent never to accuſe any of them, whatſoever ſhould happen of me. Before Dinner Maſter Cotisford came up to me, and requeſted me earneſtly to tell him where Mr. Garret was, and if I would ſo do, he promiſed me ſtraightways to deliver me out of Priſon. But I told him I could not tell where he was, no more indeed I could. Then he departed to dinner, asking me if I would eat any meat, I told him, Yea, right gladly. He ſaid he would ſend me ſome. When he was gone, his Servants asked asked me divers questions, which I do not now remember, and some of them spake to me fair, and some threatned me, calling me Heretick, and so departed, locking the door fast upon me.

Thus far Anthony Dalaber hath prosecuted this Story, who before the finishing departed, the year 1562. in the Dioces of Salisbury; the residue whereof as we could gather it out of ancient and credible Persons, so have we added here unto the same.

Tho. Garret apprehended, brought to Oxford.

After this, Garret was apprehended or taken by Master Cole the Proctor, or his men going Westward, at a place called Hinksey, a little beyond Oxford, and so being brought back again was committed to Ward: that done, he was convented before the Commissary, Doctor London, and Doctor Higdon Dean of Frideswides (now called Christs Colledg) into St. Maries Church, where they sitting in judgment, convicted him according to their Law as an Heretick (as they said) and afterward compelled him to carry a Fagot in open Procession from St. Maries Church to Frideswides, and Dalaber likewise with him, Garret having his red Hood on his shoulders like a Master of Art. After that, they were sent to Osney, there to be kept in Prison till further order was taken.

There were suspected beside a great number to be infected with Heresie, as they called it, for having such Books of Gods Truth, as Master Garret sold unto them; as Master Clark, which died in his Chamber, and could not be suffered to receive the Communion, being in Prison, and saying these words; Crede, & manducasti; Master Sumner, Mr. Bets, Taverner the Musitian, Radley, with other of Frideswides Colledge; of Corpus Christi Colledge, as Udal and Diet, with other of Magdalen Colledge, one Eden, with other of Gloucester Colledge, and two black Moncks, one of Saint Austines of Canterbury named Langport, the other of Saint Edmunds Bury, Monk, named John Salisbury, two white Monks of Bernard Colledge, two Canons of Saint Maries Colledge, one of them named Robert Ferrar, afterward Bishop of Saint Davids, and burned in Queen Maries time. These two Canons, because they had no place in the University with the other, they went on the contrary side of the Procession bare headed, and a Beadle before them to be known from the other. Divers other there were, whose names I cannot remember, which were forced and constrained to forsake their Colledges, and sought their Friends. Against the Procession time there was a great fire made upon the Top of Carfaxe, whereinto all such as were in the said Procession, either convict or suspect of Heresie, were commanded in token of repentance and renouncing of their errors, every man to cast a Book into the fire as thy passed by.

After this, Master Garret flying from place to place escaped their Tyranny, until this present time that he was again apprehended and burned with Doctor Barns with whom also William Hierome sometime Vicar of Stepney was likewise drawn into Smithfield, and there together with them constantly endured Martyrdom in the fire.

W. Hierome burned in Smithfield.

Now let us add also to these the Story of Hierome

The life and Story of William Hierome Vicar of Stepney and Martyr of Christ.

The Story of W. Hierome. The Sermon of W. Hierome, preached at Pauls Cross the fourth Sunday in Lent.

THe third Company which suffered with Barns and Garret, was W. Hierome Vicar of Stepney. This Hierome being a diligent preacher of Gods Word, for the comfort and edification of the People, had preached divers and sundry Sermons, wherein to the intent to plant in the consciences of men the sincere Truth of Christian Religion, he laboured as much as time then served, to extirp and weed out the roots of mens Traditions, Doctrines, Dreams and Fantasies. In so doing it could not otherwise be but he must needs provoke much hatred against him amongst the Adversaries of Christs Gospel.

It so happened, that the said Hierome, preaching at Pauls on the fourth Sunday in Lent last past, made there a Sermon, wherein he recited and mentioned of Agar and Sara, declaring what these two signified. In process whereof he shewed further how that Sara and her Child Isaac and all they that were Isaacs, and born of the free Woman Sara, were freely justified: contrary, they that were born of Agar the Bondwoman were bound and under the Law, and cannot be freely justified. In these words what was here spoken, but that Saint Paul himself uttereth and expoundeth in his Epistle to the Gal. 4. or what could here be gathered of any reasonable or indifferent hearer, but consonant to sound Doctrin, and vein of the Gospel? Now see what Rancor and malice armed with crafty and subtil Sophistry can do. This Sermon finished, it was not long but he was charged and convented before the King at Westminster, and there accused for Erroneous Doctrin. Gal. 4.

Percase thou wilt muse (gentle reader) what Erroneous Doctrin here could be picked out. Note therfore for thy learning; and he that listeth to study how to play the Sycophant, let him here take example. The knot found in this Rush was this, for that he preached Erroneously at Pauls Cross, teaching the People that all that were born of Sara were freely justified; speaking there absolutely without any condition either of Baptism or of Penance, &c. Who doubteth here but if St. Paul himself had been at Pauls Cross, and had preached the same words to the English-men, which he wrote to the Galathians in this behalf, ipso facto, he had been apprehended for an Heretick for preaching against the Sacrament of Baptism and Repentance.

Quarrel picke against Hierome Sermons.

Furthermore it was objected against him, touching matter against Magistrates, and Laws by them made. Whereto he answered again and affirmed (as he had before preached) that no Magistrate of himself could make any Law or Laws, private or otherwise, to bind the inferior People, unless it were by the Power, Authority and Commandment of his or their Princes to him or them given, but only the Prince. And moreover, to confirm the same he added, saying, that if the Prince make Laws consenting to Gods Laws, we are bound to obey them. And if he make Laws repugnant to the Laws of God, and be an evil and wicked Prince; yet are we bound humbly to suffer him, and not violently to resist or grudge against him.

W. Hierome accused for preaching against Magistrates.

Also concerning his Sermons, one Doctor Wilson entred into disputation with him, and defended that good works justified before God, and were necessary and available to Salvation. To whom Hierome answered again, That all works, whatsoever they were, were nothing worth, nor any part of salvation of themselves, but only referred to the mercy and love of God, which mercy and love of God directeth the workers thereof, and yet it is at his mercy and goodness to accept them. Which to be true, Doctor Wilson neither could nor did deny.

Works no part of our salvation.

Good works avail not but only by imputation.

And thus much concerning the several Stories of these three good men. Now let us see the order of their Martyrdom, joyning them all together; what was the cause of their condemnation; and what were their Protestations and words at their suffering.

Yeheard before how Barns, Hierome, and Garret were caused to preach at Easter at the Spittle. the occasion whereof, as I find it reported by Stephen Gardiner writing against George Joye, I thought good here to discourse more at large.

Out of the preface of Stephen Gardiner against George Joy.

Stephen Gardiner hearing that the said Barns, Hierome, and Garret should preach the Lent following, Anno, 1541. at Pauls Cross, to stop the course of their Doctrine sent his Chaplain to the Bishop of London, the Saturday before the first Sunday in Lent, to have a place for him to preach at Pauls. Which to him was granted, and time appointed that he should preach the Sunday following, which should be on the morrow; which Sunday was appointed before for Barns to occupy that room. Gardiner therefore, determining to declare the Gospel of that Sunday containing the Devils three temptations, began amongst other things to note the abuse of Scripture amongst some, as the Devil abused it to Christ, and so alluding to the temptation of the Devil, wherein he alledged the Scripture against Christ, to cast himself downward, and that he should take no h t, he inferred thereupon, saying:

Now

The effect of Ste. Gardiners Sermon at Pauls Croſs the firſt Sunday in Lent, Anno 1541.

Now adays, quoth he, the Devil tempteth the World, and biddeth them to caſt themſelves backward. There is no forward in the new teaching, but all backward. Now the Devil teacheth, come back from faſting, come back from praying, come back from confeſſion, come back from weeping for thy ſins, and all is backward; inſomuch that men muſt now learn to ſay their Pater noſter backward. For where we ſaid, Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our Debtors; now it is, as thou forgaveſt our debts, ſo I will forgive my Debtors; and ſo God muſt forgive firſt, and all I ſay is turned backward,&c.

Pardon procured by the Devil, quoth Steph. Gardiner. Gardiner againſt Friers and Pardons.

Amongſt other things, moreover he noted the Devils craft and ſhift in deceiving man: who envying his felicity, and therefore coveting to have man idle, and void of good works, and to be led in that idleneſs with a vain hope to live merrily at his pleaſure here, and yet to have Heaven at the laſt, hath for that purpoſe procured out Pardons from Rome, wherein Heaven was ſold for a little Mony; and to retale that Merchandiſe, the Devil uſed Friers for his Miniſters. Now they be gone with all their Trumpery; but the Devil is not yet gone,&c. And now that the Devil perceiveth that it can no longer be born(to buy and ſell Heaven by the Friers, he hath excogitate to offer Heaven without works for it, ſo freely, that men ſhall not need for Heaven to work at all, whatſoever opportunity they have to wrok; marry, if they will have any higher place in Heaven, God will leave no work unrewarded; but as to be in Heaven needs no works at all, but only belief, only, only, and nothing elſe,&c.

Ste. Gardiner cannot abide only, only.

The Sermon of D. Barns replying to Wincheſter.

This Sermon of Stephen Wincheſter finiſhed, Doctor Barns, who was put off from that Sunday, had his day appointed, which was the third Sunday next following, to make his Sermon: who taking the ſame Text of the Goſpel which Gardiner had done before, was on the contrary ſide no leſs vehement in ſetting forward the true Doctrine of Chriſtian Religion, than Wincheſter had been before in plucking men backward from Truth to Lies, from Sincerity to Hypocriſie, from Religion to Superſtition, from Chriſt to Antichriſt. In the proceſs of which Sermon he proceeding, and calling out Stephen Gardiner by name to anſwer him, alluding in a pleaſant Allegory to a Cock-fight; terming the ſaid Gardiner to be a fighting God, and himſelf to be another, but the Garden-Cock (he ſaid) lacked good Spurs: objecting moreover to the ſaid Gardiner, and oppoſing him in his Grammar Rules; thus ſaying, That if he had anſwered him in the Schools, ſo as he had there preached at the Croſs, he would have given him ſix ſtripes. Declaring furthermore what evil Herbs this Gardiner had ſet in the Garden of Gods Scripture,&c.

Ste. Gardiner complaineth to the King of D. Barns.

Finally, with this Sermon Gardiner was ſo tickled in the Spleen, that he immediately went to the King to complain, ſhewing how he, being a Biſhop and Prelate of the Realm, was handled and reviled at Pauls Croſs.

The King diſpleaſed againſt Barns.

Whereupon the King, giving too much ear to Gardiners grief, was earneſtly incenſed againſt Barns, and with many high words rebuked his doings in his privy Cloſet, having with him the Earl of Southampton which was the Lord Wriſley, and the Maſter of the Horſe which was Anthony Brown, Dr. Cocks, and Dr. Robinſon. Unto whom when Barns had ſubmitted himſelf; Nay, ſaid the King, yield thee not to me, I am a mortal Man, and therewith riſing up and turning to the Sacrament, and putting of his Bonnet, ſaid, Yonder is the Maſter of us all, the Author of Truth, yield in truth to him, and that Truth will I defend, and otherwiſe yield thee not unto me. Much ado there was, and great matter laid laid againſt Barns. In concluſion this order was taken, that Barns ſhould go apart with Wincheſter, to confer and commune together of their Doctrine, certain witneſſes being thereunto appointed, to be as indifferent hearers, of whom one was Dr. Cocks, the other was Dr. Robinſon, with two other alſe to them aſſigned, which ſhould be Reporters to the King of the Diſputation. At the firſt entry of which talk, Gardiner, forgiving him (as he ſaith) all that was paſt, offered him the choice, whether he would anſwer or oppoſe, which was the Friday after that Barns had preached.

D. Cocks and D. Robinſon Arbiters between D. Barns and Ste Gardiner.

The Queſtion between them propounded, by Gardiners narration was this, Whether a man could do any thing good or acceptable before the Grace of Juſtification, or not. Which queſtion roſe upon a certain conteſtion which had been between them before. For Barns had affirmed, that albeit God requireth of us to forgive our Neighbour, to obtain forgiveneſs of him; yet he ſaid that God muſt forgive us firſt, before we forgive our Neighbour; for elſe to forgive our Neighbour were ſin, by the Text which ſaith, All that is not of faith is of ſin, &c. Thus the matter being propounded, Gardiner to prove the contrary, came forth with his Arguments two or three: To the which Arguments (ſaith Gardiner) Barns could not anſwer, but deſired to be ſpared that Night, and the next Morning he would anſwer his Arguments. In the Morning Gardiner with the Hearers being again aſſembled, Dr. Barns, according to the appointment, was preſent, who then went about to aſſoil his Arguments. To his Solutions Gardiner again replied. And thus continued they in this altercation by the ſpace of two hours. In the end of this Cock-fight Wincheſter thus concludeth this glorious Tale, and croweth up the Triumph; declaring how Barns beſought him to have pity on him, to forgive him, and to take him to be his Scholar: whom then the ſaid Wincheſter (as he himſelf confeſſeth) receiving, not as his Scholar, but as his Companion, offered to him a portion out of his Living, to the ſum of 40 l. a year. Which if it be true (as Steph. Gardiner himſelf reporteth) why then doth this glorious Cockatrice crow ſo much againſt Barns afterward, and caſt him in the Teeth, bearing all the world in hand that Barns was his Scholar? whereas he himſelf here refuſeth Barns to be his Scholar, and receiveth him as his Companion fellow-like; But to the Story.

The queſtion between D. Barns and Ste. Gardiner.

God forgiveth us before we forgive our Neighbour.

Gardiners Report.

Diſputation between Barns and Gardiner.

Ste. Gardiner in his Preface to Geo. Joy.

Ste. Gardiner offereth to D. Barns 40 pound a year.

This done, the King being advertized of the concluſion of this matter between Barns and Wincheſter, was content that Barns ſhould repair to the Biſhops Houſe at London the Monday following. Which he did, with a certain other Companion joyned unto him. Who he was, Wincheſter there doth not expreſs, only he ſaith that it was neither Hierome nor Garret. In this next meeting between Barns and the Biſhop, upon the foreſaid Monday, the ſaid Biſhop ſtudying to inſtruct Barns, uttered to him certain Articles or Concluſions, to the number of ten, the effect whereof here followeth.

Wincheſters Articles againſt Barns.

Wincheſters Articles againſt Dr. Barns.

1. The effect of Chriſts Paſſion hath a Condition. The fulfilling of the Condition diminiſheth nothing the effect of Chriſts Paſſion.

2. They that will enjoy the effect of Chriſts Paſſion muſt fulfil the Condition.

3. The fulfilling of the Condition requireth firſt knowledge of the Condition, which knowledge we have by Faith.

4. Faith cometh of God, and this Faith is a good gift; it is good and profitable to me; it is profitable to me to do well, and to exerciſe this Faith; Ergo, by the gift of God I may do well before I am juſtified.

5. Therefore I may do well by the gift of God before I am juſtified, towards the attainment of Juſtification.

6. There is ever as much Charity towards God as Faith: and as Faith increaſeth ſo doth Charity increaſe.

7. To the attainment of Juſtification is required Faith and Charity.

8. Every thing is to be called freely done, whereof the beginning is free and ſet at liberty, without any cauſe of provocation.

9. Faith muſt be to me the aſſurance of the Promiſes of God made in Chriſt (if I fulfil the Condition) and love muſt accompliſh the Condition: whereupon followeth the attainment of the Promiſe according to Gods Truth.

10. A man being in deadly ſin, may have grace to do the works of Penance, whereby he may attain to his Juſtification.

The Anſwer and the Rejoynder of Geo. Joy againſt Wincheſter.

Theſe Articles, forſomuch as they be ſufficiently anſwered and replied unto by George Joy, in his Joynder and Rejoynder againſt Wincheſter, I ſhall not need to confer this Work with any new ado therewith, but only refer the Reader to the Books aforeſaid, where he may ſee matter enough to anſwer to theſe Popiſh Articles.

I told you before how the King was contented that Barns should resort to the house of the Bishop of Winchester, to be trained and directed by the Bishop: which Barns then hearing the talk of the People, and having also conference with certain Learned men, within two days after his coming to the Bishops house, waxed weary thereof, and so coming to the Bishop signified unto him, that if he would take him as one that came to confer, he would come still, but else he would come no more, and so clean gave over the Bishop.

Dr. Barns refuseth to come to Gardiner to be instructed of him, but only to confer with him.

This being known unto the King, through sinister complaints of Popish Sycophants; Barns again was sent for, and convented before the King; who being grievously incensed against him, enjoyned both him, Hierome and Garret, at the solemn Easter Sermons at St. Mary Spittle, openly in writing to revoke the Doctrine which they before had taught. At which Sermon Stephen Gardiner also himself was present to hear their Recantation.

First Dr. Barns, according to his promise made to the King, solemnly and formally began to make his Recantation; which done, he with much circumstance and obtestation called upon the Bishop (as is above touched) and asking of him forgiveness, required him in token of a grant to hold up his hand, to the intent that he there openly declaring his Charity before the world, the Bishop also would declare his Charity in like manner. Which when the Bishop refused to do at the first, as he was required, Barns again called for it, desiring him to shew his Charity, and to hold up his hand. Which when he had done with much ado, wagging his finger a little: then Barns entring into his Sermon, after his Prayer made, beginneth the process of a matter, preaching contrary to that which before he had recanted. Insomuch that the Mayor, when the Sermon was finished, sitting with the Bishop of Winchester, asked him whether he should from the Pulpit send him to Ward, to be forthcoming for that his bold preaching contrary to his Recantation. The like also did Hierome, and Garret after him.

Dr. Barns desired Winchester at his Sermon to hold up his hand.

The Mayor of London ready to trouble Dr. Barns for his Sermon.

The King had appointed before certain to make report of the Sermons. Besides them there was one who writing to a Friend of his in the Court, in the favour of these Preachers, declared how gaily they had all handled the matter, both to satisfie that Recantation, and also in the same Sermons to utter out the Truth, that it might spread without let of the world. Wherefore partly by these Reporters, and partly by the negligent looking to this Letter, which came to the Lord Cromwels hands, saith Gardiner, Barns with his other Fellows were apprehended, and committed to the Tower. Stephen Gardiner, in his foresaid Book against George Joy, would needs clear himself, that he was in no part nor cause of their casting into the Tower, and giveth this reason for him, for that he had then no access, nor had after, so long as Cromwels time lasted, to the Kings secret Councel; yet notwithstanding the said Gardiner cannot perswade us to the contrary, but that his privy complaining to the King, and his secret whisperings in his Friends ears, and his other workings by his Factors about the King, was a great sparkle to set their Fagots a fire.

Barns, Garret and Hierome committed to the Tower.

St Gardiner had no access to the Kings Councel a year and more before the Lord Cromwels fall.

Thus then Barns, Hierome and Garret, being committed to the Tower after Easter, there remained till the 30*th* day of July, which was two days after the death of the Lord Cromwel. Then ensued Process against them by the Kings Counsel in the Parliament, to the which Process Gardiner confesseth himself that he was privy amongst the rest. Whereupon all those three good Saints of God, the 30*th* day of July, not coming to any answer, nor yet knowing any cause of their condemnation, without any publick hearing were brought together from the Tower to Smithfield, where they preparing themselves to the Fire, had there at the Stake divers and sundry Exhortations, among whom Dr. Barns first began with this Protestation following.

Process against Barns, Hierome and Garret.

The protestation of Dr Barns at the Stake.

I am come hither to be burned as an Heretick, and you shall hear my Belief, whereby you shall perceive what erroneous Opinions I hold. God I take to record, I never (to my knowledge) taught any erroneous Doctrine, but only those things which Scripture led me unto; and that in my Sermons I never maintained any Error, neither moved nor gave occasion of any Insurrection. Although I have been slandered to preach that our Lady was but a Saffron-Bag, which I utterly protest before God that I never meant it, nor preached it; but all my study and diligence hath been utterly to confound and confute all men of that Doctrine, as are the Anabaptists, which deny that our Saviour Christ did take any flesh of the blessed Virgin Mary, which Sects I detest and abhor. And in this place there have been burned some of them, whom I never favoured nor maintained; but with all diligence evermore did I study to set forth the glory of God, the obedience to our Sovereign Lord the King, and the true and sincere Religion of Christ, and now hearken to my Faith.

Dr. Barns falsly slandered.

I believe in the holy and blessed Trinity, three Persons and one God, that created and made all the World, and that this blessed Trinity sent down the second Person, Jesus Christ, into the womb of the most blessed and purest Virgin Mary. And here bear me record, that I do utterly condemn that abominable and detestable Opinion of the Anabaptists, which say that Christ took no flesh of the Virgin. For I believe, that without mans will or power he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and took flesh of her, and that he suffered hunger, thirst, cold, and other passions of our Body, sin excepted, according to the saying of St. Peter, He was made in all things like to his Brethren, except sin. And I believe that this his death and passion was the sufficient ransom for the sin of all the world. And I believe that through his death he overcame Sin, Death, and Hell, and that there is none other satisfaction unto the Father, but this his death and passion only, and that no work of man did deserve any thing of God, but only his Passion, as touching our justification, for I know the best work that ever I did is impure and unperfect. And with this he cast abroad his hands, and desired God to forgive him his Trespasses. For although perchance, said he, you know nothing by me, yet do I confess, that my thoughts and cogitations be innumerable; wherefore I beseech thee, O Lord, not to enter into judgment with me, according to the saying of the Prophet David, Non intres in judicium cum servo tuo, Domine, i. Enter not into judgment with thy Servant, O Lord. And in another place, Si iniquitates observaveris Domine, quis sustinebit? Lord, if thou straitly mark our Iniquities, who is able to abide thy Judgment? Wherefore I trust in no good work that ever I did, but only in the death of Christ. I do not doubt but through him to inherit the Kingdom of Heaven. Take me not here that I speak against good works, for they are to be done, and verily they that do them not shall never come into the Kingdom of God. We must do them, because they are commanded us of God, to shew and set forth our Profession, not to deserve or merit; for that is only the death of Christ.

Dr Barns Confession.

All mens works imperfect. Psal. 143. Psal. 130.

Good works are to be done.

I believe that there is a holy Church, and a company of all them that do profess Christ; and that all that have suffered and confessed his Name be Saints, and that all they do praise and laud God in Heaven, more than I or any mans Tongue can express; and that always I have spoken reverently, and praised them as much as Scripture willed me to do. And that our Lady, I say, was a Virgin immaculate and undefiled, and that she is the most pure Virgin that ever God created, and a vessel elect of God, of whom Christ should be born. Then said Mr. Sheriff, You have said well of her before. And being afraid that Mr. Sheriff had been or should be agrieved with any thing that he should say, he said, Mr. Sheriff, If I speak any thing that you will me not, do no more but becken me with your hand, and I will straitway hold my peace, for I will not be disobedient in any thing, but will obey.

Dr. Barns obedient to Magistrates.

Then there was one that asked him his opinion of praying to Saints. Then said he, Now of Saints you shall hear my Opinion. I have said before somewhat I think of them, how that I believe they are in Heaven with God, and that they are worthy of all the honour that Scripture willeth them to have. But I say throughout Scripture we are not commanded to pray to any Saints. Therefore I neither can nor will preach to you that Saints ought to be prayed unto; for then should I preach unto you a Doctrine of mine own head. Notwithstanding whether they pray for us or no, that I refer to God. And if Saints do pray for us, then I trust to pray for you within this half hour,

Pray not to Saints.

hour, Mr.Sheriff, and for every Christian man living in the Faith of Christ, and dying in the same as a Saint. Wherefore if the dead may pray for the quick, I will surely pray for you.

Well, have you any thing more to say? Then spake he to Mr.Sheriff, and said, Have ye any Articles against me for the which I am condemned? And the Sheriff answered, No. Then said he, Is there here any man else that knoweth wherefore I die, or that by my preaching hath taken any Errour? Let them now speak, and I will make them answer. And no man answered. Then said he, Well, I am coudemned by the Law to die, and as I understand, by an Act of Parliament; but wherefore, I cannot tell, but belike for Heresie, for we are like to burn. But they that have been the occasion of it, I pray God forgive them, as I would be forgiven my self. And Dr. Stephen Bishop of Winchester that now is, if he have sought or wrought this my death either by word or deed, I pray God forgive him, as heartily, as freely, as charitably, and without feigning, as ever Christ forgave them that put him to death.

No cause shewed why Dr. Barns died.

And if any of the Council, or any other have sought or wrought it through malice or ignorance, I pray God forgive their Ignorance, and illuminate their eyes that they may see, and obtain mercy for it. I beseech you all to pray for the Kings Grace, as I have done ever since I was in Prison, and do now, that God may give him prosperity, and that he may long reign among you; and after him that godly Prince Edward may so reign, that he may finish those things that his Father hath begun. I have been reported to be a preacher of Sedition and Disobedience unto the Kings Majesty; but here I say to you, that you are all bound by the Commandment of God to obey your Prince with all humility, and with all your heart, yea, not so much as in a look to shew your selves disobedient unto him, and that not only for fear of the Sword, but also for Conscience sake before God. Yea, and I say further, if the King should command you any thing against Gods Law, if it be in your power to resist him, yet may you not do it.

Dr.Barns praying for his Enemies.

Then spake he to the Sheriff and said, Mr.Sheriff, I require you on Gods behalf to have me commended unto the Kings Grace, and to shew him that I require of his Grace these five Requests: First, that where his Grace hath received into his hands all the goods and substance of the Abbies. Then the Sheriff desired him to stop there. He answered Mr Sheriff, I warrant you I will speak no harm, for I know it is well done that all such Superstition be clean taken away, and the Kings Grace hath well done in taking it away. But his Grace is made a whole King, and obeyed in his whole Realm as a King (which neither his Father nor Grandfather, neither his Ancestors that reigned before him ever had) and that through the preaching of us and such other Wretches as we are, which alwaies have applied our whole Studies, and given our selves for the setting forth of the same, and this is now our reward. Well, it maketh no matter. Now he reigneth among you; I pray God long he may live and reign among you. Would to God it may please his Grace to bestow the said Goods, or some of them, to the comfort of his poor Subjects, which surely have great need of them.

D.Barns prayeth for the King. Five Requests of Dr Barns to the King. The 1. Request, The King of England made a whole King by poor Preachers.

The 2. Request of D. Barns to the King.

The second that I desire his Grace, is, that he will see that Matrimony be had in more reverence than it is; and that men for every light cause invented cast not off their Wives, and live in adultery and fornication; and that those that be not married should not abominably live in whoredom, following the filthy lusts of the flesh.

The third Request.

The third, That the abominable Swearers may be punished and straightly looked upon; for the vengeance of God will come on them for their mischievous Oaths. Then desired he Mr.Pope to have him commended to M.Edgar, and to desire him for the dear Blood of Jesus Christ, that he would leave that abominable Swearing which he used; for surely except he did forsake it, he would come to some mischievous end.

Dr.Barns request to Mr. Edgar to leave Swearing.

The fourth Request.

The fourth, That his Grace would set forth Christs true Religion, and seeing he hath begun, go forward and make an end; for many things have been done, but much more is to do; and that it would please his Grace to look on Gods Word himself, for that it hath been obscured with many Traditions invented of our own Brains. Now, said he, how many Petitions have I spoken of? And the People said, four. Well, said he, even these four be sufficient, which I desire you, that the King's Grace may be certified of, and say, that I most humbly desire him to look earnestly upon them; and that his Grace take heed that he be not deceived with false Preachers and Teachers and evil Counsel, for Christ saith, that such false Prophets shall come in Lambs skins.

Then desired he all men to forgive him, and if he had said any evil at any time unadvisedly, whereby he had offended any man, or given any occasion of evil that they would forgive it him, and amend that evil they took of him, and to bear him witness that he detested and abhorred all evil Opinions and Doctrines against the Word of God, and that he died in the Faith of Jesus Christ, by whom he doubted not but to be saved. And with those words he desired them all to pray for him, and then he turned him about, and put off his Cloaths, making him ready to the fire, patiently there to take his death.

Dr Barns cleareth him self of all Heresie.

The like Confession made also Hierome and Garret, professing in like manner their Belief, reciting all the Articles of the Christian Faith, briefly declaring their minds upon every Article, as the time would suffer; whereby the People might understand that there was no cause nor error in their Faith, wherefore justly they ought to be condemned; Protesting moreover, that they denied nothing that was either in the Old or New Testament, set forth by their Sovereign Lord the King, whom they prayed the Lord long to continue amongst them, with his most dear Son Prince Edward. Which done, Hierome added this Exhortation in few words following.

The Protestation and Confession of Hierome and Garret.

I say unto you, good Brethren, that God hath bought us all with no small price, neither with gold nor silver, or other such things of small value, but with his most precious Blood. Be not unthankful therefore to him again, but do as much as to Christian men belongeth, to fulfil his Commandments, that is, Love your Brethren. Love hurteth no man, love fulfilleth all things. If God hath sent thee plenty, help thy Neighbour that hath need. Give him good counsel. If he lack, consider if you were in necessity, thou wouldest gladly be refreshed. And again, bear your Cross with Christ. Consider what reproof, slander and reproach he suffered of his Enemies, and how patiently he suffered all things: Consider that all that Christ did was of his meer goodness, and not of our deserving. For if we could merit our own salvation, Christ would not have died for us. But for Adams breaking of Gods Precepts we had been all lost, if Christ had not redeemed us again. And like as Adam broke the Precepts, and was driven out of Paradise; so we, if we break Gods Commandments, shall have damnation, if we do not repent and ask mercy. Now therefore let all Christians put no trust nor confidence in their Works, but in the Blood of Christ, to whom I commit my Soul to guide, beseeching you all to pray to God for me, and for my Brethren here present with me, that our Souls leaving these wretched Carkasses may constantly depart in the true Faith of Christ.

The Exhortation of Hierome to the people.

In much like sort Garret also protesting and exhorting the People, after his Confession made, ended his protestation in manner as followeth.

I also detest, abhor and refuse all Heresies and Errors, and if either by negligence or ignorance I have taught or maintained any, I am sorry for it, and ask God mercy, Or if I have been so vehement or rash in preaching, whereby any person hath taken any offence, error, or evil opinion, I desire him, and all other persons which I have any way offended, forgiveness. Notwithstanding to my remembrance I never preached wittingly or willingly any thing against Gods holy Word, or contrary to the true Faith, to the maintenance of errors, heresies, or vicious living, but have alway, for my little learning and wit, set forth the honour of God, and the right obedience to his Laws, and also the Kings accordingly. And if I could have done better, I would. Wherefore, Lord, if I have taken in hand to do that thing which I could not perfectly perform, I desire thy pardon for my bold presumption. And I pray God send the Kings Grace good and godly Counsel, to his glory, to the Kings honour, and the increase of vertue in this his Realm. And thus now I yield my Soul up unto Almighty God, trusting and and believing that he of his infinite mercy, for his promiſe

Anno 1541. made in the Blood of his Son, our moſt merciful Saviour, Jeſus Chriſt, will take it, and pardon me of all my ſins, whereby I have moſt grievouſly from my youth offended his Majeſty; wherefore I ask him mercy, deſiring you all to pray with me and for me, that I may patiently ſuffer this pain, and dye ſtedfaſtly in true Faith, perfect Hope, and Charity.

And ſo after their Prayer made, wherein moſt effectually they deſired the Lord Jeſus to be their comfort and conſolation in this their Affliction, and to eſtabliſh them with perfect Faith, Conſtancy, and Patience through the Holy Ghoſt, they taking themſelves by the hands, and kiſſing one another, quietly and humbly offered themſelves to the hands of the Tormentors, and ſo took their death both chriſtianly and conſtantly, with ſuch patience as might well teſtifie the goodneſs of their Cauſe, and quiet of their Conſcience.

The patient ſuffering of theſe three Martyrs.

Wherein is to be noted how mightily the Lord worketh with his Grace and Fortitude in the hearts of his Servants, eſpecially in ſuch which cauſleſs ſuffer with a guiltleſs Conſcience for Religions ſake, above other which ſuffer otherwiſe for their deſerts. For whereas they which ſuffer as Malefactors, are commonly wont to go heavy and penſive to their death; ſo the other with heavenly alacrity and chearfulneſs do abide whatſoever it pleaſeth the Lord to lay upon them. Example whereof we have right-well to note, not only in theſe three godly Martyrs above mentioned, but alſo in the Lord Cromwel, who ſuffered but two days before, the ſame no leſs may appear. Who although he was brought to his death, attainted and condemned by the Parliament, yet what a guiltleſs Conſcience he bare to his death, his Chriſtian patience well deſerved.

Difference between them that ſuffer for Gods truth, and other that dye for their own deſerts.

The chearful patience in the Lord Cromwel at his death.

Who firſt calling for his Breakfaſt, and chearfully eating the ſame, and after that paſſing out of his Priſon down the Hill within the Tower, and meeting there by the way the Lord Hungerford, going likewiſe to his Execution (who for other matter here not to be ſpoken of, was there alſo impriſoned) and perceiving him to be all heavy and doleful, with chearful countenance and comfortable words, asking why he was ſo heavy, he willed him to pluck up his heart, and to be of good comfort; for (ſaid he) there is no cauſe for you to fear; for if you repent and be heartily ſorry for that you have done, there is for you mercy enough with the Lord, who for Chriſts ſake will forgive you, and therefore be not diſmayed. And though the Breakfaſt which we are going to be ſharp, yet truſting to the mercy of the Lord, we ſhall have a joyful Dinner. And ſo went they together to the place of Execution, and took their deaths patiently.

The comfortable words of the Lord Cromwel to the Lord Hungerford, they both going to their deaths.

A note of three Papiſts executed the ſame time with Barnes, Hierome, and Garret.

THe ſame time and day, and in the ſame place, where and when theſe three above mentioned did ſuffer, three other alſo were executed, though not for the ſame cauſe, but rather the contrary, for denying the Kings Supremacy, whoſe names were Powel, Fetherſtone, and Abel. The which ſpectacle ſo happening upon one day, in two ſo contrary parts or factions brought the people into a marvellous admiration and doubt of their Religion, which part to follow and take; as might ſo well happen amongſt ignorant and ſimple people, ſeeing two contrary parts ſo to ſuffer, the one for Popery, the other againſt Popery, both at one time. Inſomuch that a certain Stranger being there preſent the ſame time, and ſeeing three on the one ſide, and three on the other ſide to ſuffer, ſaid in theſe words, Deus bone! quomodo hic vivunt gentes? hic ſuſpenduntur Papiſtæ, illic comburuntur Antipapiſtæ. But to remove and take away all doubt hereafter from the Poſterity, whereby they ſhall the leſs marvel how this ſo happened, here is to be underſtood how the cauſe thereof did riſe and proceed. Which happened by reaſon of a certain diviſion and diſcord among the King's Counſel, which were ſo divided among themſelves in equal parts, that the one half ſeemed to hold with the one Religion, the other half with the contrary.

Three Papiſts executed.

Powel, Fetherſtone, and Abel.

The words of a ſtranger, ſeeing both Papiſts and Proteſtants to ſuffer.

The Names of whom, although it were not neceſſary to expreſs, yet being compelled for the ſetting forth of the truth of the ſtory, we have thought good here to annex, as the certainty thereof came to our hands.

The Counſel divided in Religion.

This diviſion and ſeparation of the Councel amongſt themſelves, cauſed both theſe parts above mentioned, the one for one Religion, the other for another, to ſuffer together. For as the one part of the Councel called upon the execution of Barnes, Garret, and Hierome, ſo the other part likewiſe called upon the execution of the Law upon Powel, Fetherſtone, and Abel. Which ſix being condemned and drawn to the place of Execution, two upon a Hurdle, one being a Papiſt, the other a Proteſtant, thus after a ſtrange manner were brought into Smithfield, where all the ſaid ſix together for contrary Doctrine ſuffered death, three by the fire for the Goſpel, the other three by hanging, drawing, and quartering for Popery.

Two together laid upon the Hurdle; the one a Papiſt, the other a Proteſtant.

Allen Cope. Allen Cope in his worſhipful Dialogues, making mention of theſe three aforeſaid, Powel, Fetherſtone, and Abel, amongſt other which died in King Henries days in the like Popiſh quarrel, that is, for the like Treaſon againſt their Prince, (being in all to the number of twenty four) extolleth them not only in words, but with miracles alſo, up to the height of Heaven, among the crowned Martyrs and Saints of God. To the which Cope, becauſe in this haſte of ſtory I have no leiſure at this preſent to give attendance, I ſhall wait attendance (the Lord willing) another time, to joyn in this iſſue with him more at leiſure. In the mean time it ſhall ſuffice at this preſent to recite the names only of thoſe twenty four Rebels, whom he of his Popiſh Devotion ſo dignified with the pretenſed Title of Martyrs. The names of which Monkiſh Rebels be theſe here following:

Traitors made Martyrs.

24. Neither good Martyrs to God, nor good Subjects to the King.

Beſides theſe were other nine Carthuſian Monks which died in the Priſon of Newgate. To the which number if you add Mr. More and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, the ſumma totalis cometh to twenty four, whom the ſaid Cope unjuſtly crowned for Martyrs. But of theſe more ſhall be ſaid (the Lord willing) hereafter.

Thus having diſcourſed the order of the ſix Articles, with other matter likewiſe following in the next Parliament, concerning the condemnation of the Lord Cromwel, of Dr. Barnes and his Fellows, let us now (proceeding further in this Hiſtory) conſider what great diſturbance and vexations enſued after the ſetting forth of the ſaid Articles, through the whole Realm of England, eſpecially among the godly ſort. Wherein firſt were to be mentioned the ſtreight and ſevere Commiſſions ſent forth by the Kings Authority, to the Biſhops, Chancellors, Officials, Juſtices, Maiors, and Bailiffs in every Shire, and other Commiſſioners by name in the ſame Commiſſions expreſſed; and amongſt other, eſpecially to Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, to the Maior, Sheriffs, and Aldermen of the ſame, to enquire diligently upon all Heretical Books, and to burn them. Alſo to enquire upon all ſuch Perſons whatſoever, culpable or ſuſpected of ſuch Felonies, Hereſies, Contempts, or Tranſgreſſions, or ſpeaking any words contrary to the foreſaid Act ſet forth of the ſix Articles. The tenor of which Commiſſions being ſufficiently expreſſed in ancient Records, and in the Biſhops Regiſters, and alſo partly touched before, therefore for tediouſneſs I here omit, only ſhewing forth the Commiſſion directed to Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, to take the Oath of the Maior of London, and of others, for the execution of the Commiſſion aforeſaid; the tenor whereof here followeth.

Great diſturbance in England after the ſix Articles.

Read before.

The Commiſſion for taking the Oath of the Maior of London and others, for the execution of the Act aforeſaid.

Commiſſion directed to Edm Boner Biſhop of London, from the King.

HENRY the Eighth, by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in Earth ſupream Head of the Church of England, unto the Reverend Father in Chriſt Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, and to his welbeloved the Biſhops Chancellor, health. Know ye that we have given you joyntly and ſeverally, Power and Authority to receive the Oaths of William Roch Maior of London, John Allen Knight, Ralph Warren Knight, Richard Greſham Knight, Roger Cholmley Knight, Serjeant at Law, John Greſham, Michael Dormer Archdeacon of London, the Biſhops Commiſſary and Official, Robert Chidley, Guy Crayford, Edward Hall, Robert Brook, and John Morgan, and every of them our Commiſſioners for Hereſies, and other Offences done within our City of London and Dioceſs of the ſame, according to the tenour of a certain Schedule hereunto annexed. And therefore We command that you receive the Oaths aforeſaid, and when you have received them, to certifie us into our Chancery under your Seals, returning this our Writ. Teſte me ipſo at Weſtminſter the twenty ninth of January, in the 32. year of our Reign.

What the Oath was of theſe Commiſſioners whereunto they were bound, read before.

A Note how Boner ſate in the Guildhall in Commiſſion for the ſix Articles. And of the condemning of Mekins.

The ſtory of R. Mekins condemned by Boner.

UPon this Commiſſion given unto Edmund Boner, he coming to the Guildhall with other Commiſſioners, to ſit upon the Statute of the ſix Articles, began eftſoons to put in execution his Authority after a rigorous ſort, as ye ſhall hear. And firſt he charged certain Juries to take their Oath upon the Statute aforeſaid; who being ſworn, had a day appointed to give their verdict. At the which day they Indicted ſundry Perſons, which ſhortly after were apprehended and brought to Ward; who, after a while remaining theſe, were by the King and his Councel diſcharged at the Star-Chamber, without any further puniſhment.

Not long after this, Sir William Roch being Maior, Boner with other Commiſſioners ſate at the Guildhall aforeſaid, before whom there were a certain number of Citizens warned to appear, and after the Commiſſion read, the ſaid Parties were called to the Book, and when five or ſix were ſworn, one of the ſaid Perſons being called to the Book, Boner ſeemed to miſlike, and ſaid; Stay a while, my Maſters, (quoth he) I would ye ſhould conſider this matter well that we have in hand, which concerneth the glory of God, the honour of the King, and the wealth of the Realm, and if there be any here among you that doth not conſider the ſame, it were better that he were hence than here. Then communed the Commiſſioners with Boner about that man, ſo that at length he was called to the Book and ſworn, not altogether with his good will.

When the two Juries were ſworn, Boner taketh upon him to give the Charge unto the Juries, and began with a Tale of Anacharſis, by which example he admoniſhed the Juries to ſpare no Perſons, of what eſtate ſoever they were. And at the end of his Charge, he brought forth to the Bar a Boy, whoſe name was Mekins, declaring how grievouſly he had offended by ſpeaking of certain words againſt the State, and of the death of Dr. Barnes, and produced into the ſaid Court two Witneſſes, which were there ſworn in the face of the Court.

So

So a day was aſſigned upon which the Juries aforeſaid ſhould give up their Verdict; at which day both the Commiſſioners and the ſaid Juries met at Guildhall aforeſaid. Then the Clerk of the Peace called on the Juries by their Names, and when their Appearance was taken, Boner bade them put in their Preſentments. Then ſaid the Foreman of that Jury, whoſe name was William Robins; My Lord (with a low courteſie) we have found nothing. At which words he fared as one in an Agony, and ſaid, Nothing? have ye found nothing? What nothing? By the faith I owe to God (quoth he to the Foreman) I would truſt you upon your Obligation, but by your Oath I will truſt you nothing. Then ſaid ſome of the Commiſſioners; My Lord, give them a longer day. No, (quoth he) in London they ever find nothing. I pray you what ſay you to Mekins? My Lord, quoth the Foreman, we can ſay nothing to him, for we find the Witneſſes to diſagree. One affirmeth that he ſhould ſay the Sacrament was nothing but a Ceremony; and the other, nothing but a ſignification. Why (quoth Boner) did he not ſay that Barnes died holy. Then pauſing a while, he bade call the other Jury. Put in your Verdict, (quoth he.) My Lord, ſaid one, we have found nothing. Jeſus! (quoth he) is not this a ſtrange caſe?

Wil. Robins Juror.

Then ſpake one of the ſame Jury, whoſe name was Ralph Foxley, and ſaid, My Lord, when you gave us charge, we deſired to have the Parſons and Curates of every Pariſh to give us inſtructions, and it was denied us. Then ſtood up the Recorder, and ſaid, It was true indeed that he had ſpoken; and there withal ſaid, This laſt year were charged two Juries, which did many things naughtily and fooliſhly, and did as much as in them lay to make an uproar among the Kings people, and therefore it was thought not meet that they ſhould give information to you. Nay, nay, quoth Boner, this was the cauſe; If the Parſon or Curate ſhould give information according to his knowledge, then what will they ſay? I muſt tell my Confeſſion to Knave-Prieſt, and he ſhall go by and by and open it. What, ſaid my Lord Maior, there is no man (I trow) that will ſay ſo? Yes, by my troth, quoth Boner, Knave-Prieſt, Knave-Prieſt. Then ſaid my Lord Maior ſomewhat ſmiling, There be ſome of them ſlippery Fellows; and as men find them, ſo will they oft-times report. Boner not well contented with thoſe words, ſaid to the Jury, My Maſters, what ſay you to Mekins? They anſwered, The Witneſſes do not agree, therefore we do not allow them. Why (quoth Boner) this Court hath allowed them. Then ſaid one of the Jury to the Recorder, Is it ſufficient for our diſcharge, if this Court do allow them? Yea, ſaid the Recorder, it is ſufficient; and ſaid, Go you aſide together awhile, and bring in your Verdict. After the Jury had talked togsther a little while, they returned to the Bar again with their Indictment, which at Boners hand was friendly received; ſo both they and the other Jury were diſcharged, and bidden take their eaſe. Thus ended the Court for that day. Shortly after they ſate for Life and Death. Mekins being brought to the Bar, and the Indictment read, Boner ſaid to him; Mekins, confeſs the truth, and ſubmit thy ſelf unto the Kings Law, that thy death may be an example to all other.

Ralf Foxley, Juror.

This Recorder was Sir Ro. Shelmley.

Againſt Popiſh Prieſts of London.

Boner calleth upon the condemnation of Mekins.

Mekins brought to the Bar.

This Richard Mekins being a Child, which paſſed not the Age of fifteen years (as Hall reporteth) as he had heard ſome other Folks talk, ſo chanced he to ſpeak againſt the Sacrament of the Altar. Which coming to Boners ears, he never left him (as afore doth plainly appear) before he had brought him to the fire. During the time of his impriſonment, neither his poor Father nor Mother for fear durſt aid him with any relief, whereby he there indured in great miſery. At what time he was brought unto the Stake, he was taught to ſpeak much good of the Biſhop of London, and of the great Charity he ſhewed to him, and to deſie and deteſt all Heretiks and Hereſies, but ſpecially Dr. Barnes, unto whom he imputed the learning of that Hereſie, which was the cauſe of his death. The poor Lad would for ſafeguard of his life have gladly ſaid that the twelve Apoſtles had taught it him; ſuch was his childiſh innocency and fear. But for this deed many ſpake and ſaid, It was great ſhame for the Biſhop, whoſe part and duty it had been rather to have laboured to ſave his life, than to procure ſo terrible Execution, ſeeing that he was ſuch an ignorant Soul, that he knew not what the affirming of Hereſie was.

Ex Ed. Hall.

And how could he take that learning of Dr. Barnes, when Dr. Barnes was never of that Opinion.

Richard Spencer, Ramſey, and one Hewet, ſuffered at Salisbury.

Spencer, Ramſey, and Hewet, Martyrs.

ABout the ſame time alſo a certain Prieſt was burned at Salisbury, who leaving his Papiſtry had married a Wife, and became a Player in Enterludes, with one Ramſey and Hewet, which three were all condemned and burned; againſt whom, and ſpecially againſt Spencer, was laid matter concerning the Sacrament of the Altar. He ſuffered at Salisbury.

Alex. Seton Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk.

This Seton was Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk, and by him was made free Deniſon. In his Sermon Preached at Saint Antholines, his adverſaries picked againſt him matter containing fifteen objections, or rather cavillations, which for example I thought here to exhibit to the Reader, to the intent that men may ſee, not only what true Doctrine Seton then Preached, conſonant to the Scriptures; but alſo what wrangling cavillers can do, in depraving that is right, or in wreſting that is well meant, or in carping that they underſtand not, or in ſeeking out faults where none is, as by theſe their ſiniſter cavillations may appear.

Certain places or Articles gathered out of Setons Sermons by his Adverſaries.

Articles gathered of Alexr Setons Sermons by his Adverſaries.

THe ſayings and Words of Alexander Seton, ſpoken and Preached by him in his Sermon, made the thirteenth day of November, at afternoon, in the Pariſh Church of Saint A. in London; Paul ſaith, of our ſelves we can do nothing; I pray thee then where is thy will? Art thou any better than Paul, James, Peter, and all the Apoſtles? Haſt thou any more Grace than they? Tell me now if thy will be any thing or nothing. If it be any thing, tell me whether it be to do good or ill? If thou ſay to do ill, I will grant thou haſt a greater deal. If thou ſay to do good, I ask whether is more, ſomewhat or nothing? For Paul ſaid he could do nothing, and I am ſure thou haſt no more Grace, than Paul and his Companions.

1. Will. 2. Conſent. 3. Deed.

No will in man of himſelf to do good.

Scripture ſpeaketh of three things in man; the firſt is will the other two are conſent and deed. The firſt, that is will, God worketh without us, and beſides us. The other two he worketh in us, and with us. And here he alledged Saint Auguſtine, to prove that we can will nothing that is good. Moreover he ſaid, thou haſt not one jot, no not one tittle to do any good.

Our works merit nothing to Salvation.

There is nothing in Heaven or Earth, creature or other, that can be any mean towards our juſtification, nor can any man ſatisfie God the Father for our ſin, ſave only Chriſt, and the ſhedding of his Blood.

He that Preacheth that works do merit, or be any mean to our Salvation, or any part of our juſtification, Preacheth a Doctrine of the Devil.

If any thing elſe, ſave only Chriſt, by any mean towards our juſtification, then did not Chriſt only juſtifie us.

I ſay, that neither thy good works, nor any thing that thou canſt do, can be one jot or tittle towards thy juſtification. For if they be, then is not Chriſt a full juſtifier, and that I will prove by a familiar example. Be it in caſe I have two Servants, the one is called John, and the other Robert, and I promiſe to ſend you ſuch a day twenty pound by John my ſervant, and at my day I ſend you by Jo. my ſervant, xix.li.xix.s.xi.d.ob.q. and there lacketh but one farthing, which Robert doth bring thee, and ſo thou haſt thy twenty pound, every penny and farthing. Yet, will I ask if I be true of my promiſe, or no, and thou maiſt ſay nay. And why, becauſe I promiſed to ſend thee that whole twenty pound by John and did not, for there lacked a farthing, which Robert brought. Wherefore I ſay, if thy works do merit or bring one little jot or tittle towards thy juſtification, then is Chriſt falſe of his promiſe, which ſaid that he would do all together.

One Scripture I will bring you, which they cannot withſtand, to prove that Chriſt was only promiſed to be our only juſtifier, our only mean, and that is in the two and twentieth of Geneſis, where it is written, In thy ſeed ſhall all people be bleſſed, meaning thereby only Chriſt, and he ſaid not in thy ſeeds, nor in the works of thy ſeeds. Wherefore all they that preach, that works be any part or mean toward our juſtification, do make God falſe of his promiſe.

They that preach that works do merit, do make works the tree, which are but the fruits of juſtice, wrought by him that is already a juſt man, which cannot chuſe but bring forth good fruit.

Good fruits make not a good man, but a good man cannot chuſe but make good fruits.

I would ask a queſtion, whether he that worketh be a good man, or bad, for he muſt be one of them. If he be a good man, he cannot chuſe but bring forth good fruits; if he be an ill man, he cannot bring forth no fruit, but ill fruit; for a good tree cannot bring forth ill fruit.

Mans works made checkmate with Chriſt.

He that ſaith that works do merit any thing towards our Salvation, doth make works checkmate with Chriſt and plucketh from Chriſt that is his, and giveth it to works. Some will ask, wherefore then ſhould I do good works? I anſwer, good works are to be done for no cauſe elſe, but only for the Glory of God, and not that they do merit any thing at all. And he that ſaith that good works are to be done for any other cauſe, than for the glory of God only, and will have them to merit, or be any mean towards our juſtification, I ſay he lieth and believe him not.

He that can ſhew me in any ſcripture, that works do merit, or be any mean to our juſtification, for the firſt Scripture I will (without any further judgment) loſe both mine ears, for the ſecond, my Tongue, and for the third my Neck. For if I dare ſay he cannot prove in all the whole Scripture one tittle: Wherefore believe them not.

The Papiſts belie the Proteſtants, as though they denied good works.

Men ſay that we deny good works, and faſting and prayer. They lye on us, we deny nothing but Popiſh works, and Popiſh faſting, and Popiſh Prayer; and he that preacheth that works do merit, or faſting doth merit, or prayer doth merit, doth preach a Popiſh Doctrine.

If you ask me when we ſhall leave preaching of works? even when they do leave to preach that works do merit, and ſuffer Chriſt to be a whole ſatisfier, and only mean to our juſtification; and till then we will not ceaſe in Gods Cauſe to ſet forth only Chriſt to be a full, and perfect, and only ſatisfaction.

Good works how they be rewarded.

If you ask, if good works ſhall be rewarded, I ſay yea, and with no leſs than eternal Glory, but for no merit that they deſerve, for they deſerve nothing; but only becauſe God hath promiſed, not for the merit of the work, but for his promiſe ſake, and he will not break his promiſe.

TOuching reconciliation ſpoken of by Doctor Smith, preaching in the forenoon at Pauls Croſs, Alexander Seton preaching at afternoon at Saint Anthonies, and reciting his ſayings and Scriptures, reproved him for alledging this ſaying, Reconciliamini Deo, and Engliſhing the ſame thus, Reconcile your ſelves to God; becauſe it is there ſpoken paſſively, and not actively, ſo that there ſhould be nothing in man pertaining to reconciliation, but all in God. 2 Cor. 5.

Alſo reproving the ſaid Doctor Smith, for that the ſaid D. ſaid that man by his good works might merit. Which ſaying of Doctor Smith the ſaid Alexander Seton reproved in the Pulpit at S. Anthonies the 13. day of November, the year of our Lord. 1541. as naughtily ſpoken.

Moreover the ſaid Alexander Seton ſaid in the ſame place, that it was a ſhame that any ſuch preacher ſhould be ſuffered ſo openly to preach ſuch erroneous Doctrine, as to ſay that works ſhould merit, adducing, Non ſunt condignæ paſſiones, &c. Et poſt quam fecerit ea omnia, &c.

Finally Seton ſaid, peradventure ye will ſay the Church hath determined this matter touching works. And I ſay, quoth he, that it is Eccleſia Malignantium, ſo determining any thing againſt Scripture.

To theſe pretenſed Objections of his Adverſaries he made his Anſwer again by writing, firſt denying many things there preſented, taking upon his Conſcience, that he never ſpake divers of theſe words; and again many things that he never meant to ſuch end or purpoſe, as in the ſaid Regiſter may appear. But all this notwithſtanding, for all that he could ſay for himſelf, the Ordinary proceeded in his conſiſtory judgment, miniſtring

The Story of John Porter, cruelly Martyred for reading the Bible in Pauls.

A Story of John Porter, Martyr.

IN the number of theſe forenamed cometh the remembrance of John Porter, who in the ſame year, 1541. for reading the Bible in Pauls Church, was cruelly handled, and that unto death, as you ſhall hear. It was declared in this Hiſtory above how Edmund Boner Biſhop of London (in the days of the Lord Cromwel) being then Embaſſadour at Paris, was a great doer in ſetting forward the printing of the Bible in that great Volume: promiſing moreover, that he would for his part have ſix of thoſe Bibles ſet up in the Church of S. Paul in London. Which alſo at his coming home he no leſs performed, according to the Kings Proclamation ſet forth for the ſame, whereof read afore.

The Bible commanded by the King to be ſet in Churches.

Read afore.

The Bibles thus ſtanding in Pauls by the Commandment of the King, and the appointment of Boner the Biſhop, many well diſpoſed people uſed much to reſort to the hearing thereof, eſpecially when they could get any that had an Audible Voice to read unto them, miſdoubting therein no danger toward them; and no more there was, ſo long as the days of Cromwel laſted. After he was gone, it happened amonſt divers and ſundry godly diſpoſed perſons, which frequented there the reading of the foreſaid Bible, that one John Porter uſed ſometimes to be occupied in that Godly Exerciſe, to the edifying as well of himſelf, as of other. This Porter was a freſh young man, and of a big ſtature: Who by diligent reading of the Scripture, and by hearing of ſuch Sermons as then were preached by them that were the ſetters forth of Gods Truth, became very expert. The Bible then being ſet up by Boners Commandment upon divers Pillars in Pauls Church, fixed unto the ſame with Chains for all men to read in them that would, great multitudes would reſort thither to hear this Porter, becauſe he could read well, and had an Audible Voice. Boner and his Chaplains being grieved withal (and the World beginning then to frown upon the Goſpellers) ſent for the foreſaid Porter, and rebuked him, very ſharply for his reading. But Porter anſwered him that he truſted he had done nothing contrary to the Law, neither contrary to his advertiſements which he had fixed in Print over every Bible.

Anno 1541.

Jo. Porter a great reader in the Bible at Pauls.

Boner & his Chaplains grieved with the Bibles which he before cauſed to be ſet up himſelf.

Boner then laid unto his charge that he had made Expoſitions upon the Text, and gathered great multitudes about him to make Tumults. He anſwered, he truſted that ſhould not be proved by him. But in fine Boner ſent him to Newgate, where he was miſerably fettered in Irons both Legs and Arms, with a Collar of Iron about his Neck faſtened to the Wall in the Dungeon, being there ſo cruelly handled, that he was compelled to ſend for a kinſman of his, whoſe Name is alſo Porter, and yet alive, and can teſtifie that it is true, and dwelleth yet without Newgate. Who, ſeeing his kinſman in this miſerable caſe, intreated Jewet, then Keeper of Newgate, that he might be releaſed out of thoſe cruel Irons, and ſo through friendſhip and money had him up among other Priſoners, which lay there for Felony and Murder, where Porter being amongſt them, hearing and ſeeing their Wickedneſs and Blaſphemy, exhorted them to amendment of Life, and gave unto them ſuch inſtructions as he had learned of the Scriptures; for which his ſo doing he was complained on and ſo carried down, and laid in the lower Dungeon of all, oppreſſed with Bolts and Irons, where within ſix or eight days after he was found dead.

J. Porter ſent to Newgate by Boner.

This Porter was alive at the writing hereof.

The cruel handling of J. Porter in Newgate.

It is ſignified to us by credible information, that the ſame night before he was found dead, they that dwelt near to the ſame place of the Priſon where Porter lay, did hear him pitiouſly to groan and make a lamentable noiſe, where ſome ſuppoſe that he was put in certain ſtrait Irons which be there in the Houſe, called, The Devil on the neck, being after an horrible ſort deviſed, ſtraining and wrinching the Neck of a man with his Legs together, in ſuch ſort, as the more he ſtirreth in it the ſtraiter it preſſeth him, ſo that within three or four hours it breaketh and cruſheth a Mans back and body in pieces. In which devilliſh Torment, whether John Porter was ſlain or no, it is not certain. But howſoever it was, this is known, that he was found dead (as is aforeſaid) in the Dungeon, with ſuch groaning and pitious noiſe heard the night before in the ſaid Dungeon as is declared.

The Death and Martyrdom of John Porter.

A Note of one Thomas Sommers, impriſoned for the Goſpel.

AMongſt theſe Londoners thus troubled by the Clergy, (we will add alſo (though a little out of place) another Note of a Merchant called Thomas Sommers, who dyed in the Tower of London for confeſſing of the Goſpel. Which Thomas being a very honeſt Merchant and Wealthy, was ſent for by the Lord Cardinal, and committed to the Tower, for that he had Luthers Books (as they termed them) and after a great ſute made for him to the ſaid Cardinal, his judgment was, that he ſhould ride from the Tower into Cheapſide, carrying a new Book in his hand, and be hanged with Books round about him, with three or four other Merchants after the ſame order, which was done. And when Maſter Sommers ſhould be ſet on a Colliars Nagg, as the reſt of his fellow Priſoners were, a friend of his called Maſter Copland brought him a very good Gelding, fair dreſſed with Bridle and Saddle; and when the Biſhops Officers came to dreſs him with Books, as they had trimmed the other, and would have made holes in his Garment to have thruſt the ſtrings of the Books therein; Nay, ſaid Sommers, I have always loved to go handſomly in my Apparel, and taking the Books and opening them, he bound them together by the ſtrings, and caſt them about his neck (the leaves being all open) like a collar, and being on Horſback, rode formoſt thorow the Streets, till they came about the Standard in Cheapſide, where a great fire was made to burn their Books in. and a Pillory ſet up there for four perſons, in token that they had deſerved it.

The Penance of Tho. Sommers Merchant.

M. Luthers Books burnt in Cheapſide.

In the mean time, by the way as they ſhould come, it was appointed that one ſhould go before them with a baſon, at the noiſe whereof M. Sommers Horſe, being a lofty Gelding and fierce, was in ſuch a rage, that he which rung the baſon, being afraid of himſelf, was fain to go alone a great ſpace before that any Horſeman followed after. At length when they came to the fire, every of them having a Book in his hand, they were commanded to caſt their Books into the Fire. But when Maſter Sommers ſaw that his new Teſtament ſhould be burned, he threw it over the fire which was ſeen by ſome of Gods Enemies, and brought to him again commanding him to caſt it into the fire; which he would not

What trouble and vexation happened amongſt the godly Brethren in London, for the ſix Articles, hitherto we have diſcourſed. Albeit neither have I comprehended all which were moleſted thorow all the Pariſhes of London, neither again did this rigorous Inquiſition ſo ceaſe within the precincts of this City only, but alſo extended further to Salisbury, Norfolk, Lincoln, and through all other Shires and quarters of the Realm; ſo that whereas any Popiſh Prelate moſt bare ſtroke, there moſt perſecution increaſed. His ready diligence in all Popiſh quarrels as it never lacked before, ſo now in the execution of theſe ſix Articles it was not far behind: in whoſe Dioceſs divers good Men and Women, namely, about Buckingham and Amerſham, and quarters thereabouts, were grievouſly diſquieted, appearing yet in the ſame regiſter; as one.

In Oxford alſo the ſame time, or much thereabout, recanted one Maſter Barber, Maſter of Art of that Univerſity, a man excellently learned. Who being called up to Lambeth before the Archbiſhop Thomas Cranmer, was in his Examination ſo ſtout in the cauſe of the Sacrament, and ſo learnedly defended himſelf therein, that (as it is credibly affirmed of them which yet be alive, and were preſent thereat) neither Cranmer himſelf, nor all they could well anſwer to his allegations brought out of Auguſtine. Wherein he was ſo prompt and ripe of himſelf, that the Archbiſhop, with the reſidue of his company were brought in great admiration of him. Notwithſtanding, by compulſion of the time and danger of the ſix Articles, at laſt he relented, and returning again to Oxford was there cauſed to recant. After which the good man long proſpered not, but ware away. Ex teſtimonio Rad. Moris.

The Recantation of M. Barber at Oxford.

A merry and pleaſant narration, touching a falſe fearful imagination of fire, raiſed among the Doctors and Maſters of Oxford in Saint Maries Church, at the recantation of Maſter Malary M. of Art of Cambridge.

THis Recantation of Maſter Barber aforeſaid, in the Univerſity of Oxford, bringeth me in remembrance of another Recantation likewiſe, happening not long before in the ſaid Univerſity, which I thought here not to overpaſs, and namely, for that the ſame carrieth withal a merry ridiculous ſpectacle, not unworthy to be remembred, and here to be inſerted, ſomewhat to recreate and refreſh by the way the weary mind of the Reader, after ſo many bloody and lamentable ſtories, executions, recantations, and tragedies above paſſed. The ſtory is this.

The Recantation of Maſter Malary Graduate of Cambridge, who recanted at Oxford.

There was one Maſter Malarie, Maſter of Art of Cambridge, Scholar of Chriſts Colledge, who for the like opinions to thoſe above rehearſed, holden contrary to the Catholick Determination of holy Mother Church of Rome, that is, for the right truth of Chriſts Goſpel, was convented before the Biſhops, and in the end ſent to Oxford, there openly to recant, and to bear his fagot, to the terror of the Students of that Univerſity. The time and place was appointed, that he ſhould be brought ſolemnly into Saint Maries Church upon a Sunday, where a great number of the Head Doctors and Divines, and other of the Univerſity were together Aſſembled; beſide a great multitude of Citizens and Town-dwellers, which came to behold the ſight. Furthermore, becauſe that ſolemnity ſhould not paſs without ſome effectual Sermon, for the holding up of the Mother Church of Rome, Doctor Smith, reader then of the Divinity Lecture, was appointed to make the Sermon at this Recantation. Briefly, at the preaching of this Sermon there was Aſſembled a mighty Audience of all ſorts of degrees as well of Students as other. Few almoſt were abſent which loved to hear or ſee any news; Inſomuch that there was no place almoſt in the whole Church which was not fully repleniſhed with concourſe and throng of people.

Malary brought into S. Maries Church with his fagot.

Doctor Smith Preached at the Recantation of Malary.

All things being thus prepared and ſet in readineſs, cometh forth Malarie with his Fagot upon his ſhoulder. Not long after alſo proceedeth the Doctor into the Pulpit, to make his Sermon, the purpoſe and Argument whereof was wholly upon the Sacrament. The which Doctor, for the more confirmation and credit to his words, had provided the holy Catholick Cake, and the Sacrament of the Altar, there to hang by a ſtring before him in the Pulpit. Thus the Doctor with his God Almighty, entring his Godly Sermon, had ſcarce proceeded into the midſt thereof, the People giving great ſilence with all Reverence unto his Doctrine, but ſuddenly was heard into the Church the voice of one crying in the Street, Fire, fire. The party which thus cried firſt in the Street was called Heuſter. The occaſion was this, for that he coming from Allhallows Pariſh ſaw a Chimney on fire, and ſo paſſing in the Street by Saint Maries Church, cried Fire, fire, as the faſhion is, meaning no hurt.

The Sacrament of the Altar brought into the Pulpit.

A maze among Doctor Smiths Audience in Oxford.

This ſound of Fire being heard in the Church, firſt of them which ſtood outermoſt next to the Church door, ſo encreaſed and went from one to another, that at length it came unto the ears of the Doctors, and at laſt to the Preacher himſelf. Who as ſoon as they heard the matter, being amazed with ſudden fear, and marvelling what the matter ſhould mean, began to look up into the top of the Church, and to behold the Walls. The reſidue ſeeing them look up, looked up alſo. Then began they in the midſt of the Audience to cry out with a loud Voice, Fire, fire. Where ſaith one? Where ſaith another. In the Church, ſaith one. The mention of the Church was ſcarcely pronounced, when as in one moment there was a common cry amongſt them, the Church is on Fire, the Church is on Fire by Hereticks, &c. And albeit no man Saint Maries Church in Oxford falſely ſuppoſed to be ſet on fire by Hereticks.

did see any fire at all, yet forasmuch as all men cried out so, every man thought it true that they heard. Then was there such fear, concourse and tumult of people, through the whole Church, that it cannot be declared in words as it was indeed.

And as in a great fire (where fire is indeed) we see many times how one little spark giveth matter of a mighty flame, setting whole stacks and piles on burning: so here upon a small occasion of one mans word kindled first a general cry, then a strong opinion running in every mans head within the Church, thinking the Church to be on fire, where no fire was at all. Thus it pleased Almighty God to delude these deluders, that is, that these great Doctors and wise men of the Schools, which think themselves so wise in Gods matters as though they could not err, should see by their own senses and judgments, how blinded and infatuated they were in these so small matters and sensible trifles.

Deludersdeluded. We see great Clerks how they are deceived oftentimes in small trifles.

Thus this strong imagination of fire being fixed in their heads, as nothing could remove them to think contrary but that the Church was on fire, so every thing that they saw or heard encreased this suspition in them, to make it seem most true, which was indeed most false. The first and chiefest occasion that augmented this suspition, was the Heretick there bearing his Fagot, which gave them to imagine that all other Hereticks had conspired with him to set the Church on fire.

What strong imagination can do in deluding mans senses.

After this, through the rage of the people, and running to and fro, the dust was so raised, that it shewed as it had been the smoke of fire. Which thing, together with the outcry of the people, made all men so afraid, that leaving the Sermon, they began all together to run away. But such was the press of the multitude, running in heaps together, that the more they laboured, the less they could get out. For whilst they ran all headlong unto the doors, every man striving to get out first, they thrust one another in such sort, and stuck so fast, that they which were without, neither could get into the Church again, neither they that were within could get out by any means. So the one door being stopped, they ran to another little wicket on the North-side, toward the Colledge called Brasen-nose, thinking so to pass out. But there again was the like or greater throng. So the people clustering and thronging together, it put many in danger, aad brought many unto their end, by bruising of their Bones or Sides. There was yet another door towards the West, which albeit it was shut and seldom opened; yet now ran they to it with such sway, that the great bar of Iron (which is incredible to be spoken) being pulled out and broken by force of mens hands, the door notwithstanding could not be opened for the press or multitude of people.

Much hurt done in the throng, whereof some died, some yet are alive whose Mothers arms were there broken.

At the last, when they were there also past all hope to get out, then they were all exceedingly amazed, and ran up and down, crying out upon the Hereticks which had conspired their death. The more they ran about and cried out, the more smoke and dust rose in the Church, even as though all things had now been on a flaming fire. I think there was never such a tumultuous hurly burly rising so of nothing heard of before, nor so great a fear where was no cause to fear, nor peril at all: so that if Democritus the merry Philosopher sitting in the top of the Church, and seeing all things in such safety as they were, had looked down upon the multitude, and beholden so great a number, some howling and weeping, running up and down, and playing the mad men, now hither now thither, as being tossed to and fro with Waves or Tempests, trembling and quaking, raging and faring, without any manifest cause, specially if he had seen those great Rabbins the Doctors laden with so many badges or cognisances of wisdom, so foolishly and ridiculously seeking holes and corners to hide themselves in, gasping, breathing, and sweating, and for very horror being almost beside themselves. I think he would have satisfied himself with this one laughter for all his life time, or else rather would have laughed his heart out of his belly, whilst one said that he plainly heard the noise of the fire, another affirmed that he saw it with his eyes, and another sware that he felt the molten lead dropping down upon his head and shoulders. Such is the force of Imagination, when it is once grafted in mens hearts through fear. In all the whole company, there was none that behaved himself more modestly than the Heretick that was there to do Penance; who casting his fagot off from his shoulders upon a Monks head that stood by, kept himself quiet, minding to take such part as the other did.

Democritus was a Philosopher which used to laugh at all things, as Heraclitus used to weep at all things.

Some say that the Monks head was broken with the fagot.

All the other, being careful for themselves, never made an end of running up and down and crying out. None cried out more earnestly than the Doctor that preached (who was, as I said, Doctor Smith) who in manner first of all cried out in the Pulpit, saying, These are the trains and subtilties of the Hereticks against me: Lord have mercy upon me, Lord have mercy upon me. But might not God, as it had been (to speak with Job) out of a Whirlwind, have answered again unto this Preacher thus, Thou dost now implore my mercy, but thou thy self shewest no mercy unto thy fellows and brethren. How doth thy flesh tremble now at the mention of fire? But think it a sport to burn other simple Innocents, neither do ye any thing at all regard it. If burning seem so grievous a matter unto you, and to suffer a torment of fire; then you should also have the like consideration in other mens perils and dangers, when as you do burn your fellows and brethren.

Job 40.

Prosopopœia.

Or if you think it but a light and trifling matter in them, go too now, do you also with like courage contemn, and with like patience suffer now the same torments your selves. And if so be it I should now suffer, you with the whole Church to be burned to ashes, what other thing should I do unto you, than you do daily unto your fellows and brethren? Wherefore since you so little esteem the death of others, be now content that other men should also little regard the death of you. With this, I say, or with some other like answer, if that either God, or humane Charity, either the common sense of nature would expostulate with them, yea if there had been a fire indeed (as they were more feared then hurt) who would have doubted but that it had happened unto them according to their deserts? But now worthy it is the noting, how the vain fear and folly of those Catholicks either was deluded, or how their cruelty was reproved, whereby they, being better taught by their own example, might hereafter learn what it is to put other poor men to the fire, which they themselves here so much abhorred.

A just expostulation against these burners of Gods people.

A good warning for the Papists to know what burning meaneth.

But to return again to the description of this Pageant, wherein (as I said before) there was no danger at all, yet were they all in such fear, as if present death had been over their heads.

In all this great maze and garboyl there was nothing more feared than the melting of the lead, which many affirmed that they felt dropping upon their bodies. Now in this sudden terror and fear, which took from them all Reason and Counsel out of their minds, to behold what practises and sundry shifts every man made for himself, it would make not only Democritus and Heraclitus also to laugh, but rather a Horse welnear to break his halter. But none used themselves more ridiculously, than such as seemed greatest wise men, saving that in one or two peradventure somwhat more quietness of mind appeared. Among whom was one Claymund president of Corpus Christi Colledge (whom for reverence and learnings sake I do here name) and a few other aged persons with him, which for their age and weakness durst not thrust themselves into the throng amongst the rest, but kneeled down quietly before the high Altar, committing themselves and their lives unto the Sacrament. The other, which were younger and stronger, ran up and down through the press, marvelling at the uncivility of men, and waxt angry with the unmannerly multitude that would give no room unto the Doctors, Bachelors, Masters, and other Graduates and Regent Masters. But as the terror and fear was common unto all men, so was there no difference made of Persons or Degrees, every man scambling for himself. The Violet Cap, or Purple Gown did there nothing avail the Dr. neither the Masters Hood nor the Monks Coul was there respected.

Claymundus Prefident of Corpus Christi Colledge.

Yea if the King or Queen had been there at that present and in that perplexity, they had been no better than a common man. After they had long striven and assayed all manner of ways and saw no remedy, neirther by force, neither authority to prevail, they fell to intreating and of-offering of rewards, one offering twenty pound, another his ſcarlet gown, ſo that any man would pull him out, though it were by the ears.

Some ſtood cloſe unto the pillars, thinking themſelves ſafe under the Vaults of Stone for the dropping of the lead. Otherſome, being without money and unprovided of all ſhifts, knew not which way to turn them. One being a Preſident of a certain Colledge (whoſe name I need not here to utter) pulling a boord out from the pues, covered his head and ſhoulders therewith againſt the ſcalding lead, which they feared much more than the fall of the Church. Now what a laughter would this have miniſtred unto Democritus amongſt other things, to behold there a certain grand paunch, who ſeeing the doors ſtopped and every way cloſed up, thought by another compendious means to get out through a glaſs Window if it might be by any ſhift? But here the Iron Grates letted him; notwithſtanding his greedy mind would needs attempt if he could happily bring his purpoſe to paſs. When he had broken the glaſs, and was come to the ſpace betweeen the Grates where he ſhould creep out, firſt he thruſt in his head with the one ſhoulder, and it went through well enough. Then he laboured to get the other ſhoulder after, but there was a great labour about that, and long he ſtuck by the ſhoulders with much ado. For what doth not importune labour overcome? Thus far forth he was now gotten. But by what part of his Body he did ſtick faſt, I am not certain, neither may I fain, forſomuch as there be yet witneſſes which did ſee theſe things, which would correct me if I ſhould ſo do. Notwithſtanding this is moſt certain that he did ſtick faſt between the Grates, and could neither get out nor in.

Thus this good man being indeed a Monk, and having but ſhort hoſe, by the which way he ſuppoſed ſoonеſt to eſcape, by the ſame he fell into further inconvenience, making of one danger two. For if the fire or lead had fallen on the outſide, thoſe parts which did hang out of the Window had been in danger; and contrariwiſe if the flame had raged within the Church, all his other parts had lien open to the fire. And as this man did ſtick faſt in the windows, ſo did the reſt ſtick as faſt in the doors, that ſooner they might have been burned, than they could once ſtir or move one foot. Through the which preſs at the laſt there was a way found, that ſome going over their heads gat out.

Pleno ridet Calphurnius ore. Horat.

Here alſo happened another Pageant in a certain Monk (if I be not miſadviſed) of Gloceſter Colledge, whereat Calphurnius might well laugh with an open Mouth. So it hapned, that there was a young lad in this Tumult, who ſeeing the doors faſt ſtopped with the preſs or multitude, and that he had not way to get out climbed up upon the door, and there ſtaying upon the top of the door was forced to tarry ſtill. For to come down into the Church again he durſt not for fear of the fire, and to leap down toward the ſtreet he could not without danger of falling. When he had tarried there a while, he adviſed himſelf what to do; neither did occaſion want to ſerve his purpoſe. For by chance, amongſt them that got out over mens heads, he ſaw a Monk coming towards him which had a great wide Coule hanging at his back. This the boy thought to be a good occaſion for him to eſcape by.

A boy got into a Monks Coul.

When the Monk came near unto him, the boy which was on the top of the door came down and prettily conveighed himſelf into the Monks Coul, thinking (as it came to paſs indeed) that if the Monk did eſcape, he ſhould alſo get out with him. To be brief, at the laſt the Monk gat out over Mens heads, with the boy in his Coul, and for a great while felt no weight or burthen.

At the laſt, when he was ſomewhat more come to himſelf, and, did ſhake his ſhoulders, feeling his coul heavier then it was accuſtomed to be, and alſo hearing the voice of one ſpeaking behind in his Coul, he was more afraid than he was before when he was in the throng, thinking in very deed, that the evil ſpirit which had ſet the Church on fire had flien in his Coul: By and by he began to play the Exorciſt; in the Name of God (ſaid he) and all Saints, I command thee to declare what thou art that art behind at my back. To whom the boy anſwered, Iam Bertrams boy (ſaid he) for that was his Name. But I (ſaid the Monk) adjure thee in the Name of the unſeparable Trinity, that thou wicked ſpirit do tell me who thou art, from whence thou comeſt, and that thou get hence. I am Bertrams boy (ſaid he,) good maſter let me go: and with that his Coul began with the weight to crack upon his ſhoulders. The Monk when he perceived the matter, took the boy out and diſcharged his Coul: The boy took his legs and ran away as faſt as he could.

Among other, one wiſer than the reſt ran with the Church door key, beating upon the ſtone walls, thinking therewith to break an hole thorow to eſcape out.

In the mean time thoſe that were in the ſtreet looking diligently about them, and perceiving all things to be without fear, marvelled at this ſudden outrage, and made ſigns and tokens to them that were in the Church to keep themſelves quiet, crying to them that there was no danger.

But forſomuch as no word could be heard by reaſon of the noiſe that was within the Church, thoſe ſigns made them much more afraid than they were before, interpreting the matter as though all had been on fire without the Church, and for the dropping of the lead and falling of other things, they ſhould rather tarry ſtill within the Church, and not to venture out. This trouble continued in this manner by the ſpace of certain hours.

The next day, and alſo all the week following there was an incredible number of Bills ſet upon the Church doors, to inquire for things that were loſt, in ſuch variety and number, as Democritus might here again have juſt cauſe to laugh. If any man have found a pair of Shoos yeſterday in S. Mary Church, or knoweth any man that hath found them, &c. Another Bill was ſet up for a Gown that was loſt. Another intreated to have his Cap reſtored. One loſt his purſe and girdle with certain money; another his ſword. One inquireth for a ring, and one for one thing, another for another. To be ſhort, there was few in this garboil, but that either through negligence loſt, or through oblivion left ſome thing behind them.

Thus have you hitherto heard a Tragical Story of a terrible fire which did no hurt. The deſcription whereof although it be not ſo perfectly expreſſed according to the worthineſs of the matter, yet becauſe it was not to be paſſed with ſilence, we have ſuperficially ſet forth ſome ſhadow thereof, whereby the wiſe and diſcreet may ſufficiently conſider the reſt, if any thing elſe be lacking in ſetting forth the full narration thereof. As touching the Heretick, becauſe he had not done his ſufficient Penance there by occaſion of this hurly burly, thereof the next day following he was reclaimed into the Church of Saint Frideſwide, where he ſupplied the reſt that lacked of his Plenary penance.

The fourth and fifth Marriage of King Henry the eighth.

Anno 1541.

THe ſame year and month next following, after the apprehenſion of the Lord Cromwel, which was Ann 1541. the King immediately was divorced from the Lady Ann of Cleve. The cauſe of which ſeparation being wholly committed to the Clergy of the Convocation, it was by them defined, concluded, and granted, that the King being freed from that preтenſed Matrimony (as they called it) might marry where he would, and ſo might ſhe likewiſe; who alſo conſenting to the ſame divorcement her ſelf, by her own Letters, was after that taken no more for Queen, but only called Ann of Cleve. Which things thus diſcuſſed by the Parliament and Convocation-houſe, the King the ſame Month was married to his fifth Wife, which was the Lady Katherine Howard, Niece to the Duke of Norfolk, and Daughter to the Lord Edmund Howard the Dukes Brother. But this marriage likewiſe continued not long.

Auguſt. The Lady Ann of Cleve divorced from the King.

The King permitted to marry after his divorce.

The King married to the Lady Katherine Howard his fifth Wife.

In the ſame Month of Auguſt, and the ſame year, I find moreover in ſome Records, beſides the four and twenty chapter houſe Monks above recited, whom Cope doth ſanctifie for holy Martyrs, for ſuffering in the Popes Devotion, againſt the Kings Supremacy, other ſix which were alſo brought to Tyborn and there executed in the like caſe of Rebellion. Of whom the firſt was the Prior of Doncaſter; the ſecond a Monk of the Charterhouſe of London, called Giles Horn, ſome call him William Horn; the third one Thomas Ipſam a Monk of Weſtminſter, who had his Monks Garment pluckt from his his back, being the laſt Monk in King Henries days that did wear that Monkiſh weed; the fourth one Philpot; the fifth one Carew; the ſixth was a Frier. See what a difficulty it is to pluck up blind Superſtition once rooted in Mans Heart by a little cuſtom.

Anno 1542.

Now as touching the late marriage between the King and the Lady Haward, ye heard how this Matrimony indured not long; for in the year next following 1542. the ſaid Lady Katherine was accuſed to the King of incontinent living, not only before her marriage with Francis Direham, but alſo of ſpouſebreach, after her marriage, with Thomas Culpeper. For the which both the men aforeſaid by Act of Parliament were attainted and executed for high Treaſon, and alſo the Lady Katherine, late Queen, with the Lady Jane Rochford Widow, late Wife to George Boleyne Lord Rochford, Brother to Queen Ann Boleyne, were beheaded for their deſerts within the Tower. Ex Hallo & aliis.

It is reported of ſome, that this Lady Rochford forged a falſe Letter againſt her Husband and Q. Anne his ſiſter, by the which they were both caſt away: which, if it be ſo, the judgment of God then is here to be marked.

After the death and puniſhment of this Lady his fifth Wife, the King calling to remembrance the words of the Lord Cromwel, and miſſing now more and more his old Counſellour, and partly alſo ſmelling ſomewhat the ways of Wincheſter, began a little to ſet his foot again in the Cauſe of Religion. And although he ever bare a ſpecial favour to Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury (as you ſhall hear more hereafter, God willing, in the Life of Cranmer) yet now the more he miſſed the Lord Cromwel, the more he inclined to the Archbiſhop, and alſo to the right cauſe of Religion. And therefore in the ſame year and in the Month of October, after the Execution of this Queen, the King underſtanding ſome abuſes yet to remain unreformed, namely, about Pilgrimages and Idolatry, and other things more beſides to be corrected within his Dominions, directed his Letters unto the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the ſpeedy redreſs and reformation of the ſame. The tenour of which Letters hereafter fully enſueth, in theſe words.

Right Reverend Father in God, right truſty and welbeloved, we greet you well, letting you to wit, that whereas heretofore upon the zeal and remembrance which we had to our bounden duty towards Almighty God, perceiving ſundry ſuperſtitions and abuſes to be uſed and embraced by our people, whereby they grievouſly offended him and his word; we did not only cauſe the Images and Bones of ſuch as they reſorted and offered unto, with the Ornaments of the ſame, and all ſuch Writings and Monuments of fained Miracles, wherewith they were illuded, to be taken away in all places of the Realm, but alſo by our Injunctions commanded that no offering or ſetting up of lights or candles ſhould be ſuffered in any Church, but only to the bleſſed Sacraments of the Altar: it is lately come unto our knowledge, that this our good intent and purpoſe notwithſtanding, the Shrines, coverings of Shrines, and Monuments of thoſe things do yet remain in ſundry places of this Realm, much to the ſlander of our Doings, and to the great diſpleaſure of Almighty God, the ſame being means to allure our Subjects to their former Hypocriſie and Superſtition, and alſo that our Injunctions be not kept as appertaineth. For the due and ſpeedy Reformation whereof, we have thought meet, by theſe our Letters expreſly to will and command you, that incontinent upon the receit hereof, you ſhall not only cauſe due ſearch to be made in the Cathedral Church for thoſe things, and if any Shrine, covering of Shrine, Table, Monument of Miracles, or other Pilgrimages, do there continue, to cauſe it to be ſo taken away, as there remain no memory of it, but alſo that you ſhall take order with all the Curates, and other having charge within your Dioceſs to do the ſemblable, and to ſee that our Injunctions be duly kept, as appertaineth without failing, as we truſt you, and as you will anſwer to the contrary.

Shrines and Monuments of Idolatry aboliſhed by the King.

Given under our Signet at our Town of Hull, the fourth day of October in the 33. year of our Reign.

Furthermore, the next year after this enſuing, which was 1543. in the Month of February, followed another Proclamation given out by the Kings Authority, wherein the Popes Law, forbidding white meats to be eaten in Lent, was repealed, and the eating of ſuch meats ſet at liberty, for the behoof of the Kings Subjects. The Copy of which Proclamation I thought here good alſo to be remembred.

Anno 1543.

The eating of white meats in Lent ſet at liberty.

For aſmuch as by divers and ſundry occaſions, as well Herrings, Lings, Saltfiſh, Salmond, Stockfiſh, as other kinds of Fiſh have been this year ſcant & alſo inhaunſed in prices above the old rate and common eſtimation of their value, ſo that if the Kings loving Subjects ſhould be inforced only to buy and provide Herring and other ſalt ſtore of Fiſh for the neceſſary and ſufficient ſuſtentation and maintenance of their houſehold and families all this holy times of Lent, according as they have been wont in times paſt to do, and ſhould not be by ſome other convenient means relieved therein, the ſame might and ſhould undoubtedly redound to their importable charge and detriment; and foraſmuch as his Highneſs conſidereth how this kind and manner of faſting, that is to ſay, to abſtain from Milk, Butter, Eggs, Cheeſe, and other white meats, is but a meer poſitive Law of the Church, and uſed by a Cuſtom within this Realm, and of none other force or neceſſity, but the ſame may be upon conſiderations and grounds altered and diſpenſed with from time to time, by the publick Authority of Kings and Princes, whenſoever they ſhall perceive the ſame to tend to the hurt and damage of their people: The Kings Highneſs therefore, moſt graciouſly conſidering and tendering the Wealth and Commodity of his people, hath thought good for the conſiderations above rehearſed, to releaſe and diſpence with the ſaid Law and Cuſtom of abſtaining from white meats this holy time of Lent, and of his eſpecial grace and meer motion giveth and granteth unto all and ſingular his Subjects within this his Realm of England, Wales, Cales, Guiſnes, and Hammes, and in all other his Graces Dominions, free liberty, faculty and licence, to eat all manner of white meats, as Milk, Eggs, Butter, Cheeſe, and ſuch like, during the time of this Lent, without any ſcruple or grudge of Conſcience, any Law, Conſtitution, Uſe, or Cuſtom to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Wherein nevertheleſs his Highneſs exhorteth, and in the Name of God requireth all ſuch his Faithful Subjects, as may, will, or ſhall enjoy this his ſaid grant or faculty, that they be in no wiſe ſcrupulous or doubtful thereof, nor abuſe or turn the ſame into a fleſhly or carnal liberty, but rather endeavour themſelves to their poſſible powers, with this liberty of eating of white meats, to obſerve alſo that faſt which God moſt ſpecially requireth of them, that is to ſay, to renounce the World and the Devil, with all their pomps and works, and alſo to ſubdue and repreſs their carnal affections and the corrupt works of the fleſh, according to their Vow and Profeſſion made at the font ſtone, for in theſe points ſpecially conſiſteth the very true and perfect abſtinence or faſting of a Chriſtian Man; thus to indure and continue from year to year, till the Kings Highneſs pleaſure ſhall by his Majeſties Proclamation be publiſhed to the contrary.

The Trouble and Perſecution of four Windſor-men, Robert Teſtwood, Henry Filmer, Anthony Perſon, and John Marbeck, perſecuted for Righteouſneſs ſake, and for the Goſpel.

Coming now to the Story and time of the four Windſor Men troubled and perſecuted for the true Teſtimony of Gods Word, whereof three were Martyred and Sacrificed in Fire, the fourth (which was Marbeck) had his Pardon. Firſt I have to ſhew the original of their troubles in ſeveral parts, ſecondly the manner and order of their death as they ſuffered together, which was Anno 1544. Thirdly, to anſwer partly in purgation of of my ſelf, againſt certain clatterers which have hitherto taken their pleaſure in railing againſt my former Edition of Acts and Monuments; for miſtaking the name of Marbeck, whom in one place I reported to have been burned, albeit in the end of the Story, correcting my ſelf again I declared him not to have been burned. Wherefore to ſtop the brawling mouths of ſuch quarrellers, I thought here

The firſt beginning of Teſtwoods troubles.

Steph. Gardiner Bp. of Wincheſter.

IN the Year of our Lord 1544. there was one Robert Teſtwood dwelling in the City of London, who for his knowledge in Muſick had ſo great a name, that the Muſicians in Windſor Colledge thought him a worthy man to have a room among them. Whereupon they enformed Doctor Sampſon (being then their Dean) of him. But forſomuch as ſome of the Canons had at that time heard of Teſtwood, how that he ſmelled of the new Learning (as they called it) it would not be conſented unto at the firſt. Notwithſtanding, with often ſute of the foreſaid Muſicians, made to one Doctor Tate (who, being half a Muſician himſelf, bare a great ſtroke in ſuch matters) a room being void, Teſtwood was ſent for to be heard. And being there four or five days among the Quire men, he was ſo well liked both for his voice and cunning, that he was admitted, and after ſetled in Windſor, with his Houſhold, and had in good eſtimation with the Dean and Canons a great while: but when they had perceived him by his often talk at their Tables (for he could not well diſſemble his Religion) that he leaned to Luthers Sect, they began to miſlike him. And ſo paſſing forth among them, it was his chance one day to be at Dinner with one of the Canons, named Doctor Rawſon. At the which Dinner, among all other, was one of King Edwards four Chantry Prieſts, named Mr. Ely, an old Batchelor of Divinity. Which Ely in his talk at the Board began to rail againſt Lay-men, which took upon them to meddle with the Scriptures, and to be better learned (knowing no more but the Engliſh Tongue) then they which had been Students in the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge all the days of their lives. Then Teſtwood, perceiving he meant that by him, could forbear his railing no longer, but ſaid, Mr. Ely, by your patience, I think it be no hurt for Lay-men, as I am, to read and to know the Scriptures.

Which of you (quoth Ely) that be unlearned, knoweth them, or underſtandeth them? S. Paul ſaith, If Marry Sir, quoth Teſtwood, he meaneth nothing elſe by them (as I have learned) but burning Charity, that by doing good to our Enemies we ſhould thereby win them. Ah ſirra, quoth he, you are an old Scholar indeed.

Bucklayer the Kings Attorney	After this they fell into further communication of the Pope, whoſe Supremacy was much ſpoken of at that time, but not known to be ſo far in queſtion in the Parliament Houſe as it was. And in their talk Ely demanded of Teſtwood, Whether the Pope ought to be Head of their Church, or no? Againſt the which Teſtwood durſt not ſay his full mind, but reaſoned within his bounds a great while. But when they were both well ſtricken in an heat, Teſtwood forgetting himſelf, chanced to ſay, That every King, in his own Realm and Dominion, ought to be the Head of the Church under Chriſt. At the which words Ely was ſo chafed, that he roſe up from the Table in a great fume, calling him Heretick, and all that naught was, and ſo went brawling, and chiding away to the great diſquieting of all the Company that were there.

Every King in his own Realm and Church is Head under Chriſt.

Then was Teſtwood very ſorry to ſee the old man take it ſo grievouſly. Whereupon after Dinner he went and ſought Mr. Ely, and found him walking in the Body of the Church, thinking to have talked with him charitably, and ſo to have been at one again; but ever as Teſtwood preſſed towards him, the other ſhunned him, and would not come nigh him, but ſpit at him; ſaying to others that walked by, Beware of this Fellow, for he is the greateſt Heretick and Schiſmatick that ever came in Windſor.

Now began the matter to brew. For after that Ely had made his Complaint to the Deans Deputy, and other of the Canons, they were all againſt Teſtwood, purpoſing ſurely at the Deans coming home (if all things had chanced even) to have put him to his trump. But ſee the fortune, It was not twelve days after, e're that the Kings Supremacy paſſed in the Parliament Houſe. Whereupon the Dean (Dr. Sampſon) came home ſuddenly in the night late, and forthwith ſent his Verger about to all the Canons, and Miniſters of the Colledge, from the higheſt to the loweſt, commanding them to be in the Charter-houſe by eight of the Clock in the morning. Then Ely conſulted with the Canons overnight (as late as it was) and thought on the next day to have put Teſtwood to a great plunge: But he that layeth a ſnare for another man, ſaith Solomon, ſhall be taken in it himſelf. And ſo was Ely. For when the Dean, and every man were come and placed in the Chapter Houſe, and that the Dean had commended the Miniſters of the Church for their diligence in tending the Quire, exhorting them alſo to continue in the ſame; he began, contrary to every mans expectation, to inveigh againſt the Biſhop of Romes Supremacy and uſurped Authority, confounding the ſame by manifeſt Scriptures and probable Reaſons, ſo earneſtly, that it was a wonder to hear; and at length declared openly, that by the whole conſent of the Parliament Houſe, the Popes Supremacy was utterly aboliſhed out of this Realm of England for ever, and ſo commanded every man there, upon his Allegiance, to call him Pope no more, but Biſhop of Rome, and whatſoever he were that would not ſo do, or did from that day forth maintain or favour his Cauſe by any manner of means, he ſhould not only loſe the benefit of that Houſe, but be reputed as an utter enemy to God, and to the King. The Canons hearing this, were all ſtricken in a dump. Yet notwithſtanding Elies heart was ſo great, that he would fain have uttered his cankared ſtomach againſt Teſtwood: but the Dean (breaking his tale) called him old Fool, and took him up ſo ſharply, that he was fain to hold his peace. Then the Dean commanded all the Popes Pardons which hanged about the Church to be brought into the Chapter Houſe, and caſt into the Chimney, and burnt before all their faces, and ſo departed.

Mr. Ely thinking to complain of other, was called fool for his labour.

Another cauſe of Teſtwoods trouble.

Another trouble of Teſtwood.

AS it chanced Teſtwood one day to walk in the Church at Afternoon, and beheld the Pilgrims, ſpecially of Devonſhire and Cornwall, how they came in by Plumps without Candles and Images of Wax in their hands, to offer to good King Henry of Windſor, as they called him, it pitied his heart to ſee ſuch great Idolatry committed, and how vainly the People had ſpent their goods in coming ſo far to kiſs a ſpur, and to have an old Hat ſet upon their Heads; inſomuch that he could not refrain, but (ſeeing a certain company which had done their Offring, ſtand gazing about the Church) went unto them, and with all gentleneſs began to exhort them to leave ſuch falſe worſhipping of dumb Creatures, and to learn to worſhip the true living God aright, putting them in remembrance what thoſe things were which they worſhipped, and how God many times had plagued his People for running a whoring to ſuch Stocks and Stones, and ſo would plague them and their Poſterity, if they would not leave it.

Idolatry to King Henry of Windſor.

Teſtwood deterreth the people from Idolatry.

After this ſort he admoniſhed them ſo long, till at laſt his words, as God would, took ſuch place in ſome of them, that they ſaid they never would go a Pilgrimage more. Then he went further, and found another ſort licking and kiſſing a white Lady made of Alablaſter, which Image was mortreſt in a wall behind the high Altar, and bordered about with a pretty border, which was made like branches with hanging Apples and Flowers. And when he ſaw them ſo ſuperſtitiouſly uſe the Image, as to wipe their hands upon it, and then to ſtroke them over their heads and faces, as though there had been great vertue in touching the Picture, he up with his hand, in the which he had a Key, and ſmote a piece of the border about the Image, down, and with the glance of the ſtroke chanced to break off the Images noſe. Lo, good People (quoth he) you ſee what it is, nothing but earth and duſt, and cannot help it ſelf, and how then will you have it to help you? For Gods ſake, Brethren, be no more deceived. And ſo he gat him home to his Houſe, for the rumour was ſo great, that many came to ſee the Image how it was defaced. And among all other, came one William Simons a Lawyer, who ſeeing the Image ſo beraied, and to lack her noſe, took the matter grievouſly, and looking down upon the Pavement, he ſpied the Images noſe where it lay, which he took up and put in his Purſe, ſaying it ſhould be a dear noſe to Teſtwood one day.

Now were many offended with Teſtwood, the Canons for ſpeaking againſt their profit, the Wax-ſellers for hindering their Market, and Simons for the Images noſe. And more then that, there were of the Canons men that threatned to hill him. Whereupon Teſtwood kept his Houſe, and durſt not come forth, minding to ſend the whole matter in writing by his Wife, to Mr. Cromwel the Kings Secretary, who was his ſpecial Friend. The Canons hearing that Teſtwood would ſend to Cromwel, they ſent the Verger unto him, to will him to come to the Church; who ſent them word again that he was in fear of his life, and therefore would not come. Then ſent they two of the eldeſt Pety Canons to entreat him, and to aſſure him that no man ſhould do him harm. He made them a plain anſwer, That he had no ſuch truſt in their promiſes, but would complain to his Friends. Then wiſt they not what ſhift to make, for of all men they feared Cromwel, but ſent in poſt haſte for old Mr. Ward, a Juſtice of Peace, dwelling three or four miles off, who being come, and hearing the matter, was very loath to meddle in it. But notwithſtanding, through their entreaty, he went to Teſtwood, and had much ado to perſwade him, but at the laſt he did faithfully promiſe him, by the Oath he had made to God and the King, to defend him from all danger and harms, that Teſtwood was content to go with him.

The Papiſts of Windſor afraid of Cromwel.

The Canons of Windſor glad to fall in again with Teſtwood.

And when Mr. Ward and Teſtwood were come into the Church, and were going toward the Chapter Houſe, where the Canons abode their coming, one of the Canons men drew his dagger at Teſtwood, and would have been upon him, but Mr. Ward with his man reſiſted, and got Teſtwood into the Chapter Houſe, cauſing the Serving-man to be called in, and ſharply rebuked of their Maſters, who ſtrictly commanded them upon pain of loſing their ſervice, and further diſpleaſure, not to touch him, nor to give him an evil word. Now Teſtwood, being alone in the Chapter Houſe with the Canons and Mr. Ward, was gently entreated, and the matter ſo pacified, that Teſtwood might quietly come and go to the Church, and do his duty as he had done before.

Teſtwood in danger of his life.

Another Cauſe of Teſtwoods trouble.

UPon a Relick Sunday (as they named it) when every Miniſter after their old cuſtom ſhould have born a Relick in his hand about a Proceſſion, one was brought to Teſtwood. Which Relick, as they ſaid, was a Rochet of Biſhop Beckets. And as the Sexton would have put the Rochet in Teſtwoods hands, he puſhed it from him, ſaying, if he did give it to him, he would wipe his tail withal, and ſo the Rochet was given to another. Then came the Verger down from the high Altar with S. Georges Dagger in his hand, demanding who lacked a Relick. Marry, quoth Teſtwood, give it to Mr. Hake, who ſtood next him, for he is a pretty man of his hands, and ſo the Dagger was given unto him. Now Teſtwood perceiving the Dagger in Mr. Hake's hand, and being merrily diſpoſed (as he was a merry conceited man) ſtepped forth out of his place to Dr. Clifton, ſtanding directly before him in the midſt of the Quire, with a glorious golden Cope upon his back, having the Pix in his hand, and ſaid, Sir, Mr. Hake hath S. Georges Dagger. Now if he had his Horſe, and S. Martins Cloak, and Mr. John Shorns boots, with King Henries Spurs, and his Hat, he might ride when he would, and ſo ſtepped into his place again. Whereat the other changed colour, and wiſt not what to ſay.

Another Cauſe of Teſtwoods Trouble.

IN the days of Mr. Franklen, who ſucceeded Doctor Sampſon in the Deanary of Windſor, there was on a time ſet up at the Quire door a certain fooliſh printed Paper in Meeter, all to the praiſe and commendation of our Lady, aſcribing unto her our Juſtification, our Salvation; our Redemption, the Forgiveneſs of Sins, &c. to the great derogation of Chriſt. Which Paper, one of the Canons, called Mr. Magnus (as it was reported) cauſed to be ſet up in deſpite of Teſtwood and his Sect. When Teſtwood ſaw this Paper, he pluckt it down ſecretly. The next day after was another ſet up in the ſame place. Then Teſtwood coming into the Church, and ſeeing another Paper ſet up, and alſo the Dean coming a little way off, made haſte to be at the Quire door, while the Dean ſtaid to take holy Water, and reaching up his hand as he went, pluckt away the Paper with him. The Dean, being come to his Stall, called Teſtwood unto him, and ſaid, That he marvelled greatly how he durſt be ſo bold to take down the Paper in his preſence? Teſtwood anſwered again, That he marvelled much more, that his Maſterſhip would ſuffer ſuch a blaſphemous Paper to be ſet up, beſeeching him not to be offended with that he had done, for he would ſtand unto it. So Maſter Dean being a timorous man, made no more ado with him. After this were no more Papers ſet up, but poor Teſtwood was eaten and drunken among ſt them at every meal, and an Heretick he was, and would roſt a Fagot for this geer one day.

Now Mr. Magnus being ſore offended with Teſtwood for plucking down his Papers, to be revenged on him, deviſed with the Dean and the reſt of the Canons, to ſend their Letters to Dr. Chamber, one of their Brethren, and the Kings Phyſician, who lay, for the moſt part, at the Court, to ſee what he would do againſt Teſtwood. Which

Which Letters being made, were sent with speed. But whatsoever the cause was, whether he durst not meddle for fear of Cromwel, or what else, I cannot tell, their sute came to none effect. Then wist they not what to do, but determined to let the matter sleep, till S. Georges Feast, which was not far off.

Now in the mean time there chanced a pretty story, between one Robert Philips, Gentleman of the Kings Chappel, and Testwood. Which story, though it was but a merry prank of a singing man, yet it grieved his Adversary wonderfully. The matter was this: Robert Philips was so notable a singing man (wherein he gloried) that whersoever he came, the best and longest Song, with most Counterverses in it, should be set up at his coming. And so his chance being now to be at Windsor, against his coming to the Anthem, a long Song was set up, called Lauda vivi. In which Song there was one Counterverse toward the end, that began on this wise, O redemptrix & salvatrix: Which verse, of all other, Robert Philips would sing, because he knew that Testwood could not abide that Ditty. Now Testwood knowing his mind well enough, joyned with him on the other part: and when he heard Robert Philips begin to fetch his flourish with, O redemptrix & salvatrix, repeating the same one in anothers neck, Testwood was as quick on the other side to answer him again with Non redemptrix, nec salvatrix, and so striving there with O and Non, who should have the mastery, they made an end of the verse. Whereat was good laughing in sleeves of some, but Robert Philips with other of Testwoods enemies, were sore offended.

A blasphemous Anthem, calling the Virgin Mary our Saviour and Redeemer.

A merry contention between Robert Philips of the Kings Chappel, and Testwood, about O Redemptrix, & non Redemptrix.

Within fourteen days after this, the Lords of the Garter (as there custom is yearly to do) came to Windsor to keep S. Georges Feast, at which Feast the Duke of Norfolk was President: unto whom the Dean and Canons made a grievous complaint on Testwood. Who being called before the Duke, he shook him up, and all to reviled him, as though he would have sent him to hanging by and by. Yet nevertheless, Testwood so behaved himself to the Duke, that in the end he let him go without any further molesting of him, to the great discomfort of the Dean and Canons.

Testwood complained of to the old Duke of Norfolk.

Here you have heard the causes which have moved Testwoods enemies to seek his destruction, and could not attain their purpose, till that wicked Haman, Dr. London came, as shall be shewed in the Process following.

The Original of Henry Filmers Trouble.

Filmers trouble beginneth.

ABout the Year of our Lord, 1541. after all the Orders of superstitious and begging Friers were suppressed and put down, there chanced one Sir Thomas Melster, which had been a Frier before, and changed his Friers Coat (but not his Friers heart) to be Vicar of Windsor. This Priest on a time made a Sermon to his Parishioners, in the which he declared so many fond and Frierish tales, as that our Lady should hold out her Breasts to S. Bernard, and spout her milk into his eyes, with such like Festival Tales, that many honest men were offended therewith, and especially this Henry Filmer, then one of the Churchwardens: who was so zealous to Gods Word, that he could not abide to hear the glory of Christ so defaced with superstitious Fables. Whereupon he took an honest man or two with him, and went to the Priest, with whom he talked so honestly and so charitably, that in the end the Priest gave him hearty thanks, and was content at his gentle admonition to reform himself without any more ado, and so departed friendly the one from the other.

Frier Melster Vicar of Windsor.

Our Lady spouting milk in S. Bernards eyes.

Now there was one in the Town, called William Simons a Lawyer (as is aforesaid) who hearing that Filmer had been with the Priest, and reproved him for his Sermon, took Pepper in the Nose, and got him to the Vicar, and did so animate him in his doing, that he slipped quite away from the promise he had made to Filmer, and followed the mind of Simons: who meeting with Filmer afterward, all to reviled him, saying, He would bring him before the Bishop, to teach him to be so malapert. Then Filmer hearing the matter renewed, which he had thought had been suppressed, stood against Simons, and said, That the Vicar had preached false and unsound Doctrine, and so would he say to the Bishop whensoever he came before him. Then Simons slipt not the matter, but went to the Maior, and procured of him and his Brethren a Letter, signified with their own hands in the Priests favour, as much as could be devised; and so departed himself, with other his Friends, to go to the Bishop, (whose name was Dr. Capon) and to take the Priest with them; which was a painful Journey for the silly poor man, by reason he had a sore Leg.

Simons the Lawyer against Filmer.

Simons complaineth of Filmer to Dr. Capon, Bp. of Sarum

Now Filmer, hearing how Simons went about to put him to a foil, consulted with his Friends what was best to do; who concluded to draw out certain Notes of the Vicars Sermon, and to prepare themselves to be at Salisbury as soon as Simons or before him, if it might be possible. Thus both the parties being in a readiness, it chanced them to set forth of Windsor all in one day. But by reason the Priest, being an impotent man, could not indure to ride very fast, Filmer and his Company got to the Town an hour and more before Simons, went to the Bishop and delivered up their Bill unto him; which Bill, when the Bishop had seen and perused well, he gave them great thanks for their pains, saying, It did behove him to look upon it, for the Priest had preached Heresie, and should be punished.

Filmer forced to complain to the Bp. of Sarum

Then Filmer declared unto the Bishop the form of his talk he had with the Priest, and the end thereof; and how the matter, being renewed again by Simons, forced him and his Company to trouble his Lordship therewith. Well, said the Bishop, ye have done like honest men. Come to me soon again, and ye shall know more; and so they departed from the Bishop to their Inn. And while they were there reposing themselves, Simons, with his Company, came to the Town, and (not knowing the other to be come) got them up to the Bishop in all post haste, taking the Priest with them.

Simons and the Vicar came to Salisbury.

The Bishop, hearing of more Windsor men, demanded what they were, and being informed how it was the Vicar of the Town, with other more, he caused the Vicar to be brought in. To whom he said, Are you the Vicar of Windsor? Yea forsooth, my Lord, quoth he. How chanceth it, quoth the Bishop, that you are complained on? for there have been with me certain honest men of your Town, which have delivered up a Bill of erroneous Doctrine against you. If it be so, I must needs punish you; and opening the Bill, he read it unto him. How say you, quoth the Bishop, is this true or no? The Vicar could not deny it, but humbly submitted himself to the Bishops Correction. Then was his Company called in, and when the Bishop saw Simons, he knew him well, and said, Wherefore come ye, Mr. Simons? Pleaseth it your Lordship, quoth he, we are come to speak in our Vicars cause, which is a man of good conversation and honesty, and doth his duty so well in every point, that no man can find fault with him, except a lewd Fellow we have in our Town, called Filmer, which is so corrupt with Heresie, that he is able to poison a whole Country: and truly, my Lord, quoth Simons, there is no man that can preach or teach any thing that is good and godly, but he is ready to controll it, and to say it is stark naught. Wherefore we shall beseech your Lordship he may be punished, to the ensample of others, that our Vicar may do his duty quietly, as he hath done before this busie Fellow troubled him. And that your Lordship shall the better credit my sayings, I have brought with me these honest men of the Town; and beside all that, a testimonial from the Maior and his Brethren to confirm the same, and so he held the writing out in his hand.

The Vicar of Windsor troubled of the Bishop.

The words of Simons to the Bishop.

Then said the Bishop, so God help me, Mr. Simons, ye are greatly to blame, and most worthy to be punished of all men, that will so impudently go about to maintain your Priest in his Error, which hath preached Heresie, and hath confessed it; wherefore I may not nor will not see it unpunished. And as for that honest man, Filmer, on whom ye have complained, I tell you plainly he hath in this point shewed himself a great deal more honester man than you. But in hope you will no more bear out your Vicar in his evil doings, I will remit all things at this time, saving that he shall the next Sunday recant his Sermon openly before all his Parishioners in Windsor Church; and so the Bishop called in Filmer and his Company which waited without, and delivered the Prieſts Recantation unto them; with a great charge to ſee it truly obſerved in all points. Then Simons took his leave of the Biſhop, and departed with a flea in his ear, diſappointed of his purpoſe, and ſore aſhamed of the foil. For this cauſe Simons could never brook Filmer, but when he met him at any time after, would hold up his finger (as his manner was were he ought diſpleaſure) and ſay, I will be even with you one day, truſt me.

Bp. [Capons] answer to Simons.

Frier Molſter cauſed to recant his Sermon.

The Original of Anthony Pearſons trouble.

The trouble of Anthony Pearſon, Prieſt.

THere was a certain Prieſt, named Anthony Pearſon, which frequented much to Windſor, about the year of our Lord 1540. and uſing the Talent that God had given him in preaching, was greatly eſteemed among the People, who flocked ſo much to his Sermons which he made both in the Town and Country, that the great Prieſts of the Caſtle, with other Papiſts in the Town, ſpecially Simons, were ſore offended: inſomuch that Simons at the laſt began to gather of his Sermons, and to mark his Auditors; whereof enſued the death of divers, and trouble of many honeſt men. For about a year and more after, a Miniſter of Satan, called Dr. London, Warden of the New-Colledge in Oxford, was admitted one of the Prebendaries of Windſor, who, at his firſt coming to Windſor, began to utter his ſtomach and to ſhew his affection. For at his firſt reſidence dinner which he made to the Clerks (which Company for the moſt part at that time favoured the Goſpel,) all his whole talk to two Gentlemen ſtrangers at his board (till the Table was taking up) was nothing elſe but of Hereticks, and what a deſolation they would bring the Realm unto, if they might be ſo ſuffered. And by S. Mary, Maſters, (quoth he to the Clerks at laſt) I cannot tell, but there goeth a ſhrewd report abroad of this Houſe. Some made anſwer, it was undeſerved. I pray God it be, quoth he. I am but a ſtranger, and have but ſmall experience amongſt you; but I have heard it ſaid before I came hither, that there be ſome in this Houſe, that will neither have Prayer nor Faſting.

Then ſpake Teſtwood, By my troth, Sir, quoth he, I think that was ſpoken of malice: for Prayer, as your Maſterſhip knoweth better than I, is one of the firſt Leſſons that Chriſt taught us. Yea marry, Sir, quoth he, but the Hereticks will have no Invocation to Saints, which all the old Fathers do allow. What the old Fathers do allow, quoth Teſtwood, I cannot tell; but Chriſt doth appoint us to go to his Father, and to aſk our Petitions of him in Chriſts Name. Then you will have no mean between you and God, quoth Dr. London: Yes, Sir, quoth Teſtwood, our mean is Chriſt, as S. Paul ſaith, There is one Mediator between God and Man, even Jeſus Chriſt. Give us water, quoth Dr. London. Which being ſet on the board, he ſaid Grace and waſhed, and ſo falling into other Communication with the ſtrangers, the Clerks took their leave and departed.

Teſtwood anſwereth for the Clerks.

Goſpellers falſly ſlandered of the Papiſts.

When Dr. London had been at Windſor a while among his Catholick Brethren, and learned what Teſtwood was, and alſo of Simons (who ſhewed him our Ladies Noſe, as he called it) what a ſort of Hereticks were in the Town and about the ſame, and how they increaſed daily by reaſon of a naughty Prieſt, called Anthony Pearſon, he was ſo maliciouſly bent againſt them, that he gave himſelf wholly to the Devil to do miſchief. And to bring his wicked purpoſe about, he conſpired with the foreſaid Simons, a meet Clerk to ſerve ſuch a Curate, and other of like ſort, how they might compaſs the matter, firſt to have all the Arch-hereticks, as they termed them, in Windſor and thereabout, indicted of Hereſie, and ſo to proceed further. They had a good ground to work upon, as they thought, which was the ſix Articles, whereupon they began to build and practiſe thus. Firſt they drew out certain notes of Anthony Pearſons Sermons, which he had preached againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and their Popiſh Maſs. That done, they put in Sir William Hobby with the good Lady his Wife, Sir Tho. Cardine, Mr. Edmund Harman, Mr. Thomas Weldon, with Snowball and his Wife, as chief aiders, helpers, and maintainers of Anthony Pearſon. And alſo they noted Dr. Haynes Dean of Exeter, and a Prebendary of Windſor, to be a common receiver of all ſuſpected perſons. They wrote alſo the names of all ſuch as commonly haunted Anthony Pearſons Sermons, and of all ſuch as had the Teſtament, and favoured the Goſpel, or did but ſmell thereof.

Then had they privy Spies to walk up and down the Church, to hearken and hear what men ſaid, and to mark who did not reverence the Sacrament, at the elevation time, and to bring his name to Dr. London. And of theſe Spies ſome were Chantry Prieſts; among the which there was one notable Spy, whoſe name was called Sir William Bows, ſuch a fleering Prieſt as would be in every corner of the Church pattering to himſelf, with his Portuiſe in his hand, to hear and to note the geſture of men towards the Sacrament. Thus when they had gathered as much as they could, and made a perfect Book thereof, Dr. London with two of his Catholick Brethren more, gave them up to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Stephen Gardiner, with a great complaint againſt the Hereticks that were in Windſor, declaring unto him how the Town was ſore diſquieted through their Doctrine and evil Example. Wherefore they beſought his Lordſhips help, in purging the Town and Caſtle of ſuch wicked perſons. The Biſhop hearing their complaint, and ſeeing their Book, praiſed their doings, and bade them make Friends and go forward, and they ſhould not lack his help. Then they applied the matter with tooth and nail, ſparing for no money nor pains taking, as Marbeck ſaith that he himſelf heard one of them ſay, who is a greater doer herein, and afterward ſorry for that he had done, that the ſute thereof coſt him that year, for his part only, an hundred Marks, beſide the death of three good Geldings.

Now Biſhop Gardiner, which had conceived a further fetch in his brain than Dr. London had, made Wriſley and other of the Councel on his ſide, and ſpying a time convenient, went to the King, complaining what a ſort of Hereticks his Grace had in his Realm, and how they were not only crept into every corner of his Court, but even into his Privy Chamber, beſeeching therefore his Majeſty that his Laws might be proſecuted: the King, giving credit to the Councels words, was content his Laws ſhould be executed on ſuch as were Offenders. Then had the Biſhop that he deſired, and forthwith procured a Commiſſion for a private ſearch to be had in Windſor for Books and Letters that Anthony Pearſon ſhould ſend abroad, which Commiſſion the King granted to take place in the Town of Windſor, but not in the Caſtle.

Wincheſter and Wriſley complain to the King of the Goſpellers.

At this time the Canons of Exeter (ſpecially Suthran, Treaſurer of the Church, and Dr. Brurewood the Chancellor) had accuſed Dr. Haynes their Dean to the Councel, for preaching againſt holy Bread, and holy Water, and that he ſhould ſay in one of his Sermons (having occaſion to ſpeak of Matrimony) that marriage and hanging were deſtiny; upon the which they gathered Treaſon againſt him, becauſe of the Kings marriage. The Biſhop of Wincheſter (at the ſame time) had alſo informed the Councel of Mr. Hobby, how he was a bearer of Anthony Pearſon, and a great maintainer of Hereticks. Whereupon both he and Dr. Haynes were apprehended and ſent to the Fleet. But it was not very long after, e're that by the mediation of Friends they were both delivered.

Now, as touching the Commiſſion for ſearching for Books, Mr. Ward and Fachel of Reading were appointed Commiſſioners, who came to Windſor the Thurſday before Palm-Sunday, in the year of our Lord 1543. and began their ſearch about eleven of the Clock at night. In the which ſearch were apprehended Robert Benet, Henry Filmer, John Marbeck, and Robert Teſtwood, for certain Books and Writings found in their Houſes againſt the ſix Articles, and kept in ward till Monday after, and then fetcht up to the Councel, all ſave Teſtwood, with whom the Bailiffs of the Town were charged, becauſe he lay ſore diſeaſed of the Gout. The other three, being examined before the Councel, were committed to Priſon, Filmer and Benet to the Biſhop of Londons Goal, and Marbeck to the Marſhalſey, whoſe Examination is here ſet out, to declare the great goodneſs of the Councel, and the cruelty of the Biſhop.

The

The first Examination of John Marbeck, before the Councel, on the Monday after Palm-Sunday, 1544.

The first Examination of Marbeck.

THis Marbeck had begun a great Work in Engliſh, called The Concordance of the Bible: Which Book, being not half finiſhed, was among his other Books taken in the ſearch, and had up to the Councel. And when he came before them to be examined, the whole Work lay before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Steph. Gardiner, at the upper end of the board. Who beholding the poor man a while, ſaid; Marbeck, doſt thou know wherefore thou art ſent for? No, my Lord, quoth he. No, quoth the Biſhop? that is a marvellous thing. Forſooth, my Lord, quoth he, unleſs it be for a certain ſearch made of late in Windſor, I cannot tell wherefore it ſhould be. Then thou knoweſt the matter well enough, quoth the Biſhop; and taking up a quire of the Concordance in his hand, ſaid, Underſtandeſt thou the Latin Tongue? No, my Lord, quoth he, but ſimply. No, quoth the Biſhop. And with that ſpake Mr. Wriſley, (then Secretary to the King) he ſaith but ſimply. I cannot tell, quoth the Biſhop, but the Book is tranſlated word for word out of the Latin Concordance, and ſo began to declare to the reſt of the Councel, the nature of a Concordance, and how it was firſt compiled in Latin by the great diligence of the Learned men for the eaſe of Preachers; concluding with this reaſon, that if ſuch a Book ſhould go forth in Engliſh, it would deſtroy the Latin Tongue. And ſo caſting down the quire again, he reached another Book, which was the Book of Eſay the Prophet, and turning to the laſt Chapter, gave the Book to Marbeck, and asked him who had written the note in the Margent. The other looking upon it, ſaid, Forſooth, my Lord, I wrote it. Read it, quoth the Biſhop. Then he read it thus, Heaven is my ſeat, and the Earth is my footſtool. Nay, quoth the Biſhop, read it as thou haſt written it. Then ſhall I read it wrong, quoth he, for I had written it falſe. How hadſt thou written it, quoth the Biſhop. I had written it, quoth he, thus; Heaven is my ſeat, and the Earth is not my footſtool. Yea marry, quoth the Biſhop, that was thy meaning. No, my Lord (quoth he) it was but an overſight in writing; for, (as your Lordſhip ſeeth) this word (Not) is blotted out. At this time came other matters in to the Councel, ſo that Marbeck was had out to the next Chamber. And when he had ſtood there a while, one of the Councel, named Sir Anthony Wingfield, Captain of the Guard, came forth, and calling for Marbeck, committed him to one Belſon of the Guard, ſaying unto him on this wiſe, Take this man and have him to the Marſhalſey, and tell the Keeper that it is the Councels pleaſure that he ſhall intreat him gently, and if he have any Money in his Purſe, as I think he hath not much, take you it from him, leſt the Priſoners do take it, and miniſter it unto him as he ſhall have need. And ſo the Meſſenger departed with Marbeck to the Marſhalſey, and did his Commiſſion both faithfully and truly, both to the Keeper and to the Priſoner, as he was commanded.

The ſecond Examination of Marbeck, before the Biſhops Gentleman in the Marſhalſey.

The ſecond Examination of Marbeck.

ON the next day, which was Tueſday, by eight of the Clock in the Morning, there came one of the Biſhop of Wincheſters Gentlemen into the Marſhalſey, whoſe man brought after him two great Books under his arm, and finding Marbeck walking up and down in the Chappel, demanded of the Keeper why he was not in Irons. I had no ſuch Commandment, quoth he, for the Meſſenger which brought him yeſternight from the Councel, ſaid, It was their pleaſure he ſhould be gently uſed. My Lord (quoth the Gentleman) will not be content with you; and ſo taking the Books of his man, he called for a Chamber, up to the which he carried the Priſoner, and caſting the Books from him upon a Bed, ſate him down and ſaid, Marbeck, my Lord doth favour thee well for certain good qualities that thou haſt, and hath ſent me hither to admoniſh thee to beware and take heed leſt thou caſt away thy ſelf wilfully. If thou wilt be plain, thou ſhalt do thy ſelf much good; if not, thou ſhalt do thy ſelf much harm. I aſſure thee, my Lord lamenteth thy caſe, for as much as he hath always heard good report of thee; wherefore now ſee to thy ſelf, and play the wiſe man. Thou art acquainted with a great ſort of Hereticks, as Hobby and Haines, with other more, and knoweſt much of their ſecrets; if thou wilt now open them at my Lords requeſt, he will procure thy deliverance out of hand, and prefer thee to better living.

Talk between Wincheſters Gentleman and Marbeck in Priſon.

The name of this Gentleman was Mr. Knight.

Alas, Sir, quoth he, what ſecrets do I know? I am but a poor man, and was never worthy to be ſo converſant either with Mr. Hobby or Mr. Haines, to know any part of their minds. Well (quoth the Gentleman) make it not ſo ſtrange, for my Lord doth know well enough in what eſtimation they had both thee and Anthony Pearſon, for your Religion. For Anthony Pearſon, quoth he, I can ſay nothing, for I never ſaw him with them in all my life. And as for my ſelf, I cannot deny but that they have always, I thank them, taken me for an honeſt poor man, and ſhewed me much kindneſs; but as for their ſecrets, they were too wiſe to commit them to any ſuch as I am.

Marbeck cannot be perſwaded to detect others.

Peradventure (quoth the Gentleman) thou feareſt to utter any thing of them, becauſe they were thy Friends, leſt they hearing thereof might hereafter withdraw their friendſhip from thee: which thou needeſt not to fear, I warrant thee, for they are ſure enough, and never like to pleaſure thee any more, nor any man elſe.

With that the water ſtood in Marbecks eyes. Why weepeſt thou, quoth the Gentleman? Oh Sir, quoth he, I pray you pardon me; theſe men have done me good, wherefore I beſeech the living God to comfort them as I would be comforted my ſelf.

Well (quoth the Gentleman) I perceive thou wilt play the fool; and then he opened one of the Books, and asked him if he underſtood any Latin. But a little, Sir, quoth he. How is it then (quoth the Gentleman) that thou haſt tranſlated thy Book out of the Latin Concordance, and yet underſtandeſt not the Tongue? I will tell you (quoth he) in my youth I learned the Principles of my Grammar, whereby I have ſome underſtanding therein, though it be very ſmall. Then the Gentleman began to try him in the Latin Concordance and Engliſh Bible which he had brought: and when he had ſo done, and was ſatisfied, he called up his man to fetch away the Books, and ſo departed, leaving Marbeck alone in the Chamber, the door faſt ſhut unto him.

Another talk between Wincheſters Gentleman and Marbeck. How Wincheſter hunteth for Dr. Haynes.

About two hours after, the Gentleman came again with a ſheet of Paper folded in his hand, and ſet him down upon the Beds ſide, (as before) and ſaid, By my troth, Marbeck, my Lord ſeeth ſo much wilfulneſs in thee, that he ſaith it is pity to do thee good. When waſt thou laſt with Haines? Forſooth, quoth he, about three weeks ago, I was at dinner with him. And what talk, quoth the Gentleman, had he at his board? I cannot tell now, quoth he. No? quoth the Gentleman, thou art not ſo dull witted, to forget a thing in ſo ſhort a ſpace. Yes, Sir, quoth he, ſuch familiar talk as men do uſe at their boards, is moſt commonly by the next day forgotten, and ſo it was with me. Didſt thou never, quoth the Gentleman, talk with him, nor with any of thy Fellows of the Maſs, or of the bleſſed Sacrament? No, forſooth, quoth he. Now forſooth, quoth the Gentleman, thou lieſt; for thou haſt been ſeen to walk with Teſtwood, and other of thy Fellows, an hour together in the Church, when honeſt men have walked up and down beſide you, and ever as they have drawn near you, ye have ſtaied your talk till they have been paſt you, becauſe they ſhould not hear whereof you talked. I deny not, quoth he, but I have talked with Teſtwood and other of my Fellows, I cannot tell how oft, which maketh not that we talked either of the Maſs, or of the Sacrament: for men may commune and talk of many matters, that they would not that every man ſhould hear, and yet far from any ſuch thing; therefore it is good to judge the beſt. Well, quoth the Gentleman, thou muſt be plainer with my Lord than this, or elſe it will be wrong with thee, and that ſooner than thou weeneſt. How plain will his Lordſhip have me to be, Sir, quoth he? There is nothing that I can do and ſay with a ſafe Conſcience, but I am ready to do it at his Lordſhips pleaſure. What telleſt thou me, quoth the Gentleman, of thy Conſtience? Thou maiſt with a ſafe Conſciencee utter thoſe that be Conſcience little paſſed of among theſe Papiſts.

Hereticks, and ſo doing, thou canſt do God and the King no greater ſervice. If I knew, Sir, quoth he, who were an Heretick indeed, it were a thing; but if I ſhould accuſe him to be an Heretick that is none, what a worm would that be in my Conſcience ſo long as I lived? yea it were a great deal better for me to be out of this life, than to live in ſuch torment. In faith, quoth the Gentleman, thou knoweſt as well who be Hereticks of thy Fellows at home, and who be none, as I do know this Paper to be in my hand; but it maketh no matter, for they ſhall all be ſent for and examined: and thinkeſt thou that they will not utter and tell of thee all that they can? Yes, I warrant thee. And what a fooliſh Dolt art thou, that wilt not utter aforehand what they bee, ſeeing it ſtandeth upon thy deliverance to tell the truth? Whatſoever, quoth he, they ſhall ſay of me, let them do it in the Name of God, for I will ſay no more of them, nor of any man elſe, than I know. Marry, quoth the Gentleman, if thou wilt ſo do, my Lord requireth no more. And foraſmuch as now peradventure thy Wits are troubled, ſo that thou canſt not call things even by and by to remembrance, I have brought thee Ink and Paper, that thou mayeſt excogitate with thy ſelf, and write ſuch things as ſhall come to thy mind. O Lord, quoth Marbeck, what will my Lord do? Will his Lordſhip compel me to accuſe men I wot not whereof? No, quoth the Gentleman, my Lord compelleth thee not, but gently intreateth thee to ſay the truth; therefore make no more ado, but write, for my Lord will have it ſo, and ſo laid down the Ink and Paper, and went his way.

Mark here the wiles of Wincheſter.

Marbeck urged to accuſe his brethren.

Marbeck brought to great diſtreſs.

Now was Marbeck ſo full of heavineſs and wo, that he wiſt not what to do, nor how to ſet the Pen to the Book to ſatisfie the Biſhops mind, unleſs he did accuſe men to the wounding of his own Soul. And thus being compaſſed about with nothing but ſorrow and care, he cried out to God in his heart, falling down with weeping tears, and ſaid, Marbeck's Prayer to God.

O moſt merciful Father of Heaven, thou that knoweſt the ſecret doings of all men, have mercy upon thy poor Priſoner which is deſtitute of all help and comfort. Aſſiſt me, O Lord, with thy ſpecial Grace, that to ſave this frail and vile Body, which ſhall turn to corruption at his time, I have no power to ſay or to write any thing that may be to the caſting away of my Chriſtian Brother; but rather, O Lord, let this vile fleſh ſuffer at thy will and pleaſure. Grant this, O moſt merciful Father, for thy dear Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake.

Marbecks words written in Wincheſters Paper.

Then he roſe up and began to ſearch his Conſcience what he might write, and at laſt framed out theſe words: Whereas your Lordſhip will have me to write ſuch things as I know of my Fellows at home; pleaſeth it your Lordſhip to underſtand, that I cannot call to remembrance any manner of thing whereby I might juſtly accuſe any one of them, unleſs it be that the reading of the New Teſtament, which is common to all men, be an offence; more than this I know not.

Wincheſters Gentleman returneth the third time to Marbeck.

Now the Gentleman, about his hour appointed, came again, and found Marbeck walking up and down the Chamber. How now, quoth he, haſt thou written nothing? Yes Sir, quoth he, as much as I know. Well ſaid, quoth the Gentleman; and took up the Paper. Which when he had read, he caſt it from him in a great fume, ſwearing by our Lords Body, that he would not for twenty pound carry it to his Lord and Maſter. Therefore, quoth he, go to it again, and adviſe thy ſelf better, or elſe thou wilt ſet my Lord againſt thee, and then art thou utterly undone. By my troth, Sir, quoth Marbeck, if his Lordſhip ſhall keep me here theſe ſeven years, I can ſay no more than I have ſaid. Then wilt thou repent it, quoth the Gentleman; and ſo putting up his Penner and Inkhorn, departed with the Paper in his hand.

Well ſworn, and like a right Papiſt.

The third Examination of Marbeck before the Biſhop of Wincheſter himſelf in his own Houſe.

The third Examination of Marbeck.

THe next day, which was Wedneſday, by eight of the Clock in the Morning, the Biſhop ſent for Marbeck to his Houſe at S. Mary Overies, and as he was entring o the Biſhops Hall, he ſaw the Biſhop himſelf coming out at a door in the upper end thereof, with a Roll in his hand, and going toward the great Window, he called the poor man unto him, and ſaid, Marbeck, wilt thou caſt away thy ſelf? No, my Lord, quoth he, I truſt. Yes, quoth the Biſhop, thou goeſt about it, for thou wilt utter nothing. What a Devil made thee to meddle with the Scriptures? Thy Vocation was another way, wherein thou haſt a goodly gift, if thou didſt eſteem it. Yes, my Lord, quoth he, I do eſteem it, and have done my part therein, according to that little knowledge that God hath given me. And why the Devil, quoth the Biſhop, didſt thou not hold thee there? And with that he flang away from the Window out of the Hall, the poor man following him from place to place, till he had brought him into a long Gallery, and being there, the Biſhop began on this wiſe; Ah ſirra, quoth he, the Neſt of you is broken, I trow. And unfolding his Roll, (which was about an Ell long) he ſaid, Behold, here be your Captains, both Hobby and Haynes, with all the whole pack of thy Sect about Windſor, and yet wilt thou utter none of them. Alas, my Lord, quoth he, how ſhould I accuſe them, by whom I know nothing? Well, quoth the Biſhop, if thou wilt needs caſt away thy ſelf, who can let thee? what helpers hadſt thou in ſetting forth thy Book? Forſooth my Lord, quoth he, none. None, quoth the Biſhop, how can that be? It is not poſſible that thou ſhouldſt do it without help. Truly, my Lord, quoth he, I cannot tell in what part your Lordſhip doth take it, but howſoever it be, I will not deny but I did it without the help of any man, ſave God alone. Nay, quoth the Biſhop, I do not diſcommend thy diligence, but what ſhouldſt thou meddle with that thing which pertaineth not to thee?

Chriſt ſaith, Scrutamini Scripturas; and Wincheſter ſaith, the Devil makes men to meddle with the Scriptures.

Marbeck charged for ſetting forth the Concordance.

And in ſpeaking of theſe words, one of his Chaplains (called Mr. Medow) came up, and ſtayed himſelf at a Window, to whom the Biſhop ſaid, Here is a marvellous thing; this Fellow hath taken upon him to ſet out the Concordance in Engliſh, which Book when it was ſet out in Latin, was not done without the help and diligence of a dozen Learned men at the leaſt, and yet will he bear me in hand, that he hath done it alone. But ſay what thou wilt, quoth the Biſhop, except God himſelf would come down from Heaven and tell me ſo, I will not believe it: And ſo going forth to a Window where two great Bibles lay upon a Cuſhion, the one in Latin, and the other in Engliſh, he called Marbeck unto him, and pointing his finger to a place in the Latin Bible, ſaid, Canſt thou Engliſh this Sentence? Nay, my Lord, quoth he, I trow I be not ſo cunning to give it a perfect Engliſh, but I can fetch out the Engliſh thereof in an Engliſh Bible. Let's ſee, quoth the Biſhop. Then Marbeck turning the Engliſh Bible, found out the place by and by, and read it to the Biſhop. So he tried him three or four times, till one of his men came up and told him the Prieſt was ready to go to Maſs.

Mr. Clayback cometh again to Marbeck.

And as the Biſhop was going, ſaid the Gentleman which had examined Marbeck in the Marſhalſey the day before; Shall this Fellow write nothing while your Lordſhip is at Maſs, for he paſſeth not of it? It maketh no matter, quoth the Biſhop, for he will tell nothing; and ſo went down to hear Maſs, leaving Marbeck alone in the Gallery. The Biſhop was no ſooner down, but the Gentleman came up again with Ink and Paper. Come, ſirra, quoth he, my Lord will have you occupied till Maſs be done; perſwading him with fair words, that he would ſoon be diſpatched out of trouble, if he would uſe truth and plainneſs. Alas, Sir, quoth he, what would my Lord have me to do? For more than I wrote to his Lordſhip yeſterday, I cannot. Well, well, go too, quoth the Gentleman, and make ſpeed, and ſo went his way. There was no remedy but Marbeck muſt now write ſomething; wherefore he, calling to God again in his mind, wrote a few words, as nigh as he could frame them, to thoſe he had written the day before. When the Biſhop was come from Maſs, and had looked on the writing, he puſht it from him, ſaying, What ſhall this do? It hath neither head nor foot. There is a marvellous Sect of them, quoth the Biſhop to his men, for the Devil cannot make one of them to bewray another. Then was there nothing among the Biſhops Gentlemen, as they were making him ready to go to the Court, but Crucifige upon the poor man. And when the Biſhops white Rochet was on him,

Marbeck preſſed again to utter his Fellows.

and all, Well Marbeck (quoth he) I am now going to the Court, and was purpoſed, if I had found thee tractable, to have ſpoken to the Kings Majeſty for thee, and to have given thee thy meat, drink, and lodging here in mine Houſe; but ſeeing thou art ſo wilful and ſo ſtubborn, thou ſhalt go the Devil for me.

Then was he carried down by the Biſhops men, with many railing words. And coming through the great Chamber, there ſtood Dr. London, with two more of his Fellows, waiting the Biſhops coming, and paſſing by them into the Hall, he was there received of his Keeper, and carried to Priſon again. It was not half an hour after, e're that the Biſhop ſent one of his Gentlemen to the under Keeper, called Stokes, commanding him to put Irons upon Marbeck, and to keep him faſt ſhut in a Chamber alone, and when he ſhould bring him down to Dinner or Supper, to ſee that he ſpake to no man, and no man to him. And furthermore, that he ſhould ſuffer no manner of perſon (not his own Wife) to come and ſee him, or miniſter any thing unto him. When the Porter (who was the cruelleſt man that might be to all ſuch as were laid in for any matter of Religion, and yet, as God would, favourable to this poor man) had received this commandment from the Biſhop, he clapped Irons upon him, and ſhut him up, giving warning to all the Houſe, that no man ſhould ſpeak or talk to Marbeck, whenſoever he was brought down, and ſo continued the ſpace of three weeks or more, till his Wife was ſuffered to come unto him.

Marbeck brought again from Winchesters Houſe to the Marſhalſey.

A cruel Porter of the Marſhalſey, but yet good to Marbeck.

The Sute of Marbecks Wife to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Marbecks Wife ſueth to Winchester for her Husband.

Marbeck Arbecks Wife, at the time of her Husbands apprehenſion, had a young Child of a quarter old ſucking upon her breaſt; and when her Husband was taken from her, and had away to the Councel not knowing what ſhould become of him, ſhe left the Child and all, and gat her up to London, and hearing her Husband to be in the Marſhalſey, goeth thither: But when ſhe came there, ſhe could in no wiſe be ſuffered to ſee him, which greatly augmented her ſorrow. Then, by counſel of Friends, ſhe gat her to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, (for other help was there none to be had at that time) making great ſute to have his licence to go and ſee her Husband, and to help him with ſuch things as he lacked. Nay, quoth the Biſhop, thy Husband is acquainted with all the Hereticks that be in the Realm, both on this ſide the Sea and beyond, and yet will he utter none of them. Alas, my Lord (quoth ſhe) my Husband was never beyond the Seas, nor any great Traveller in the Realm, to be ſo acquainted, and therefore good my Lord, let me go ſee him. But all her earneſt ſute from day to day would not help, but ſtill he put her off, harping always upon this ſtring, Thy Husband will utter nothing. At the laſt, ſhe finding him in the Court at S. James, going towards his Chamber, was ſo bold to take him by the Rochet, and ſay, Oh my Lord, theſe eighteen days I have troubled your Lordſhip; now for the love of God, and as ever ye came of a woman, put me off no longer, but let me go to my Husband. And as ſhe was ſtanding with the Biſhop and his men, in a blind corner going to his Chamber, one of the Kings Servants, called Henry Carrike, and her next Neighbour, chanced to be by; and, hearing the talk between the Biſhop and her, deſired his Lordſhip to be good unto the poor woman, which had her own Mother lying Bedrid upon her hands, beſide five or ſix Children. I promiſe you (quoth the Biſhop) her Husband is a great Heretick, and hath read more Scripture than any man in the Realm hath done. I cannot tell, my Lord (quoth Carrike) what he is inwardly, but outwardly he is as honeſt a quiet Neighbour as ever I dwelt by. He will tell no thing, quoth the Biſhop; he knoweth a great ſort of falſe Harlots, and will not utter them. Yes, my Lord, quoth Carrike, he will tell, I dare ſay, for he is an honeſt man. Well, quoth the Biſhop, (ſpeaking to the Wife) thou ſeemeſt to be an honeſt woman, and if thou love thy Husband well, go to him, and give him good counſel, to utter ſuch naughty Fellows as he knoweth, and I promiſe thee he ſhall have what I can do for him; for I do fanſie him well for his Art, wherein he hath pleaſed me as well as any man; and ſo, ſtepping into his Chamber, he ſaid ſhe ſhould have his Letter to the Keeper. But his mind being changed, he ſent out his Ring by his Gentleman, which Gentleman delivered the Ring to his man, charging him with the Biſhops meſſage. And ſo his man went with the woman to the water ſide, and took boat, who never reſted railing on her Husband all the way, till they came to the Priſon; which was no ſmall croſs to the poor woman.

Marbecks Wife denied a great while to go to her Husband.

Hen. Carrike playeth the part of a good Neighbour.

Winchesters Argument. He hath read much Scripture: Ergo, he is an Heretick.

Marbecks Wife permitted at laſt to go to her Husband.

And when they were come to the Marſhalſey, the Meſſenger ſhewed the Biſhops Ring to the Porter, ſaying, Mr. Stokes, my Lord willeth you by this token, that ye ſuffer this woman to have recourſe to her Husband; but he ſtraitly chargeth you, that ye ſearch her both coming and going, leſt ſhe bring or carry any Letters to or fro, and that ſhe bring no body unto him, nor any word from any man. Gods blood, quoth the Porter, (who was a foul ſwearer) what will my Lord have me to do? Can I let her to bring word from any man? Either let her go to her Husband, or let her not go; for I ſee nothing by him but an honeſt man. The poor woman, fearing to be repulſed, ſpake the Porter fair, ſaying, Good Maſter be content, for I have found my Lord a very good Lord unto me. This young man is but the Gentlemans ſervant which brought the Ring from my Lord, and I think doth his Meſſage a great deal more ſtraiter than my Lord commanded the Gentleman, or than the Gentleman his Maſter commanded him: but nevertheleſs, good Maſter, (quoth ſhe) I ſhall be contented to ſtrip my ſelf before you both coming and going, ſo far as an honeſt woman may do with honeſty; for I do intend no ſuch thing, but only to comfort and help my Husband. Then the Meſſenger ſaid no more, but went his way, leaving the woman there, who from that time forth was ſuffered to come and go at her pleaſure.

Like to like man.

The part of a good Wife and an honeſt Matron.

The fourth Examination of Marbeck, before the Commiſſioners in the Biſhop of Londons Houſe.

The fourth Examination of Marbeck.

Commiſſioners for the ſix Articles: Dr. Capon B. of Salisbury. Dr. Skip B. of Hereford. Dr. Goodrick B. of Ely. Dr. Oking. Dr. May.

ABout three weeks before Whitſunday was Marbeck ſent for to the Biſhop of Londons Houſe, where ſat in Commiſſion Dr. Capon Biſhop of Salisbury, Dr. Skip Biſhop of Hereford, Dr. Goodrick Biſhop of Ely, Dr. Oking, Dr. May, and the Biſhop of Londons Scribe, having before them all Marbecks Books. Then ſaid the Biſhop of Salisbury; Marbeck, we are here in Commiſſion, ſent from the Kings Majeſty to examine thee of certain things whereof thou muſt be ſworn to anſwer us faithfully and truly. I am content, my Lord, quoth he, to tell you the truth ſo far as I can, and ſo took his Oath. Then the Biſhop of Salisbury laid forth before him his three Books of Notes, demanding whoſe hand they were. He anſwered they were his own hand, and notes which he had gathered out of other mens works, ſix years ago. For what cauſe, quoth the Biſhop of Salisbury, didſt thou gather them? For none other cauſe, my Lord, but to come by knowledge. For I being unlearned, and deſirous to underſtand ſome part of Scripture, thought by reading of Learned mens Works to come the ſooner thereby: and where as I found any place of Scripture opened and expounded by them, that I noted as ye ſee, with a Letter of his name in the Margent, that had ſet out the Work. So me think, quoth the Biſhop of Ely, (who had one of the Books of Notes in his hand all the time of their ſitting) thou haſt read of all ſorts of Books, both good and bad, as ſeemeth by the Notes. So I have, my Lord, quoth he. And to what purpoſe, quoth the Biſhop of Salisbury? By my truth, quoth he, for no other purpoſe but to ſee every mans mind. Then the Biſhop of Salisbury drew out a quire of the Concordance, and laid it before the Biſhop of Hereford, who looking upon it a while, lifted up his eyes to Dr. Oking, ſtanding next him, and ſaid, This man hath been better occupied then a great ſort of our Prieſts. To the which he made no Anſwer.

Then ſaid the Biſhop of Salisbury, whoſe help hadſt thou in ſetting forth this Book? Truly, my Lord, quoth he, no help at all. How couldſt thou, quoth the Biſhop, invent ſuch a Book, or know what a Concordance meant, without an Inſtructor? I will tell your Lordſhip, quoth he, what Inſtructor I had to begin it. When Thomas Matthew's Bible came firſt out in print, I was much deſirous to have have one of them: and being a poor man not able to buy one of them, determined with my ſelf to borrow one amongſt my friends, and to write it forth. And when I had written out the five books of Moſes in fair great paper, and was entred into the book of Joſhua, my friend Maſter Turner chanced to ſteal upon me unawares, and ſeeing me writing out the Bible, asked me what I meant thereby. And when I had told him the cauſe: Tuſh, quoth he, thou goeſt about a vain and tedious labour. But this were a profitable work for thee, to ſet out a Concordance in Engliſh. A Concordance, ſaid I, what is that? Then he told me it was a book to find out any word in the whole Bible by the Letter, and that there was ſuch an one in Latin already. Then I told him I had no learning to go about ſuch a thing. Enough, quoth he, for that matter, for it requireth not ſo much learning as diligence. And ſeeing thou art ſo painful a man, and one that cannot be unoccupied, it were a good exerciſe for thee. And this my Lord is all the inſtruction that ever I had before or after, of any man. What is that Turner, quoth the Biſhop of Salisbury? Marry, quoth Doctor May, an honeſt learned man, and a Batchelor of Divinity, and ſometime a Fellow in Magdalen Colledge in Oxford. How couldſt thou, quoth the Biſhop of Salisbury, with this inſtruction bring it to this order and form, as it is? I borrowed a Latin Concordance, quoth he, and began to practice my Wit, and at laſt with great labour and diligence brought it into this order, as your Lordſhip doth ſee. A good Wit with diligence, quoth the B. of Hereford, may bring hard things to paſs. It is great pity, quoth the Biſhop of Ely, he had not the Latin Tongue. So it is, quoth Doctor May. Yet cannot I believe, quoth the Biſhop of Salisbury, that he hath done any more in this work, than written it out after ſome other that is learned.

M. Richard Turner of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and after of Windſor, a godly learned man and a good Preacher: who in Q. Maries time fled into Germany and there died.

My Lords, quoth Marbeck, I ſhall beſeech you all to pardon me what I ſhall ſay, and grant to my requeſt if it ſhall ſeem good unto you. Say what thou wilt, quoth the Biſhop. I do marvel greatly wherefore I ſhould be ſo much examined for this book, and where I have committed any offence in doing of it or no? If I have, then were I loth any other to be moleſted or puniſhed for my fault. Therefore to clear all men in this matter, this is my requeſt, that ye will try me in the reſt of the book that is undone. Ye ſee that I am yet but at the letter L. beginning now at M. and take out what word ye will of that letter, and ſo in every letter following, and give me the words in a piece of paper, and ſet me in a place alone where it ſhall pleaſe you, with ink and paper, the Engliſh Bible, and the Latin Concordance: and if I bring you not theſe words written in the ſame order and form that the reſt before is, then was it not I that did it, but ſome other.

Marbeck's words to the Biſhops.

By my truth, Marbeck, quoth the Biſhop of Ely, that is honeſtly ſpoken, and then ſhalt thou bring many out of ſuſpition. That he ſhall, quoth they all. Then they bade Doctor Oking draw out ſuch words as he thought beſt in a piece of paper, and ſo roſe up; and in the mean time fell into other familiar talk with Marbeck (as the Biſhop of Ely and Hereford were both acquainted with him afore, and his friends, ſo far as they durſt) who perceiving the Biſhops ſo pleaſantly diſpoſed, beſought them to tell him in what danger he ſtood. I, ſhall I tell thee Marbeck, quoth the Biſhop of Sarum? Thou art in a better caſe than any of thy fellows, of whom there be ſome would give fourty pound to be in no worſe caſe than thou art, whoſe ſayings the other affirmed. Then came Doctor Oking with the words he had written, and while the Biſhops were peruſing them over, Doctor Oking ſaid to Marbeck, very friendly, on this wiſe: Good Maſter Marbeck make haſt, for the ſooner ye have done, the ſooner ye ſhall be delivered. And as the Biſhops were going away, the Biſhop of Hereford took Marbeck a little aſide, and informed him a word which Doctor Oking had written falſe, and alſo to comfort him, ſaid, Fear not, there can no law condemn you for any thing that ye have done, for if you had written a thouſand Hereſies, ſo long as they be not your ſayings nor your opinions, the Law cannot hurt you. And ſo went they all with the Biſhop of Sarum to dinner, taking the poor man with them, who dined in the Hall at the Stewards boord; and beſides that had Wine and Meat ſent down from the Biſhops Table.

The Biſhop of Salisbury and Hereford like well the caſe of Marbeck.

D. Skips comfortable words unto Marbeck.

When Dinner was done, the Biſhop of Sarum came down into the Hall, commanding ink and paper to be given to Marbeck, and the two books to one of his men to go with him; at whoſe going he demanded of the Biſhop, what time his Lordſhip would appoint him to do it in? Againſt to morrow this time, quoth the Biſhop, which was about two of the Clock, and ſo departed.

Marbeck, now being in his Priſon-Chamber, fell to his buſineſs, and ſo applied the thing, that by the next day when the Biſhop ſent for him again, he had written ſo much, in the ſame order and form he had done the reſt before, as contained three ſheets of paper and more. The which when he had delivered to the Biſhop of Sarum, Doctor Oking ſtanding by, he marvelled and ſaid, Well Marbeck, thou haſt now put me out of all doubt. I aſſure thee, quoth he, (putting up the paper into his boſom) the King ſhall ſee this e're I be 24. hours older; but he diſſembled every word, and thought nothing leſs than ſo. For afterward, the matter being come to light, and known to his Grace what a Book the poor man had begun, which the Biſhops would not ſuffer him to finiſh; the King ſaid he was better occupied than they that took it from him. So Marbeck departed from the Biſhop of Sarum to Priſon again, and heard no more of his Book.

A falſe diſſembling Biſhop.

The fifth Examination of Marbeck, before Doctor Oking and Maſter Knight, Secretary to the Biſhop of Winchester in S. Mary Overies Church.

UPon Whitſunday following at afternoon, was Marbeck ſent for once again to Saint Mary Overies, where he found Doctor Oking with an other Gentleman in a Gown of Damask, with a Chain of Gold about his Neck (no more in all the Church but they two) ſitting together in one of the ſtalls, their backs towards the Church door, looking upon an Epiſtle of M. John Calvins, which Marbeck had written out; and when they ſaw the Priſoner come, they roſe and had him up to a ſide Altar, leaving his Keeper in the body of the Church alone. Now as ſoon as Marbeck ſaw the face of a Gentleman (which before he knew not by reaſon of his apparel) he ſaw it was the ſame perſon that firſt examined him in the Marſhalſey, and did alſo cauſe him to write in the Biſhops Gallery, but never knew his name, till now he heard Doctor Oking call him Maſter Knight. This Maſter Knight held forth the Paper to Marbeck, and ſaid, Look upon this, and tell me whoſe hand it is. When Marbeck had taken the Paper and ſeen what it was, he confeſſed it to be all his hand, ſaving the firſt leaf and the Notes in the Margent. Then I perceive, quoth Knight, thou wilt not go from thine own hand. No Sir, quoth he, I will deny nothing that I have done. Thou doſt well in that, quoth Knight, for if thou ſhouldſt, we have teſtimonies enough beſides to try out thy hand by: but I pray thee tell me, whoſe hand is the firſt leaf? That I cannot tell you, quoth Marbeck. Then how cameſt thou by it, quoth Knight? Forſooth I will tell you, quoth he.

The fifth examination of Marbeck.

This Gentleman of Wincheſter was M. Knight.

There was a Prieſt dwelling with us upon five or ſix years ago, called Marſhal, who ſent it unto me with the firſt leaf written, deſiring me to write it out with ſpeed, becauſe the copy could not be ſpared paſt an hour or twain, and ſo I wrote it out, and ſent him both the copy and it again.

And how came this hand in the Margent, quoth he, which is a contrary hand to both the other? That I will tell you, quoth Marbeck: When I wrote it out at the firſt, I made ſo much haſt of it, that I underſtood not the matter, whereof I was deſirous to ſee it again, and to read it with more deliberation, and being ſent to me the ſecond time, it was thus quoted in the Margent as ye ſee. And ſhortly after this it was his chance to go beyond the Seas (where he lived not long) by reaſon whereof the Epiſtle remaineth with me; but whether the firſt leaf, or the Notes in the Margent were his hand, or whoſe hand elſe, that I cannot tell. Tuſh, quoth Doctor Oking, to Maſter Knight, he knoweth well enough that the Notes be Heynes own hand. If you know ſo much, quoth Marbeck, ye know more than I do, for I tell you truly I know it not. By my Faith, Marbeck, quoth Knight, if thou wilt not tell by fair means, thoſe fingers of thine thine ſhall be made to tell. By my truth Sir, quoth Marbeck, if ye do tear the whole Body in pieces (I truſt in God) you ſhall never make me accuſe any man wrongfully. If thou be ſo ſtubborn, quoth Doctor Oking, thou wilt dye for it. Dye, Maſter Oking, quoth he? Wherefore ſhould I dye? You told me the laſt day before the Biſhops, That as ſoon as I had made an end of the piece of Concordance they took me, I ſhould be delivered, and ſhall I now dye? this is a ſudden mutation. You ſeemed then to be my friend, but I know the cauſe, ye have read the ballad I made of Moſes Chair, and that hath ſet you againſt me; but whenſoever ye ſhall put me to death, I doubt not but I ſhall dye Gods true Man and the Kings. How ſo, quoth Knight? How canſt thou dye a true Man unto the King, when thou haſt offended his Laws? Is not this Epiſtle, and moſt of thy Notes thou haſt written, directly againſt the ſix Articles? No Sir, quoth Marbeck, I have not offended the Kings Laws therein; for ſince the firſt time I began with the Concordance (which is almoſt ſix years ago) I have been occupied in nothing elſe. So that both this Epiſtle, and all the Notes I have gathered, were written a great while before the ſix Articles came forth, and are clearly remitted by the Kings General Pardon. Truſt not to that, quoth Knight, for it will not help thee. No I warrant him, quoth Doctor Oking; and ſo going down to the Body of the Church, they committed him to his Keeper, who had him away to Priſon again.

Inconſtancy and little truth in Papiſts.

The Kings General Pardon claimed.

The ſute of Filmers Wife to the Biſhops which ſate in Commiſſion, for her Husband.

IN like manner the Wife of Filmer, knowing her Husbands trouble to be only procured of malice by Simons his old enemy, made great ſute and labour unto the Biſhops which were Commiſſioners, deſiring no more of them, but that it would pleaſe their goodneſs to examine her Husband before them, and to hear him make his purgation. This was her only requeſt to every of the Biſhops from day to day, whereſoever ſhe could find them. Inſomuch that two of the Biſhops (Ely and Hereford) were very ſorry (conſidering the importune and reaſonable Sute of the woman) that it lay not in them to help her. Thus travelling long up and down from one to another, to have her Husband examined, it was her chance at laſt to find the Biſhops all three together in the Biſhop of Ely his Place: unto whom ſhe ſaid, O good my Lords, for the love of God, let now my poor Husband be brought forth before you, while you be here all together. For truly my Lords, there can nothing be juſtly laid againſt him, but that of malicious envy and ſpite Simons hath wrought him this trouble. And you my Lord of Salisbury, quoth the poor Woman, can teſtifie, (if it will pleaſe your Lordſhip to ſay the truth) what malice Simons bare to my Husband when they were both before you at Salisbury (little more than a year ago) for the Vicar of Windſors matter. For as your Lordſhip knoweth, when my Husband had certified you of the Prieſts Sermon, which you ſaid was plain Hereſie, then came Simons (after the Prieſt himſelf had confeſſed it) and would have defended the Prieſts error before your Lordſhip, and have had my Husband puniſhed. At what time it pleaſed your Lordſhip to commend and praiſe my Husband for his honeſty, and to rebuke Simons for maintaining the Prieſt in his error, and thereupon commanded the Prieſt to recant his Hereſie, at his coming home to Windſor. This (my Lord) you know to be true. And now my Lord, quoth the Woman, it is moſt certain, that for this cauſe only did Simons evermore afterward threaten my Husband to be even with him. Therefore good my Lords, call my Husband before you, and hear him ſpeak, ; and if you find any other matter againſt him than this that I have told you, let me ſuffer death. Is this ſo my Lord, quoth the Biſhops of Ely and Hereford? And the other could not deny it. Then they ſpake Latin to the Biſhop of Salisbury, and he to them, and ſo departed. For the matter was ſo wrought between Doctor London and Simons, that Filmer could never be ſuffered to come before the Commiſſioners to be examined.

Filmers wife laboureth for her Husband.

The words of Filmers Wife to the Biſhops.

Filmer could not come to his anſwer.

The manner of their Condemnations, and how they dyed.

WHen the time drew nigh that the Kings Majeſty (who was newly married to that good and vertuous Lady Katherine Parre) ſhould make his progreſs abroad, the forefaid Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter had ſo compaſſed his matters, that no man bore ſo great ſwing about the King as he did. Wherewith the Goſpellers were ſo quailed, that the beſt of them all looked every hour to be clapt in the neck. For the ſaying went abroad, that the Biſhop had bent his bow to ſhoot at ſome of the head Deer. But in the mean time three or four of the poor Raſcals were caught, that is to ſay, Anthony Pearſon, Henry Filmer, and John Marbeck, and ſent to Windſor by the Sheriffs men, the Saturday before Saint James day, and laid faſt in the Town Jayl; and Teſtwood (who had kept his bed) brought out of his Houſe upon Crutches, and laid with them; But as for Benet (which ſhould have been the fifth man) his chance was to be ſick of the Peſtilence, and having a great ſore upon him, he was left behind in the Biſhop of Londons Jayl, whereby he eſcaped the fire.

Pearſon, Filmer, and Marbeck ſent to Windſor.

Teſtwood brought out of his bed upon Crutches into Priſon.

Now theſe men being brought to Windſor, there was a Seſſions ſpecially procured to be holden the Thurſday following, which was Saint Annes day. Againſt the which Seſſions (by the Counſel of Doctor London and Simons) were all the Farmers belonging to the Colledge of Windſor, warned to appear, becauſe they could not pick out Papiſts enough in the Town to go upon the Jury. The Judges that day were theſe:

Benet ſick of the peſtilence at London.

A ſpecial Seſſions procured.

The Judges.

Doctor Capon, Biſhop of Saliſbury.
Sir William Eſſex, Knight.
Sir Thomas Bridges, Knight.
Sir Humfrey Foſter, Knight.
M. Franklen, Dean of Windſor.
And Fachel of Reding.

When theſe had taken their places, and the Priſoners brought forth before them, then Robert Ockam, occupying for that day the Clerk of the Peace his room, called Anthony Pearſon, according to the manner of the Court, and read his Indictment, which was this:

Robert Ockam Clark of the Peace.

First, That he ſhould preach two years before in a place called Wingfield, and there ſhould ſay, That like as Chriſt was hanged between two theeves, even ſo when the Prieſt is at Maſs, and hath conſecrated and lifted him up over his head, there he hangeth between two thieves, except he preach the Word of God truly, as he hath taken upon him to do.

The indictment againſt Anthony Pearſon.

Alſo that he ſaid to the people in the Pulpit, Ye ſhall not eat the Body of Chriſt, as it did hang upon the Croſs, gnawing if with your teeth, that the blood run about your lips; but you ſhall eat him this day as ye eat him to morrow, the next day, and every day; for it refreſheth not the Body but the Soul.

Alſo, after that he had Preached and commended the Scripture, calling it the Word of God, he ſaid as followeth; This is the Word, this is the Bread, this is the Body of Chriſt.

Alſo he ſaid, that Chriſt ſitting with his Diſciples, took Bread, and bleſſed, and brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying, Take and eat, this is my Body. What is this to us, but to take the Scripture of God, and to break it to the people?

To this Anthony anſwered and ſaid, I will be tryed by God and his holy Word, and by the true Church of Chriſt, whether this be Hereſie or no, whereof ye have indicted me this day. So long as I Preached the Biſhop of Rome and his filthy traditions, I was never troubled; but ſince I have taken upon me to preach Chriſt and his Goſpel, ye have always ſought my life. But it maketh no matter, for when you have taken your pleaſure of my Body, I truſt it ſhall not lye in your powers to hurt my Soul. Thou calleſt us thieves, quoth the Biſhop. I ſay, quoth Anthony, ye are not only thieves, but murtherers, except ye preach and teach the Word of God purely and ſincerely to the people, which ye do not, nor ever did, but have allured them to all Idolatry, Superſtition, and Hypocriſie, for your own lucre and glories ſake, through through the which ye are become rather Bite-ſheeps,than true Biſhops, biting and devouring the poor Sheep of Chriſt, like ravening Wolves, never ſatisfied with Blood; which God will require at your hands one day, doubt it not. Then ſpake Simons his Accuſer, ſtanding within the Barr, ſaying; It is pity this fellow had not been burnt long ago, as he deſerved. In Faith, quoth Anthony, if you had as you deſerved, you were more worthy to ſtand in this place than I: but I truſt, in the laſt day when we ſhall both appear before the Tribunal ſeat of Chriſt, that then it will be known which of us two hath beſt deſerved this place. Shall I have ſo long a day, quoth Simons, holding up his finger? Nay then I care not; and ſo the matter was jeſted out.

Wil. Simons replieth againſt Pearſon.

The Papiſts jeſt at Gods judgment.

Robert Teſtwood.

Teſtwood's Inditement.

THen was Teſtwood called, and his Inditement read, which was that he ſhould ſay in the time that the Prieſt was lifting up the Sacrament; What wilt thou lift up ſo high? what yet higher? take heed,let him not fall.

Teſtwood anſwereth to his Inditement.

To this Teſtwood anſwered, ſaying, it was but a thing maliciouſly forged of his enemies to bring him to his death. Yes (quoth the Biſhop) thou haſt been ſeen,that when the Prieſt ſhould lift up the Sacrament over his head, then wouldſt thou look down upon thy Book or ſome other way, becauſe thou wouldſt not abide to look upon the bleſſed Sacrament.I beſeech you my Lord,quoth Teſtwood, whereon did he look that marked me ſo well? Mary, quoth Bucklayer the Kings Attorney,he could not be better occupied, than to mark ſuch Hereticks that ſo deſpiſed the bleſſed Sacrament.

Henry Filmer.

Filmers Inditement.

THen Filmer was called, and his Inditement read; that he ſhould ſay that the Sacrament of the Altar is nothing elſe but a ſimilitude and a ceremony; and alſo if God be in the Sacrament of the Altar, I have eaten twenty Gods in my days.

Here you muſt underſtand, that theſe words were gathered of certain communication which ſhould be between Filmer, and his Brother. The tale went thus.

This Henry Filmer coming upon a Sunday from Clewer his Pariſh Church, in the company of one or two of his neighbours, chanced in the way to meet his Brother (which was a very poor labouring man) and aſked him whither he went. To the Church, ſaid he. And what to do,quoth Filmer? To do,quoth he,as other men do.Nay,quoth Filmer,you go to hear Maſs,and to ſee your God. What if I do ſo, quoth he? If that be God (ſhould Filmer ſay) I have eaten twenty Gods in my days.Turn again, fool, and go home with me, and I will read thee a Chapter out of the Bible, that ſhall be better than al that thou ſhalt ſee or hear there.

D. London ſetteth Brother againſt Brother.

This Tale was no ſoener brought to Doctor London (by William Simons, Filmers utter enemy) but he ſent for the poor man home to his houſe, where he cheriſhed him with meat and money, telling him he ſhould never lack ſo long as he lived; that the ſilly poor man, thinking to have had a daily friend of Doctor London, was content to do and ſay whatſoever he and Symons would have him ſay or do againſt his own Brother. And when Doctor London had thus won the poor man, he retained him as one of his houſhold men, until the Court day was come, and then ſent him up to witneſs this foreſaid Tale againſt his Brother. Which tale Filmer denied utterly, ſaying, That Doctor London, for a little meat and drink ſake, had ſet him on and made him ſay what his pleaſure was: wherefore my Lord (quoth Filmer to the Biſhop) I beſeech your Lordſhip weigh the matter indifferently, foraſmuch as there is no man in all this Town, that can or will teſtifie with him, that ever he heard any ſuch talk between him and me; and if he can bring forth any that will witneſs the ſame with him,I refuſe not to dye. But ſay what he could it would not prevail.

Filmers own Brother witneſſeth againſt him.

One witneſs to ſtand,is againſt the Law.

Filmer caſt away by his own brother.

Then Filmer ſeeing no remedy but that his Brothers accuſement ſhould take place, he ſaid, Ah Brother, what cauſe haſt thou to ſhew me this unkindneſs? I have always been a natural Brother unto thee and thine, and helped you all, to my power, from time to time as thou thy ſelf knoweſt; and is this a Brotherly part, thus to reward me now for my kindneſs? God forgive it thee my Brother,and give thee Grace to repent.Then Filmer looking over his ſhoulder, deſired ſome good body to let him ſee the Book of Statutes. His Wife being at the end of the Hall, and hearing her Husband call for the Book of Statutes, ran down to the Keeper, and brought up the Book, and gat it conveighed to her Husband.

The Biſhop, ſeeing the book in his hand, ſtart him up from the Bench in a great fume, demanding who had given the Priſoner that book; commanded it to be taken from him, and to make ſearch who had brought it, ſwearing by the Faith of his Body, he ſhould go to Priſon. Some ſaid it was his Wife, ſome ſaid the Keeper; like enough (my Lord) quoth Simons, for he is one of the ſame ſort, and as worthy to be here as the beſt, if he were rightly ſerved. But whoſoever it was,the truth would not be known and ſo the Biſhop ſate him down again.

The Biſhops condemn men not only without all Law, but alſo ſtop the Law that it ſhould not be known.

Then ſaid Filmer, O my Lord, I am this day judged by a Law, and why ſhould I not ſee the Law that I am judged by? The Law is, I ſhould have two lawful witneſſes, and here is but one, which would not do as he doth, but that he is forced thereunto by the ſuggeſtion of mine enemies. Nay,quoth Bucklayer the Kings Atturney, thine Hereſie is ſo hainous,and abhorreth thine own Brother ſo much, that it forceth him to witneſs againſt thee, which is more than two other witneſſes.

Filmer condemned by one witneſs againſt the Law, and how do the Biſhops then ſay that they do nothing but by a Law?

Thus (as you ſee) was Filmer brought unjuſtly to his death by the malice of Simons and Doctor London, who had incited that wretched caitif his Brother, to be their miniſter to work his confuſion. But God, which is a juſt revenger of all falſhood and wrongs,would not ſuffer that wretch long to live upon earth, but the next year following,he being taken up for a labourer to go to Bullein, had not been there three days, ere that (in exonerating of nature) a Gun took him and tore him all to pieces. And ſo were theſe words of Solomon fulfilled, A falſe witneſs ſhall not remain unpuniſhed.

Example of Gods juſt Puniſhment upon a Popiſh accuſer accuſing his own Brother.

John Marbeck.

The Inditement of Marbeck.

THen was Marbeck called, and his Inditement read, which was that he ſhould ſay; that the holy Maſs, when the Prieſt doth conſecrate the Body of our Lord, is polluted,deformed,ſinful,and open robbery of the Glory of God, from the which a Chriſtian heart ought both to abhor and flee. And the elevation of the Sacrament is the ſimiltude of ſetting up of Images, of the Calves in the Temple builded by Jeroboam; and that it is more abomination than the Sacrifices done by the Jews in Jeroboams Temple to thoſe Calves. And that certain and ſure it is, that Chriſt himſelf is made in the Maſs mans laughing-ſtock.

Marbeck anſwereth to his Inditement.

To this he anſwered and ſaid, That theſe words whereof they had indited him were not his, but the words of a learned man called John Calvine, drawn out of a certain Epiſtle which the ſaid Calvine had made, which Epiſtle he had but only written out, and that long before the ſix Articles came forth; ſo that now he was diſcharged of that offence by the Kings General Pardon,deſiring that he might enjoy the benefit thereof.

Then was the Jury called, which were all Farmers belonging to the Colledge of Windſor, whereof few or none had ever ſeen thoſe men before, upon whoſe life and death they went. Wherefore the Priſoners (counſeling the Farmers as partial)deſired to have the Townſmen, or ſuch as did know them, and had ſeen their daily converſations, in the place of the Farmers, or elſe to be equally joyned with them, but that would not be,for the matter was otherwiſe foreſeen and determined.

Partial dealing in calling the Jury.

Now when the Jury had taken their Oath and all, Bucklayer the Kings Attorney began to ſpeak; and firſt he alledged many reaſons againſt Anthony Pearſon, to prove him an Heretick. Which when Anthony would have diſproved, the Biſhop ſaid; Let him alone Sir, he ſpeaketh for the King: and ſo went Bucklayer forth with his matter,making every mans cauſe as hainous to the hearers as he could deviſe. And when he had done, and ſaid what he would, then Sir Humfrey Foſter ſpake to the Queſt in the favour of Marbeck on this wiſe:

Bucklayer the Kings Attorney a perſecutor.

Sis Humfrey Foſter ſpeaketh for Marbeck.

Maſters,

Maſters, quoth he, you ſee there is no man here that accuſeth or layeth any thing to the charge of this poor man Marbeck, ſaving he hath writ certain things of other mens ſayings, with his own hand, whereof he is diſcharged by the Kings general Pardon; therefore ye ought to have a Conſcience therein. Then ſtarted up Fachel at the lower end of the Bench, and ſaid, What can we tell whether they were written before the Pardon or after? They may as well be written ſince as afore, for any thing that we know. Theſe words of Fachel (as every man ſaid) were the cauſe of Marbecks caſting that day.

Fachel a Perſecutor.

Marbeck caſt by the Jury.

Then went the Jury up to the Chamber over the place where the Judges ſate, and in the mean time went all the Knights and Gentlemen abroad, ſaving the Biſhop, Sir William Eſſex, and Fachel, which three ſate ſtill upon the Bench till all was done. And when the Jury had been together above in the Chamber about the ſpace of a quarter of an hour, up goeth Simons (of his own brain) unto them, and tarried there a pretty while, and came down again. After that came one of the Jury down to the Biſhop, and talked with him and the other twain a good while: Whereby many conjectured that the Jury could not agree of Marbeck. But whether it was ſo or no, it was not long after his going up again, e're that they came down to give their Verdict; and being required according to the form of the Law to ſay their minds, one called Hide, dwelling beſide Abington in a Lordſhip belonging to the Colledge of Windſor, ſpeaking as the Mouth of the reſt, ſaid they were all Guilty.

The Knights and Gentlemen refuſe to be at their Condemnation.

Hide a Farmer of Windſor Colledge a Perſecutor.

Then the Judges beholding the Priſoners a good while (ſome with watery eyes) made curteſie who ſhould give Judgment. Fachel requiring the Biſhop to do it, he ſaid He might not. The other alſo being required, ſaid They would not. Then ſaid Fachel, It muſt be done, one muſt do it, and if no man will, then will I. And ſo Fachel, being loweſt of all the Bench, gave Judgment. Then Marbeck, being the laſt upon whom Sentence was given, cried unto the Biſhop, ſaying, Ah my Lord, you told me otherwiſe when I was before you and the other two Biſhops. You ſaid then, that I was in better caſe than any of my Fellows, and is your ſaying come to this? Ah, my Lord, you have deceived me. Then the Biſhop, caſting up his hand, ſaid, He could not do with all.

Fachel giveth judgment againſt them.

Now the Priſoners being condemned and had away, prepared themſelves to dye on the morrow, comforting one another in the Death and Paſſion of their Maſter Chriſt, who had led the way before them, truſting that the ſame Lord, which had made them worthy to ſuffer ſo far for his ſake, would not now withdraw his ſtrength from them, but give them ſtedfaſt Faith and Power to overcome thoſe fiery Torments, and of his free mercy and goodneſs (without their deſerts) for his promiſe ſake, receive their Souls. Thus lay they all the night long till very dead ſleep took them, calling to God for his aid and ſtrength, and praying for their Perſecutors, which of blind zeal and ignorance had done they wiſt not what, that God of his merciful goodneſs would forgive them, and turn their hearts to the love and knowledge of his bleſſed and holy Word: yea, ſuch heavenly talk was amongſt them that night, that the hearers watching the Priſon without, whereof the Sheriff himſelf was one, with divers Gentlemen more, were conſtrained to ſhed out plenty of tears, as they themſelves confeſſed.

Pearſon, Teſtwood, Filmer, and Marbeck condemned for Hereticks.

The godly Prayers of the condemned Martyrs almoſt all night.

On the next morrow, which was Friday, as the Priſoners were all preparing themſelves to go to ſuffer, word was brought them that they ſhould not dye that day. The cauſe was this, The Biſhop of Sarum, and they among them had ſent a Letter by one of the Sheriffs Gentlemen, called Mr. Froſt, to the Biſhop of Wincheſter (the Court being then at Oking) in the favour of Marbeck. At the ſight of which Letter the Biſhop ſtraightway went to the King, and obtained his Pardon.

A Letter ſent by certain of the Commiſſioners to Gardiner for Marbeck.

Marbecks pardon obtained.

Which being granted, he cauſed a Warrant to be made out of hand for the Sheriffs diſcharge, delivering the ſame to the Meſſenger, who with ſpeed returned with great joy (for the love he bare to the party) bringing good news to the Town of Marbecks Pardon; whereat many rejoyced. Of this Pardon were divers conjectures made. Some ſaid, It was by the ſute of the good Sheriff Sir William Barrington, and Sir Humfrey Foſter, with other Gentlemen more that favoured Marbeck, to the Biſhop of Sarum and the other Commiſſioners, that the Letter was ſent.

Divers judgments why Marbeck was pardoned.

Some ſaid again, That it came of the Biſhop of Sarum and Fachels firſt motion, being pricked in Conſcience for that they had ſo ſlenderly caſt him away. Other thought again that it was a Policy purpoſed afore, by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, of Sarum, and of Dr. London, becauſe they ſhould ſeem to be merciful. Which conjecture roſe upon this occaſion: There was one Sadock dwelling in the Town which was great with Dr. London and Simons. and he ſhould ſay four days before the Seſſions began, that the Priſoners ſhould be all caſt and condemned, but Marbeck ſhould have his Pardon.

Other there were that thought the foreſaid Biſhops, with Dr. London, had done it for this purpoſe; that he now, having his life, would rather utter ſuch men as they would have him to do, than to come in like danger again. Which conjecture roſe upon this; Simons meeting with Marbecks Wife, ſaid thus unto her; Your Husband may thank God and good Friends: my Lord of Wincheſter is a good Lord to him, which hath got his Pardon. But ſhall I tell you, quoth he? his Pardon will be to none effect, except he tell the truth of things to my Lord, and other of the Councel, when he ſhall be demanded; for unto that parpoſe only is he reſerved. Alas Sir, quoth ſhe, what can he tell? Well woman, quoth Simons, I tell thee plain, if he do not ſo, never look to have thy Husband out of Priſon; and ſo departed from her.

Marbeck reſerved to utter others.

The like meaning did Mr. Arch make to Marbeck himſelf on the Saturday in the morning, that the men ſhould be burnt, when he came to confeſs them. I have nothing, quoth he, to ſay unto you, Marbeck, at this time, but hereafter you muſt be content to do as ſhall be enjoyned you; meaning he ſhould be forced to do ſome unlawful thing, or elſe to lye in perpetual Priſon. And this was moſt likely to have been attempted, if they had proceeded in their purpoſe; whoſe intent was to have gone through the whole Realm, in like ſort as they had begun at Windſor, as the Biſhop of Sarum confeſſed openly, and ſaid, That he trnſted e're Chriſtmas-day following to viſit and cleanſe a good part thereof. But moſt commonly God ſendeth a ſhrewd Cow ſhort horns, or elſe many a thouſand in England had ſmarted.

The peſtilent intent of the Biſhops.

The Saturday in the morning that the Priſoners ſhould go to Execution, came in to the Priſon two of the Canons of the Colledge, the one called Dr. Blithe, and the other Mr. Arch, which two were ſent to be their Confeſſors: Mr. Arch asked them if they would be confeſt; and they ſaid, Yea. Then he demanded if they would receive the Sacrament: Yea, ſaid they, with all our hearts. I am glad, quoth Arch, to hear you ſay ſo; but the Law is, quoth he, that it may not be miniſtred to any that are condemned of Hereſie. But it is enough for you that ye deſire it. And ſo he had them up to the Hall to hear their Confeſſions, becauſe the Priſon was full of people. Dr. Blithe took Anthony Pearſon to him to confeſs, and Mr. Arch the other two. But howſoever the matter went between the Doctor and Anthony, he tarried not long with him, but came down again, ſaying, He would no more of his Doctrine. Do you call him Dr. Blithe, quoth Anthony? He may be called Dr. Blind for his learning, as far as I ſee. And ſoon after the other two came down alſo. Then Anthony ſeeing much people in the Priſon, began to ſay the Lords Prayer, whereof he made a marvellous godly declaration, wherein he continued till the Officers came to fetch them away, and ſo made an end. And taking their leave of Marbeck (their Priſon-fellow) they praiſed God for his deliverance, wiſhing to him the increaſe of godlineſs and vertue, and laſt of all beſought him heartily to help them with his Prayer unto God, to make them ſtrong in their Afflictions, and ſo kiſſing him one after another, they departed.

The Popes Law is, that they that be condemned of Hereſie, muſt not receive the Sacrament.

Dr. Blithe, or rather Dr. Blind.

Now as the Priſoners paſſed through the people in the Streets, they deſired all the faithful people to pray for them, and to ſtand faſt in the Truth of the Goſpel, and not to be moved at their Afflictions, for it was the happieſt thing that ever came to them. And ever as Doctor Blithe and Arch (who rode on each ſide the Priſoners) would perſwade them to turn to their Mother holy Church; Away, would Anthony cry, away with your Romiſh Doctrine and all your trumpery, for we will no more of it. When

The Priſoners led toward their death.

Filmer

Filmer was come to his Brothers door, he stayed and called for his Brother, but he could not be seen, for Dr. London had kept him out of sight the same day, for the nonce.

And when he had called for him three or four times, and saw he came not, he said, and will he not come? Then God forgive him and make him a good man. And so going forth they came to the place of Execution, where Anthony Pearson with a chearful countenance embraced the post in his arms, and kissing it, said, Now welcom mine own sweet Wife; for this day shall thou and I be married together in the love and peace of God.

The words of Anth. Pearson at the Stake.

And being all three bound to the post, a certain young man of Filmers acquaintance brought him a pot of drink, asking if he would drink. Yea, quoth Filmer, I thank you. And now my Brother, quoth he, I shall desire you in the Name of the living Lord to stand fast in the truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which you have received; and so taking the pot at his hand asked his Brother Anthony, if he would drink. Yea Brother Filmer, quoth he, I pledge you in the Lord.

The words of Henry Filmer at his death.

And when he had drunk, he gave the pot to Ant. and Ant. likewise gave it to Testwood. Of which drinking their Adversaries made a jesting stock, reporting abroad that they were all drunk, and wist not what they said; when as they were none otherwise drunk than as the Apostles were, when the people said they were full of new Wine, as their deeds declared; for when Anthony and Testwood had both drunken, and given the pot from them, Filmer rejoycing in the Lord, said, Be merry, my Brethren, and lift up your hands unto God, for after this sharp breakfast, I trust we shall have a good dinner in the Kingdom of Christ our Lord and Redeemer. At the which words Testwood, lifting up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, desired the Lord above to receive his Spirit. And Anthony Pearson, pulling the straw unto him, laid a good deal thereof upon the top of his head, saying, This is Gods Hat; now am I dressed like a true Souldier of Christ, by whose merits only I trust this day to enter into his joy. And so yielded they up their Souls to the Father of Heaven, in the Faith of his dear Son Jesus Christ, with such humility and stedfastness, that many which saw their patient suffering, confessed that they could have found in their hearts (at that present) to have died with them.

How all their Conspiracies were known

Bennet a Lawyer sick of the pestilence.

YE have heard before of one Robert Bennet, how he was at the first apprehended with the other four persons aforesaid, and committed to the Bishop of Londons Prison, and about the time he should have gone to Windsor, he fell sick of the Pestilence, by means whereof he remained still in Prison.

Bennet and Symons joynt companions, but contrary in Religion.

This Bennet and Symons (ye shall understand) were the greatest familiars and company keepers that were in all Windsor, and never lightly swarved the one from the other, saving in matters of Religion, wherein they could never agree. For Bennet the one Lawyer was an earnest Gospeller, and Symons the other Lawyer a cankered Papist, but in all other Worldly matters they cleaved together like burrs.

This Bennet had spoken certain words against their little round God, for the which he was as far in as the best, and had suffered death with the other if he had gone to Windsor when they went. And now that the matter was all done and finished, it was determined by the Bishop of Salisbury, that Robert Ockam, on the Munday after the men were burnt, should go to the Bishop of Winchester, with the whole process done at the Sessions the Thursday before.

Rob. Ockam sent up by the Bishop of Salisbury and by others to Gardiner with Letters.

Then Symons, at Bennets Wives request, procured the Bishop of Salisbury his favourable Letter to the Bishop of Winchester, for Bennets deliverance. Which Letter Bennets Wife (forasmuch as her own man was not at home which should have gone with the Letter) desired Robert Ockam to deliver to the Bishop, and to bring her word again; who said he would. So forth went Ockam toward the Bishop of Winchester, with his budget full of writings, to declare and open all things unto him that were done at Windsor Sessions. But all their wicked intents, as God would have it, were soon cut off, and their doings disclosed. For one of the Queens men (Named Fulk) which had lien at Windsor all the time of the business, and had got knowledge what a number were privily indicted, and of Ockams going to the Bishop of Winchester, gat to the Court before Ockam, and told Sir Thomas Cardine and other of the Privy Chamber, how all the matter stood. Whereupon Ockam was laid, for and had by the back as soon as he came to Oking, and so kept from the Bishop.

The conspiracy of the Adversaries disclosed. Many good men and certain of the Privy Chamber indicted by the Bishops.

On the next morrow very early, Bennets Wife sent her man to the Court after Ockam, to see how he sped with her Husbands Letter. And when he came there, he found Sir Thomas Cardine walking with Ockam up and down the green before the Court gate. Whereat he marvelled to see Ockam with him so early, mistrusting the matter; whereupon he kept himself out of sight till they had broken off their communication.

And as soon as he saw Master Cardine gone (leaving Ockam behind) he went to Ockam and asked him if he had delivered his Masters Letter to the Bishop. No, said Ockam, the King removeth this day to Gilford, and I must go thither, and will deliver it there. Marry, quoth he, and I will go with you, to see what answer you shall have, and to carry word to my Mistress, and so they rode to Gilford together: where Bennets man (being better acquainted in the Town then Ockam was) got a lodging for them both in a Kinsmans house of his.

That done, he asked Ockam, if he would go and deliver his Mistress's Letter to the Bishop. Nay (said Ockam) you shall go and deliver it your self, and took him the Letter. And as they were going in the Street together, and coming by the Earl of Bedfords lodging (then Lord Privy Seal) Ockam was pulled in by the sleeve, and no more seen of Bennets man, till he saw him in the Marshalsey. Then went Bennets man to the Bishops lodging and delivered his Letter. And when the Bishop had read the contents thereof, he called for the man that brought it. Come sirrah, quoth he, you can tell me more by mouth than the Letter specifieth, and had him into a little Garden. Now, quoth the Bishop, what say you to me? Forsooth my Lord, quoth he, I have nothing to say unto your Lordship, for I did not bring the Letter to the Town. No, quoth the Bishop, where is he that brought it? Forsooth my Lord, quoth he, I left him busie at his lodging. Then he will come, quoth the Bishop, bid him be with me betimes in the morning. I will, quoth he, do you Lorships commandment, and so he departed home to his lodging. And when his Kinsfolks saw him come in, Alas Cousin, quoth they, we are all undone. Why so, quoth he, what is the matter? O, said they, here hath been since you went, Master Pagit the Kings Secretary, with Sir Thomas Cardine of the Privy Chamber, and searched all our house for one that should come to the Town with Ockam; therefore make shift for your self as soon as you can. Is that all the matter, quoth he? then content your selves, for I will never flee one foot, hap what hap will. As they were thus reasoning togegether, in came the foresaid searchers again; and when Master Cardine saw Bennets man, he knew him very well, and said, Was it thou that came to the Town with Ockam? Yea Sir, quoth he. Now who the Devil (quoth Master Cardine) brought thee in company with that false knave? Then he told them his business, and the cause of his coming: which being known, they were satisfied, and so departed. The next day had Bennets man a discharge for his Master (procured by certain of the Privy Chamber) and so went home.

Bennets man goeth with his Mistress's Letter to the Bishop of Winchester.

Bennets man searched for at Oking.

Bennet discharged out of Prison by good men of the Privy Chamber.

Now was Ockam all this while at my Lord Privy Seals, where he was kept secret, till certain of the Privy Counsel had perused all his writings; among the which they found certain of the Privy Chamber indicted, with other the Kings Officers, with their Wives; that is to say, Sir Thomas Cardine, Sir Philip Hobby, with both their Ladies, Master Edmund Harman, Master Thomas Weldon, with Snowball and his Wife. All these they had indicted by the force of the six Articles, as aiders, helpers, and maintainers of Anthony Pearson. And beside them, they had indicted of Heresie (some for one thing, and some for another) a great number more of the Kings true and faithful Subjects. Whereof the Kings Majesty being certified, his grace of his special goodneſs (without the ſuit of any man) gave to the foreſaid Gentlemen of his Privy Chamber, and other his Servants with their Wives, his gracious Pardon. And as God would have the matter further known unto his Majeſty, as he rode one day a hunting in Gilford-park, and ſaw the Sheriff with Sir Humfrey Foſter ſitting on their horſe-backs together, he called them unto him, and asked of them, how his Laws were executed at Windſor. Then they beſeeching his Grace of Pardon, told him plainly that in all their lives they never ſate on matter under his Graces Authority, that went ſo much againſt their Conſciences, as the death of theſe men did, and up and told his Grace ſo pitiful a Tale of the caſting away of theſe poor men, that the King turning his Horſe head to depart from them, ſaid, Alas poor Innocents.

Whereupon Doctor London and Simons were apprehended and brought before the Councel, and examined upon their Oath of Allegiance: And for denying their miſchievous and traiterous purpoſe, which was manifeſtly proved to their faces, they were both perjured, and in fine adjudged, as perjured perſons, to wear Papers in Windſor; and Ockam to ſtand upon the Pillory in the Town of Newbery where he was born.

D. London W. Simons, and K. Ockam apprehended and condemned of Perjury.

The judgment of all theſe three was to ride about Windſor, Reading, and Newbery, with Papers on their heads, and their faces turned to the Horſe tails, and ſo to ſtand upon the Pillory in every of theſe Towns, for falſe accuſation of the forenamed Martyrs, and for Perjury.

And thus much touching the perſecution of theſe good Saints of Windſor, according to the Copy of their own Acts, received and written by John Marbeck, who is yet alive both a preſent witneſs, and alſo was then a party of the ſaid doings, and can teſtifie the Truth thereof.

An Anſwer to the cavilling Adverſaries touching John Marbeck.

Anno 1544.

WHerefore againſt theſe crooked Cavillers, which make ſo much ado againſt my former Book, becauſe in a certain place I chanced to ſay that Bennet and Filmer had their Pardon (when indeed it was Bennet and Marbeck) be it therefore known, proteſted, denounced, and notified to all and ſingular ſuch Carpers, Wranglers, Exclamers, Depravers, with the whole Brood of all ſuch whiſperers, railers, quarrel-pickers, corner-creepers, fault-finders, and ſpider-catchers, or by what name elſe ſoever they are to be tituled, that here I openly ſay and affirm, profeſs, hold, maintain, and write the ſame as I ſaid and wrote before in the latter caſtigations of my Book: that is, That John Marbeck was with the other condemned, but not burned; caſt by the Law, but by Pardon ſaved: appointed with the reſt to die, and yet not dead, but liveth, God be praiſed, and yet to this preſent ſingeth merrily, and plaieth on the Organs, not as a dead man amongſt Foxes Martyrs (as it hath pleaſed ſome in the Court to encounter againſt me) but as one witneſſed and teſtified truly in the Book Foxes Martyrs to be alive. And therefore ſuch manner of Perſons, if the diſpoſition of their nature be ſuch that they muſt needs find faults, then let them find them where they are, and where thoſe faults by their finding may be corrected. But whereas they be corrected already and found to their hands, and alſo amended before, let then theſe Legend-liers look on their own Legends, and there cry out of lies, where they may find enow and ceaſe their biting there where they have no juſt cauſe to bark.

The Story doth purge it ſelf if it had pleaſed theſe men to take one place with another Mark you wranglers and be ſatisfied.

And admit that I had not foreſeen and corrected this eſcape before, touching the matter of John Marbeck, but that the place ſtill had remained in the Book as it was, that is, that the ſaid John Marbeck, which is yet alive, had then died and ſuffered with the other three, the ſame time at Windſor: yet what gentle or courteous Reader could have therein any juſt matter to triumph and inſult againſt me, ſeeing the judicial Acts, the Records and Regiſters, yea and the Biſhops Certificate, and alſo the Writ of execution remaining yet on Record, ſent to the King, did lead me ſo to ſay and think? For what man writing Hiſtories, who cannot be in all places to ſee all things but following his Records, and Regiſters, wherein he ſeeth the ſaid Marbeck to be judged and condemned with the reſt, would otherwiſe write or think, but that he alſo was Executed and burned in the ſame Company.

But now I correct and reform the ſame again, and firſt of all other, I find the fault, and yet I am found fault withal. I correct my ſelf, and yet I am corrected of others. I warn the reader of the Truth, and yet am a lyar. The Book it ſelf ſheweth the eſcape, and biddeth in ſtead of four, to read three burned, and yet is the Book made a Legend of lies.

The death of Jo. Marbeck in the former Book amended.

Briefly, where I prevent all occaſion of cavilling, to the uttermoſt of my diligence, yet cannot I have that Law which all other Books have,, that is, to recognize and reform mine own Errata.

Wherefore to conclude, theſe men whoſoever they are, if they will be ſatisfied, I have ſaid enough; if they will not, whatſoever I can ſay, it will not ſerve, and ſo I leave them: I would I could better ſatisfie them. God himſelf amend them.

The Perſecution in Calice, with the Martyrdom of George Bucker, otherwiſe called Adam Damlip and others.

AT what time John Marbeck was in the Marſhalſey, which was about the year of our Lord, 1544. there was in the ſaid Priſon with him one George Bucker, named otherwiſe Adam Damlip, who having continued in the ſaid Priſon three or four years, at the laſt, by the commandment of Wincheſter, was had to Calice by John Maſſie, the Keeper of the Marſhalſey, and there hanged, drawn, and quartered for Treaſon pretenſed, which was a little before the Condemnation of the Windſor men aforeſaid, as is by the Letters of the ſaid John Marbeck to me ſignified.

G. Bucker, alias Adam-Damlip Martyr.

Touching which Story of Adam Damlip, forſomuch as it includeth matter of much trouble and Perſecution that happened in Calice, to digeſt therefore and compriſe the whole narration thereof in order, firſt I will enter (the Lord willing) the Story of Damlip, and ſo proceed in order to ſuch as by the ſaid occaſion were afflicted and perſecuted in the Town of Calice.

IN the Year of our Lord 1539. the Lord Cromwel being yet alive, there came to Calice one George Bucker, alias Adam Damlip, who had been in time paſt a great Papiſt and Chaplain to Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, and after the death of the Biſhop his Maſter had travelled through France, Dutchland, and Italy, and as he went conferred with Learned men concerning matters of controverſie in Religion, and ſo proceeding in his Journey to Rome, whereas he thought to have found all godlineſs and ſincere Religion, in the end, he found there, (as he confeſſed) ſuch blaſphemy of God, contempt of Chriſts true Religion, looſneſs of Life, and abundance of all abominations and filthineſs, that it abhorred his Heart and Conſcience any longer there to remain; although he was greatly requeſted by Cardinal Poole, there to continue, and to read three Lectures in the week in his Houſe, for the which he offered him great entertainment, which he refuſed, and ſo returning homeward, having a piece of Mony given him of the Cardinal at his departure, to the value of a French Crown towards his charges, came to Calice, as is aforeſaid. Who as he was there waiting without the Gate for paſſage into England, and being there perceived by certain Calice men, namely William Stevens and Thomas Lancaſter, through conference of talk, to be a Learned man and alſo well affected; and moreover how that he being of late a zealous Papiſt, was now returned to a more perfect knowledge of true Religion, was by them heartily intreated to ſtay at Calice a certain ſpace, and to read there a day or two, to the intent he might do ſome good there, after his painful travel, unto the People. To this requeſt Adam gladly conſented, ſo as he might be licenſed by ſuch as were in Authority ſo to do.

Whereupon the ſaid Stevens, at the opening of the Gates, brought him unto the Lord Liſle the Kings Deputy of the Town and Marches of Calice, unto whom he declared throughly what conference and talk had been between Adam Damlip and him. Which known, the ſaid Lord Deputy inſtantly deſired the ſaid Damlip to ſtay there, and to preach three or four days or more at his pleaſure, ſaying, that he ſhould have both his licence and the Commiſſaries alſo, which then was Sir John Butler, ſo to do. Where after he had preached three or four times, he was ſo well liked both for his learning, his utterance and the Truth of his Doctrine, that not only the Souldiers and Commoners, but alſo the Lord Deputy and a great part of the Councel, gave him marvellous great praiſe and thanks for it, and the ſaid Lord Deputy offered unto him a Chamber in his own houſe, and to dine and ſup every meal at his own meſs, to have a man or two of his to wait upon him, and to have whatſoever it were that he lacked, if it were to be had for mony, yea, and what he would in his purſe to buy Books or otherwiſe, ſo as he would tarry there among them, and preach only ſo long as it ſhould ſeem good to himſelf. Who, refuſing his Lordſhips great offer, moſt heartily thanked him for the ſame, and beſought him to be only ſo good unto him, as to appoint him ſome quiet and honeſt place in the Town where he might not be diſturbed or moleſted, but have opportunity to give himſelf to his Book, and he would daily once in the forenoon, and again by one a Clock in the afternoon, by the grace of God, preach among them according unto that Talent that God had lent him. At which anſwer the Lord Deputy greatly rejoyced, and thereupon ſent for the foreſaid William Stevens, whom he earneſtly required to receive and lodg the ſaid Damlip in his houſe, promiſing whatſoever he ſhould demand, to ſee it paid with the moſt; and moreover would ſend every meal from his own meſs a diſh of the beſt unto them; and indeed ſo did, albeit the ſaid Damlip refuſed that offer, ſhewing his Lordſhip that thin diet was moſt convenient for ſtudents. Yet could not that reſtrain him, but that every meal he ſent it.

Adam received of W Stevens by the Lord Deputies requeſt.

This godly man by the ſpace of twenty days or more, once every day at ſeven of the Clock, preached very godly, learnedly, and plainly; the Truth of the bleſſed Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood, mightily inveighing againſt all Papiſtry, and confuting the ſame, but eſpecially thoſe two moſt pernicious Errours or Hereſies trifling Tranſuſtantiation, and the peſtilent Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Romiſh Maſs, by true conference of the Scriptures, and applying of the ancient Doctors, earneſtly therewith oftentimes exhorting the People to return from their Popery, declaring how Popiſh he himſelf had been, and how by the deteſtable wickedneſs that he did ſee univerſally in Rome, he was returned ſo far homeward, and now became an enemy, through Gods grace, to all Papiſtry, ſhewing therewith that if gain or ambition could have moved him to the contrary, he might have been entertained of Cardinal Pool (as you have heard before,) but for very Conſcience ſake joyned with true knowledge, grounded on Gods moſt holy Word, he now utterly abhorred all Papiſtry, and willed them moſt earneſtly to do the ſame.

Adam Damlip preacheth againſt Tranſubſtantiation and the Romiſh Church

And thus he continued a while reading in the Chapter-houſe of the white Friers; but the place being not big enough, he was deſired ro read in the Pulpit, and ſo proceeding in his Lectures (wherein he declared how the world was deceived by the Roman Biſhops, which had ſet forth the damnable Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and the Real preſence in the Sacrament, as is aforeſaid) he came at length to ſpeak againſt the Pageant or Picture ſet forth of the Reſurrection which was in St. Nicholas Church, declaring the ſame to be but meer Idolatry, and an Illuſion of the French-men before Calice was Engliſh.

The Idolatrous Pageant of the Reſurrection moſt ſumptuouſly pictured out in Calice.

Upon which Sermon or Lecture there came a Commiſſion from the King to the Lord Deputy, Maſter Greenfield, Sir John Butler Commiſſary, the Kings Maſon and Smith, with others, that they ſhould ſearch whether there were (as was put in writing and under Bull and Pardon) three Hoſts lying upon a Marble Stone beſprinkled with Blood; and if they found it not ſo, that immediately it ſhould be plucked down, and ſo it was. For in ſearching thereof, as they brake up a Stone in a Corner of the Tomb, they, inſtead of three Hoſts, found ſouldered, in the Croſs of Marble lying under the Sepulchre, three plain white Counters, which they had painted like unto Hoſts, and a bone that is in the tip of a ſheeps Tail. All which trumpery Damlip ſhewed unto the People the next day following, which was, Sunday, out of the Pulpit, and after that they were ſent by the Lord Deputy to the King.

Commiſſion ſent from the King to ſearch out the falſe jugling of this Idolatry at Calice

Notwithſtanding, the Devil ſtirred up a Dove (he might well be called a Cormorant) the Prior of the white Friers; Who with Sir G. Buttoll, Chaplain to the L. Liſle, began to bark againſt him. Yet after the ſaid Adam had in 3. or 4. Sermons confuted the ſaid Friers Erroneous Doctrine of Tranſub-

Tranſubſtantiation; and of the Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Maſs; the ſaid Frier outwardly ſeemed to give place, ceaſing openly to inveigh, and ſecretly practiſed to peach him by Letters ſent unto the Clergy here in England: ſo that, within eight or ten days after, the ſaid Damlip was ſent for to appear before the Biſhop of Canterbury, with whom was aſſiſtant Steven Gardiner, Bp. of Winchester, Dr. Sampſon, Biſhop of Chicheſter, and divers others, before whom he moſt conſtantly affirmed and defended the Doctrine which he had taught, in ſuch ſort anſwering, confuting, and ſoluting the Objections, as his Adverſaries, yea even among the other, the learned, godly and bleſſed Martyr Cranmer, then yet but a Lutherane, marvelled at it, and ſaid plainly, that the Scriptures knew not ſuch term of Tranſubſtantiation. Then began the other Biſhops to threaten him, ſhortly to confute him with their accuſtomed Argument, I mean Fire and Fagot, if he would ſtill ſtand to the defence of that he had ſpoken. Whereunto he conſtantly anſwered, that he would the next day deliver unto them fully ſo much in writing as he had ſaid, whereunto alſo he would ſtand, and ſo was diſmiſſed.

Damlip ſent for to appear before the Councel in England.

Damlip threatned by the Biſhops.

The next day at the hour appointed to appear, when they looked ſurely to have apprehended him, in the mean ſeaſon he had ſecret intimation from the Biſhop of Canterbury, that if he did any more perſonally appear, he ſhould be committed unto Ward, not like to eſcape cruel death. Whereupon he (playing indeed then ſomewhat old Adams part, for ſuch is man, left in his own hands) had him commended unto them, and ſent them four ſheets of Paper learnedly written in the Latin Tongue, containing his Faith with his Arguments, conferences of the Scriptures, and allegations of the Doctors, by a Meſſenger or Friend of his. Which done, he, having a little mony given him in his purſe by his Friends, ſtepped aſide, and went into the Weſt-Country, and there kept all the time, while great trouble kindled againſt Gods People in Calice upon the ſame; as ye ſhall hear, the Lord permitting.

Damlip ſecretly warned to void.

After his departure, the Kings Majeſty was adverti-ſed, that there was great diſſention and diverſity of Pernicious Opinions in his ſaid Town of Calice, greatly tending to the danger of the ſame. Whereupon, during yet the days of the Lord Cromwel, were ſent over Doctor Champion, Doctor of Divinity, and Mr. Garret, who after was burned, two godly and learned men, to preach and inſtruct the People, and to confute all Pernicious Errours, who in effect preached and maintained the ſame true Doctrin which Adam Damlip had before ſet forth, and by reaſon thereof they left the Town at their departure very quiet, and greatly purged of the ſlander that had run on it.

D. Champion and M. Garret ſent to preach at Calice.

After the departure of the ſaid Champion and Garret, one Sir William Smith Curate of our Ladies Pariſh in Calice (a man very zealous, though but meanly learned) did begin to preach, and earneſtly to inveigh againſt Papiſtry and wilful ignorance, exhorting men obediently to receive the word, and no longer to contemn the ſame, leſt Gods heavy plagues and wrath ſhould fall upon them, which always followeth the contempt of his holy word. Which Sir William Smith, for that ſometime he would be very fervent and zealous, ſharply inveighing againſt the deſpiſers of the Word, was moved by ſome of the Councel there, who would ſeem to favour Gods Word that he ſhould not be ſo earneſt againſt them that yet could not away with the ſame, willing him to bear with ſuch, for by bearing with them they might hap to be won.

Sir William Smith Curate and a zealous preacher at Calice.

Well, well, ſaid the ſame Smith, (openly in the Pulpit one day as he preached) ſome ſay I am too earneſt, and will me to bear with ſuch as continue open Enemies againſt Chriſts holy Goſpel, and refuſe, nay forbid that one ſhould read the Bible or holy Scripture within their houſe; but let all ſuch take heed, for before God, I fear that God for their contemning of his word will not long bear with them, but make them in ſuch caſe as ſome of them ſhall not have a Head left them upon their ſhoulders to bear up their Cap withal, which alſo after came to paſs.

This Smith continued in the diligent beſtowing of his Talent there, till ſhortly after the Devil got ſuch hold in the hearts of a number of Gods Enemies, that he with divers other godly men were called over into England, and charged with erroneous Opinions worthy of great puniſhment, as hereafter more at large ſhall appear.

The Lord Liſle baſe Son to King Edward the fourth.

Firſt the Lord Liſle the Kings Deputy there, whom we ſhewed to be the maintainer of Damlip (albeit he were himſelf of a moſt gentle nature, and of a right noble Blood, the baſe Son of that Noble Prince K. Ed.4.) being fiercely ſet on and inceſſantly enticed by the wicked Lady Honor his Wife, who was an utter Enemy to Gods honor, and in Idolatry, Hypocriſie, and Pride incomparably evil, ſhe being daily and hourly thereunto incited and provoked by Sir Thomas Palmer Knight, and John Rookwood Eſquire, two Enemies to Gods Word, beginning now to flouriſh at Calice: theſe I ſay, with certain other of the Councel of the ſaid town of Calice, to the number of 7. more beſides themſelves, ſeeking occaſion or rather a quarrel where no juſt cauſe was given, began to write very heinous Letters and grievous complaints unto the Lords of the privy Councel, againſt divers of the Town of Calice, affirming that they were horribly infected with Hereſies and Pernicious Opinions: As firſt the foreſaid Adam Damlip, who, though he were for a time eſcaped their hands, yet ſtuck ſtill in their remembrance from time to time, until at laſt the innocent man was cruelly put to death as a Traitor, as hereafter ſhall appear.

Sir T. Palmer, Maſter Rookwood.

The Councel of Calice Letters againſt the Proteſtants.

Alſo beſides this Damlip, they complained of Thomas Brook, R. Hare, likewiſe of Sir J. Butler, then Commiſſary, Sir W. Smith, J. Cocke, alias Coppen de Hane, J. Barber, and other, and the names of all them ſent over. Of the which Perſons, firſt the ſaid T. Brook, and Ralph Hare, Coppen de Hane and James Barber, were apprehended and ſent over, and committed to Priſon in Weſtminſter Gate, and then commanded to appear before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Winchſter, the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and ten other appointed by the Kings Majeſties Commiſſion for the Examination of them: and their accuſers were ſent over with Letters from the Councel there unto his Privy Councel here, in the furtherance of their malicious ſutes againſt thoſe honeſt men, with certain ſpecial Letters directed unto the Lord Fitzwilliams then Earl of Southhampton, great Admiral of England, to the Lord Sands, Lord Chamberlain of the Houſhold, likewiſe alſo to Sir William Kingſtone Knight, Controller of the Houſhold, and to Doctor Sampſon then Bp. of Chicheſter, and other tending all to one effect, that is to ſay, the utter deſtruction of theſe godly men, if God, after his wonted manner, had not mightily preſerved them, and as it were overſhadowed them with the wings of his mercy.

The trouble of R. Hare Souldier of Calice.

That the ſame may the better appear, you ſhall underſtand, that firſt Ralph Hare, a man rude and ſo unlearned that he could ſcarce read, yet through Gods grace was very Zealous, and therewith lead ſo godly and temperate a life, as not one of his Enemies could accuſe or blame the ſame his ſober life and converſation. This Ralph Hare was charged to be one that had ſpoken againſt auricular Confeſſion, againſt holy Bread and holy Water: yea, and beſide that, he was one which would not lightly ſwear an Oath, nor uſe almoſt any manner of paſtime, nor good fellowſhip, as they term it, but was always in a corner by himſelf, looking on his Book. This poor ſimple man being charged by the Commmiſſioners that he was a naughty man and erroneous, and that he could not be otherwiſe, coming out of a Town ſo infected with pernicious Errours and Sects, as that was, was willed by them to take good heed to himſelf, leſt through obſtinacy he turned his erroneous Opinions into plain Hereſie: for an Errour defended is Hereſie.

Ralph Hare charged.

My good Lords, ſaid the poor man, I take God to record, I would not willingly maintain any Errour, or Hereſie. Wherefore I beſeech you let my Accuſers come face to face before me. For if they charge me with that which I have ſpoken, I will never deny it. Moreover, if it be Truth, I will ſtand unto it; and otherwiſe, if it be an Errour, I will with all my heart utterly forſake it, I mean if it be againſt Gods holy Word: for the Lord is my witneſs, I ſeek and daily pray to God, that I may know the Truth, and flee from all Errours, and I truſt the Lord will ſave me and preſerve me from them.

The anſwer of R. Hare.

Aha, quoth the Biſhop of Wincheſter, do you not hear what he ſaith my Lord? I perceive now thou art a naughty fellow. Alas my Lord, ſaid Ralph Hare, what evil ſaid I? Marry Sir, you ſaid the Lord, the Lord, and that is Symbolum Hæreticorum ſaid Wincheſter. What is that my Lord, for Gods ſake tell me, ſaid Hare, Thou art naught, thou art naught, ſaid he. At which words the ſimple man began to tremble, and ſeemed much diſmaied and driven into a great agony and fear. Which thing Wincheſter well perceiving, ſaid unto him: Ralph Hare, Ralph Hare, by my troth I pitty thee much. For in good Faith, I thing thee to be a good ſimple man, and of thy ſelf wouldeſt mean well enough, but that thou haſt had ſhrewd and ſubtil Schoolmaſters, that have ſeduced thee good poor ſimple Soul, and therefore I pitty thee, and it were indeed pitty that thou ſhouldeſt be burnt, for thou art a good fellow, a Tall man, and haſt ſerved the King right well in his Wars. I have heard thee well commended, and thou art yet able to do the King as good ſervice as ever thou waſt, and we all will be a mean to his Grace to be a good gracious Lord unto thee, if thou wilt take pitty of thy ſelf, and leave thy Errours. For I dare ſay for us all that be Commiſſioners, that we would be loath that thou ſhouldeſt be caſt away: For alas poor ſimple man, we perceive thou haſt been ſeduced, I ſay, by others.

Wincheſters cavillation about the Lord and our Lord.

How ſayeſt thou therefore, thou knoweſt my Lord of Canterburies Grace here is a good gentle Lord, and would be loth thou ſhouldeſt be caſt away. Tell me, canſt thou be content to ſubmit thy ſelf unto him and to ſtand unto ſuch order, as he and we ſhall take in this matter? how ſaieſt thou man? ſpeak. The poor man therewith falling upon his knees, and ſhedding tears, anſwered, ſpeaking to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in this wiſe: My good Lord, for Chriſts ſake be good unto me, and I refer my ſelf unto your Graces order, to do with me what you pleaſe.

The Biſhop of Canterbury, conſidering what danger he was ready to fall in, and pitying the ſame (though the ſimplicity of the man was ſo great that he perceived it not) ſaid, nay Ralph Hare, ſtand up and adviſe thy ſelf, and commit not thy ſelf to me, for I am but one man, and in Commiſſion but as the other are, ſo that it lieth in me to do nothing. But if thou do commit thy ſelf unto all, then thou committeſt thy ſelf unto the Law, and the Law is ordained to do every man right. Go to Ralph Hare, ſaid Wincheſter, ſubmit thy ſelf to my Lord and us: it is beſt for thee to do ſo. Whereupon he fell upon his knees again, and ſaid, my Lords and Maſters all, I ſubmit my ſelf wholly unto you. And therewith a Book was holden him, and an Oath given him to be obedient unto them and to all Eccleſiaſtical Laws. And ſtraightway he was enjoyned to abjure, and to bear a Fagot three ſeveral days, and moreover the poor man loſt his whole living that he had at Calice.

The words of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to R. Hare.

Penance injoyned to Ralph Hare.

This ſimple man hearing his Penance, pitiouſly lamented, and earneſtly at the firſt denied to ſtand thereunto, with pitious exclamation, ſaying, O my Lord of Wincheſter, my Lord of Wincheſter, have you made me a Logg ready to be laid upon the fire, whenſoever any wicked man falſely of malice, by provocation of the Devil, ſhall lay any ſmall trifle to my charge? Or ſhall I be thus handled, nothing proved to my face againſt me? Alas I have always hated errours and Hereſies. Content thy ſelf Hare: there is now no remedy thou muſt either do thy Penance, or be burnt, ſaid the Commiſſioners. Thus have you heard how Ralph Hare did ſpeed.
